THE SEVENTH BOOK,

Beginning with the Reign of King HENRY the Eighth.

Anno 1509.

AS touching the civil ſtate and adminiſtration of the Commonwealth, and likewiſe of the ſtate of the Church under the Reign of King Henry the Seventh; how he entred firſt into poſſeſſion of the Crown: how the two Houſes of York and Lancaſter were in him conjoined through marriage with Elizabeth the eldeſt Daughter to King Edward the fourth, by the prudent counſel of John Morton then Biſhop of Ely, after Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Cardinal: how long the ſaid King reigned, and what Perſecution was in his time for lack of ſearch and knowledg of God's Word, both in the Dioceſs of Lincoln under Biſhop Smith, (who was erector of the Houſe of Brazen Noſe in Oxford) as alſo in the Dioceſs of Coventry, and other places more: and further, what puniſhment and alteration God commonly ſendeth upon Cities and Realms publick, for neglecting the ſafety of his Flock, ſufficiently in the former Book hath been already ſpecified; wherein many things more amply might have been added, Notes ſummarily collected and repeated of things done in the time of K. Henry the ſeventh.

incident in the Reign of this Prince, which we have for brevity pretermitted. For he that ſtudieth to comprehend in ſtory all things which the common courſe and uſe of life may offer to the Writer, may ſooner find matter to occupy himſelf, than to profit others. Otherwiſe I might have inferred mention of the ſeditious Tumult of Perkin Warbeck, with his Retinue, Anno 1494. alſo of Blackheath-Field by the Blackſmith, Anno 1496. I might alſo have recited the glorious commendation of Georgius Lilius in his Latine Chronicle, teſtifying of King Henry the ſeventh, how he ſent three ſolemn Orators to Pope Julius the ſecond, to yield his obedience to the See of Rome, An. 1506. And likewiſe how Pope Alexander the ninth, Pius the third, and Julius the ſecond, ſent to the ſaid King Henry the ſeventh three ſundry famous Embaſſadors, with three Swords, and three Caps of Maintenance, electing and admitting him to be the chief Defender of the Faith. The commendation of which fact, how glorious it is in the eyes of Georgius Lilius, and Fabian, that I leave to them. This I ſuppoſe, that when King Henry ſent to Pope Julius three Orators with obedience, if he had

K.Hen. 8.

ſent him three thouſand Harquebuſſiers to furniſh his Field againſt the French King fighting at Ravenna, he had pleaſed Pope Julius much better. If Georgius Lilius had been diſpoſed to illuſtrate his ſtory with notes, this had been more worthy the noting how Lodowick 12. the French King, calling his Parliament, moved this queſtion againſt Pope Julius, Whether a Pope might invade any Prince by warlike force without cauſe? and whether the Prince might withdraw his obedience from that Pope or not? And it was concluded in the ſame Parliament with the King, againſt the Pope. Alſo it was concluded the ſame time (which was in the Reign of this King Henry the ſeventh) that the Pragmatical Sanction ſhould be received in full force and effect through all the Realm of France.

Ex Maſſeo, lib. 30.

Pragmatica Sanctio, was a practiſing or a determination of a certain Parliament in France againſt the Biſhop of Rome, in defence of certain matters of Religion concluded in the Council of Basil.

And forſomuch as we are fallen into the mention of Georgius Lilius, this in him is to be found not unworthy noting, How after the burning of Thomas Norice above mentioned, at the City of Norwich, the ſame year followed ſuch a Fire in Norwich, that the whole City well near was therewith conſumed. Ex Georg. Lilio. Like as alſo after the burning of the foreſaid good aged Father in Smithfield the ſame year (which was 1500) we read in the Chronicle of Fabian, a great Plague to fall upon the City of London, to the great deſtruction of the Inhabitants thereof. Wherein again is to be noted (as is aforeſaid) that according to the ſtate of the Church the diſpoſition of the Commonwealth commonly is guided, either to be with adverſity afflicted, or elſe in proſperity to flouriſh. But after theſe Notes of King Henry the ſeventh, now to the Story of K. Henry the eighth.

A note of Gods plagues following the burning of his People.

This King Henry the ſeventh finiſhing his courſe in the year aboveſaid, which was 1509, had by Elizabeth his Wife above-named, four Men-children, and of Women-children as many. Of whom three only ſurvived, to wit, Prince Henry, Lady Margaret, and Lady Mary: Of whom King Henry the eighth ſucceeded after his Father; Lady Margaret was married to James the fourth, King of Scots; Lady Mary was affied to Charles King of Caſtile.

The children and Off-ſpring of King Henry the ſeventh.

Lady Margaret married to K. James the fourth of Scotland.

Lady Mary married to the King of Caſtile.

Not long before the death of King Henry, Prince Arthur his eldeſt Son had eſpouſed Lady Katharine Daughter to Ferdinandus, being of the age of fifteen years, and ſhe about the age of ſeventeen; and ſhortly after his marriage, within five months departed at Ludlow, and was buried at Worceſter. After whoſe deceaſe, the ſucceſſion of the Crown fell next to King Henry the eighth, who being of the age of eighteen years, entred his Reign the year of our Lord 1509, and ſhortly after married with the foreſaid Katharine, his late brother Prince Arthur's Wife to the end that her Dowry being great, ſhould not be tranſported out of the Land. In the which his Marriage, being more politick than Scripture-like, he was diſpenſed with by Pope Julius, at the requeſt of Ferdinandus her Father. The Reign of this King continued with great nobleneſs and fame the ſpace of thirty eight years. During whoſe time and reign was great alteration of things, as well to the Civil ſtate of the Realm, as eſpecially to the ſtate Eccleſiaſtical, and matters to the Church appertaining. For by him was exiled and abolished out of the Realm the uſurped Power of the Biſhop of Rome, Idolatry and Superſtition ſomewhat repreſſed; Images and Pilgrimages defaced, Abbies and Monaſteries pulled down, Sects of Religion rooted out, Scriptures reduced to the knowledg of the vulgar Tongue, and the ſtate of the Church and Religion redreſſed. Concerning all which things, in the proceſs of this Volume here following, we will endeavour (Chriſt willing) particularly and in order to diſcourſe; after that firſt we ſhall comprehend a few matters, which within the beginning of his Reign are to be noted and collected. Where, leaving off to write of Empſon and Dudley, who in the time of King Henry the ſeventh, being great doers in executing the penal Laws over the People at that time, and purchaſing thereby more malice than lands, with that which they had gotten were ſhortly after the entring of this King beheaded, the one a Knight, the other an Eſquire; leaving alſo to intermeddle with his Wars, Triumphs, and other temporal Affairs, we mean in this Volume principally to beſtow our travel in declaration of matters concerning moſt chiefly the ſtate of the Church and of Religion, as well in this Church of England, as alſo of the whole Church of Rome.

Blind diſpenſations of the Pope.

Wherein firſt cometh to our hands a turbulent Tragedy, and a fierce Contention which long before had troubled the Church, and now this preſent year 1509 was renewed afreſh between two certain Orders of Begging-Friars, to wit, the Dominick Friars and the Franciſcans, about the conception of the Virgin Mary the Mother of Chriſt.

A troubſous diſſention in the Church for the conception of the Virgin Mary.

The Franciſcans were they which did hold of St. Francis, and followed the rule of his Teſtament, commonly called Gray-Friars or Minorites. Their opinion was this, That the Virgin Mary, prevented by the grace of the Holy-Ghoſt, was ſo ſanctified, that ſhe was never ſubject one moment in her conception to original Sin. The Dominick Friars were they which holding of Dominick, were commonly called Black-Friars, or Preaching-Friars. Their opinion was this, That the Virgin Mary was conceived as all other children of Adam be; ſo that this privilege only belongeth to Chriſt, to be conceived without original Sin: notwithſtanding, the ſaid bleſſed Virgin was ſanctified in her Mother's womb, and purged from her original Sin, ſo as was John Baptiſt, Jeremy, or any other priviledged Perſon. This frivolous queſtion kindling and engendring between theſe two Sects of Friars, burſt out into ſuch a flame of parts and ſides taking, that it occupied the Heads and Wits, Schools and Univerſities almoſt through the whole Church; ſome holding one part with Scotus, ſome the other part with Thomas Aquinas. The Minorites holding with Scotus their Maſter, diſputed and concluded, That ſhe was conceived without all ſpot or note of original Sin; and thereupon cauſed the Feaſt and Service of the Conception of St. Mary the Virgin to be celebrate and ſolemnized in the Church. Contrary, the Dominick Friars taking ſide with Aquinas, preached, That it was Hereſy to affirm that the bleſſed Virgin was conceived without the guilt of original Sin; and that they which did celebrate the Feaſt of her Conception, or ſaid any Maſſes thereof, did ſin grievouſly and mortally.

Franciſcan Friars.

Dominick Friars.

Whether the Virgin Mary was conceived without original ſin.

In the mean time, as this Fantaſy waxed hot in the Church, the one ſide preaching againſt the other, came Pope Sixtus the fourth, Anno 1476, who joining ſide with the Minorites or Franciſcans, firſt ſent forth his Decree by authority Apoſtolick, willing, ordaining, and commanding all Men to ſolemnize this new-found Feaſt of the Conception in holy Church for evermore: offering to all Men and Women, which devoutly frequenting the Church, would hear Maſs and Service from the firſt Even-ſong of the ſaid Feaſt, to the Octaves of the ſame, as many days of Pardon, as Pope Urban the fourth, and Pope Martin the fifth did grant for hearing the Service of Corpus Chriſti day, &c. And this Decree given and dated at Rome, Anno 1476.

A newfound Feaſt of the conception of the Virgin Mary.

Moreover, the ſame Pope, to the intent that the devotion of the People might be the more incouraged to the celebration of this Conception, added a clauſe more to the Ave Maria, granting great indulgence and releaſe of Sins to all ſuch as would invocate the bleſſed Virgin with the ſame addition, ſaying thus: Ave Maria gratia plena, Dominus tecum, benedicta tu in mulieribus, & benedictus fructus ventris tui, Ieſus Chriſtus; & benedicta ſit Anna mater tua, de qua, ſine macula, tua proceſſit caro virginia. Amen. That is, 'Hail Mary 'full of grace, the Lord is with thee, bleſſed art thou among 'women, and bleſſed is the fruit of thy womb, Jeſus Chriſt; 'and bleſſed is Anna thy Mother, of whom thy Virgin's 'fleſh hath proceeded without blot of original Sin. Amen.

A new Ave Maria of the Popes making.

The Pope addeth to the words of the Scripture.

Wherein thou mayeſt note (gentle Reader) for thy learning three things: Firſt, how the Pope turneth that unproperly into a Prayer, which properly was ſent of God for a meſſage or tidings. Secondly, how the Pope addeth to the words of the Scripture, contrary to the expreſs precept of the Lord. Thirdly, how the Pope exempteth Mary the bleſſed Virgin not only from the ſeed of Abraham and Adam, but alſo from the condition of a mortal creature. For if there be in her no original ſin, then ſhe beareth not the image of Adam, neither doth ſhe deſcend of that ſeed, of whoſe ſeed evil proceedeth upon all men and women to condemnation, as St. Paul doth teach, Rom. 5. Wherefore if ſhe deſcend of that ſeed, then the infection of original evil muſt neceſſarily proceed unto her. If ſhe deſcend not thereof, then cometh ſhe not of the ſeed of Abraham, nor of the ſeed of David &c. Again, ſeeing that death is the effect and ſtipend of ſin, by the doctrine of St. Paul, Rom. 6. then had her fleſh injury by the Law, as Chriſt himſelf had, to ſuffer the malediction and puniſhment of death, and ſo ſhould never have died, if original ſin had no place in her. But to return unto our Story: This conſtitution of the Pope being ſet forth for the conception of the bleſſed Virgin, which was the year of our Lord 1476, it was not long after but the ſaid Pope Sixtus, perceiving that the Dominick Friars with their complices complices would not conform themſelves hereunto, directed forth, by the authority Apoſtolical, a Bull in effect as followeth:

The tenor of the Popes Bull for the Conception of the Virgin to be without original ſin.

Sanè cum ſanctæ Romanæ Eccleſiæ de intemerata ſemperq; Virginis, &c. In Engliſh:

'Whereas the holy Church of Rome hath ordained a ſpecial and proper Service for the publick ſolemnization of the Feaſt of the Conception of the bleſſed Virgin Mary; certain Orders of the Black-Friars in their publick Sermons to the People in divers places, have not ceaſed hitherto to preach, and yet daily do, that all they which hold or affirm the ſaid glorious Virgin to have been conceived without original ſin, be Hereticks; and they which celebrate the Service of the ſaid her Conception, or do hear the Sermons of them which do ſo affirm, do ſin grievouſly: Alſo not contented herewith, do write and ſet forth Books moreover, maintaining their aſſertions to the great offence and ruine of godly minds. We therefore to prevent and withſtand ſuch preſumptuous and perverſe aſſertions which have riſen, and more hereafter may ariſe, by ſuch opinions and preachings aforeſaid, in the minds of the faithful; by the authority Apoſtolical, do condemn and reprove the ſame; and by the motion, knowledg, and authority aforeſaid, decree and ordain, That the Preachers of God's Word, and all other perſons, of what ſtate, degree, order, or condition ſoever they be, which ſhall preſume to dare affirm or preach to the People theſe foreſaid opinions and aſſertions to be true, or ſhall read, hold, or maintain any ſuch Books for true, having before intelligence hereof, ſhall incur thereby the ſentence of Excommunication, from which they ſhall not be abſolved otherwiſe than by the Biſhop of Rome, except only in the time of death.

This Bull, being dated the year of our Lord 1483, gave no little heart and encouragement to the Gray-Friars Franciſcans, which defended the pure conception of the holy Virgin againſt the Black Dominick Friars, with their confederates, holding the contrary ſide. By the vigour of which Bull, the Gray Order had got ſuch a conqueſt of the Black Guard of the Dominicks, that the ſaid Dominicks were compelled at length for a perpetual memorial of the Triumph, both to give to the glorious Virgin every night an Anthem in praiſe of her conception, and alſo to ſubſcribe unto their doctrine; in which doctrine theſe with divers other points be contained.

1. That bleſſed Mary the Virgin ſuffered the griefs and adverſities in this life, not for any neceſſity inflicted for puniſhment of original Sin, but only becauſe ſhe would conform her ſelf to the imitation of Chriſt.

Ex Jod. Clitovæo de puritate conceptionis, lib. 2.

2. That the ſaid Virgin, as ſhe was not obliged to any puniſhment due for ſin, as neither was Chriſt her Son; ſo ſhe had no need of remiſſion of Sins, but inſtead thereof had the divine preſervation of God's help, keeping her from all ſin, which grace only ſhe needed, and alſo had it.

Filthy Abſurdities in the Popes Doctrine.

3. Item, That where the Body of the Virgin Mary was ſubject to death, and died; this is to be underſtood to come not for any penalty due for Sin, but either for imitation and conformity unto Chriſt, or elſe for the natural conſtitution her body, being elemental, as were the bodies of our firſt parents: who, if they had not taſted of the forbidden fruit, ſhould have been preſerved from death, not by nature, but by grace, and ſtrength of other fruits and meats in Paradiſe: Which meats becauſe Mary had not, but did eat our common meats, therefore ſhe died, and not for any neceſſity of original ſin. Clitovæus, lib. 2. cap. 2.

How the Virgin Mary was ſubject to death after the Friars opinions.

4. The univerſal propoſition of St. Paul, which ſaith, That the Scripture hath concluded all Men under Sin, is to be underſtood thus, as ſpeaking of all them which be not exempted by the ſpecial privilege of God, as is the bleſſed Virgin Mary.

5. If Juſtification be taken for reconciliation of him that was unrighteous before, and now is made righteous: then the bleſſed Virgin is to be taken, not for juſtified by Chriſt, but juſt from her beginning by preſervation.

6. If a Saviour be taken for him which ſaveth men fallen into perdition and condemnation; ſo is not Chriſt the Saviour of Mary, but is her Saviour only in this reſpect, for ſuſtaining her from not falling into condemnation, &c.

7. Neither did the Virgin Mary give thanks to God, nor ought ſo to do, for expiation of her ſins, but for her conſervation from caſe of ſinning.

8. Neither did ſhe pray to God at any time for remiſſion of her ſins, but only for the remiſſion of other mens ſins ſhe prayed many times, and counted their ſins for hers. K. Hen. 8.

9. If the bleſſed Virgin had deceaſed before the paſſion of her Son, God would have repoſed her ſoul not in the place among the Patriarchs, or amongſt the Juſt, but in the ſame moſt pleaſant place of Paradiſe where Adam and Eve were before they tranſgreſſed.

Theſe were the doting dreams and fantaſies of the Franciſcans, and of other Papiſts, commonly then holden in the Schools, written in their Books, preached in their Sermons, taught in their Churches, * and ſet forth in Pictures. So that the People was taught nothing elſe almoſt in the Pulpits all this while, but how the Virgin Mary was conceived immaculate and holy, without original ſin, and how they ought to call to her for help, whom they with ſpecial terms do call, The way of mercy, The mother of grace, The lover of piety, The comforter of mankind, The continual interceſſor for the ſalvation of the faithful, and an advocate to the King her Son which never ceaſeth, &c. Verba Papæ Sexti in decret. And altho the greateſt number of the School-Doctors were of the contrary faction, as Peter Lombardus, Thomas Aquinas, Bernardus, Bonaventura, and others: yet theſe new Papiſts ſhifted off their objections with frivolous diſtinctions and blind evaſions, as thus: Petrus Lombardus, they ſaid, is not received nor holden in the Schools as touching this article, but is rejected. Clitovæus lib. 2. cap. 15.

* The Gray-Friars had made a Picture of Joachim and Anna killing, by which kiſſ Anna was conceived with Mary.

Ex Rob. Lycio Minorita

Idolatry to the Bleſſed Virgin.

Bernardus, in Epiſt. ad Lugdunenſ. altho he ſeemeth to deny the conception of the bleſſed Virgin to be void of original ſin, ſaying, that ſhe could not be holy when ſhe was not, and lived not: to this they anſwer, That albeit ſhe was not yet in eſſence, yet ſhe was holy in her conception, and before conception, in the divine preſcience of God, which had choſen and pre-elected her before the worlds, to be the Mother of the Lord.

Objections ſolubly ſalved.

Again; Where Bernard doth argue, that ſhe was not without original ſin conceived, becauſe ſhe was not conceived by the Holy-Ghoſt: to this they anſwer, That the Holy-Ghoſt may work two ways in conception: either without company of Man, and ſo was Chriſt only conceived; or elſe with company and help of man, and thus was the bleſſed Virgin conceived. Clit. lib. 2. cap. 14.

Bonaventura (ſay they) was an holy Father, but he ſpake then after the cuſtom and manner of his time, when as the ſolemnity and purity of this conception was not yet decreed nor received by the publick conſent and authority of the Church: now ſeeing the authority of the Church of Rome hath eſtabliſhed the ſame, it ought not to be contraried, nor can, without dangerous diſobedience. In all mens actions diligent reſpect of time muſt be had. That which bindeth not at one time, afterward the ſame by law being ratified, may bind at another. Ibid.

Popiſh Belief and Doctrine goeth by time.

Finally, for the number and multitude on the contrary ſide, thus they anſwer for themſelves, as we now in theſe our days likewiſe in defence of the Truth, may well anſwer againſt the Pope, and all his Popiſh Friars, turning their own weapons againſt themſelves: Multitude, ſay they, ought not to move us; Victory conſiſteth not in number and heaps, but in fortitude and hearts of Souldiers; yea, rather fortitude and ſtomach cometh from heaven, and not of man. Judas Machabeus with a little handful overthrew the great army of Antiochus. Strong Sampſon with a poor Aſſes bone ſlew a thouſand Philiſtins. David had no more but a ſilly ſling, and a few ſtones, and with theſe ſtrook down terrible Goliah the Giant, &c. Lib. eod. cap. 13.

Verity conſiſteth not in number of voices, nor Victory in multitude of Souldiers.

With theſe and ſuch other like reaſons the Gray Franciſcans voided their Adverſaries, defending the conception of the Virgin Mary to be unblemiſhed, and pure from all contagion of original Sin. Contrariwiſe, the Black-Guard of the Dominick Friars for their parts were not all mute, but laid ſuſtily from them again, having great authorities, and alſo the Scripture on their ſide. But yet the other having the See Apoſtolical with them, had the better hand, and in fine got the victory triumphantly over the other, to the high exaltation of their Order. For Pope Sixtus (as I ſaid) by the authority Apoſtolical, after he had decreed the conception-day of the Virgin perpetually to be ſanctified, and alſo with his terrible Bull had condemned for Hereticks all them which withſtood the ſame; the Dominick Friars, with authority oppreſſed, were driven to two inconveniences: the one was, to keep ſilence; the other was, to give place to their adverſaries the Franciſcans. Albeit, where the mouth

K. Hen. 8. durſt not ſpeak, yet the heart would work; and tho their tongues were tied, yet their good-will was ready by all means poſſible to maintain their quarrel and their eſtimation.

Anno 1509. Whereupon it happened the ſame year of our Lord, 1509, after this diſſention between the Dominick Friars and the Franciſcans, that certain of the Dominicks, thinking by ſubtil ſleight to work in the Peoples heads that which they durſt not atchieve with open preaching, deviſed a certain Image of the Virgin ſo artificially wrought, that the Friars by privy gins made it to ſtir, and to make geſtures, to lament, to complain, to weep, to groan, and to give anſwers to them that asked; inſomuch that the People therewith were brought in a marvellous perſuaſion, till at length the fraud being eſpied, the Friars were taken, condemned, and burnt at Bern the year above-mentioned, 1509. Ex Peucer. Sebaſt. Munſtero, Carione, & aliis. In the Centuries of John Bale I find their names to be, Joannes Vetter, Franciſcus Vliſcus, Stephanus Bolizhorſt, and Henricus Steinegger.

Ex Caſparo Pucero Chron. lib. 5. ex Sebaſt. Munſter. Coſmog. lib. 3.

Four Friars burnt at Berne.

In the Story of John Stumſius, this Story aforeſaid doth partly appear: but in the Regiſters and Records of the City of Berne, the order and circumſtance thereof is more fully expreſſed and ſet forth, both in Metre and Proſe, and is thus declared.

In the City of Berne there were certain Dominick Friars, to the number chiefly of four principal doers and chieftains of that Order, who had inveigled a certain ſimple poor Friar, who had newly planted himſelf in the Cloiſter: whom the foreſaid Friars had ſo infatuated with ſundry ſuperſtitions, and feigned apparitions of St. Mary, St. Barbara, and St. Katharine, and with their inchaintments, and imprinting moreover in him the wounds of St. Francis, that he believed plainly that the Virgin Mary had appeared to him, and had offered him a red Hoſt conſecrated, with the blood alſo of Chriſt miraculous; which bleſſed Virgin alſo had ſent him to the Senators of Berne, with inſtructions, declaring unto them from the mouth of the Virgin, That ſhe was conceived in ſin; and that the Franciſcan Friars were not to be credited, nor ſuffered in the City, which were not yet reformed from that erroneous opinion of her conception. He added moreover, That they ſhould reſort to a certain Image there of the Virgin Mary, (which Image the Friars by engines had made to ſweat) and ſhould do their worſhip, and make their oblations to the ſame, &c.

Ex Hiſtoria Fernenſi conſcripta vulgari & Latino ſermone.

This feigned device was no ſooner forged by the Friars, but it was believed of the People; ſo that a great while the red-coloured Hoſt was undoubtedly taken for the true body and Blood of Chriſt, and certain coloured drops thereof ſent abroad to divers noble Perſonages and States for a great Relique, and that not without great recompence. Thus the deceived People in great numbers came flocking to the Image, and to the red Hoſt, and coloured Blood, with manifold gifts and oblations. In brief, the Dominick Friars ſo had wrought the matter, and had ſo ſwept all the fat to their own beards from the Order of the Franciſcans, that all the Alms came to their box. The Franciſcans ſeeing their eſtimation to decay, and their kitchin to wax cold, and their paunches to be pinched, not able to abide that contumely, and being not ignorant or unacquainted with ſuch counterfeited doings, (for as the Proverb ſaith, It is ill halting before a Cripple) eftſoons eſpied their crafty jugling, and detected their fraudulent miracles. Whereupon the four chief Captains above-named were apprehended, and put to the fire, of whom the Provincial of that Order was one.

Friars neither can agree with themſelves nor yet do diſagree but in vain Trifles.

The miſerable blindneſs of the Time conſidered.

And thus much touching the beginning and end of this tumultuous and Popiſh Tragedy, wherein evidently it may appear to the Reader, how neither theſe turbulent Friars could agree among themſelves, and yet in what frivolous trifles they wrangled together. But to let theſe ridiculous Friars paſs with their trifling Phantaſies, moſt worthy to be deſided of all wiſe men: in the mean time this is to be lamented, to behold the miſerable times of the Church, in which the Devil kept the minds of Chriſt's people ſo attentive and occupied in ſuch friarly toys, that nothing elſe almoſt was taught or heard in the Church, but only the commendation and exaltation of the Virgin Mary: But of our juſtification by faith, of grace, and of the promiſes of God in Chriſt, of the ſtrength of the Law, of the horror of Sin, of difference between the Law and the Goſpel, of the true liberty of Conſcience, &c. no mention or very little was heard. Wherefore in this ſo blind a time of darkneſs it was much needful and requiſite, that the Lord of his mercy ſhould look upon his Church, and ſend down his gracious Reformation, which alſo he did: For ſhortly upon the ſame, through the gracious excitation of God, came Martin Luther, of whom the order of ſtory now requireth we ſhould, and will intreat, (Chriſt willing) after the ſtory of Richard Hunne, and a few other things premiſed, for the better opening of the ſtory to follow.

Mention was made ſufficiently before of the doings of Pope Julius, and of his warlike affairs, for which he was condemned, and not unjuſtly, in the Council of Turone in France, Anno 1510. and yet all this could not aſſuage the furious affection of this Pope, but the ſame year he invaded the City of Mutina and Mirandula in Italy, and took them by force of war. Which Pope Julius not long after, in the year of our Lord 1512. refuſing peace offered by Maximilian the Emperor, was encountred by Lewis the French King about Ravenna, upon Eaſter-day, where he was vanquiſhed, and had of his Army ſlain to the number of ſixteen thouſand. Ex Chron. Carion. And the year next following, Ann. 1513, this Apoſtolical Warriour, which had reſigned his keys unto the River of Tybris before, made an end together both of his fighting and living, after he had reigned and fought ten years. After whom ſucceeded next in the See of Rome, Pope Leo the tenth; about the compaſs of which time great mutations and ſtirs began to work, as well in States Temporal, as eſpecially in the State of the Church.

In the time of which Pope, Emperor, and Kings of England and of France, great alterations, troubles, and turns of Religion were wrought in the Church, by the mighty operation of God's hand, in Italy, France, Germany, England, and all Europe; ſuch as have not been ſeen (altho much groaned for) many hundred years before: as in further diſcourſe of this Hiſtory (Chriſt willing) ſhall more manifeſtly appear.

But before we come to theſe alterations, taking the time as it lieth before us, we will firſt ſpeak of Richard Hunne, and certain other godly-minded Perſons here in England, afflicted for the Word of Chriſt's Goſpel in great multitudes, as they be found and taken out of the Regiſters of Fitzjames Biſhop of London, by the faithful help and induſtry of R. Carket, Citizen of London.

The Hiſtory of divers good Men and Women, perſecuted for Religion in the City and Dioceſs of the Biſhop of London; briefly extracted out of the Regiſters of Richard Fitzjames.

Ex Regiſtris Fitzjames.

AMongſt and beſide the great number of the faithful Martyrs and Profeſſors of Chriſt, that conſtantly in the ſtrength of the Holy-Ghoſt gave their lives for the teſtimony of his Truth, I find recorded in the Regiſter of London, between the years of our Lord 1509 and 1517, the names of divers other perſons, both Men and Women, who in the fulneſs of that dark and miſty time of Ignorance had alſo ſome portion of God's good Spirit, which induced them to the knowledg of his Truth and Goſpel, and were diverſly troubled, perſecuted, and impriſoned for the ſame: notwithſtanding by the proud, cruel, and bloody rage of the Catholick Seat, and through the weakneſs and frailty of their own nature, (not then fully ſtrengthened in God) it was again in them for the time ſuppreſſed and kept under, as appeareth by their ſeveral abjurations made before Richard Fitzjames, then Biſhop of London, (in his time a moſt cruel Perſecutor of Chriſt's Church) or elſe before his Vicar-general deputed for the ſame. And foraſmuch as many of the Adverſaries of God's Truth have of late days diſdainfully and bragging cried out, and made demands in their publick Aſſemblies, and yet do aſking, Where this our Church and Religion was within theſe fifty or ſixty years? I have thought it not altogether vain ſomewhat to note ſuch lying crakes, both by mentioning their names, and the wiſe of ſome of

But leſt I ſhould ſeem too prolix and tedious herein, I will now briefly proceed with the ſtory, and firſt begin with their names, which are theſe:

Here followeth the particular Examination of all theſe here above named.

To theſe were divers and ſundry particular Articles (beſides the common and general ſort accuſtomably uſed in ſuch caſes) privately objected, even ſuch as they were then accuſed of either by their Curate, or other their Neighbours. And becauſe I think it ſomewhat ſuperfluous to make any large recital of all and every part of their ſeveral Proceſs, I mind therefore briefly only to touch ſo many of their Articles, as may be ſufficient to induce the Chriſtian Reader to judg the ſooner of the reſt, being (I aſſure you) of no greater importance than theſe that follow: except that ſometime they were charged moſt ſlanderouſly with horrible and blaſphemous Lies againſt the Majeſty and Truth of God; which as they utterly denied, ſo do I now for this preſent keep ſecret in ſilence, as well for brevities ſake, as alſo ſomewhat to colour and hide the ſhameleſs practices of that lying Generation. But to our purpoſe.

Ex Regiſt. R. Fitzjames.

Joan Baker.

THe chiefeſt Objection againſt Joan Baker was, That ſhe would not only her ſelf not reverence the Crucifix, but had alſo perſuaded a Friend of hers lying at the point of death, not to put any truſt or confidence in the Crucifix, but in God which is in Heaven, who only worketh all the miracles that be done, and not the dead Images, which be but ſtocks and ſtones; and therefore ſhe was ſorry that ever ſhe had gone ſo often on pilgrimage to St. Saviour and other Idols. Alſo, that ſhe did hold opinion that the Pope had no power to give pardons, and that the Lady Yong (who was not long before that time burned) died a true Martyr of God; and therefore ſhe wiſhed of God, that ſhe her ſelf might do no worſe than the ſaid Lady Yong had done.

Teſtimony for the Lady Young, Martyr.

William Pottier.

UNto William Pottier, beſides divers other falſe and ſlanderous Articles, (as that he ſhould deny the benefit and effect of Chriſt's Paſſion) it was alſo alledged, That he ſhould affirm there were ſix Gods: the firſt three was the holy Trinity, the Father, the Son, and the Holy-Ghoſt; the fourth was a Prieſt's Concubine being kept in his chamber, the fifth was the Devil; and the ſixth, that thing that a Man ſetteth his mind moſt upon.

Falſe ſlander of the Adverſaries.

Anſwer.

The firſt part of this Article he utterly denied, confeſſing moſt firmly and truly the bleſſed Trinity to be only one God in one unity of Deity. As to the other three he anſwered, That a Prieſt delighting in his Concubine, made her as his God: Likewiſe a wicked Perſon, perſiſting in his ſin without repentance, made the Devil his God. And laſtly, he granted, that he once hearing of certain Men, which by the ſinging and chattering of Birds would ſeek to know what things were to come either to themſelves or others, ſaid, that thoſe Men eſteemed their Birds as Gods; and otherwiſe he ſpake not. The Goodred, Tho. Walker, Tho Forge, &c.

AMongſt the manifold and ſeveral Articles objected againſt Thomas Goodred, Thomas Walker, Thomas Forge, Alice Forge his Wife, John Forge their Son, John Calverton, John Woodrof, Richard Woolman, and Roger Hilliar, (as that they ſhould ſpeak againſt Pilgrimages, praying unto Saints, and ſuch like) this principally was propounded, That they all denied the carnal and corporal preſence of Chriſt's body and blood in the Sacrament of the Altar; and further, had concealed and conſented unto their Teachers and Inſtructors in that Doctrine, and had not, according to the Laws of the Church, accuſed and preſented them unto the Biſhop or his Ordinary. Alſo great and hainous diſpleaſure was conceived againſt Richard Woolman, for that he termed the Church of Pauls a Houſe of Thieves, affirming, that the Prieſts and other Eccleſiaſtical Perſons there were not liberal giv'ers unto the poor (as they ought) but rather takers away from them what they could get.

Againſt tranſubſtantiation and corporal preſence.

Likewiſe as Thomas Auſty, Joan Auſty his Wife, Thomas Grant, John Garter, Chriſtopher Ravins, Dyoniſe Ravins his Siſter, Thomas Vincent, Lewis John, Joan John his Wife, and John Web, were of one fellowſhip and profeſſion of Faith with divers of the laſt before recited: ſo were they almoſt all apprehended about one time, and chiefly burthened with one opinion of the Sacrament. Which declareth evidently, that notwithſtanding the dark ignorance of thoſe corrupted times, yet God did ever in mercy open the eyes of ſome to behold the manifeſt truth, even in thoſe things whereof the Papiſts make now greateſt vaunt, and brag of longeſt continuance. Furthermore, many of them were charged to have ſpoken againſt Pilgrimages, and to have read and uſed certain Engliſh Books repugning the Faith of the Romiſh Church, as the four Evangeliſts, Wickliffs Wicket, a Book of the Ten Commandments of Almighty God, the Revelation of St. John, the Epiſtles of Paul and James, with other like, which thoſe holy ones could never abide: and good cauſe why; for as darkneſs could never agree with light, no more can ignorance, the maintainer of that Kingdom, with the true knowledg of Chriſt and his Goſpel.

The Auſty, John Auſty, &c.

Againſt tranſubſtantiation and corporal preſence.

It was further particularly objected againſt Joan John, the Wife of Lewis John, That (beſides the premiſes) ſhe learned and maintained, that God commanded no Holy-days to be kept, but only the Sabbath-day, and therefore ſhe would keep none but it; nor any Faſting-days, affirming, that to faſt from ſin was the true Faſt. Moreover, that ſhe had deſpiſed the Pope, his pardons and pilgrimages; inſomuch that when any poor body asked an alms of her in the worſhip of the Lady of Walſingham, ſhe would ſtrait anſwer in contempt of the pilgrimage, The Lady of Walſingham help thee: and if ſhe gave any thing unto him, ſhe would then ſay, Take this in the worſhip of our Lady in Heaven, and let the other go. Which declareth, that for lack of better inſtruction and knowledg, ſhe yet ignorantly attributed too much honour to the true Saints of God departed, tho otherwiſe ſhe did abhor the idolatrous worſhipping of the dead Images. By which example, as alſo by many others (for ſhortneſs ſake at this preſent omitted) I have juſt occaſion to condemn the wilful ſubtilty of thoſe, that in this bright ſhining light of God's truth, would yet under colour of godly remembrance, ſtill maintain the having of Images in the Church, craftily excuſing their idolatrous kneeling and praying unto them, by affirming, that they never worſhipped the dead Images, but the things that the Images did repreſent. But if that were their only doctrine and cauſe of having of them, why then would their predeceſſors ſo cruelly compell theſe poor ſimple people thus openly in their recantations to abjure and revoke their ſpeaking againſt the groſs adoration of the outward Images only, and not againſt the thing repreſented, which many of them (as appeareth partly by this example) in their ignorant ſimplicity confeſſed might be worſhipped? Howbeit, God be thanked, (who ever in his mercy continue it) their colourable and hypocritical excuſes cannot now take ſuch place in the hearts of the Elect

William Couper and his Wife.

IT was alledged againſt William Couper, and Alice Couper his Wife, that they had ſpoken againſt Pilgrimages, and worſhipping of Images: but chiefly the Woman, who having her child on a time hurt by falling into a pit or ditch, and earneſtly perſuaded by ſome of her ignorant Neighbours to go on pilgrimage to St. Laurence for help of her child, ſaid, That neither St. Laurence, nor any other Saint could help her child, and therefore none ought to go on Pilgrimage to any Image made with Man's hand, but only to Almighty God; for Pilgrimages were nothing worth, ſaving to make the Prieſts rich. Vide plura inferiùs.

Againſt invocation of dead Images

John Houſhold, &c.

UNto John Houſhold, Robert Raſcal, and Elizabeth Stamford, as well the Article againſt the Sacrament of the Altar was objected, as alſo that they had ſpoken againſt praying to Saints, and had deſpiſed the authority of the Biſhop of Rome, and others of his Clergy. But eſpecially John Houſhold was charged to have called them Antichriſts and Whoremongers, and the Pope himſelf a ſtrong Strumpet, and a common Baud unto the World, who with his Pardons had drowned in blindneſs all Chriſtian Realms, and that for money.

Againſt tranſubſtantiation and authority of the Pope.

George Browne.

ALſo among divers other ordinary Articles propounded againſt George Browne, theſe were counted very hainous and heretical: Firſt, that he had ſaid, that he knew no cauſe why the Croſs ſhould be worſhipped; ſeeing that the ſame was an hurt and pain unto our Saviour Chriſt in the time of his paſſion, and not any eaſe or pleaſure; alledging for example, that if he had had a Friend hanged or drowned, he would ever after have loved that Gallows or Water, by the which his Friend died, rather worſe for that than better. Another Objection was, That he had erroneouſly, obſtinately, and maliciouſly ſaid, (for ſo are their words) That the Church was too rich. This matter, I may tell you, touched ſomewhat the quick, and therefore no marvel tho they counted it erroneous and malicious; for take away their Gain, and farewel their Religion. They alſo charged him to have refuſed holy Water to be caſt about his chamber, and likewiſe to have ſpoken againſt Prieſts, with other vain matters.

Againſt adoration of the Croſs.

Againſt immoderate riches of the Popes Clergy.

John Wikes.

THe greateſt matter wherewith they burthened John Wikes was, That he had often and of long time kept company with divers perſons ſuſpected of Hereſy, (as they termed them) and had received them into his Houſe, and there did ſuffer and hear them ſundry times read erroneous and heretical Books, contrary to the Faith of the Romiſh Church; and did alſo himſelf conſent unto their Doctrine, and had many times ſecretly conveyed them from the taking of ſuch as were appointed to apprehend them.

Jo. Southake, Richard Butler, &c. Vide inferius.

LIke as the greateſt number of thoſe before mentioned, ſo were alſo John Southake, Richard Butler, John Sam, William King, Robert Durdant, and Henry Woolman, eſpecially charged with ſpeaking words againſt the real preſence of Chriſt's body in the Sacrament of the Altar, and alſo againſt Images, and the reſt of the ſeven Sacraments. Howbeit they burthened the laſt five perſons with the reading of certain Engliſh Heretical Books, accounting moſt blaſphemouſly the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, written by the four Evangeliſts, to be of that number, as appeareth evidently by the eighth Article objected by Thomas Bennet Doctor of Law, Chancellor and Vicar-general unto Richard Fitzjames then Biſhop of London, againſt the ſaid Richard Butler, the very words of which Article, for a more declaration of truth, I have thought good here to inſert, which are theſe: Alſo we object to you, that divers times, and eſpecially upon a certain Night, about the ſpace of three years laſt paſt, in Robert Durdant's Houſe of Yuer-Court near unto Staines, you erroneouſly and damnably read in a great Book of Hereſy of the ſaid Robert Durdant's, all that ſame Night, certain Chapters of the Evangeliſts in Engliſh, containing in them divers erroneous and damnable opinions and concluſions of Hereſy, in the preſence of the ſaid Robert Durdant, John Butler, Robert Carder, Jenkin Butler, William King, and divers other ſuſpected Perſons of Hereſy, then being preſent, and hearing your ſaid erroneous Lectures and Opinions. To the ſame effect and purpoſe tended the tenor of ſome of the Articles propounded againſt the other four. Whereby (as alſo by others like before ſpecified) we may eaſily judg what reverence they, which yet will be counted the true and only Church of Chriſt, did bear to the Word and Goſpel of Chriſt, who ſhamed not to blaſpheme the ſame with moſt horrible titles of erroneous and damnable opinions and concluſions of Hereſy. But why ſhould we marvel thereat, ſeeing the Holy-Ghoſt in ſundry places of the Scripture doth declare, that in the latter days there ſhould come ſuch proud and curſed ſpeakers, which ſhall ſpeak lies through hypocriſy, and have their Conſciences marked with an hot Iron? Let us therefore now thank our heavenly Father for revealing them unto us; and let us alſo pray him, that of his free mercies in his Son Chriſt Jeſus, he would (if it be to his glory) either turn and mollify all ſuch hearts, or elſe (for the peace and quietneſs of his Church) he would in his righteous judgment take them from us.

Reading of Engliſh Books.

Of theſe men ſhe more hereafter in the Table following.

About this time Richard Fitzjames ended his life, after whoſe death Cuthbert Tonſtall (afterward Biſhop of Durham) ſucceeded in the See and Biſhoprick of London; who ſoon upon his firſt entry into the room, minding to follow rightly the footſteps of his Predeceſſor, cauſed Edmund Spilman, Prieſt, Henry Chambers, John Higgins, and Thomas Egleſtone to be apprehended, and ſo to be examined upon ſundry like Articles as before are expreſſed; and in the end, either for fear of his cruelty, and the rigor of death, or elſe through hope of his flattering promiſes, (ſuch was their weakneſs) he compelled them to abjure and renounce their true profeſſed Faith touching the holy Sacrament of Chriſt's Body and Blood, which was, That Chriſt's corporal Body was not in the Sacrament, but in Heaven; and that the Sacrament was a figure of his Body, and not the Body it ſelf.

The real preſence denied.

MOreover, about the ſame time there were certain Articles objected againſt John Higges, alias Noke, alias Johnſon, by the ſaid Biſhop's Vicar-general, amongſt which were theſe: Firſt, That he had affirmed, that it was as lawful for a temporal Man to have two Wives at once, as for a Prieſt to have two Benefices. Alſo, that he had in his cuſtody a Book of the four Evangeliſts in Engliſh, and did often read therein: and that he favoured the Doctrines and Opinions of Martin Luther, openly pronouncing, that Luther had more learning in his little finger, than all the Doctors in England in their whole bodies; and that all the Prieſts in the Church were blind, and had led the People the wrong way. Likewiſe it was alledged againſt him, that he had denied Purgatory, and had ſaid, that while he was alive he would do as much for himſelf as he could, for after his death he thought that Prayers and Almſdeeds could little help him.

Teſtimony touching Martin Luther.

THeſe and ſuch like matters were they wherewith theſe poor and ſimple Men and Women were chiefly charged, and as hainous Hereticks excommunicated, impriſoned, and at laſt compelled to recant: and ſome of them in utter ſhame and reproach (beſides the ordinary bearing of faggots before the Croſs in Proceſſion, or elſe at a Sermon) were enjoined for a penance (as they termed it) as well to appear once every year before their Ordinary, as alſo to wear the ſign of a faggot painted upon their ſleeves, or other part of their outward garment, and that during all their lives, or ſo often and long as it pleaſed their Ordinary to appoint. By which long, rigorous and open puniſhing of them, they meant (as it ſhould ſeem) utterly to terrify and keep back all others from the true knowledg of Jeſus Chriſt and his Goſpel. But the Lord be evermore praiſed, what effect their wicked purpoſes therein have taken, theſe our moſt light-ſom days of God's glorious Goſpel do moſt joyfully declare.

The manner of Popiſh Penance.

THere were alſo troubled, beſides theſe, certain others more ſimple and ignorant, who, having but a very ſmall ſmack or taſte of the Truth, did yet at the firſt (as it may ſeem) gladly conſent unto the ſame; but being apprehended, they quickly again yielded, and therefore had only aſſigned them for their penance, the bearing of a little candle before the Croſs, without any further open abjuring or recanting. Amongſt which I find two eſpecially, the one a Woman, called Ellen Heyer, to whom it was objected, That ſhe had neither confeſſed her ſelf unto the Prieſt, nor yet received the Sacrament of the Altar by the ſpace of four years, and notwithstanding had yearly eaten flesh at Easter, and after, as well as others that had received the same, contrary to the usual manner and conversation of all other Christian People.

The other was a Man named Robert Berkeway, who (besides most wicked blasphemies against God, which he utterly denied) was charged to have spoken heinous words against the Popes holy and blessed Martyr, Thomas Becket, calling him Micher and Thief, for that he wrought by crafts and imaginations.

Thus have I, as briefly as I could, summarily collected the princpal Articles objected against these weak, infirm, and earthly Vessels; not minding hereby to excuse or condemn them in these their fearful falls and dangerous defections, but leaving them unto the unmeasurable rich mercies of the Lord, I thought only to make manifest the unsatiable bloody Cruelty of the Popes Kingdom against the Gospel and true Church of Christ, nothing mitigating their envious rage, no, not against the very simple Idiots, and that sometimes in most frivolous and irreligious cases. But now leaving to say any further herein, I will (by God's grace) go forward with other somewhat more serious matters.

The Death and Martyrdom of William Sweeting, and John Brewster.

Wil. Sweeting, John Brewster, Martyrs.

IN searching and perusing of the Register, for the collection of the Names and Articles before recited, I find that within the compass of the same years there were also some others, who after they had once shewed themselves as frail and unconstant as the rest, (being either therewith pricked in conscience, or otherwise zealously overcome with the manifest truth of God's most sacred Word) became yet again as earnest professors of Christ as ever they were before, and for the same profession were the second time apprehended, examined, condemned, and in the end were most cruelly burned. Of which number were William Sweeting, and John Brewster, who were both burned together in Smithfield the eighteenth day of October, in the year of our Lord 1511. The chiefest case of Religion alledged against them in their Articles, was their faith concerning the Sacrament of Christ's Body and Blood, which because it differed from the absurd, gross, and Capernaitical opinion of the new Schoolmen, was counted as most hainous Heresy. There were other things besides objected against them, as the reading of certain forbidden Books, and accompanying with such persons as were suspected of Heresy. But one great and hainous offence counted amongst the rest, was their putting and leaving off the painted faggots, which they were at their first abjuring enjoined to wear as badges during their lives, or so long as it should please their Ordinary to appoint, and not to leave them off upon pain of relapse, until they were dispensed withal for the same. The breach of this injunction was esteemed to be of no small weight; and yet the matter well and throughly considered, it seemeth by their confessions, they were both thereunto by necessity enforced. For the one, named Sweeting, being for fear of the Bishop's cruelty, constrained to wander the Countries to get his poor living, came at length unto Colchester, where by the Parson of the Parish of Mary Magdalen, he was provoked to be the Holy-Water Clerk, and in that consideration had that infamous badg first taken away from him. The other (which was Brewster) left off his at the commandment of the Controller of the Earl of Oxford's House, who hiring the poor Man to labour in the Earl's houshold-business, would not suffer him working there to wear that counterfeit cognisance any longer. So that (as I said) necessity of living seemeth to compell both of them at the first to break that Injunction: and therefore if Charity had born as great sway in the hearts of the Popes Clergy, as did Cruelty, this trifle would not have been so hainously taken, as to be brought against them for an Article, and cause of condemnation to death. But where tyranny once taketh place, as well all godly love, as also all humane reason and duties are quite forgotten. Well, to be short, what for the causes before recited, as also for that they had once already abjured, and yet (as they term it) fell again into relapse, they were both (as you have heard) in the end burned together in Smithfield; altho the same parties (as the Register recordeth) did again before their death fearfully forsake their former revived constancy, and submitting themselves unto the discipline of the Romish Church, craved absolution from their excommunication. Howbeit, because many of the Registers notes and records in such cases may rightly be doubted of, and so called into question, I refer the certain knowledg thereof unto the Lord, (who is the trier of all truths) and the external judgment unto the godly and discreet Reader: Not forgetting yet by the way (if that the report should be true) upon so just an occasion, to charge that Catholick Clergy, and their wicked Laws, with a more shameless tyranny and uncharitable cruelty than before: for if they nothing stay their bloody malice towards such as so willingly submit themselves unto their mercies; what favour may the faithful and constant professors of Christ look for at their hands? I might here also ask of them, how they follow the pitiful and loving admonition (or rather precept) of our Saviour Christ, (whose true and only Church they so stoutly brag to be) who in the seventeenth chapter of St. Luke saith, Tho thy brother sin against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn to thee, saying, It repenteth me; thou shalt forgive him. But what go I about to allure them unto the following of the Rule and Counsel of him, unto whose Word and Gospel they seem most open and utter enemies? Wherefore not purposing to stay any longer thereupon, but leaving them unto the righteous revengement of the Lord, let us now hereunto adjoin the story of one John Browne, a good Martyr of the Lord, burnt at Ashford about this fourth year of King Henry the eighth, whose story hereunder followeth.

K. Hen. 8.

No mercy in the Popes Church.

John Browne, Father to Richard Browne, which Richard was in Prison in Canterbury, and should have been burned, with two more, besides himself, the next day after the death of Queen Mary, but by the proclaiming of Queen Elizabeth they escaped.

THE occasion of the first trouble of this John Browne, was by a Priest, sitting in Gravesend-Barge. John Browne, being the same time in the Barge, came and sate hard by him; whereupon, after certain communication, the Priest asked him; Dost thou know, said he, who I am? thou sittest too near me, thou sittest on my clothes: No, Sir, said he, I know not what you are. I tell thee I am a Priest. What, Sir, are you a Parson, or Vicar, or a Lady's Chaplain? No, quoth he again, I am a Soul-Priest, I sing for a Soul, saith he. Do you so, Sir, quoth the other, that is well-done; I pray you Sir, quoth he, where find you the Soul when you go to Mass? I cannot tell thee, said the Priest. I pray you, where do you leave it, Sir, when the Mass is done? I cannot tell thee, said the Priest. Neither can you tell where you find it when you go to Mass, nor where you leave it when the Mass is done, how can you then save the Soul? said he. Go thy ways, said the Priest, thou art an Heretick, and I wil be even with thee. So at the landing, the Priest taking with him Walter More, and William More, two Gentlemen Brethren, rode straightways to the Archbishop Warham; whereupon the said John Browne within three days after, his Wife being churched the same day, and he bringing in a Mess of Pottage to the Board to his Guests, was sent for, and his feet bound under his own horse, and so brought up to Canterbury, neither his Wife, nor he, nor any of his, knowing whither he went, nor whither he should: and there continuing from Low-Sunday, till the Friday before Whitsunday, his Wife not knowing all this while where he was; he was set in the stocks over-night, and on the morrow went to death, and was burned at Ashford, Anno 1517. The same night, as he was in the stocks at Ashford where he and his Wife dwelt, his Wife then hearing of him, came and sate by him all the night before he should be burned: to whom he declaring the whole story how he was handled, shewed and told, how that he could not set his feet to the ground, for they were burned to the bones; and told her, how by the two Bishops Warham and Fisher, his feet were heat upon the hot coals, and burned to the bones, to make me, said he, to deny my Lord, which I will never do; for if I should deny my Lord in this world, he would hereafter deny me. I pray thee, said he, therefore, good Elizabeth, continue as thou hast begun, and bring up thy children vertuously in the fear of God. And so the next day, on Whitsunday Even, this godly Martyr was burned. Standing at the Stake, this Prayer he made, holding up his hands;

This bleſſed Martyr, John Browne, had born a faggot ſeven years before, in the days of King Henry the ſeventh.

As it is the property of Satan ever to malign the proſperous eſtate of the Saints of God, and true profeſſors of Chriſt; ſo ceaſeth he not continually to ſtir up his wicked members to the effectual accompliſhing of that which his envious nature ſo greedily deſireth; if not always openly by colour of tyrannical Laws, yet at leaſtwiſe by ſome ſubtil practice of ſecret Murther. Which thing doth moſt plainly appear, not only in a great number of the bleſſed Martyrs of Chriſt's Church mentioned in this Book, but alſo and eſpecially in the diſcourſe of this lamentable Hiſtory that now I have in hand, concerning the ſecret and cruel murthering of Richard Hunne, whoſe Story here conſequently enſueth, decerped and collected partly out of the Regiſters of London, partly out of a Bill exhibited and denounced in the Parliament-houſe.

The Story of Richard Hunne.

Richard Hunne Martyr.

THere was in the year of our Lord 1514, one Richard Hunne, Merchant-Tailor, dwelling within the City of London, and Freeman of the ſame, who was eſteemed during his life, and worthily reputed, and taken not only for a Man of true dealing and good ſubſtance, but alſo for a good Catholick Man. This Richard Hunne had a child at nurſe in Middleſex, in the Pariſh of St. Mary Matfilon, which died: by the occaſion whereof one Thomas Dryſie'd Clerk, being Parſon of the ſaid Pariſh, ſued the ſaid Richard Hunne in the Spiritual Court for a bearing-Sheet, which the ſaid Thomas Dryfield claimed unjuſtly to have of the ſaid Hunne, for a Mortuary for Stephen Hunne, Son of the ſaid Richard Hunne, which Stephen being at nurſe in the ſaid Pariſh, died, being of the age of five weeks, and not above. Hunne anſwered him again, That foraſmuch as the Child had no propriety in the Sheet, he therefore neither would pay it, nor the other ought to have it. Whereupon the Prieſt, moved with a covetous deſire, and loth to loſe his pretended Right, aſcited him to appear in the Spiritual Court, there to anſwer the matter. Whereupon the ſaid Richard Hunne being troubled in the Spiritual Court, was forced to ſeek counſel of the learned in the Law of this Land, and purſued a Writ of Præmunire againſt the ſaid Thomas Dryfield, and other his Aiders, Counſellors, Proctors, and Adherents, as by the proceſs thereof is yet to be ſeen. Which when the reſt of the Prieſtly Order heard of, greatly diſdaining that any Layman ſhould ſo boldly enterprize ſuch a matter againſt any of them, and fearing alſo, that if they ſhould now ſuffer this Prieſt to be condemned at the ſuit of Hunne, there would be thereby ever after a liberty opened unto all others of the Laity to do the like with the reſt of the Clergy in ſuch like caſes; they ſtraightways, both to ſtop this matter, and alſo to be revenged of him for that he had already done, ſought all means they poſſibly could how to intrap and bring him within the danger of their own cruel Laws. And thereupon making ſecret and diligent Inquiſition, and ſeeking all corners they could againſt him, at length they found a means how to accuſe him of Hereſy unto Richard Fitzjames, then Biſhop of London, and ſo did, who (deſirous to ſatisfy the revenging and bloody affection of his Chaplains) cauſed him thereupon to be apprehended and committed unto priſon within the Lollards Tower at Pauls, ſo that none of his friends might be ſuffered to come to him.

Anno 1514.

The deſtructful demeanor of the Popiſh holy Catholick to be noted.

Rich. Hunne committed to Lollards Tower.

This Richard Hunne being clapt in the Lollards Tower, ſhortly after, at the earneſt inſtigation of Dr. Horſey, the Biſhop's Chancellor, (a Man more ready to prefer the Clergies cruel tyranny, than the truth of Chriſt's Goſpel) was brought before the Biſhop at his Manor of Fulham, the 2*d* day of December, in the year before mentioned, where within his Chappel he examined him upon theſe Articles following, collected againſt him by the ſaid Horſey and his Complices:

The Articles objected againſt Rich. Hunne.

Firſt, that he had read, taught, preached, publiſhed, and obſtinately defended, againſt the Laws of Almighty God, that Tithes, or paying of Tithes, was never ordained to be due, ſaving only by the Covetouſneſs of Prieſts.

2. Item, That he had read, taught, preached, publiſhed, and obſtinately defended, that Biſhops and Prieſts be the Scribes and Phariſees that did crucify Chriſt, and damned him to death.

3. Item, That he had read, taught, preached, &c. That Biſhops and Prieſts be teachers and preachers, but no doers, neither fulfillers of the Law of God, but catching, ravening, and all things taking, and nothing miniſtring, neither giving.

4. Item, Where and when one Joan Baker was detected and abjured of many great Hereſies, (as it appeareth by her Abjuration) the ſaid Richard Hunne ſaid, publiſhed, taught, preached, and obſtinately took upon him, ſaying, That he would defend her and her opinions, if it coſt him five hundred Marks.

5. Item, Afterwards (where and when the ſaid Joan Baker, after her Abjuration, was enjoined open Penance according to her demerits) the ſaid Richard Hunne ſaid, publiſhed, taught, and obſtinately did defend her, ſaying, The Biſhop of London and his Officers have done open wrong to the ſaid Joan Baker, in puniſhing her for Hereſy; for her ſayings and opinions be according to the Laws of God: wherefore the Biſhop and his Officers are more worthy to be puniſhed for Hereſy than ſhe is.

6. Item, That the ſaid Richard Hunne hath in his keeping divers Engliſh Books prohibited and damned by the Law; as the Apocalypſe in Engliſh, Epiſtles and Goſpels in Engliſh, Wickliffs damnable Works, and other Books containing infinite Errors, in the which he hath been a long time accuſtomed to read, teach, and ſtudy daily.

Particular Anſwer unto theſe ſeveral Objections in the Regiſter I find none, ſaving that next under them there is written in his name, with a contrary hand, theſe words following: As touching theſe Articles, I have not ſpoken them as they be here laid; howbeit unadviſedly I have ſpoken Words ſomewhat ſounding to the ſame, for the which I am ſorry, and ask God mercy, and ſubmit me to my Lord's charitable and favourable Correction. Which they affirm to be written with Hunne's own hand: but how likely to truth that is, let the diſcreet wiſdom of the Reader indifferently judg by the whole ſequel of this Proceſs. And further, if it were his own act, what occaſion then had they ſo cruelly to murder him as they did? ſeeing he had already ſo willingly confeſſed his fault, and ſubmitted himſelf to the charitable and favourable correction of the Biſhop, (for the which, even by their own Law, in caſes of moſt heinous Hereſy, he ought to be again received and pardoned) except perhaps they will account horrible Murther to be but the Biſhop's favourable correction. Again, It ſeems they had very few credible witneſſes to prove certainly that this was his Anſwer and Hand-writing; for the Regiſter, or ſome other for him, appointed to record the ſame, hath certified it as of hear-ſay from others, and not of his own proper ſight and knowledg, as the words noted in the margin of the Book, adjoining to the foreſaid Anſwer, plainly do declare, which are theſe; Hoc fuit ſcriptum manu propria Ricardi Hunne, ut dicitur. Now if he had any ſure ground to ſtabliſh this Certificate, I doubt not but he would inſtead of ut dicitur, have regiſtred the names of the Aſſiſtants at the time of his examination, (which he confeſſeth to be many) as generally they do in all their Acts, eſpecially in caſes of Hereſy, as they term it. But how ſcrupulous thoſe good fellows that ſpared not ſo ſhameleſly to murther him, would be to make a lie of him that was already dead, let, as I ſaid, the indifferent judgment of the godly wiſe diſcern.

This Anſwer ſmelleth of forging and crafty packing.

Arguments and Reaſons proving this Anſwer not to be of Rich. Hunne.

This Examination ended, the Biſhop ſent him back again

A deſcription of y^e Lollards Tower, where M^r Richard Hunne was murthered.

Richard Hunne ſent back again to Lollards Tower.

again the ſame day unto the Lollards Tower; and then, by the appointment of Dr. Horſey, his Chancellor, he was colourably committed from the cuſtody of Charles Joſeph the Sumner, unto John Spalding the Bell-ringer, a Man by whoſe ſimpleneſs in wit (tho otherwiſe wicked) the ſubtil Chancellor thought to bring his devilliſh pretended Homicide the eaſier to paſs; which moſt cruelly he did, by his Miniſters ſuborned, within two nights next then following accompliſh, as is plainly proved hereafter, by the diligent Enquiry, and final Verdict of the Coroner of London and his Inqueſt, made by order of the Laws in that behalf limited. But when this uſual practice of the Papiſts was once accompliſhed, there wanted then no ſecret ſhifts nor worldly-wiles for the crafty colouring of this Miſchief: and therefore the next morning after they had in the night committed this Murther, Spalding (I doubt not but by the counſel of his Maſter Chancellor) gat himſelf out of the way into the City, and leaving the Keys of the Priſon with one of his fellows, willed him to deliver them unto the Sumners boy which accuſtomably did uſe to carry Hunne his meat and other neceſſaries that he needed; thinking that the boy, firſt finding the priſoner dead, and hanged in ſuch ſort as they left him, they might by his relation be thought free from any ſuſpition of this matter. Which thing happened in the beginning almoſt as they wiſhed. For the Boy the ſame morning (being the fourth day of December) having the the keys delivered him, accompanied with two other of the Biſhop's Sumners, went about ten of the Clock into the Priſon, to ſerve the Priſoner as he was wont to do; and when they came up, they found him hanged with his face towards the wall. Whereupon they (aſtoniſhed at this ſight) gave knowledg thereof immediatly unto the Chancellor, being then in the Church, and watching, I ſuppoſe, of purpoſe for ſuch News; who forthwith got unto him certain of his Collegues, and went with them into the Priſon, to ſee that which his own wicked Conſcience knew full well before, as was afterwards plainly proved, altho then he made a fair face to the contrary, blazing abroad among the People by their Officers and Servants, that Hunne had deſperately hanged himſelf. Howbeit the People having good experience as well of the honeſt life and godly converſation of the Man, as alſo of the devilliſh malice of his Adverſaries the Prieſts, judged rather, that by their procurement he was ſecretly murdered. Whereof aroſe great contention; for the Biſhop of London on the one ſide, taking his Clergies part, affirmed ſtoutly that that Hunne had hanged himſelf: The Citizens again on the other ſide, vehemently ſuſpecting ſome ſecret Murther, cauſed the Coroner of London, according to Law, to chuſe an Inqueſt, and to take good view of the dead Body, and ſo to try out the truth of the matter. Whereby the Biſhop and his Chaplains were then driven to extremity of ſhifts: and therefore minding by ſome ſubtil ſhew of Juſtice to ſtop the mouths of the People, they determined, that in the mean while as the Inqueſt was occupied about their charge, the Biſhop ſhould for his part proceed Ex Officio, in caſe of Hereſy againſt the dead Perſon; ſuppoſing, moſt like, that if the Party were once condemned of Hereſy, the Inqueſt durſt not then but find him guilty of his own death, and ſo clearly acquit them from all the former ſuſpicion of privy Murther. This determination of theirs they did immediatly put in practice, in order as followeth:

Richard Hunne privily murdered in the Lollards Tower.

Crafty packing of the murdering Papiſts.

The ſecret conveyance of the murdering of Rich. Hunne.

Horſey the Chancellor craftily practiſeth.

The death of Hunne ſuſpected by the Londoners.

The Coroner ſitteth upon the dead of Hunne.

Hereſy laid to Hunne after his death.

First, beſides the Articles before mentioned, which they affirm were objected againſt him in his life-time, Dr. Hed did now alſo after his death collect certain others out of the Prologue of his Engliſh Bible, remaining then in the Biſhop's hands, which he diligently peruſed, not to learn any good thing therein, but to get thereout ſuch matter as he thought might beſt ſerve their curſed purpoſe, as appeareth by the tenor of the Articles, which are theſe:

D. Hed promoter of the dead.

Ex Regiſt. R. Fitzjames, Lond.

New Articles commenced againſt Hunne after his death.

1. First, the ſaid Book damneth all holy Canons, calling them Ceremonies and Statutes of ſinful Men and cunning, and calleth the Pope Sathanas and Antichriſt.

2. Item, it damneth the Pope's Pardons, ſaying they be but Leaſings.

3. Item, The ſaid Book of Hunne ſaith, That Kings and Lords called Chriſtian in name, and Heathen in conditions, defile the Sanctuary of God, bringing Clerks full of Covetouſneſs, Hereſy and Malice, to ſtop God's Law, that it cannot be known, kept, and freely preached.

4. Item, The ſaid Book ſaith, that Lords and Prelates purſue fully and cruelly them that would teach truly and freely the Law of God, and cheriſh them that preach ſinful Mens Traditions and Statutes, by which he meaneth the holy Canons of Chriſt's Church.

5. Item, That poor Men and Idiots have the truth of the holy Scriptures, more than a thouſand Prelates, and religious Men, and Clerks of the School.

6. Item, That Chriſtian Kings and Lords ſet Idols in God's Houſe, and excite the People to Idolatry.

7. Item, That Princes, Lords, and Prelates ſo doing, be worſe

K. Hen. 8. worſe than Herod that purſued Chriſt, and worſe than Jews and Heathen Men that crucified Chriſt.

8. Item, That every Man, ſwearing by our Lady, or any other Saint or Creature, giveth more honour to the Saints than to the Holy Trinity, and ſo he ſaith they be Idolaters.

9. Item He ſaith that Saints ought not to be honoured.

10. Item, He damneth Adoration, Prayer, Kneeling, and offering to Images, which he calleth Stocks and Stones.

11. Item, He ſaith, that the very Body of the Lord is not contained in the Sacrament of the Altar, but that Men receiving it ſhall thereby keep in mind that Chriſt's Fleſh was wounded and crucified for us.

12. Item, He damneth the Univerſity of Oxford, with all degrees and faculties in it, as Art, Civil, Canon, and Divinity; ſaying, that they let the true way to come to the knowledg of the Laws of God and holy Scripture.

Anholy Mother-Church which cannot abide the Word of God to be tranſlated.

13. Item, He defendeth the tranſlation of the Bible and holy Scripture into the Engliſh Tongue, which is prohibited by the Laws of our Mother Holy Church.

Theſe Articles thus collected, as alſo the others before ſpecified, they cauſed, for a more ſhew of their pretended Juſtice and Innocency, to be openly read the next Sunday following, by the Preacher at Pauls-Croſs, with this proteſtation made before.

The Biſhops Publication at Pauls-Croſs againſt Rich. Hunne.

Maſters and Friends, for certain cauſes and conſiderations, I have in commandment to rehearſe, ſhew, and publiſh here unto you, the Articles of Hereſy upon which Richard Hunne was detected and examined: And alſo other great Articles and damnable Points and Opinions of Hereſy contained in ſome of his Books, be come to light and knowledg here ready to be ſhewn.

And therewith he read the Articles openly unto the People, concluding with theſe words:

And Maſters, if there be any Man deſirous to ſee the ſpecialty of theſe Articles, or doubt whether they be contained in this Book or not, for ſatisfying of his mind let him come to my Lord of London, and he ſhall ſee it with good will.

Moreover, here I counſel and admoniſh, that if there be any Perſons that of their ſimpleneſs have been familiar and acquainted with the ſaid Richard Hunne in theſe Articles, or have heard him read upon this Book, or any other ſounding to Hereſy, or have any like Books themſelves, let them come unto my Lord of London betwixt this and Candlemaſs next, and acknowledg their fault, and they ſhall be charitably intreated and dealt withal, ſo that both their Goods and Honeſty ſhall be ſaved: and if they will not come of their own offer, but abide the Proceſs of the Law, then at their own peril be it, if the rigor of the Law be executed againſt them.

After which open publication and admonition, the Biſhop at ſundry times examined divers of his Prieſts, and other Lay-Perſons, upon the contents of both theſe Articles. Among which Examinates there was a Man-ſervant and a Maid of the ſaid Hunne's, who altho they had of long time dwelt with him, were not able to charge him with any great thing worthy reprehenſion, no, not in ſuch points as the Biſhop chiefly objected againſt him. But yet the Prieſts (through whoſe procurement this Miſchief was firſt begun) ſpared no whit ſtoutly and maliciouſly to accuſe him, ſome in the contents of the firſt Articles, and ſome in the ſecond. Wherefore having now, as they thought, ſufficient matter againſt him, they purpoſed ſpeedily to proceed to his condemnation. And becauſe they would ſeem to do all things formally, and by preſcript Order, they firſt drew out certain ſhort and ſummary Rules, by which the Biſhop ſhould be directed in this ſolemn Seſſion, which are theſe:

By Ralph R. Fitzjames, Lond.

1. Firſt, let the Biſhop ſit in his Tribunal-Seat in our Ladies Chappel.

2. Secondly, let him recite the cauſe of his coming, and call Notaries to him to enact what ſhall be there done.

Mark the manner of this proceeding.

3. Thirdly, let him declare, how upon Sunday laſt at Pauls-Croſs, he cauſed to be publiſhed a general Monition or Denunciation, that all Fautors and Maintainers of Richard Hunne ſhould come in as by this day, and ſubmit themſelves: And let him ſignify withal, how certain have come in, and have appeared already.

4. Fourthly, let him proteſt and ſay, that if there remain any yet behind, which have not appeared according to the former Monition and Denunciation, yet if they will come and appear, and ſubmit themſelves, they ſhall be heard and received with grace and favour.

5. Fifthly, let the Biſhop, or ſome other at his appointment, recite the Articles objected againſt Richard Hunne in the time of his Life, and then the other Articles likewiſe, which were out of his great Book of the Bible extracted.

6. Sixthly, Let the Anſwers and Confeſſions of the ſaid Richard Hunne ſummarily be recited, with the Atteſtations made to the ſame Articles. Alſo let his Books be exhibited, and then Thomas Brooke his Servant be called for.

7. Seventhly, let it be openly cried at the Quire-Door, That if there be any which will defend the Articles, Opinions, Books, or the Memory of the ſaid Richard Hunne, let them come and appear, and they ſhall be heard as the Law in that behalf ſhall require.

8. Eighthly, let it be openly cried as in manner before, for ſuch as be receivers, favourers, defenders or believers of the ſaid Richard Hunne, that all ſuch do appear and ſubmit themſelves to the Biſhop, or elſe he intendeth to proceed to the Excommunication of them in general, according to the exigence of the Law in that behalf.

9. Ninthly, let the Biſhop ſpeak to the ſtanders-by, and to them of the Clergy which ſit with him upon the Bench, demanding of them, what their judgment and Opinion is touching the Premiſes? and whether they think it convenient and agreeable for him to proceed to the Sentence againſt the ſaid Richard Hunne in this part to be awarded?

10. Tenthly, After their conſent and counſel given, let the Biſhop read out the Sentence.

11. Finally, after the Sentence read, let the Biſhop appoint the publication and denunciation of the foreſaid Sentence to be read at Paul's-Croſs, or elſewhere, as to him ſhall ſeem expedient, with a Citation likewiſe generally againſt all them that be receivers, favourers, and believers of the ſaid Hunne, to give to underſtand why he ought not further to proceed againſt them, &c.

A ſolemn Proceſs of Fitzjames Biſhop of London againſt Rich. Hunne being dead.

Now according to the tenour of theſe Preſcripts and Rules, the Biſhop of London, accompanied with the Biſhops of Durham and Lincoln, ſat in Judgment the ſixteenth day of December then next following, within the place by the ſame appointed; adjoining alſo unto them as Witneſſes of their proceedings, ſix publick Notaries, his own Regiſter, and about twenty five Doctors, Abbots, Priors, and Prieſts of name, with a great Rabble of other common anointed Catholicks. Where after a ſolemn Proclamation made, that if there were any that would defend the Opinions and Books of Richard Hunne, they ſhould preſently appear and be heard according to Law, he commanded all the Articles and Objections againſt Hunne openly to be read before the Aſſembly: and then perceiving that none durſt appear in his defence, by the advice of his Aſſiſtants, he pronounced the Sentence definitive againſt the dead Carcaſe, condemning it of Hereſy, and therewith committed the ſame unto the Secular Power, to be by them burned accordingly. Which ridiculous Decree was as fondly accompliſhed in Smithfield the twentieth day of the ſame month of December, (being full ſixteen days after they had thus barbarouſly murdered him) to the great grief and diſdain of all the People. And becauſe the Biſhop in his Sentence definitive uſeth a more formal and ample Order of Words than accuſtomably is uſed in others, and alſo pretendeth full hypocritically in the beginning, as it were by way of Induction, divers cauſes that moved him to proceed againſt the dead Carcaſe; I thought good therefore here to inſert the ſame, as a final concluſion of their crafty-coloured Tragedy, the tenour whereof is this:

The Corps of Richard Hunne burned after his death.

The Sentence definitive againſt Rich. Hunne after his death.

* What final obſtinacy was in him, when you ſay before that by his own hand-writing he ſubmitted himſelf to the Biſhops favourable correction.

Notwithſtanding, after all this tragical and cruel handling of the dead Body, and their fair and colourable ſhew of Juſtice, yet the Inqueſt no whit ſtayed their diligent ſearching out of the true cauſe and means of his death. Inſomuch that when they had been divers times called both before the King's Privy-Council, (his Majeſty himſelf being ſometime preſent) and alſo before the chief Judges and Juſtices of this Realm, and that the matter being by them throughly examined, and perceived to be much bolſtered and born withal by the Clergy, was again wholly remitted unto their determination and ending; they found by good proof, and ſufficient evidence, that Doctor Horſey the Chancellor, Charles Joſeph the Sumner, and John Spalding the Bell-ringer, had privily and malicioufly committed this Murther, and therefore indicted them as three wilful Murderers. Howbeit, through the earneſt ſuit of the Biſhop of London unto Cardinal Wolſey, (as appeareth by

Dr Horſey Chancellor, Charles Joſeph and Spalding, murderers of Hunne and his ac-

K. Hen. 8. by his Letters hereafter mentioned) means was found, that at the next Sessions of Goal-delivery the King's Attorney pronounced the Indictment against Dr. Horsey to be false and untrue, and him not to be guilty of the Murder. Who, being then thereby delivered in Body, having yet in himself a guilty Conscience, got him unto Exeter, and durst never after for shame come again unto London. But now that the truth of all this may seem more manifest and plain unto all Mens eyes, here shall follow, word by word, the whole Enquiry and Verdict of the Inquest, exhibited by them unto the Coroner of London, and so given up and signed with his own hand.

The Verdict of the Inquest.

The Verdict of the Inquest.

'THe fifth and the sixth day of December, in the sixth 'year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King 'Henry the eighth, William Barnwell, Coroner of London, 'the day and year aboveſaid, within the Ward of Castle- 'Baynard of London, assembled a Quest, whose names af- 'terward do appear, and hath sworn them truly to enquire 'of the death of one Richard Hunne, which lately was 'found dead in the Lollards-Tower within Paul's Church of 'London: Whereupon all we of the Inquest together went 'up into the said Tower, where we found the body of the 'said Hunne hanging upon a Staple of Iron, in a Girdle of 'Silk, with fair countenance, his head fair kembed, and his 'bonnet right sitting upon his head, with his eyne and 'mouth fair closed, without any staring, gaping, or frown- 'ing, also without any driveling or spurging in any place 'of his body: Whereupon by one assent all we agreed to 'take down the body of the said Hunne, and as soon as we 'began to heave the body it was loose: whereby by good 'advisement we perceived that the girdle had no knot about 'the staple, but it was double-cast, and the links of an iron 'chain, which did hang on the same staple, were laid upon 'the same girdle whereby he did hang: Also the knot of 'the girdle that went about his neck, stood under his left 'ear, which caused his head to lean towards his right shoul- 'der. Notwithstanding there came out of his nostrils 'two small streams of blood to the quantity of four drops; 'save only these four drops of blood, the face, lips, chin, 'dublet, collar, and shirt of the said Hunne was clean from 'any blood. Also we find that the skin both of his neck 'and Throat, beneath the girdle of silk, was fret and failed 'away, with that thing which the Murderers had broken 'his Neck withal. Also the hands of the said Hunne were 'wrung in the wrists, whereby we perceived that his hands 'had been bound. Moreover, we find that within the said 'prison was no mean whereby a Man might hang himself, 'but only a Stool, which Stool stood upon a Bolster of a 'Bed, so tickle, that any Man or Beast might not touch it 'so little, but it was ready to fall: whereby we perceived, 'that it was not possible that Hunne might hang himself, the 'Stool so standing. Also all the girdle from the staple to 'his neck, as well as the part which went about his neck, 'was too little for his head to come out thereat. Also it was 'not possible that the soft silken girdle should break his 'neck or skin beneath the girdle. Also we find in a corner, 'somewhat beyond the place where he did hang, a great 'parcel of blood. Also we find upon the left side of Huns 'Jacket, from the breast downward, two great streams of 'blood. Also within the flap of the left side of his Jacket 'we find a great cluster of blood, and the Jacket folden 'down thereupon; which thing the said Hunne could ne- 'ver fold nor do after he was hanged. Whereby it appear- 'eth plainly to us all, that the neck of Hunne was broken, 'and the great plenty of blood was shed before he was 'hanged. Wherefore all we find, by God and all our 'Consciences, that Richard Hunne was murdered. Also 'we acquit the said Richard Hunne of his own death.

'Also there was an end of a Wax-candle, which, as 'John Bell-ringer saith, he left in the Prison burning with 'Hunne that same Sunday at night that Hunne was mur- 'dered, which Wax-candle we found sticking upon the 'Stocks, fair put out, about seven or eight foot from the 'place where Hunne was hanged, which candle after our 'opinion was never put out by him, for many likelihoods 'which we have perceived. Also at the going up of 'Master Chancellor into the Lollards Tower, we have 'good proof that there lay on the Stocks a Gown, either of 'Murrey, or Crimson in grain, furred with Shanks, whose 'Gown it was we could never prove, neither who bare it 'away. All we find, that Master William Horsey, Chan- 'cellor to my Lord of London, hath had at his command- 'ment both the rule and guiding of the said Prisoner. 'Moreover, all we find, that the said Master Horsey, Chan- 'cellor, hath put Charles Joseph out of his Office, as the 'said Charles hath confessed, because he would not deal 'and use the said Prisoner so cruelly, and do to him as the 'Chancellor would have had him to do. Notwithstand- 'ing the deliverance of the Keys to the Chancellor by 'Charles on the Saturday at night before Hunne's death, 'and Charles riding out of the Town, on that Sunday in 'the morning ensuing, was but a Convention made be- 'twixt Charles and the Chancellor to colour the Murder. 'For the same Sunday that Charles rode forth, he came a- 'gain to the Town at night, and killed Richard Hunne, as 'in the depositions of Julian Littel, Thomas Chicheley, 'Thomas Simonds, and Peter Turner, doth appear.

'After colouring of the Murder betwixt Charles and 'the Chancellor conspired, the Chancellor called to him 'one John Spalding, Bell-ringer of Pauls, and delivered 'to the same Bell-ringer the Keys of the Lollards-Tower, 'giving to the said Bell-ringer a great charge, saying, I 'charge thee to keep Hunne more straitly than he hath 'been kept, and let him have but one meal a day; more- 'over, I charge thee let no body come to him without my 'licence, neither to bring him Shirt, Cap, Kerchief, or 'any other thing, but that I see it before it come to him. 'Also before Hunne was carried to Fulham, the Chancellor 'commanded to be put upon Hunne's Neck a great Collar 'of Iron, with a great Chain, which is too heavy for any 'Man or Beast to wear, and long to endure.

'Moreover, it is well proved, that before Hunne's death Proofs of Hunnes death. 'the said Chancellor came up into the said Lollards-Tower, 'and kneeled down before Hunne, holding up his hands 'to him, praying him of Forgiveness of all that he had 'done to him, and must do to him. And on Sunday fol- 'lowing the Chancellor commanded the Poenitentiary of 'Pauls to go up to him, and say a Gospel, and make for 'him holy Water, and holy Bread, and give it to him, 'which he did: and also the Chancellor commanded that 'Hunne should have his dinner. And the same dinner- 'time Charles's Boy was shut in Prison with Hunne, which 'was never so before; and after dinner, when the Bell- 'ringer set out the Boy, the Bell-ringer said to the same 'Boy, Come no more hither with meat for him till to- 'morrow, for my Master Chancellor hath commanded that 'he should have but one meal a day: and the same night 'following Richard Hunne was murdered, which Murder 'could not have been done without consent and licence of 'the Chancellor, and also by the witting and knowledg of 'John Spalding Bell-ringer; for there could no Man come 'into the Prison but by the keys, being in John Bell-ringer's 'keeping. Also, as by my Lord of London's Book doth 'appear, John Bell-ringer is a poor innocent Man. Where- 'fore all we do perceive, that this Murder could not be 'done but by the commandment of the Chancellor, and 'by the witting and knowing of John Bell-ringer.

'Charles Joseph, within the Tower of London, of his The witness of Charles Joseph, Sumner. 'own free will, and unconstrained, said, That Master Chan- 'cellor devised, and wrote with his own hand, all such Here- 'sies as were laid to Hunne's charge; record John God, John 'True, John Pasmere, Richard Gibson, with many other. 'Also Charles Joseph saith, That when Richard Hun was 'slain, John Bell-ringer bare up the stairs into the Lollards 'Tower a Wax-candle, having the keys of the doors hang- 'ing on his arm; and I Charles went next to him, and Ma- 'ster Chancellor came up last: and when all we came up, 'we found Hunne lying on his Bed; and then Master Chan- 'cellor said, Lay hands on the Thief; and so all we mur- 'dered him: and then I Charles put the girdle about 'Hunne's neck; and then John Bell-ringer and I Charles did 'heave up Hun, and Master Chancellor pulled the girdle 'over the staple, and so Hun was hanged.

The Depoſition of Julian Littell late Servant of Charles Joſeph, by her free will, unconſtrained, the ſixth Year of our Sovereign Lord King Henry the Eighth, within the Chappel of our Lady of Bethleem, ſhewed to the Inqueſt.

The Witneſs of Julian Littlie, againſt Ch. Joſeph.

FIrſt, Julian ſaith, that the Wedneſday at night, after the death of Richard Hunne, Charles Joſeph her Maſter came home to his Supper: Then Julian ſaid to him, Maſter, it was told me that ye were in Priſon. Charles anſwered, It is merry to turn the Penny: and after Supper Charles truſſed up a parcel of his Goods, and with help of Julian, bare them into Mr. Porter's Houſe to keep: and that done, Charles ſaid to Julian; Julian, if thou wilt be ſworn to keep my counſel, I will ſhew thee my mind. Julian anſwered, Yea, if it be neither Felony nor Treaſon. Then Charles took a Book out of his Purſe, and Julian ſware to him thereupon. Then ſaid Charles to Julian, I have deſtroyed Richard Hunne. Alas Maſter, ſaid Julian, how? he was called an honeſt Man. Charles anſwered, I put a wyre in his Noſe. Alas, ſaid Julian, now be ye caſt away and undone. Then ſaid Charles, Julian, I truſt in thee that thou wilt keep my counſel; And Julian anſwered, Yea, but for God's ſake Maſter ſhift for your ſelf. Then Charles ſaid, I had lever than 100 pound it were not done; but what is done, cannot be undone. Moreover Charles ſaid then to Julian, Upon Sunday when I rode to my Couſin Barington's houſe, I tarried there and made good cheer all day till it was night; and yet before it was midnight I was in London, and had killed Hun: and upon the next day I rode thither again, and was there at dinner, and ſent for Neighbours, and made good chear. Then Julian asked Charles, Where ſet you your Horſe that night you came to Town, and wherefore came you not home? Charles anſwered, I came not home for fear of bewraying. And then Julian asked Charles, Who was with you at the killing of Hun? Charles anſwered, I will not tell thee. And Julian ſaith that upon the Thurſday following Charles tarried all day in his houſe with great fear: and upon Friday following, early in the morning before day, Charles went forth, as he ſaid, to Pauls; and at his coming in again he was in a great fear, ſaying haſtily, Get me my Horſe; and, with great fear and haſte made him ready to ride; and bad Mr. Porter's Lad lead his Horſe into the Field by the backſide: and then Charles put into his ſleeve his Maſe, or Maſor, with other Plate borrowed of Mr. Porter, both Gold and Silver, but how much I am not ſure: and Charles went into the Field after his Horſe, and Julian brought his Budget after him. Alſo upon Friday in Chriſtmaſs week following, Charles came home late in the night, and brought with him three Bakers and a Smith of Stratford, and the ſame night they carried out of Charles's his Houſe, all his Goods by the Field ſide, to the Bell in Shoreditch, and early in the morning conveyed it with Carts to Stratford.

Moreover Julian ſaith, that the Saturday at night before the death of Hun, Charles came home, and brought with him a Gunard, ſaying, it was for Hun; and Charles's Boy told to Julian, that there was alſo ordained a piece of freſh Salmon, which John Bellinger had.

Alſo Charles ſaid to the ſaid Julian, Were not this ungracious Trouble, I could bring my Lord of London to the doors of Hereticks in London, both of Men and Women, that be worth a thouſand pounds; but I am afraid that the ungracious Midwife ſhall bewray us all.

Alſo Charles ſaid unto Mrs. Porter likewiſe & more largely, ſpeaking of the beſt in London: Whereto Mrs. Porter anſwered, The beſt in London is my Lord Mayor. Then Charles ſaid, I will not ſcuſe him quite, for that he taketh this Matter ſo hot.

Whereas Charls Joſeph ſaith he lay at Neckil with a Harlot, a Man's Wife, in Barington's Houſe, the ſame Night that Richard Hun was murdered, and there abode until the morrow at eleven of the clock; and thereupon brought before the King's Council, for his purgation, the forſaid Baud Barington's Wife, and alſo the foreſaid Harlot: this purgation we have proved all untrue, as right largely may appear, as well by the Depoſition of Julian Littel, as of Thomas Chicheſley Tailor, Thomas Simonds Stationer, of Robert Johnſon and his Wife, of John Spalding Belringer: Alſo of Peter Turner Son-in-law of the foreſaid Charles Joſeph; who ſaid before, to an honeſt Woman, a Wax-chandler's Wife, that before this day ſeventh night Hun ſhould have a miſchievous death, &c. Alſo of John Ederby Baker, to whom John Spadling himſelf declared theſe words, that there was ordained for Hun ſo grievous penance, that when Men hear of it, they ſhall have great marvel thereof, &c. Beſides the Depoſition moreover of Allen Creſwell Waxchandler, and Richard Horſenaile Bailiff of the Sanctuary Town, called Godſture in Eſſex. Which Teſtimonies and Depoſitions hereafter follow.

The Witneſs of Peter Turner.

K. Hen. 8.

The witneſs of John Spalding himſelf.

The Depoſition of Allen Creſwell Waxchandler.

THe ſaid Allen ſaith, That John Granger ſervant with my Lord of London, in my Lord of London's Kitchen, at ſuch time as the ſaid Allen was ſearing Hun's Coffin, that Granger I ſay, told him, that he was preſent with John Belringer the ſame Sunday at night that Richard Hun was found dead in the morrow, when the Keeper ſet him in the Stocks; inſomuch that the ſaid Hun deſired to borrow the Keeper's Knife: and the Keeper asked him what he would do with his Knife; and he anſwered, I had lever kill my ſelf than to be thus entreated. This Depoſition the ſaid Allen will prove as far forth as any Chriſtian Man may; ſaying, that Granger ſhewed to him theſe words of his own free will and mind, without any queſtion or enquiry to him made by the ſaid Allen. Moreover the ſaid Allen ſaith, that all the evening Granger was in great fear.

The Depoſition of Richard Horſenail, Bailiff of the Sanctuary-Town called Godſture in Eſſex.

THe ſaid Richard ſaith, That the Friday before Chriſtmaſs day laſt paſt, one Charles Joſeph, Sumner to my Lord of London, became a Sanctuary-Man, and the aforeſaid Friday he regiſtred his Name; the ſaid Charles ſaying it was for the ſafeguard of his Body, for there be certain Men in London ſo extream againſt him for the death of Richard Hun, that he dare not abide in London. Howbeit the ſaid Charles ſaith, he knowledgeth himſelf guiltleſs of Hun's death; for he delivered the Keys to the Chancellor by Hun's life. Alſo the ſaid Bailiff ſaith, that Charles paid the Duty of the ſaid Regiſtring, both to him and Sir John Studley Vicar.

The Copy of Richard Fitzjames's Letter, then Biſhop of London, ſent to Cardinal Wolſey.

The Letter of the Biſhop of London to Cardinal Wolſey.

I beſeech your good Lordſhip to ſtand ſo good Lord unto my poor Chancellor now in Ward, and indicted by an untrue Queſt, for the Death of Richard Hun, upon the only Accuſation of Charles Joſeph made by pain and durance; that by your interceſſion it may pleaſe the King's Grace to have the matter duly and ſufficiently examined by indifferent Perſons of his diſcreet Council, in the preſence of the Parties, e're there be any more done in the Cauſe; and that upon the innocency of my ſaid Chancellor declared, it may further pleaſe the Kings Grace to award a Plackard unto his Attorney to confeſs the ſaid Indictment to be untrue, when the time ſhall require it: for aſſured am I, if my Chancellor be tried by any twelve Men in London, they be ſo maliciouſly ſet, In favorem hæreticæ pravitatis, that they will caſt and condemn any Clerk, tho he were as innocent as Abel. Quare ſi potes beate Pater, adjuva infirmitates noſtras, & tibi in perpetuum devinctiorimus. Over this, in moſt humble wiſe I beſeech you; that I may have the King's gracious Favour, whom I never offended willingly; and that by your good means I might ſpeak with his Grace and you: and I with all mine ſhall pray for your proſperous eſtate long to continue.

Laſtly, now it remaineth to infer the Sentence of the Queſtmen, which followeth in like ſort to be ſeen and expended, after I have firſt declared the words of the Biſhop ſpoken in the Parliament-houſe.

And furthermore ſaid, that there came a Man to his Houſe, whoſe Wife was appeached of Hereſy, to ſpeak with him; and he ſaid that he had no mind to ſpeak with the ſame Man; which Man ſpake and reported to the Servants of the ſame Biſhop, that if his Wife would not hold ſtill her Opinions, he would cut her Throat with his own hands: with other words.

The Sentence of the Inqueſt.

THe Inquiſition intended and taken at the City of London, in the Pariſh of St. Gregory, in the Ward of Baynard Caſtle in London, the ſixth day of December, in the ſixth year of the Reign of King Hen. 8. before Thomas Barnwel Crowner of our Soveraign Lord the King within the City of London aforeſaid. Alſo before James Yarford and John Mundey, Sheriffs of the ſaid City, upon the ſight of the Body of Richard Hun, late of London Tailor, which was found hanged in the Lollards Tower; and by the oath and proof of lawful Men of the ſame Ward, and of other three Wards next adjoining, as it ought to be, after the cuſtom of the City aforeſaid, to enquire how, and in what manner wiſe the ſaid Richard Hun came unto his death: and upon the Oath of John Bernard, Thomas Stert, William Warren, Henry Abraham, John Aborow, John Turner, Robert Allen, William Marler, John Burton, James Page, Thomas Pickhill, William Burton, Robert Bridgwater, Thomas Buſted Gilbert Howell, Richard Gibſon, Chriſtopher Crafton, John God, Richard Holt, John Palmere, Edmund Hudſon, John Arunſell, Richard Cooper, John Tim: The which ſaid upon their Oaths, that where the ſaid Richard Hun, by the commandment of Richard Biſhop of London, was impriſoned and brought to hold in a Priſon of the ſaid Biſhops called Lollards Tower, lying in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul in London, in the Pariſh of St. Gregory, in the Ward of Baynard Caſtel aforeſaid; William Horſey of London Clerk, otherwiſe called William Hereſie, Chancellor to Richard Biſhop of London; and one Charles Joſeph late of London Sumner, and John Spalding of London, otherwiſe called John Bellringer, felonioufly as Felons to our Lord the King, with force and arms againſt the peace of our Soveraign Lord the King, and dignity of his Crown, the fourth day of December, the ſixth year of the Reign of our Soveraign Lord aforeſaid, of their great malice, at the Pariſh of Saint Gregory aforeſaid, upon the ſaid Richard Hun made a fray, and the ſame Richard Hun felonioufly ſtrangled and ſmothered, and alſo the Neck they did break of the ſaid Richard Hun, and there felonioufly ſlew him and murdered him; and alſo the Body of the ſaid Richard Hun, afterward the ſame fourth day, year, place, pariſh, and ward aforeſaid, with the proper Girdle of the ſame Richard Hun, of ſilk, black of colour, of the value of twelve pence, after his death, upon a hook driven into a piece of timber in the wall of the Priſon aforeſaid, made faſt, and ſo hanged him, againſt the Peace of our Soveraign Lord the King, and the Dignity of his Crown: and ſo the ſaid Jury hath ſworn upon the Holy Evangelifts, that the ſaid Wil. Horſey Clerk, Charles Joſeph, and John Spalding, of their ſet malice, then and there felonioufly killed and murdered the ſaid Richard Hun in manner and form above-ſaid, againſt the Peace of our Soveraign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Rich. Hun cleared by the Inqueſt, not to have hanged himſelf.

The Parliament judging with Richard Hun.

AFter that the twenty four had given up their Verdict, ſealed and ſigned with the Crowner's Seal, the Cauſe was then brought into the Parliament-houſe, where the truth was laid ſo plain before all Mens faces, and the fact ſo notorious, that immediatly certain of the bloody murderers were committed to Priſon, and ſhould no doubt have ſuffered what they deſerved, had not the Cardinal by his authority practiſed for his Catholick Children, at the ſuit of the Biſhop of London. Whereupon the Chancellor, by the King's Pardon, and ſecret ſhifting, rather than by God's Pardon and his deſerving, ſcaped, and went, as is ſaid, to Exceter, &c. Nevertheleſs tho juſtice took no place where favour did ſave; yet becauſe the innocent Cauſe of Hun ſhould take no wrong, the Parliament became ſuiters unto the King's Majeſty, that whereas the Goods of the ſaid Hun were confiſcate into the King's hands, it would pleaſe his Grace to make reſtitution of all the ſaid Goods unto the Children of the ſaid Hun. Upon which motion, the King of his gracious diſpoſition, did not only give all the foreſaid Goods unto the foreſaid Children under his broad Seal yet to be ſeen, but alſo did ſend out his Warrants (which hereafter ſhall follow) to thoſe that were the cruel Murderers, commanding them, upon his high diſpleaſure, to deliver all the ſaid Goods, and make reſtitution for the death of the ſaid Richard Hun: all which Goods came to the ſum of fifteen hundred pounds Sterling, beſides his Plate and other Jewels.

The King's Letter for the reſtitution of Huns goods.

TRuſty and Welbeloved, We greet you well. Whereas by the complaint to us made, as well as alſo in our high Court of Parliament, on the behalf and part of Roger Whapplot of our City of London Draper, and Margaret his Wife, late the Daughter of Richard Hun: And whereas you were indicted by our Laws, of and for the death of the ſaid Richard Hun, and the ſaid Murder cruelly committed by you, like as by our Records more at large plainly it doth appear, about the fifth day of December, in the ſixth year of our Reign; the ſame we abhor; Nevertheleſs we of our ſpecial grace, certain ſcience, and meer motion, pardoned you upon certain conſiderations us moving: for the intent that the Goods of the ſaid Richard Hun, and the adminiſtration of them, were committed to the ſaid Roger Whapplot. We then ſuppoſed and intended your amendment, and reſtitution to be made by you to the Infants, the Children of the ſaid Richard Hun; as well for his death, as for his goods, embezeled, waſted, conſumed, by your tyranny and cruel act ſo committed, the ſame being of no little value: and as hitherto ye have made no recompence, according to our Laws, as might ſtand with Equity, Juſtice, right and good Conſcience, and for this cauſe due ſatisfaction ought to be made by our Laws: Wherefore we will and exhort, and otherwiſe charge and command you, by the Tenour of theſe our eſpecial Letters, that ye ſatisfy and recompence the ſaid Roger Whapplot, and the ſaid Margaret his Wife, according to our Laws in this caſe, as it may ſtand with right and good conſcienee, elſe otherwiſe at your further peril; ſo that they ſhall have no cauſe to return unto us, for their further remedy eftſoons in this behalf, as ye in the ſame tender to avoid our high diſpleaſure: otherwiſe that ye upon the ſight hereof, ſet all excuſes apart, and repair unto our preſence, at which your hither coming you ſhall be further advertiſed of our mind.

From our Mannor, &c.

Defence of Richard Hun againſt Sir Thomas More and Allen Cope.

Defence of Rich. Hun, &c.

I Doubt not but by theſe Premiſes, thou haſt (Chriſtian Reader) ſufficiently to underſtand the whole diſcourſe and ſtory of Richard Hun, from top to toe. Firſt how he came in trouble for denying the bearing-Sheet of his young Infant departed: then how he was forced for ſuccour of himſelf to ſue a Præmunire: and thereupon what conſpiracy of the Clergy was wrought againſt him, what ſnares were laid, what fetches were practiſed, and Articles deviſed to ſnarl him in the Trap of Hereſy, and ſo to impriſon him. Furthermore, being in Priſon, how he was ſecretly murdered; after his murder, hanged; after his hanging, condemned; after his condemnation, burned; and after his burning, laſtly, how his death was inquired by the Crowner, and cleared by acquittal of the Inqueſt. Moreover, how the cauſe was brought into the Parliament, and by the Parliament the King's Precept obtained for reſtitution of his Goods. The debating of which tragical and tumultuous ſtory, with all the branches, and particular evidences of the ſame, taken out as well of the publick Acts, as of the Biſhop's Regiſters, and ſpecial Records remaining in the cuſtody of Dunſtan Whapplot, the Son of the Daughter of the ſaid Richard Hun, and there to be ſeen. I thought here to unwrap and diſcover ſo much the more, for three ſpecial purpoſes:

Ex publicis act ex archivis & Regiſtris Lond.

The practice of Cardinal Wolſey for his Clergymen.

First,

Three purpoſes conſidered.

First, as is requiſite, for teſtimony and witneſs of Truth falſly ſlandered, of Innocency wrongfully condemned, and of the Party cruelly oppreſſed.

The ſecond cauſe moveth me for Sir Thomas More's Dialogues, wherein he dallieth out the matter, thinking to jeſt poor ſimple Truth out of countenance.

The third cauſe which conſtraineth me, be the Dialogues of Alanus Copus; which two, the one in Engliſh, the other in Latin, railing and barking againſt Richard Hun, do double-wiſe charge him, both to be an Heretick, and alſo a deſperate Homicide of himſelf. Which as it is falſe in the one, ſo it is to be found as untrue in the other, if ſimple Truth, which hath few Friends, and many times cometh in crafty handling, might freely come to indifferent hearing. Wherefore as I have hitherto deſcribed the order and manner of his handling, with the Circumſtances thereof, in plain and naked narration of Story, ſimply laid out before all Mens faces; ſo ſomething here to intermit, in the defence as well of his oppreſſed cauſe, as alſo in diſcharge of my ſelf, I will now compendiouſly anſwer to both theſe foreſaid Adverſaries, ſtopping, as it were, with one buſh two gaps; and the mouths alſo, if I can, of them both together.

Anſwer for Rich. Hun againſt Sir Tho. More Knight.

Sir T. More having many good vertues had one great vice.

And firſt againſt Sir Thomas More, albeit in Degree worſhipful, in Place ſuperior, in wit and Learning ſingular, if his judgment in Chriſt's matters had been correſpondent to the ſame, being otherwiſe a Man with many worthy Ornaments beautified: yet being but a Man, and one Man, I lay and object againſt the Perſon of him, the perſons and cenſures of twenty four Queſtmen, the depoſition of ſo many Jurates, the judgment of the Crowner, the approbation of the Parliament; and laſtly, the King's Bill aſſigned for reſtitution of his goods, with his own broad Seal confirmed, &c. And thus much to the Perſon and Credit of Sir Thomas More.

The Perſon of Sir Tho. More countervailed.

The Reaſons of Sir Tho. More refuted.

Now as touching his Reaſons: whereas he coming in with a flim-flam of a Horſe-miln or a Miln-horſe (in his own terms I ſpeak) thinketh it probation good enough, becauſe he could not ſee him taken by the ſleeve which murdered Hun: againſt theſe Reaſons unreaſonable of his, I alledg all the Evidences and demonſtrations of the Hiſtory above prefixed, to be conſidered, and of all indifferent Men to be peiſed.

The circumſtances of Hun's hanging conſidered.

Firſt, How he was found hanging, with his countenance fair, with his beard and head fair kembed, his bonnet right ſet on his head, with his eine and mouth fair cloſed, without any driveling or ſpurging. His body being taken down, was found looſe (which by hanging could not be) his neck broken, and the skin thereof beneath the throat, where the girdle went, fret and forced away; his girdle notwithſtanding being of ſilk, and ſo double caſt about the ſtaple, that the ſpace of the girdle between the ſtaple and his neck, with the reſidue alſo that went about his neck, was not ſufficient for his head to come out at. His hands moreover wrung in the wriſts, his face, lips, chin, doublet, and ſhirt-collar unſtained with any blood: whenas notwithſtanding in a manner ſomewhat beyond the place where he did hang, a great quantity of blood was found. Alſo, whereas the ſtaple whereon he hanged was ſo that he could not climb thereto without ſome mean, there was a ſtool ſet up upon the bolſter of a bed, ſo tickle, that with the leaſt touch in the World it was ready to fall: and how was it poſſible that Hun might hang himſelf upon that ſtaple, the ſtool ſo ſtanding? Beſides the confeſſion moreover of Charles Joſeph's own mouth to Julian Littell, of Robert Johnſon, John Spalding the Bell-ringer, Peter Turner, and others. All which Teſtimonies and Declarations being ſo clear and undeniable, may ſuffice (I truſt) any indifferent Man to ſee where the truth of this caſe doth ſtand: unleſs Mr. More being a Gentleman of Utopia, peradventure after ſome ſtrange guiſe of that Country, uſeth to carry his eyes not in his head, but in his affection, not ſeeing but where he liketh, nor believing but what he liſteth.

Utopia Mori.

Finally, where Sir Thomas More, ſpeaking of himſelf, ſo concludeth, That he hearing in the matter what well might be ſaid, yet could not find contrary but Hun to be guilty of his own death: ſo in as many words to anſwer him again, I peruſing and ſearching in the ſtory of Rich. Hun what may well be ſearched, cannot but marvel with my ſelf, either with what darkneſs the eyes of Mr. More be dazled; not to ſee what is ſo plain: or elſe with what conſcience he could diſſemble that which ſhame cannot deny.

And thus by the way to the Dialogues of Sir Thomas More.

Anſwer to Alan. Copus for R. Hun

Thirdly, Touching the Dialogues of Allen Cope, which had rather the Biſhop's Chancellor and Officers to be recounted among thieves and murderers, than Hun to be numbred among the Martyrs; I have herein not much to ſay, becauſe himſelf ſaith but little: and if he had ſaid leſs, unleſs his ground were better, it had made as little matter. But foraſmuch as he ſaying not much, ſendeth us to ſeek more in More; ſo with like brevity again I may ſend him to William Tindall to ſhape him an anſwer. Yet notwithſtanding leſt Cope, in ſaying ſomething, ſhould think Hun's innocent cauſe to lack ſome friends, which will not or dare not adventure in defence of Truth; ſomewhat I will anſwer in this behalf.

Hun murdered not by himſelf, but by others.

And firſt touching this murder of Hun not to be his own wilful act, but the deed of others; beſides the demonſtrations above premiſed to Sir Thomas More, now to Mr. Cope: If I had no other evidences but only theſe two, I would require no more; that is, his cap found ſo ſtreight ſtanding upon his head, and the ſtool ſo tottering under his feet. For how is it, I will not ſay like; but how is it poſſible for a Man to hang himſelf in a ſilken girdle double caſt about a ſtaple, in ſuch ſhortneſs, that the ſpace of the knot could not well compaſs his head about, and yet have his cap ſo ſtreight ſet upon his head as his was?

Not poſſible that Hun ſo hanging ſhould hang himſelf.

Again, How is it poſſible, or can it be imagined for him to hang himſelf, climbing up by a ſtool which had no ſtay for him to ſtand upon, but ſtood ſo tickle, that if he had touched the ſame never ſo little, it muſt needs have fallen?

Cope denieth Rich. Hun to die a Martyr.

But Cope being ſomething more provident in this matter, ſeemeth to exceed not altogether ſo far as doth Mr. More. For he, underſtanding the caſe to be ambiguous and doubtful, ſo leaveth it in ſuſpenſe, not determining that Hun did hang himſelf, and yet not admitting that he died a Martyr, no more than they which are quelled by thieves and murderers by high-ways ſide. Well, be it ſo as Cope doth argue, that they which die by the hands of Felons and Murderers in theeviſh ways, be no Martyrs; yet notwithſtanding this his own ſimilitude, comparing the Biſhop's Chancellor and Officers to Thieves and Murderers, doth grant at leaſt that Hun died a true Man, altho no Martyr. Now if the cauſe be it, and not the pain, that maketh a Martyr, in pondering the cauſe why Hun was ſlain, we ſhall find it not altogther like to the cauſe of them which periſh by Thieves and Robbers. For ſuch commonly, becauſe of their goods, and for ſome worldly gain to be ſought by their death, are made away, and being true Men, may peradventure have the reward, altho not the name of Martyrs: Whereas this Man's death being wrought neither for mony, nor any ſuch temporal lucre to redound to his Oppreſſors; as it hath another cauſe, ſo may it have another name, and deſerve to be called by the name of Martyrdom. Like as Abel being ſlain by wicked Cain, albeit he had no opinion of Religion articulate againſt him, but of ſpite only and of malice was made away, yet notwithſtanding is juſtly numbred among the Martyrs: ſo what let to the contrary, but that Hun alſo with him may be reckoned in the ſame Society, ſeeing the cauſe wherefore they both did ſuffer, proceedeth together out of one Fountain? And what moreover if a Man ſhould call Naboth (who for holding his right inheritance was ſlain) a Martyr, what great injury ſhould he do either to the name, or cauſe, or the perſon, worthy to be carped at? Againſt Tho. Becket, you know Mr. Cope, no ſpecial Article of Faith was laid, wherefore he died: And why then do you beſtow upon him ſo devoutly the title of a Martyr, for withholding that from the King, which by the Law of God, and of the Realm, did belong unto him; and cannot ſuffer Hun to be tituled for a Martyr, dying in his own right, by the hands of ſpiritual Thieves and Homicides, as you your ſelf do term them? But what do I ſtrain my travel any further to prove Hun a Martyr, when as Cope's own confeſſion doth import no leſs, tho I ſaid nothing? For what if I ſhould take no more but his own very words, and ſay, that he was known to be an Heretick, as Cope doth affirm? What could I ſay more, ſeeing he died for his Hereſy, to prove him to die a Martyr? For to die an Heretick with the Papiſts, what is it elſe (to ſay truth) but to die with God a Martyr?

The cauſe, not the pain maketh a Martyr.

The cauſe of Abel's death and of Hun's compared.

Cope Dial 6. pag. 847.

Cope ibid.

But howſoever it pleaſeth either Sir Thomas More to jeſt, or Allen Cope to ſcold out the matter, and to ſtile

K. Hen. 8. Richard Hun for a known and deſperate Heretick: yet to all true godly diſpoſed Men, Hun may well be known to be a godly and vertuous Perſon, no Heretick, but faithful and ſound, ſave that only he ſeemed rather half a Papiſt; at leaſt no full Proteſtant, for that he reſorted daily to Maſs, and alſo had his Beads in Priſon with him, after the Catholick manner; albeit he was ſomewhat enclined (as may appear) toward the Goſpel. And if the name of a Martyr be thought too good for him, yet I truſt Mr. Cope will ſtand ſo good Maſter to him, to let him at leaſt be a Martyr's Fellow. But what now if I go further with Mr. Cope, and name Richard Hun, not only for a Martyr, but alſo commend him for a double Martyr? Certes, as I ſuppoſe, in ſo ſaying I ſhould affirm no leſs than truth, nor any thing more than may truly be ſaid, and juſtly proved. But to give and grant this contention unto the Adverſary, which notwithſtanding might be eaſily proved: Let us ſee now the proofs of Mr. Cope, how he argueth that Richard Hun is no Martyr: becauſe (ſaith he) true Men being killed in high-ways by Thieves and Murderers, are not therefore to be counted Martyrs, &c. And was there nothing elſe in the cauſe of Hun, but as in true Men killed by Thieves and Murderers? They that are killed by Thieves and Murderers are killed for ſome prey, or money about them: And what prey or profit was in the death of Hun, let us ſee, to redound to them which oppreſſed him? If it were the Mortuary, or the bearing-Cloth, that was a ſmall thing, and not worthy his death. If it were the Præmunire, the danger thereof pertained to the Prieſt, and not to them. If they feared leſt the example thereof once begun, ſhould afterward redound to the prejudice of the whole Church, then was the cauſe of his death not private but publick, tending to the whole Church and Clergy of Rome: and ſo is his death not altogether like to the death of them which for private reſpects are killed of Thieves and Murderers.

Hun no full Proteſtant.

But he was an Heretick, ſaith Cope. By the ſame reaſon that Cope taketh him for an Heretick, I take him the more to be accepted for a Martyr: for by that way which they call Hereſy, the living God is ſerved, and by no way better. And if he were an Heretick, why then did they not proceed againſt him as an Heretick while he was alive? When they had him at Fulham before them, if they had been ſure to intrap him in that ſnare, why did they not take their advantage when they might with leaſt jeopardy? why did they not proceed and condemn him for an Heretick? why made they ſuch haſte to prevent his death before? why did they not tarry the ſentence of the Law, having the Law in their own hands? But belike they perceived that he could not be proved an Heretick while he lived, and therefore thought it beſt to make him away privily, and to ſtop the Præmunire, and afterward to ſtop the purſuit of his death by making him an Heretick. And therefore were Articles deviſed by the Chancellor (as is proved before by the witneſs of Ch. Joſeph and another) againſt him, and he condemned for an Heretic, and all his favourers alſo, whoſoever durſt ſtir to take his part, and thereupon was committed to the ſecular Power, and burned. Wherein they did him double wrong; firſt in that they burned him for an Heretick, having before ſubmitted himſelf to their favourable correction, as it appeareth yet in the Biſhop's Regiſters by his own hand, as it is there pretended; which was againſt their own Laws. Again, if he had not ſubmitted himſelf at that time, yet did they him wrong to burn him before they knew him and heard him ſpeak (as Tindal ſaith) whether he would recant or no. And yet admit that he was condemned and burned for an Heretick, yet to be killed and burned of them for an Heretick, that taketh not from him the name of a Martyr, but rather giveth him to be a double Martyr.

The cauſe of Hun's ſecret murder diſcuſſed.

Crafty practice.

Hun had double wrong.

But Cope yet proceeding in his hot choler againſt Rich. Hun, after he hath made him firſt no Martyr, and then an Heretick, thirdly he now maketh him alſo a murderer of himſelf, and ſaith, that no other Man was any part of his death but only his own hands, and that either for indignation and anger, or for deſperation, or for ſome cauſe he knoweth not what. And in his Epilogue to make it probable, he alledgeth the example of one, but nameleſs, who in Queen Mary's time in like ſort went about to hang himſelf, had he not been taken in the manner and reſcued.

Cope's reaſons why Hun ſhould hang himſelf.

Furthermore, as touching the Chancellor he argueth, that there was no cauſe why he ſhould attempt any ſuch violence againſt him, both for his Age, for his Dignity, for his Learning, and for the greatneſs of his own Peril which might enſue thereof. Who, if he had maligned the Man, and had been ſo diſpoſed to work his deſtruction, had means otherwiſe without danger to bring that about, having him within his danger convict and faſt tied for Hereſy. Whereunto I anſwer, that to all this matter ſufficient hath been anſwered by the ſtory it ſelf of his death above ſpecified. Whereby the manner of his death, by circumſtances of his handling and hanging, by his Neck broke, by his Body looſe, by his Skin fretted, by his Wriſts wrung, by his Girdle in ſuch ſhortneſs double caſt about the ſtaple, by his Cap right upon his Head, by his Hair kembed, by his Eyes cloſed, by the cake of Blood found in the floor, by his Shirt-collar, Doublet, Jacket, and other outward parts of his garments without drop of Blood unſpotted, by the ſtool ſo ſtanding upon the bolſter, by the Chancellor's murrey Gown found the day after upon the Stocks, the wax Candle fair put out: Furthermore, by the Verdict of the Inqueſt, by the Atteſtation of the Witneſſes ſworn, by the Crowner's Judgment, by the Aſſent of the Parliament, by the King's Letters aſſigned, and broad Seal for reſtitution of his goods: and finally, by the confeſſion of the Parties themſelves which murdered him, &c. And yet thinketh Cope to make Men ſuch fools, having yet their five wits, to ween yet that Hun did hang himſelf, after ſo many demonſtrations and evidences to the contrary, as in every part of this ſtory may appear? And tho it were, as it was, unlike, and hard for a Man to believe, that Dr. Horſey, a Man of ſuch Age, Dignity, and Learning, would ſo much forget himſelf to attempt ſuch a villany; yet ſo great is the Devil ſometimes with Man, where God permitteth, that he worketh greater things than this, and more uncredible. For who would have thought it like that Cain would ever have killed Abel his own natural Brother? which was more than for a Biſhop's Chancellor to kill a Citizen: yet ſo he did. And where Cope pretendeth the cauſes of anger and deſperation whereby Hun did hang himſelf, how is it like, or who ever did hear, a Man being in ſuch extremity of deſperation, to ſtand firſt trimming himſelf, and kembing his head, before he go to hang himſelf? No more credit is alſo to be given to that which followeth in the ſame Cope, where he ſaith, that Rich. Hun being in Priſon, was convict of Hereſy. By the which word Convict, if he mean that Hun was proved an Heretick, that is falſe; for that he being at Fulham examined upon certain Articles, both denied the Articles to be true as they were objected; and alſo if they were true, yet he ſubmitted himſelf to their favourable correction; and therefore not ſtanding obſtinately in the ſame, could not be proved an Heretick. And if by this term Convict, he mean that he was by ſentence caſt; ſo was Hun never caſt by any ſentence for an Heretick, ſo long as he lived, but after his death, when he could nothing anſwer for himſelf. And becauſe this untruth ſhould not go without his fellow, ſee how he hudleth up one falſe narration in the neck of another; affirming moreover, that Hun was caſt into Priſon before he entred his Suit of Præmunire againſt the Prieſt. Which is utterly falſe and untrue, both diſagreeing to other ſtories, and alſo refuted by the words of Sir Tho. More his own Author; who reporteth, that Hun (in ſuing his Præmunire againſt the Prieſt) being ſet upon a glory of Victory, made his boaſt among his friends, that he truſted to have the matter long ſpoken of, and to be called Hun's caſe. Hæc Morus. Whereby it appeareth that Hun was not then in Priſon clapt up for Hereſy, but was abroad ſeeking counſel among the Lawyers, and boaſting among his friends, as writeth More, Lib. 3. Dial.

Tho. Morus, Dial. lib. 3.

After this heap of untruths above paſſed, add yet further another Copy of Cope's falſe dealing: who ſeeking all corners and every-where how to pick matter againſt my former Hiſtory, chargeth me with arrogancy, as tho I took ſo highly upon me to undo and derogate from the King's Acts and Judgments in the acquittal of Dr. Horſey. If it ſo pleaſed the King to acquit Dr. Horſey by his gracious Pardon, I am not againſt it, neither do I deny but the King ſo did: neither do I ſay, nor ever did, but the King of his ſupereminent Prerogative may ſo do: and wherein then do I unrip or looſe the King's Acts here done and concluded? But if the queſtion be this, Whether Dr. Horſey with his his Conjurates, did kill Richard Hun or no: then do I ſay, that the Pardon of the King doth not take away the Verity of the Crime committed, but removeth away the Penalty of the Law deſerved: and ſo if the life of them was ſaved by way of pardon (as Mr. More himſelf ſeemeth not to deny) then was it not through their innocency claiming Juſtice, that they eſcaped, but through petition ſtanding in need of Mercy. For what needeth Pardon where Juſtice abſolveth? Yea, who ſueth Pardon, but in ſo doing muſt yield himſelf guilty? for Pardon never cometh lightly, either with God or Man, except the Crime be firſt confeſſed. Wherefore if they eſcaped by Juſtice, as Cope pretendeth, how then doth Mr. More ſay, they were ſaved by Pardon? and if they eſcaped by Pardon, how then doth Cope ſay they were not guilty? And be it admitted, that the Sentence of the King's Attorney in the King's Name did abſolve them as unguilty, according as the King was then informed by the Cardinal and ſuit of Friends; yet afterward the King, being better informed by the Parliament, and the Truth better known, deteſted and abhorred their Fact, and yet continued his Pardon unto them, as by the King's own Acts and his Broad Seal appeareth, yet remaining in Records to be ſeen.

The eſcaping of Horſey came rather of favour than of his demerits.

And as touching my former Hiſtories ſet forth in Latine and in Engliſh, which ſpake firſt of the fore-man of the Queſt, then of the King's Attorney, to be laboured with ſome gifts or money: as Cope hath yet proved no untruth in my ſaying, ſo leſs can he find any repugnance or diſagreeing in the ſame. For he that ſpeaketh of bribing, firſt of one perſon, and then afterwards of another, where both might be bribed together, is not contrary, I think, to himſelf, but rather doth comprehend that in the one Book, which he before leaveth out in the other; and yet no great repugnance either in the one or in the other, ſeeing that which is ſaid may be verified in both, as it is no other like but in this matter it was: for how is it otherwiſe like or poſſible, but that there muſt needs be found ſome privy packing in this matter, ſeeing after ſuch evidence found and brought in by the Crowner's Inqueſt and Jury of twenty four choſen Perſons, after ſo many marks and tokens of the murder ſo clear and demonſtrable, and laid forth ſo plain to the eyes of all the World, that no Man could deny, or not ſee the ſame; yet through the handling of the foreſaid Attorney, and of the Foreman of the Queſt, the Murderers were born out and confeſſed to be no Murderers. If ſuch bolſtering out of matters and partiality were then ſuch a rare caſe in the Realm of England, in the time of Cardinal Wolſey, who then under the King and in the King's Name did what he liſt; then let it ſeem untrue in my former ſtories that I have written. And yet the words of my ſtory, which Cope carpeth at ſo much, be not mine, but the words of Edward Hall his own Author. Wherefore if his diſpoſition be ſo ſet, that he muſt needs be a cenſurer of other Mens writings, let him expoſtulate with Hall and not with me.

Ex Ed. Hall in vit. Hen. 8. Anno 6.

But I trouble the Reader too much in this matter of Richard Hun, being of it ſelf ſo clear, that no indifferent Judg can doubt thereof. As for wranglers and quarrellers, they will never be ſatisfied. Wherefore to return again to the purpoſe of our ſtory intermitted; in the Table above, containing the Names of them which about this time of Richard Hun were forced to deny and abjure their profeſſed Opinions, mention was made of Elizabeth Stamford, John Houſhold, and other moe, abjuring about the year of Lord 1517. Whoſe vexation and weakneſs, altho it be pittiful to behold, yet to conſider the confeſſion of their Doctrine in thoſe ancient days, it is not unprofitable. Wherein we have to ſee the ſame form and knowledg of Doctrine then taught and planted in the hearts of our fore-elders; which is now publickly received, as well touching the Lord's Sacrament of his Body, as alſo other ſpecialities of ſincerity. And altho they lacked then publick authority to maintain the open preaching and teaching of the Goſpel, which the Lord's merciful Grace hath given us now; yet in ſecret knowledg and underſtanding they ſeemed then little or nothing inferior to theſe our times of publick Reformation: As may appear by this confeſſion of Elizabeth Stamford here-under written; which only may ſuffice for example, to underſtand what ripe knowledg of God's Word was then abroad, altho not in Churches publickly preached, for danger of the Biſhops, yet in ſecret wiſe taught and received of divers.

Elizabeth Stamford. Anno 1517.

The teaching of the former times to be conſidered.

In number of whom was this Elizabeth Stamford, who being brought and examined before Fitzjames Biſhop of London, Anno 1517, confeſſed, That ſhe was taught by one Thomas Beele, (ſometime dwelling at Henley*) theſe words eleven years before: That Chriſt feedeth, and faſt nouriſheth his Church with his own precious Body, that is, the Bread of Life coming down from Heaven: this is the worthy Word that is worthily received, and joined unto Man to be in one Body with him. Sooth it is that they be both one, they may not be parted: this is the wiſely deeming of the Holy Sacrament, Chriſt's own Body: this is not received by chewing of Teeth, but by hearing with Ears, and underſtanding with your Soul, and wiſely working thereafter. Therefore ſaith St.* Paul, I fear me amongſt us, Brethren, that many of us be feeble and ſick; therefore I counſel us Brethren to riſe and watch, that the great day of Doom come not ſuddenly upon us, as the Thief doth upon the Merchant. Alſo the ſaid Beele taught and ſhewed her, that the Sacrament of the Altar was not the very Body of Chriſt, but very Bread: And that the Sament was the very Body of Chriſt put upon the Croſs, after a divine and myſtical manner. And moreover, that the ſaid Thomas Beele did many times and oft teach her this foreſaid leſſon, that ſhe ſhould confeſs her ſins to God, and that the Pope's Pardons and Indulgences were nought worth, and profited not, and that worſhipping of Images and Pilgrimages are not to be done.

K. Hen. 8. Thomas Beele.

To this Elizabeth Stamford, may alſo be annexed the Doctrine and Confeſſion of Joan Sampſon, Wife of John Sampſon Carpenter, of Aldermanbury in London: Againſt whom, being cited and examined before the Biſhop of London, certain witneſſes were producted: who upon their Oath, being ſworn, did detect and denounce the ſaid Joan Sampſon in theſe Articles and Opinions following:

Articles of Joan Sampſon.

1. That ſhe being in her labour, what time Joan Sampſon her Predeceſſor, then being alive, was with her, and after the manner then of Women, called much upon the help of the Virgin Mary, ſhe ſpitting thereat, was in ſuch ſort agrieved, that the other party was compelled to forſake the houſe.

2. Alſo, that ſhe ſpake againſt Pilgrimage, and the worſhipping of the Bleſſed Virgin, and of all Saints, affirming that there is none Holy but One.

3. Item, another time, in the hearing of one Margaret Anworth, when ſhe and other Women were invocating the bleſſed Virgin to help in Womans labour, ſhe ſtood againſt them, and contumelioufly ſpake againſt the Invocators.

4. Item, that ſhe ſpeaking againſt the Pilgrimage of our Lady of Wilſdon (as ſhe was then called) and of Saint Saviour at Barmſey, called the ſaid Saint Saviour, Sym Sawyer.

5. Item, for having two certain Books in Engliſh, one bigger, and another leſſer, which ſhe committed to one John Anſtead a Cook; which Books in the Regiſter be not named.

6. Item, that the ſaid Joan Sampſon, at a ſupper, in the hearing of certain Men, and of a certain Widow named Joan White, ſpake openly in contempt of the Sacrament of the Altar, ſaying, that the Prieſts were Idolaters which did lift up the Bread over their heads, making the people to worſhip it, and making the people to believe that it was the Lord's Body; and that it was better to eat the Altar-cloth, if it might be eaten and digeſted as eaſily as the other.

K. Hen. 8. John Southwick.

AGainſt this John Southwick laſt named it was laid and objected, that when one Rivelay, coming from the Church of the Gray-Fryars in London, had ſaid to his Wife (asking where he had been) that he had heard Maſs, and had ſeen his Lord God in form of Bread and Wine over the Prieſt's head; the aforeſaid John Southwick there preſent anſwered again and ſaid; Nay, William, thou ſaweſt not thy Lord God, thou ſaweſt but Bread and Wine and the Chalice. And when the ſaid William anſwered again in the ſame words as before, ſaying, I truſt verily that I ſaw my Lord God in form of Bread and Wine, and this I doubt not: the other replying again, anſwered and ſaid as before; Nay, I tell thee thou ſaweſt but only a Figure or Sacrament of him, the which is in ſubſtance Bread and Wine, &c. This was in the Year of our Lord 1520. In which he was compelled to abjure.

Conſent of Doctrine.

All theſe above-named, in one Key of Doctrine and Religion, did hold and concord together: againſt whom were objected five or ſix ſpecial matters; to wit, for ſpeaking againſt worſhipping of Saints, againſt Pilgrimage, againſt invocation of the bleſſed Virgin, againſt the Sacrament of the Lord's Body, and for having Scripture-Books in Engliſh: which Books eſpecially I find to be named, as theſe, the Book of the four Evangeliſts, a Book of the Epiſtles of Paul and Peter, the Epiſtle of St. James, a Book of the Apocalyps, and of Antichriſt, of the Ten Commandments, and Wickcliffe's Wicket, with ſuch other like.

John Stilman Martyr.

Anno 1518.

IT would ask a long tractation, and tedious, to recite in order the great multitude and number of good Men and Women, beſides theſe above-rehearſed, which in thoſe days recanted and abjured about the beginning of King Henry's Reign and before: among whom yet notwithſtanding ſome there were whom the Lord reduced again, and made ſtrong in the profeſſion of his Truth, and conſtant unto death; of which number one was John Stilman by name, who about September 24, in the Year of our Lord 1518, was apprehended and brought before Richard Fitzjames then Biſhop of London, at his Manor of Fulham, and by him was there examined and charged, that notwithſtanding his former Recantation, Oath, and Abjuration, made about eleven years then paſt, before Edmund then Biſhop of Saliſbury, as well for ſpeaking againſt the worſhipping, praying, and offering unto Images; as alſo for denying the carnal and corporal preſence in the Sacrament of Chriſt's Memorial: yet ſince that time he had fallen into the ſame Opinions again, and ſo into the danger of relapſe: and further had highly commended and praiſed John Wickliffe, affirming that he was a Saint in Heaven, and that his Book called the Wicket was good and holy. Soon after his examination he was ſent from thence unto the Lollards Tower at London, and October 22, then next enſuing, was brought openly into the Conſiſtory of Pauls, and was there judicially examined by Thomas Hed the Biſhop's Vicar-general, upon the contents of theſe Articles following:

John Stilman Martyr.

Wickliffes Wicket. Ex Regiſt. Fitzjames London.

Articles laid againſt John Stilman.

1. Firſt I object unto you, that you have confeſſed before my Lord of London and me D. Hed his Vicar-general, That about twenty years paſt, one Stephen Moone of the Dioceſs of Wincheſter, (with whom you abode ſix or ſeven years after) did teach you to believe that the going on Pilgrimage and worſhipping of Images, as the Lady of Walſingham and others, were not to be uſed. And alſo that aforetime one Richard Smart, who was burned at Salisbury about fourteen or fifteen years paſt, did read unto you Wickliff's Wicket, and likewiſe inſtructed you to believe that the Sacrament of the Altar was not the Body of Chriſt: all which things you have erroneouſly believed.

Years of Antiquity to be noted. A godly Martyr. Rich. Smart burned at Saliſbury An. 1503.

2. Item, You have divers times read the ſaid Book called VVickliffe's VVicket, and one other Book of the Ten Commandments which the ſaid Richard Smart did give you, and at the time of your firſt apprehenſion you did hide them in an old Oke, and did not reveal them unto the Biſhop of Saliſbury, before whom you were abjured of Hereſy about eleven years ſince; where you promiſed by Oath upon the Evangeliſts, ever after to believe and hold as the Chriſtian Faith taught and preached, and never to offend again in the ſaid Hereſies, or any other, upon pain of relapſe. And further, you there promiſed to perform all ſuch penance as the ſaid Biſhop of Saliſbury did enjoin you: who then enjoined you upon the like pain, not to depart his Dioceſs without his ſpecial licenſe.

Wickliffes Wicket.

3. Item, It is evident that you be relapſed, as well by your own confeſſion, as alſo by your deeds, in that about two years after your abjuration you went into the ſaid place where you had hidden your Books; and then taking them away with you, you departed the foreſaid Dioceſs, without the licenſe of the Biſhop, and brought them with you to London, where now being attached and taken with them upon great ſuſpicion of Hereſy, you are brought unto the Biſhop of London: by reaſon of which your demeanour, you have ſhewed both your impenitent and diſſembled converſation from your errors, and alſo your unfaithful abjuration and diſobedience unto the authority of our mother holy Church, in that you performed not the penance; in which behalf you be voluntarily perjured, and alſo relapſed, in that you departed the ſame Dioceſs without licence.

4. Item, You be not only (as afore is ſaid) impenitent, diſobedient, voluntarily perjured and relapſed by this your foreſaid heretical demeanour, but alſo ſithence your laſt attachement upon ſuſpicion of Hereſy, you have maliciouſly ſpoken erroneous and damnable words, affirming before my Lord of London, your Ordinary, and me, judicially ſitting at Fulham, that you were ſorry that ever you did abjure your ſaid Opinions, and had not ſuffered then manfully for them, for they were and be good and true; and therefore you will now abide by them to die for it. And furthermore, you have ſpoken againſt our holy Father the Pope, and his Authority, damnably ſaying that he is Antichriſt, and not the true ſucceſſor of Peter, or Chriſt's Vicar on earth: and that his Pardons and Indulgences, which he granteth in the Sacrament of Penance, are naught, and that you will none of them. And likewiſe that the College of Cardinals be Limbs of the ſaid Antichriſt: and that all other inferior Prelats and Prieſts are the Synagogue of Satan. And moreover you ſaid, that the Doctors of the Church have ſubverted the Truth of holy Scripture, expounding it after their own minds, and therefore their works be naught, and they in Hell: but that VVickliffe is a Saint in Heaven, and that the Book called his VVicket is good, for therein he ſheweth the Truth. Alſo you did wiſh that there were twenty thouſand of your Opinion, againſt us Scribes and Phariſees, to ſee what you would do for the defence of your Faith. All which Hereſies you did afterward erroneouſly affirm before the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and then ſaid that you would abide by them to die for it, notwithſtanding his earneſt perſwaſions to the contrary: and therefore for theſe Premiſes you be evidently relapſed, and ought to be committed to the ſecular Power.

Wickliffes Wicket.

After theſe Articles thus propounded, and his conſtant perſevering in the Truth perceived, Dr. Hed Vicar-general, October 25. by his Sentence definitive, did condemn him a relapſed Heretick, and ſo delivered him the ſame preſent day unto the Sheriffs of London, to be openly burned in Smithfield.

Thomas Man Martyr.

Tho. Man Martyr.

NExt to John Stilman above-mentioned, followeth in this order of bleſſed Martyrs, the perſecution and condemnation of Thomas Man: who March 29, in the year of our Lord 1518, was burned in Smithfield. This Thomas Man had likewiſe been apprehended for the profeſſion of Chriſt's Goſpel about ſix years before, Auguſt 14. 1511. and being at that time brought before Dr. Smith Biſhop of Lincoln, was by him examined upon divers and ſundry Articles, the effect whereof are theſe:

The Articles of Tho. Man.

1. Firſt, That he had ſpoken againſt Auricular Confeſſion, and denied the corporal Preſence of Chriſt's Body in the Sacrament of the Altar.

2. Item, That he believed that all holy Men of his Sect were only Prieſts.

3. Item, That he had affirmed that the Father of Heaven was the Altar, and the ſecond Perſon the Sacrament; and that upon the Aſcenſion day the Sacrament aſcended unto the Altar, and there abideth ſtill.

4. Item, That he believed not aright in the Sacrament of Extream Unction.

K. Hen. 8.

The burning of John Stillman.

The burning of Thomas Man.

5. Item, That he had called certain Prieſts, meanly arayed, pilld Knaves.

6. Item, That he had ſaid that Pulpits were Prieſts lying Stools.

7. Item, That he had believed that Images ought not to be worſhipped, and that he neither believed in the Crucifix, nor yet would worſhip it.

8. Item, That he had affirmed that he heard ſay, the Word of God and God to be all one, and that he that worthily receiveth the Word of God, receiveth God.

9. Item, That he had ſaid that the Popiſh Church was not the Church of God, but a Synagogue: and that holy Men of his Sect were the true Church of God.

For theſe and ſuch-like matters was he a long time impriſoned, and at laſt, through frailty and fear of death, was content to abjure and yield himſelf unto the judgment of the Romiſh Church, and thereupon was enjoined, not only to make his open recantation, but alſo from thenceforth to remain as Priſoner within the Monaſtery of Oſney beſides Oxford, and ſo to bear a Faggot before the firſt Croſs, at the next general Proceſſion within the Univerſity. Howbeit not long after, the Biſhop having need of the poor Man's help in his houſhold buſineſs, took him out of the ſaid Monaſtery, and placed him within his own Houſe until his buſineſs was ended; and then (his turn once ſerved) he appointed Dr. VVilcocks his Vicar-general, that in his judicial Seſſion within the Priory of Frideſwide at Oxford, he ſhould aſſign him to remain within the ſaid Priory, and not to depart thence without licenſe of the Prior for the time being, upon pain of relapſe: and upon like pain he alſo enjoined him to wear the ſign of a Faggot under his uppermoſt garment, until he were diſpenſed withal for the ſame. All which notwithſtanding, he (being belike both ſorry for his offence in denying the Truth, and alſo weary of his ſervile and priſon-like bondage) bethought himſelf how he might beſt eſcape their cruel hands; and therefore after a while ſeeing good opportunity offered him, he fled the dioceſs and juriſdiction of Lincoln, and ſeeking abroad in other Countries for work, thereby to ſuſtain his poor life, he moſt commonly abode, ſometime in Eſſex, ſometime in Suffolk; where alſo he aſſociated and joined himſelf unto ſuch godly profeſſors of Chriſt's Goſpel as he there could hear of. But within few years after (ſuch is the cruel rage of Satan and his wicked Members, which never ſuffer the Godly long to continue untroubled) he was again accuſed of relapſe by the Inqueſt of the Inquiſition of London, and thereupon was apprehended and brought before Richard Fitzjames then Biſhop of London, and Feb. 9. 1518. he was examined by Dr. Hed the Biſhop's Vicar-general, within his Palace at London: where the ſaid Hed, judicially aſſiſted with divers of his Complices, declared firſt unto Man, that forſomuch as he was ſince his firſt abjuring, again detected and accuſed, by certain credible and honeſt Perſons, of the ſame Hereſies which he had once before recanted: And further (contrary to the order of Penance enjoined him by the late Biſhop of Lincoln) he had departed the Priory of St. Prideſwide, and the Dioceſs of Lincoln, without leave either of the Biſhop or Prior; and was now alſo found within the Dioceſs of London, and that without his badg aſſigned him by the ſaid Biſhop's Vicar-general: he therefore as Chancellor and Vicar-general unto the Biſhop of London, deputed for that purpoſe, did then mean to proceed againſt him as a relapſer, by order of the Eccleſiaſtical Laws in that behalf provided. Wherefore he appointed him to appear again in the Conſiſtory of Pauls, Feb. 12. next after, there to anſwer unto ſuch Articles as then ſhould be propounded againſt him. At which day and place, the Chancellor (firſt reciting the cauſes above-mentioned, why he did then proceed againſt him) objected unto him theſe Articles following:

Th. Man ſent to the Monaſtery of Oſney.

Th. Man ſent to the Monaſtery of Frideſwide.

Th. Man fled out of the Monaſtery.

Th. Man the ſecond time apprehended.

The cauſe of his Martyrdom.

1. Firſt, That he was of the Dioceſs of London.

2. Item, That he was a Chriſtian Man, and profeſſed Chriſt's Faith, and the determinations of holy Church concerning the ſeven Sacraments, and other Articles of the Catholick Faith.

Articles againſt Thomas Man.

3. Item, That it was not lawful for any Man (eſpecially a lay-man) erroneouſly and obſtinately to hold, teach, or defend any Opinion contrary unto the determinations of the ſaid Church; and that the Perſon ſo doing is an Heretick.

4. Item, That within one of the twelve months of the year of our Lord 1511, he had been detected before the Biſhop of Lincoln that then was, of divers points of Hereſy; as that he had affirmed, that the very Body and Blood of Chriſt was not in the Sacrament of the Altar, but material Bread and Wine, and that he had received it at Eaſter as holy Bread: and likewiſe had affirmed, that the Crucifix and other Images in the Church, were not to be worſhipped; and alſo, that confeſſion made unto a Prieſt was of none effect; with divers other-like Opinions and Hereſies.

Againſt the real preſence in the Sacrament.

Anno 8. ...m, That for these and such-like points of Heresy he ...een abjured in St. Mary's Church at Oxford, before Dr. W. Icocks Chancellor unto the said Bishop of Lincoln, in the month of October, in the year last aboveſaid, and there did renounce them and all other, promising to fall no more into the like.

6. Item, That there also he had taken a solemn Oath, to do such Penance as should be enjoined him by the Authority of the said Bishop.

7. Item, That then he was enjoined to abide within the Monastry of Osney by Oxford: and also there to bear a Fagot before the first Cross in the general Procession.

8. Item, That after a certain time that he had been in the Monastry of Osney, the Bishop of Lincoln (for certain causes) took him into his own house and service, respiting his Penance for a time.

9. Item, That afterwards, which was Octob. 9. 1512. the said Bishop's Chancellor judicially sitting in the Chapter-house of the Priory of St. Frideswide in Oxford, did enjoin him that he should tarry within the said Priory, and not go out of the gates thereof, without license of the Prior for the time being, until he had other commandment from the Bishop, upon pain of relapse: And further, that he should from thenceforth, upon the like pain, wear a sign of a Fagot under his uppermost garment.

10. Item, That after his abjuration, and since the premises thus done, he was yet again detected to the Bishop of London by open fame, and dedounced by worshipful and credible persons, that he had used like false Errors and Heresies, and had spoken and taught certain conclusions of Heresy against the Christian Faith, and determinations of holy Church: and that he had fallen into the like Heresies as before his abjuration, both against the Sacrament of the Altar, against Pilgrimages and worshipping of Images: and had blasphemed our blessed Lady, calling her Mably.

He meant some Image or Picture of the Virgin, set up in some blind place to be worshipped.

11. Item, That when he wrought with one John Bates, in Stratford Langthorne in Rogation-week then three years past, and being bidden by the said Bates's Wife to go and hear the Gospel, he answered and said unto her, I will not go there, go you if you list, ye shall have as much need for it, as to put your finger in the fire and to burn it.

12. Item, That in times past, for fear of abjuration, he had fled from Colchester to Newbery, and after that unto Hamersham, and had there damnably accompanied with Hereticks, and had taught heresies among them: and also since the time of his abjuration he had said, that he and his Wife had turned six or seven hundred people unto those Opinions which he was abjured of, and others also, contrary to Christ's Faith, and determinations of Holy Church.

His answer unto these Articles was, that as touching the first nine, he granted them in part to be true; confessing to the second, that he was a true Christian, and did profess the true Christian Faith; but the contents of the last three he utterly denied to be true; affirming for certain answer unto the Eleventh Article, that at the time mentioned in the same, he did not work in the Town of Stratford. Upon which answer, the Chancellor called forth two Witnesses to be sworn and examined against him, willing him that if he had any just matter against any of them, he should refuse them. But to what purpose this his fair offer and trimm shew of upright Justice served, I cannot see: For notwithstanding that he charged one of the Witnesses with theft and adultery, (for that having a Wife of his own, he did yet run away with another Man's Wife and Goods) and also alledged that the other was too young to be a sworn Witness in case of life and death: yet were they both still retained and allowed by the Chancellor, and sworn not to depart away or hide themselves, but to be always ready to justify that which they had to say against the said Thomas Man: and so for that time as well they as also all the rest were commanded to depart, and the Prisoner sent again to his Prison.

False witness received against Thomas Man.

And here in the order of the Oath ministred unto these Witnesses, I find one note (me thinketh) worthy present remembrance, both for that it is mentioned in the Process, and also because it somewhat openeth the foolish, ridiculous, and feigned figurative ceremonies of the Papists, who do attribute a spiritual signification almost unto all their doings. The Register, discoursing at large the manner of their Oath, hath these words: Ad Sancta Dei Evangelia jurari fecit, tribus mediis digitis erectis, & super librum positis, in signum Trinitatis, & fidei Catholicæ: & duobus (videlicet pollice & auriculari) suppositis & suppressis, & sub libro positis, in signum damnationis corporis & animæ, si non deposuerunt veritatem in hac parte. That is to say; He caused them to swear upon the Holy Evangelists, with their three middle fingers stretched out right, and laid upon the Book in sign of the Trinity, and Catholick Faith, and the other two (to wit, the thumb and the little finger) put downwards under the Book, in token of damnation of Body and Soul, if they did not depose the truth in the matter. This ceremonial order and exposition of theirs, as it is of their own fond invention, without any ground or example of the Scriptures of God, so mind I to leave it still unto themselves, with other their apish toys and ridicles, as things worthy to be laughed at; and will now further proceed with the rest of this Process which I have in hand.

The ceremonial manner of the Popish ministring of their Oath.

The 15*th* of February, D. Hed the Chancellor again judicially sitting in the Consistory at Pauls, commanded Thomas Man to be brought before him, and there causing the Articles objected against him by the Bishop of Lincoln, with his order of Abjuration and Penance, and also his own Articles last propounded, to be first read; he called forth a third Witness to be sworn and examined upon the same. But because he would seem to do all things by order of Justice, and nothing against Law, he therefore appointed unto the said Thomas Man certain Doctors and Advocates of the Arches, as his Counsellors to plead in his behalf. Which was even like as if the Lamb should be committed to the defence and protection of the Wolf, or the Hare to the Hound. For what good help could he look for at their hands, which were both most wicked haters and abhorrers of his Christian Profession, and also stout upholders and maintainers of that Antichristian Law, by the which he was for the same condemned? And that full well appeared by the good advice and profitable counsel which they gave him against his next examinations. For as well upon the 20*th*, and also the 23*d* days of the same month of February, in their several Sessions, he seeing his own Negations to their Objections taking no place against their sworn Witnesses, had no other thing to alledge for himself, but that, through his twenty weeks of hard imprisonment under the Bishop of Lincoln, he was forced to recant and abjure; which was a poor shift of Counsel, God knoweth: and yet Dr. Rayner being one of his chief assigned Advocates, instead of advice, could by his subtil questioning then make him confess, that certain talk whereof one of the Witnesses had accused him, was spoken about five years before past: which, because it was since his recantation, was rather an accusation of himself, than an excusing: and therefore it is easy to judg with how favourable and upright hearts they took upon them to be his Advocates and Defenders. The Chancellor likewise charged him upon the same 23*d* day, that since his last imprisonment, he had said unto Robert Cluny the Bishop's Sumner, and his Keeper, that as far forth as he could see or perceive for his part in this matter, the Laws of the Church were grounded upon Pilat and Caiphas. Which Objection he granting to be true, the Chancellor did for that time dismiss the Court, until the first day of March next following. Upon which day (minding to make quick dispatch) he in few words asked Man, what matter he had to allege for himself why he should not then (considering the Premisses) be pronounced a relapsed Heretick, and receive such punishment by the secular Power, as to such was due by order of Law? But he having no other allegations than before, which might take place with them, was finally condemned as an Heretick. And notwithstanding that, as the Register noteth (but how truly God only knoweth) he did again forsake his former renewed profession of Christ's Gospel, and yielded himself unto the Bishop of Rome, requiring to be absolved from his curse of Excommunication, and contented to do such Penance as they should enjoin him, he was yet March 29, delivered by Dr. Hed unto the Sheriff of London, to be then presently burned with this Protestation made before, that he might not consent to the death of any, and therefore he desired the Sheriff that he would receive this Person as relapsed and condemned, and yet to punish him otherwise than by rigorous rigor. The words to be marked in their Sentence be these: Rogamus attentè in viscèribus Jesu Christi, ut hujusmodi dignæ severitatis ultio &

Tho. Man again called by Dr. Hed Chancellor.

Agnus Lupe Commissus.

The subtil practice of the Romish Churchmen.

The Laws of the Church of Rome grounded upon Pilat and Caiphas.

The Popish Chancellor would not seem to consent to his death, but yet could send him to the Shambles to be killed.

executio de te & contra te in hac parte fienda taliter moderetur, ut non fit rigor rigidus, neque manſuetudo diſſoluta, ſed ad ſalutem & ſanitatem animæ tuæ, &c. That is, we deſire, in the Bowels of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that the puniſhment and execution of due ſeverity, of thee, and againſt thee in this part, may ſo be moderate, that there be no rigorous rigour, nor yet no deſolute manſuetude, but to the health and wealth of thy Soul, &c. Wherein theſe Catholick Church-men do well declare, according to the words of Thomas Man before expreſſed, that the Laws of their Church be grounded upon Pilat and Caiaphas. For like as Caiaphas with his Court of Phariſees cried againſt Chriſt unto Pilat: It is not lawful for us to put any Man to death; but if thou let him go, thou art not Cæſar's Friend. Even ſo they, firſt condemning the Saints of God to death, and then delivering them unto the ſecular Magiſtrate to be thereupon executed, would yet cover their malignant hearts with the cloak of hypocritical holineſs and unwillingneſs to ſhed blood. But God be thanked, which bringeth all things to light in his due time, and uncovereth hypocriſy at laſt, that ſhe may be ſeen and known in her right colours.

Thus Thomas Man, the manly Martyr of Jeſus Chriſt, being condemned by the unjuſt Sentence of Hed the Chancellor, was delivered to the Sheriff of London ſitting on horſeback in Pater-noſter-row, before the Biſhop's door, An. 1518. he proteſting to the ſaid Sheriff, that he had no power to put him to death, and therefore deſired the Sheriff to take him as a Relapſer and condemned, to ſee him puniſhed; Et tamen citra mortem, that is, without death, as the words ſtand in the Regiſter. The Sheriff receiving neither Articles to be read at his burning, nor any Indentures of that his delivery, immediately carried him to Smithfield, and there the ſame day in the forenoon cauſed him to be put into God's Angel; according to the words of the ſaid Tho. Man before, ſaying, that if he were taken again of the pild knave Prieſts, as he called them, he wiſt well he ſhould go to the Holy Angel, and then be an Angel in Heaven.

Thom. Man burned of the Sheriff without any warrant. An. 1518. menſ. Mat. 19. Ex Regiſt.

In the Depoſition of one Tho. Risby Weaver of Stratford-Langthorn, againſt the forenamed Martyr Tho. Man, it appeareth by the Regiſters, that he had been in divers Places and Countries in England, and had inſtructed very many, as at Amerſham, at London, at Billerica, at Chelmſford, at Stratford-Langthorn, at Uxbridg, at Burnham, at Henley upon Thames, in Suffolk and Norfolk, at Newbery, and divers places moe: where he himſelf teſtifieth, that as he went Weſtward, he found a great company of well-diſpoſed Perſons, being of the ſame judgment touching the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper that he was of, and eſpecially at Newbery, where was (as he confeſſed) a glorious and ſweet ſociety of faithful Favourers, who had continued the ſpace of fifteen years together, till at laſt by a certain lewd Perſon, whom they truſted and made of their Counſel, they were bewrayed; and then many of them, to the number of ſix or ſeven-ſcore, were abjured, and three or four of them burnt. From thence he came then (as he confeſſed) to the Foreſt of Windſor, where he, hearing of the Brethren which were at Amerſham, removed thither, where he found a godly and a great company, which had continued in that doctrine and teaching 23 years, which was from this preſent time ſeventy years agone. And this Congregation of Buckinghamſhire Men, remained till the time of John Longland Biſhop of Lincoln, whereof we ſhall (Chriſt willing) hear more anon. Againſt theſe faithful Chriſtians of Amerſham, was great trouble and perſecution in the time of William Smith Biſhop of Lincoln, about the Year of our Lord 1507, at which time divers and many were abjured, and it was called Abjuratio magna, the great Abjuration; and they which were noted of that Doctrine and Profeſſion, were called by the name of known Men, or juſt faſt Men, &c. In this Congregation of the faithful Brethren, were four principal Readers or Inſtructors. Whereof one was Tileſworth, called then Dr. Tileſworth, who was burnt at Amerſham, mentioned in our Hiſtory before by the name of William Tileſley, whom I ſuppoſe to be rather called Tileſworth. Another was Thomas Chaſe, called amongſt them Dr. Chaſe, whom we declared before to be murdered and hanged in the Biſhop of Lincoln's Priſon at Woborne, called Little-eaſe. The third was this Thomas Man, called alſo Dr. Man, burned as is here mentioned in Smithfield, Anno 1518, who, as by his own confeſſion, and no leſs alſo by his travel appeareth, was God's Champion, and ſuffered much trouble by the Prieſts for the Cauſe and Law of God. He confeſſeth himſelf in the ſame Regiſter, that he had turned ſeven hundred People to his Religion and Doctrine, for the which he thanked God. He conveyed alſo five couples of Men and Women from Amerſham, Uxbridg, Burnham, and Henley upon Thames, where they dwelt, unto Suffolk and Norfolk, that they might be brought (as he then termed it) out of the Devil's mouth. The fourth was Robert Coſin, named likewiſe among them Dr. Coſin.

THis Robert Coſin ſeemeth to be the ſame which in the former part of this Hiſtory is forementioned, being called by the Name of Father Robert, and was burnt in Buckingham. Of this Robert Coſin, I find in the Regiſters of Lincoln, That he, with Thomas Man, had inſtructed and perſwaded one Joan Norman, about Amerſham, not to go on Pilgrimage, nor to worſhip any Images of Saints. Alſo when ſhe had bowed a piece of Silver to a Saint for the health of her Child, they diſſwaded her from the ſame, and ſaid, that ſhe needed not to confeſs her to a Prieſt, but that it was ſufficient to lift up her hands to Heaven. Moreover, they were charged by the Biſhop, for teaching the ſaid Joan, that ſhe might as well drink upon the Sunday before Maſs, as any other day, &c. Ex Regiſt. Joan. Longland. And thus you ſee the Doctrine of theſe good Men, for the which they were in thoſe days abjured and condemned to death.

A perilous Hereſy.

William Sweeting, alias Clerke, Martyr.

William Sweeting, otherwiſe named Clerke, firſt dwelt with the Lady Percy at Darlington, in the County of Northampton, for a certain ſpace, and from thence went to Boxted in the County of Eſſex, where he was the Holy-water Clerk the ſpace of ſeven years: after that, he was Bailiff and Farmer to Mrs. Margery Wood, the term of thirteen years. From Boxted he departed and came to the Town of St. Oſithe, where he ſerved the Prior of St. Sithes, called George Laund, the ſpace of ſixteen years and more. Where he had ſo turned the Prior by his Perſwaſions, that the ſaid Prior of St. Oſithe was afterward compelled to abjure. This William Sweeting, coming up to London with the foreſaid Prior, for ſuſpicion of Hereſy, was committed to the Lollard's Tower, under the cuſtody of Charles Joſeph, and there, being abjured in the Church of St. Paul, was conſtrained to bear a Fagot at Paul's Croſs, and at Colcheſter; and afterward to wear a Fagot upon his Coat all his life. Which he did two years together upon his left ſleeve, till at length the Parſon of Colcheſter required him to help him in the Service of the Church, and ſo pluck'd the Badg from his ſleeve, and there he remained two years, being the Holy-water Clerk. From thence afterward he departed, and travelling abroad, came to Rederith in the Dioceſs of Wincheſter, where he was Holy-water Clerk the ſpace of a year. Then he went to Chelſith, where he was their Neat-herd, and kept the Town-beaſts. In which Town, upon St. Ann's day in the morning, as he went forth with his Beaſts to the field, the good Man was apprehended and brought before the Biſhop, and his Chamber ſearched for Books; this was Anno 1511.

Will. Sweeting Martyr.

Ex Regiſt. Ric. Fitzjames, pag 60.

Geor. Laund Prior of St. Oſith abjured.

The Crimes whereupon he was examined, were theſe:

Crimes objected.

First, For having much conference with one William Man of Boxted, in a Book which was called Matthew.

The Goſpel of St. Matthew.

Item, That he had familiarity, and frequented much the company of James Brewſter, who had been before abjured.

Item, That when his Wife would go on Pilgrimage, he asked of her, What good ſhe ſhould receive by her going on Pilgrimage? adding moreover, that, as he ſuppoſed, it was to no purpoſe nor profit, but rather it were better for her to keep at home, and to attend her buſineſs.

Againſt Pilgrimage.

Item, That he had learned and received of William Man, that the Sacrament of the Altar was not the preſent very Body, but Bread in ſubſtance, received in memorial of Chriſt.

Againſt Tranſubſtantiation.

Item, That he had propounded and affirmed the ſame Doctrine to James Brewſter.

Item,

K. Hen. 8. Againſt Images.

Item, Becauſe he had reproved his Wife for worſhipping the Images in the Church, and for ſetting up Candles before them.

And thus have you all the cauſes and crimes laid againſt this VVilliam Sweeting wherefore he was condemned: Who then being asked what cauſe he had why he ſhould not be judged for relapſe? ſaid, he had nothing elſe, but only that he committed himſelf to the mercy of Almighty God.

James Brewſter Martyr.

James Brewſter of Colcheſter Martyr.

With VVilliam Sweeting alſo the ſame time was examined and condemned James Brewſter, of the Pariſh of St. Nicholas in Colcheſter. This James Brewſter was a Carpenter, dwelling ten years in the Town of Colcheſter; who, being unlettered, could neither read nor write, and was apprehended upon the day of St. James, in one VValker's houſe in St. Clement's Pariſh.

About ſix years before, which was Anno 1505, he had been abjured by VVilliam VVarham Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the See of London being then vacant. And after other Penance done at Colcheſter, he was enjoined to wear a Fagot upon his upper garment during his life. Which badg he did bear upon his left ſhoulder near the ſpace of two years, till the Controller of the Earl of Oxford plucked it away, becauſe he was labouring in the works of the Earl.

The Crimes whereupon he was examined, and which he confeſſed, were theſe:

Crimes Objected againſt Ja. Brewſter.

Firſt, That he had been five times with VVilliam Sweeting in the fields keeping Beaſts, hearing him read many good things out of a certain Book. At which reading alſo were preſent at one time VVoodroof or VVoodbinde a Netmaker, with his Wife; alſo a Brother-in-law of VVilliam Sweeting; and another time Thomas Goodred, who heard likewiſe the ſaid VVilliam Sweeting read.

Item, Becauſe he uſed the company and conference of Henry Hert Carpenter of VVeſtminſter, and wrought with him in his ſcience at VVeſtminſter.

Item, For having a certain little Book of Scripture in Engliſh, of an old writing, almoſt worn for age, whoſe name is not there expreſſed.

Item, Becauſe he hearing upon a time one Mr. Bardfield of Colcheſter thus ſay; That he that will not worſhip the Maozim in heart and thought, ſhall die in ſight. He asked afterward of VVilliam Man, what that word Maozim ſhould mean? who told him, that it ſignified as much as the maſſing God, to wit, the Sacrament of the Altar.

Maozim in Dan. 11. is an Idol, and ſignifieth as much as forts and munitions.

Item, That he had much conference with Henry Hert, againſt Oblations and Images, and that it was better beſtowed Mony which was given to the Poor, than that which was offered in Pilgrimage.

Item, For that he had communication and conference with Roger Heliar, and one VValker a Thicker of St. Clements, concerning divers ſuch matters of Pilgrimage, offering to Images, worſhipping of Saints, and the Sacrament of the Altar.

A perilous Hereſy. Ex Regiſt. Lond.

Item, When Thomas Goodred, VVilliam Sweeting, and he, in the fields keeping Beaſts, were talking together of the Sacrament of the Lord's Body, and like matters, this James Brewſter ſhould thus ſay: Now the Son of the living God help us. Unto whom VVilliam Sweeting again ſhould anſwer, Now Almighty God ſo do.

And thus have you the Cauſes likewiſe and Crimes laid againſt James Brewſter, upon which he with VVilliam Sweeting were together examined and condemned. Then being asked, as the Romiſh manner is, Whether he had any cauſe why he ſhould not be adjudged for relapſe; he truſting to find favour and grace in ſubmitting himſelf, ſaid, That he ſubmitted him to the mercy of Almighty God, and to the favourable goodneſs of him his Judg. And likewiſe did VVilliam Sweeting ſubmit himſelf; truſting belike that they ſhould find ſome favour and relief in this humble ſubjecting themſelves unto their goodneſs.

The unmerciful and unchriſtian dealing of the Catholick Papiſts.

But note here the unmerciful and unchriſtian dealing of theſe Catholick Fathers, who upon their ſubmiſſion were contented to give out a ſolemn Commiſſion, the tenor whereof was to releaſe and pardon them from the ſentence of Excommunication, whereinto they had incurred: But immediatly after upon the ſame, the Biſhop, all this notwithſtanding, pronounced upon them the Sentence of death and condemnation. Whereupon they were both delivered to the ſecular Power, and both together burnt in Smithfield at one Fire, the eighteenth day of October, Anno 1511.

Wil. Sweeting & James Brewſter burnt in Smithfield.

The burning of William Sweeting and James Brewſter.

The burning of Chriſtopher Shoomaker.

Chriſtopher Shoomaker Martyr.

TO theſe bleſſed Saints before-named, we will alſo adjoin Chriſtopher Shoomaker; of whom this I find briefly in the Regiſter of Sir John Longland; that the ſaid Chriſtopher Shoomaker, a Pariſhioner of great Miſſenden, came to the Houſe of John Say, and after other matters of talk, read to him out of a little Book the words which Chriſt ſpake to his Diſciples. And thus coming to his houſe about four times, at every time he read ſomething out of the ſame Book unto him: teaching him not to be deceived in the Prieſts celebration of the Maſs, and declaring that it was not the ſame very preſent Body of Chriſt, as the Prieſts did phantaſie; but in ſubſtance Bread, bearing the remembrance of Chriſt: and taught him moreover, that Pilgrimage, worſhipping and ſetting up Candles to Saints, were all unprofitable. And thus the ſaid John Say being taught by this Chriſtopher, and alſo confirmed by John Okenden and Robert Pope, was brought to the knowledge of the ſame Doctrine. Thus much briefly I find in that Regiſter concerning Chriſtopher Shoomaker: declaring further, that he was burned at Newbery about this time, which was Anno 1518. And thus much out of the Regiſters of London.

Chriſtopher Shoomaker Martyr burnt in Newbery.

IN turning over the Regiſters and Records of Lincoln likewiſe, and coming to the year of our Lord 1520, and 1521, I find that as the light of the Goſpel began more to appear, and the number of Profeſſors to grow, ſo the vehemency of perſecution, and ſtir of the Biſhops began alſo to increaſe. Whereupon enſued great perturbation and grievous affliction in divers and ſundry quarters of this Realm, eſpecially about Buckinghamſhire and Amerſham, Uxbridg, Henly, Newbery, in the Dioceſs of London, in Eſſex, Colcheſter, Suffolk, and Norfolk, and other places moe. And this was before the name of Luther was heard of in theſe Countries among the People. Wherefore they are much beguiled and miſſenformed, which condemn this kind of Doctrine now received, of Novelty; asking, Where was this Church and Religion forty years ago, before Luther's time? To whom it may be anſwered, that this Religion and form of Doctrine was planted by the Apoſtles, and taught by true Biſhops; afterward decayed, and now reformed again: and altho it was not received nor admitted of the Pope's Clergy before Luther's time, neither yet is; yet it was received of other, in whoſe hearts it pleaſed the Lord ſecretly to work, and that of a great number, which both profeſſed and ſuffered for the ſame, as in the former times of this Hiſtory may appear. And if they think this Doctrine be ſo new that it was not heard of before Luther's time, how then came ſuch great perſecution before Luther's time here in England? If theſe were of the ſame profeſſion which they were of, then was their cruelty unreaſonable, ſo to perſecute their own Catholick Fraternity. And if they were otherwiſe, how then is this Doctrine of the Goſpel ſo new, or the Profeſſors thereof ſo late ſtart up as they pretend them to be? But this cometh only of Ignorance, and for not knowing and conſidering well the Times and Antiquities of the Church which have been before us. Which if they did, they ſhould ſee and ſay, that the Church of England hath not lacked great multitudes which taſted and followed the ſweetneſs of God's holy Word almoſt in as ample manner, for the number of well-diſpoſed hearts, as now. Altho publick Authority then lacked to maintain the open preaching of the Goſpel, yet the ſecret multitude of true Profeſſors was not much unequal: certes the fervent Zeal of thoſe Chriſtian dayes ſeemed much ſuperior to theſe our days and times; as manifeſtly may appear by their ſitting up all night in reading and hearing; alſo by their expences and charges in buying of Books in Engliſh, of whom ſome gave five Marks, ſome more, ſome leſs, for a Book: ſome gave a load of Hay for a few Chapters of St. James, or of St. Paul in Engliſh. In which rarity of Books, and want of Teachers, this one thing I greatly marvel and muſe at; to note in the Regiſters, and to conſider how the Word of Truth notwithſtanding did multiply ſo exceedingly as it did amongſt them. Wherein is to be ſeen no doubt the marvellous working of God's mighty Power: for ſo I find and obſerve in conſidering the Regiſters, how one Neighbour reſorting and conferring with another, eftſoons with a few words of their firſt or ſecond talk, did win and turn their minds to that wherein they deſired to perſwade them, touching the truth of God's Word and his Sacraments. To ſee their travels, their earneſt ſeeking, their burning zeals, their readings, their watchings, their ſweet aſſemblies, their love and concord, their godly living, their faithful marrying with the Faithful, may make us now in theſe our days of free profeſſion, to bluſh for ſhame.

K. Hen. 8.

The earneſt zeal of our forefathers in following Chriſt's Goſpel.

The antiquity of the true Doctrine of the Goſpel.

Ignorance of Antiquity.

Elder times of the Goſpel with theſe latter times compared.

Four principal Points they ſtood in againſt the Church of Rome; in Pilgrimage, in adoration of Saints, in reading Scripture-books in Engliſh, and in the carnal preſence of Chriſt's Body in the Sacrament.

After the great Abjuration aforeſaid, which was under William Smith Biſhop of Lincoln, they were noted and termed among themſelves by the name of known Men, or juſt faſt Men: as now they are called by the name of Proteſtants.

Abjuratio magna.

Known Men Juſt faſt Men.

As they were ſimple, and yet not uncircumſpect in their doings, ſo the crafty Serpent, being more wily than they, by fraudulent ſubtilty did ſo circumvent them, that they cauſed the Wife to detect the Husband, the Husband the Wife; the Father the Daughter, the Daughter the Father, the Brother to diſcloſe his Brother, and Neighbour the Neigbour. Neither were any Aſſemblies nor Readings kept, but both the Perſons and alſo the Books were known, neither was any Word ſo cloſely ſpoken, nor Article mentioned, but it was diſcovered. So ſubtilly and ſlightly theſe Catholick Prelats did uſe their Inquiſitions and Examinations, that nothing was done or ſaid among theſe known Men, fifteen or twenty years before, ſo covertly, but it was brought at length to their intelligence. Such captious Interrogatories, ſo many Articles and ſuſpicions they had, ſuch Eſpials and privy Scouts they ſent abroad, ſuch authority and credit they had with the King, and in the King's Name; ſuch diligence they ſhewed in that behalf, ſo violently and impudently they abuſed the Book of the peaceable Evangeliſts, wreſting Men's Conſciences upon their Oath, ſwearing them upon the ſame to detect themſelves, their Fathers and Mothers, and other of their Kindred, with their Friends and Neighbours, and that to death. All which things in the further proceſs of the Table enſuing (Chriſt willing) which we have collected out of ſome part of the Regiſters of Lincoln, ſhall appear.

The practice of Romiſh Prelats.

The practice of Prelats.

For the better declaration whereof, firſt here is to be noted by the way, touching the See of Lincoln, that after Will. Smith ſucceeded John Longland. This Will. Smith, altho he was ſomewhat eager and ſharp againſt the poor ſimple Flock of Chriſt's Servants, under whom ſome were burned, many abjured, a great number moleſted, as partly hath been afore declared; yet was he nothing ſo bloody and cruel as was the ſaid Longland, which afterward ſucceeded in that Dioceſs. For ſo I find of him, that in the time of the great abjuration and troubleſome affliction of Buckinghamſhire Men, where many were abjured, and certain burned; yet divers he ſent quietly home without puniſhment and penance, bidding them go home and live as good Chriſtian Men ſhould do. And many, which were enjoined penance before, he did releaſe. This Smith died about the year of our Lord 1515, by whom was builded, as is aforeſaid, the College of Brazen-noſe in Oxford.

Will. Smith Biſhop of Lincoln.

John Longland Biſhop of Lincoln.

The College of Brazen-noſe in Oxford builded

Not long after him followed John Longland, a fierce and cruel vexer of the faithful poor Servants of Chriſt: who to renew again the old ſparkles of perſecution, which were not yet utterly quenched, firſt began with one or two of them which had been abjured, whom he thought to be moſt notorious, cauſed them, by force of their Oath, to detect and bewray, not only their own Opinions touching Points of Religion, but alſo to diſcover all other of their Affinity, which were either ſuſpected or abjured before. And them likewiſe he put to their Oath, moſt violently conſtraining them to utter and confeſs both themſelves, and whom elſe ſoever they knew. By reaſon whereof an incredible multitude of Men, Women, and Maidens, were brought forth to examination, and ſtraightly handled. And ſuch as were found in relapſe were burned.

The reſt were ſo burdened with ſuperſtitious and idolatrous Penance and Injunction, that either through grief of Conſcience they ſhortly after died, or elſe with ſhame they lived. All which tragical doings and proceedings of the Biſhop againſt theſe known and juſt faſt Men, in theſe Tables here-

Accuſers. The Parties accuſed. The Crimes objected.

But before we enter into the Table, it ſhall be requiſite firſt to hear the order and copie of his captious and crafty Interrogatories, whereby he conſtrained the ſimple poor Men to accuſe and appeach one another: which Interrogatories were theſe in order as followeth.

Interrogatories miniſtred commonly by the Biſhop of Lincoln, againſt theſe Examinates here following.

Captious Interrogatories miniſtred by the Biſhop of Lincoln.

THe Interrogatories or Articles which Longland Biſhop of Lincoln uſed moſt commonly to miniſter to theſe Examinates or known Men, in number were nine, and are theſe as followeth:

1. Firſt, Whether they or any of them did know, that certain of the Pariſh of Amerſham, had been convented before VVill. Smith, late Biſhop of Lincoln, for Hereſy?

2. Item, Whether they knew that they ſo convented before the ſaid Biſhop, did err in the Sacrament of the Altar, or in any other Sacrament of the Church: and if they did, in what Sacrament, and in which of them? Alſo whether they knew that the ſaid Parties ſo convented did confeſs their errors, and receive penance for the ſame?

3. Item, Whether they, or any of them, were of the Society of them ſo convented for Hereſy: and if they were, what fellowſhip they had with them, and with whom?

4. Item, Whether they, or any of them, were ever converſant with ſuch a one (naming the Perſon whom they knew ſuſpected) as with Thurſtan Littlepage? And if they were, what converſation they had with him, how long, and when: and whether they knew the ſaid Perſon to have been ſuſpect of Hereſy?

5. Item, Whether they, or any of them, were ever converſant with him; or him (naming ſome other Perſon whom they ſuſpected) as Alexander Maſtall: and if they were, how, and how long? And whether they knew the ſaid Perſon to be ſuſpected of Hereſy?

6. Item, Whether they or any of them had been beforetime detected of Hereſy, to the Office of the foreſaid VVilliam Biſhop of Lincoln: And if they were, by what perſon or perſons they were detected? Or elſe, whether they were only called by the foreſaid VVilliam Biſhop for Hereſy?

7. Item, Whether he or they be noted and holden for Hereticks; or be reputed and defamed to be of the ſect of them which were convented for Hereſy? and whether he or they be named for a known Man amongſt them?

8. Item, Whether he or they have bin ever at any Readings of ſuch as have bin ſo convented for Hereſy?

9. Item, Whether he or they were ever in any ſecret Communication or Conventicle with them? whom or which of them he knew to be named and reputed for a known Man, or holding againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, or other Sacraments and Articles of Faith? and if they knew any ſuch, to declare where, and when, and what they were, and who were preſent the ſame time?

Theſe Articles and Interrogatories thus declared, now followeth to be ſhewed a certain brief ſum compendiouſly collected out of the Regiſters of John Longland Biſhop of Lincoln, declaring, in order of a Table, the names firſt of them which by Oath were conſtrained againſt their wills to detect and accuſe other. Secondly, The Perſons that were accuſed. Thirdly, The Crimes to them objected; as in the proceſs of this Table ſhall follow to be ſeen.

And firſt; Foraſmuch as the Biſhop perceived that Roger Bennet, VVilliam Chedwell, Edmund Dormer, Thomas Harding, Robert Andrew, with ſuch other, were Men eſpecially noted to be of that ſide; therefore to work his purpoſe the better, he began with them; producing the ſame as Witneſſes, to detect firſt Robert Bartlet of Amerſham, and Richard his Brother; underſtanding that theſe forenamed Witneſſes, becauſe they had been abjured before, durſt now do no other, upon pain of relapſe, but needs confeſs whatſoever was put unto them. And therefore becauſe Robert Bartlet and Richard his Brother, being called before the Biſhop, and ſworn upon their Oath, would confeſs nothing againſt themſelves; the Biſhop, to convict them by Witneſſes, went firſt to VVilliam Chedwell, lying ſore ſick in his Bed, cauſing him upon the Evangeliſts to ſwear, whether he knew the foreſaid Robert and Richard Bartlet to be known Men. Which being done, the Biſhop then called before him Robert Andrew, Roger Bennet, John Hill, Edmund Dormer, John Milſent, Thomas Bernard, Thomas Littlepage, John Doſſet, all Amerſham Men: Who being abjured before, as is ſaid, durſt no otherwiſe do, but confeſs upon their Oath, that Robert and Richard Bartlet were known Men. And yet the Biſhop, not contented with this, cauſed alſo their two Wives, to wit, Margaret the Wife of Robert Bartlet, and Iſabel the Wife of Richard Bartlet, to depoſe and give witneſs againſt their own natural Husbands. Albeit Iſabel Bartlet being ſomewhat more temperate of her tongue, refuſed utterly to confeſs any thing of her Husband, and denied her Husbands words to be true; till at laſt, ſhe being convict of Perjury, was conſtrained to utter the truth, as in the proceſs of this Table following more particularly followeth to be ſeen.

A Table, deſcribing the grievous affliction of good Men and Women in the Dioceſs of Lincoln, under John Longland, their Biſhop; with the names both of the Accuſers, and of them that were Accuſed: Alſo with the Crimes to them objected: Out of the Regiſters of the ſaid Dioceſs, Anno 1521.

Thomas Littlepage.*	THis Robert Bartlet, and Richard his Brother, were detected by theſe foreſaid Accuſers, to be known Men, that is, to be of the ſame Company and Affinity with theſe Jurates, and others that had been abjured before in the time of William Smith Biſhop of Lincoln, about the year of our Lord 1508, and that in the houſe of Thomas Harding they were ſo noted, by the words of Harding's Wife, who, ſpeaking to Robert Barlet, ſaid, that ſhe was glad that he was converted to Grace, and choſen to Almighty God; requiring him never to
John Doſſet. Margaret Bartlet. Iſabel Barlet. Theſe being before abjured, were now compelled by Oath to detect.	forſake that he was called to; for if he did, there was no Sacrifice left for him. Alſo the ſaid Harding's Wife ſpeaking to Richard Bartlet coming into her Houſe, ſaid, Here cometh a good Man, and I hope he will be a good Man: but he hath ſo much mind of buying and ſelling, and taking of Farms, that it putteth his mind from all goodneſs. By which words it appeared, ſaid they, that he was a known Man. Item, That Robert Bartlet, ſpeaking to Harding's Wife, ſaid, He had thought to have called William Tilſeworth falſe Heretick; but now he was better adviſed. Item, That they uſed the Lectures and Readings of that Company. This Robert Bartlet, and Richard his Brother firſt being ſworn, and yet confeſſing nothing before the Biſhop, at laſt were convicted by witneſs, as above appeareth, and noted therefore of Perjury. Wherefore incurring into greater danger, they were conſtrained at their next Examination to utter themſelves, and confeſs what they had both done and ſaid; that is, that the ſaid Robert had read unto Richard his Brother a parcel of Scripture beginning thus: James the Servant of God, to the twelve kinds, &c. Item, that he heard William Tilſeworth ſay, That Images of Saints were but Stocks and Stones, and dead things; and that he taught the ſame to his Brother Richard, and concealed the words of William Tilſeworth. Item, That he partly believed Thomas Maſtal, teaching him that the true preſence of Chriſt was not in the Sacrament; and likewiſe of Images and Pilgrimages. Item, for receiving the Communion at Eaſter without ſhrift, &c.

For reading Scripture in Engliſh.

Richard Bartlet his Brother.

The Brother detecteth the Brother.

The Crime whereof Robert Bartlet accuſed his Brother Richard was this: Becauſe, he ſaid, his Brother Richard had been much converſant with Thurſtan Littlepage, and had learned of him the counſels and ſecrets of thoſe Men: Alſo that he had learned of him ſome of the Epiſtle of St. James, thus beginning: James the Servant of God, to the twelve kinds, &c.

Iſabel Bartlet, his Wife.

The Husband detecteth the Wife.

The cauſe wherein Robert Bartlet did detect his Wife, was this: That when the Biſhop's Servant was come for her Husband, ſhe uttered theſe words, ſaying, Alas! he was now an undone Man, and ſhe but a dead Woman.

Furthermore, the ſaid Robert being demanded of the Biſhop, Whether he knew Iſabel his Wife to be of the Sect of Hereticks before he married her, ſaid, Yea. Being asked again, If ſhe had not been of that Sect, whether then he would have married her? he granted the ſame likewiſe.

Robert Bartlet was brought to examination, and cauſed by his Oath to detect, Agnes Wellis, his Siſter.

Furthermore, the ſaid Robert Bartlet detected his own Siſter, in that he had twice inſtructed her not to worſhip Images, and alſo had taught her in the Epiſtle of S. James.

The ſaid Robert Bartlet detected alſo theſe to be of the number of Known Men, for that they reſorted many times together, reading and conferring among themſelves, and talking againſt worſhipping of Images, and Pilgrimage. And if any came in amongſt them which was not of their ſide, then they would ſay no more, but keep all ſilence, &c.

Alſo when his Wife was going on Pilgrimage, and he asked, Whither? and ſhe ſaid, To our Lady of Wileſdon: Our Lady, ſaid he, is in Heaven.
Coſt loſt. — For ſaying our Lady is not at Wileſdon, but in Heaven.
John Baker being urged upon his Oath, did diſcloſe — The Image of God.	John Edmunds. This John Edmunds was detected, becauſe that he talking with the ſaid Baker of Pilgrimage, bad him go offer his mony to the Image of God. 	Concerning this John Brabant, here is to be noted the form and effect of the Biſhop's examination; asking and demanding thus of the ſaid Brabant; An unquam audivit Johannem Hakker legentem ſacram Scripturam contra determinationem Eccleſiæ? That is, Whether he ever heard John Hakker read the Holy Scripture againſt the determination of the Church? By the which words, if he mean that it is againſt the determination of the Church to read the Holy Scripture, it may thereby appear to be a blind Church. And if they mean that the holy Scripture containeth any ſuch thing in it which is againſt the determination of the Church, then it appeareth their Church to be contrary unto God, ſeeing it determineth one thing, and God's Word another. For ſpeaking theſe words following; That our bleſſed Lady was the Godmother to St. Katharine: and therfore the Legend is not true, in ſaying that Chriſt did marry with St. Katharine; and bade Adrian put on his Veſtment, and ſay the Service of Matrimony: for ſo Chriſt ſhould live in Adultery for marrying with his Godſiſter; which thing if he ſhould do, he ſhould be thought not to do well.

Item, For ſaying by the Picture of St. Nicholas being newly painted, that he was not worthy to ſtand in the Rood-loft, but that it better beſeemed him to ſtand in the Belfry, &c.

IN this Table above prefixed, thou haſt, gentle Reader, to ſee and underſtand; firſt, the number and names of theſe good Men and Women, troubled and moleſted by the Church of Rome, and all in one Year; of whom few or none were learned, being ſimple Labourers and Artificers, but as it pleaſed the Lord to work in them knowledg and underſtanding, by reading a few Engliſh Books, ſuch as they could get in corners. 2ly, What were their Opinions we have alſo deſcribed. And thirdly, Herein is to be noted moreover the blind ignorance and uncourteous dealing of the Biſhops againſt them, not only in that they, by their violent Oath and captious Interrogatories, conſtrained the Children to accuſe their Parents, and Parents the Children, the Husband the Wife, and the Wife the Husband, &c. But eſpecially in that moſt wrongfully they ſo afflicted them, without all good reaſon or cauſe, only for the ſincere verity of God's Word, and reading of Holy Scriptures.

The reaſons and probations of their Doctrine.

Now it remaineth, that as you have heard their Opinions, (which principally in number were four) ſo alſo we declare their Reaſons and Scriptures whereupon they grounded; and after that conſequently the order and manner of Penance to them enjoined by the Biſhop. And firſt againſt Pilgrimage, and againſt worſhipping of Images, they uſed this Text of the Apocalyps, ch. 9. I ſaw Horſes in a Viſion, and the heads of them as the heads of Lions; ſmoak, fire, and brimſtone came out of their mouths; with theſe three Plagues, the third part of Men were ſlain of the ſmoak, and of the fire, and of the brimſtone that came out of the mouths of them. They that were not ſlain of theſe three Plagues, were ſuch as worſhipped not Devils, and Images of Gold and Silver, of Braſs, of Tree, and of Stone, &c. Ex Regiſt. Longland. fol. 72. Alſo they uſed and alledged the firſt Commandment, that there is but one God, and that they ought not to worſhip moe Gods than one.

Wickliffes Wicket. The Shepherds Kalender.

And as touching the Sacrament, and the right Doctrine thereof, they had their inſtruction partly out of Wickliffe's Wicket, partly out of the Shepherds Kalender; where they read that the Sacrament was made in remembrance of Chriſt, and ought to be received in remembrance of his Body, &c. Moreover they alledged and followed the words of Chriſt ſpoken at the Supper, at what time he ſitting with his Diſciples, and making with them his Maundy; took Bread, and bleſſed, and brake, and gave to his Diſciples, and ſaid, Eat ye, this (reaching out his arm, and ſhewing the Bread in his hand, and then noting his own natural Body, and touching the ſame, and not the Bread conſecrated) is my Body which ſhall be betrayed for you; do this in remembrance of me. And likewiſe took the Wine and bad them drink, ſaying, This is my Blood which is of the New Teſtament, &c.

Ex Regiſt. Joh. Longland, Linc. Fol. 105.

Item, That Chriſt our Saviour ſitteth on the right hand of the Father, and there ſhall be unto the day of Doom. Wherefore they believed that in the Sacrament of the Altar was not the very Body of Chriſt.

Item, (ſaid one of them) Men ſpeak much of the Sacrament of the Altar: but this will I bide by, That upon Chare-Thurſday, Chriſt brake Bread unto his Diſciples, and bade them eat it; ſaying, it was his Fleſh and Blood. And then he went from them, and ſuffered paſſion; and then he roſe from death to life, and aſcended into Heaven, and there ſitteth on the right hand of the Father; and there he is to remain unto the day of Doom, when he ſhall judg both quick and dead; and therefore how he ſhould be here in the former Bread, he ſaid, he could not ſee.

Such Reaſons and Allegations as theſe and other-like, taken out of the Scripture, and out of the Shepherds Kalender, Wickliffe's Wicket, and out of other Books they had amongſt them. And altho there was no learned Man with them to ground them in their Doctrine, yet they communing and conferring together among themſelves, did convert one another, the Lord's hand working with them marvellouſly: ſo that in ſhort ſpace the number of theſe known or juſt faſt Men (as they were then termed) did exceedingly encreaſe; in ſuch ſort that the Biſhop, ſeeing the matter almoſt paſt his power, was driven to make his complaint to the King, and required his aid for ſuppreſſion of theſe Men. Whereupon King Henry being then young, and unexpert in the bloody practices and blind leadings of theſe Apoſtolical Prelats, incenſed with his ſuggeſtions and cruel complaints, directed down Letters to the Sheriffs, Bailiffs, Officers, and Subjects, for the aid of the Biſhop in this behalf: The Tenor of which Letters here enſueth:

The Biſhop complaineth to the King.

The Copy of the King's Letter for the aid of John Longland Biſhop of Lincoln, againſt the Servants of Chriſt, falſly then called Hereticks.

The Copy of the Kings Letters.

HEnry the Eighth, by the grace of God, King of England and of France, Lord of Ireland, Defender of the Faith: To all Mayors, Sheriffs, Bailiffs, and Conſtables, and to all other our Officers, Miniſters, and Subjects, theſe our Letters hearing or ſeeing, and to every of them, greeting. Foraſmuch as the right reverend Father in God, our truſty and right well-beloved Counſellor, the Biſhop of Lincoln hath now within his Dioceſs no ſmall number of Hereticks, as it is thought, to his no little diſcomfort and heavineſs: We therefore being in will and mind ſafely to provide for the ſaid right reverend Father in God and his Officers, that they, ne none of them, ſhall bodily be hurt or damaged by any of the ſaid Hereticks or their Fautors, in the executing and miniſtring of Juſtice unto the ſaid Hereticks, according to the Laws of Holy Church; do ſtraitly charge and command you, and every of you, as ye tender our high diſpleaſure, to be aiding, helping, and aſſiſting to the ſaid right reverend Father in God, and his ſaid Officers, in the executing of Juſtice in the Premiſſes, as they or any of them ſhall require you ſo to do; not failing to accompliſh our commandment and pleaſure in the Premiſſes, as ye intend to pleaſe us, and will anſwer to the contrary at your uttermoſt perils. Given under our Signet at our Caſtle at Windſor, the twentieth day of October, the thirteenth year of our Reign.

The Biſhop thus being armed, no leſs with the authority of the King's Letter, than incited with his own fierceneſs, foreſlacked no time, but, eftſoons to accompliſh his moody violence upon the poor Flock of Chriſt, called before him, ſitting upon his Tribunal-ſeat, both theſe aforenamed Perſons, and all other in his Dioceſs, which were never ſo little noted or ſuſpected to incline toward thoſe Opinions: of whom to ſuch as had but newly been taken, and had not before abjured, he enjoined moſt ſtrait and rigorous Penance. The other in whom he could find any relapſe, yea, albeit they ſubmitted themſelves never ſo humbly to his favourable courteſy; and tho alſo at his requeſt, and for hope of pardon, they had ſhewed themſelves great detecters of their Brethren, being moreover of him fed and flattered thereunto; yet notwithſtanding, contrary to his fair words, and their expectation, he ſpared not, but read Sentence of Relapſe againſt them, committing them to the ſecular Arm to be burnt.

The cruel falſhood of Biſhop Longland.

And firſt as touching them, who being brought to Abjuration, were put to their Penance; long it were to recite the names of all. Certain I thought to recite here in a Catalogue; firſt reciting the Perſons, afterward the rigorous Penance to them enjoined.

Some, for ſaying that worſhipping of Images was Mawmetry; ſome for calling Images Carpenters Chips; ſome for calling them ſtocks and ſtones; ſome for calling them dead things.

Some, for ſaying that mony ſpent upon Pilgrimage, ſerved but to maintain Thieves and Harlots. Fol. 33.

For ſaying, that Chriſt, departing from his Diſciples into Heaven, ſaid, That once he was in ſinners hands, and would come there no more. Fol. 45.

Robert Rave, hearing a certain Bell in an uplandiſh Steeple, ſaid, Lo, yonder is a fair Bell, and it were to hang about any Cows neck in this Town; and therefore,

Some for ſaying that the Pope had no authority to give Pardon, or to releaſe Man's Soul from ſin, and ſo from pain; and that it was nothing but blinding of the people, and to get their mony.

The order of Penance.

The Penance to theſe parties enjoined by this John Longland Biſhop of Lincoln, was almoſt uniform, and all after one condition; ſave only that they were ſeverally committed and divided into ſeveral and divers Monaſteries, there to be kept and found of Alms all their life, except they were otherwiſe diſpenſed with by the Biſhop: as As for Example, I have here adjoined the Biſhop's Letter for one of the ſaid number, ſent to the Abbey of Enſham, there to be kept in perpetual Penance. By which one, an eſtimation may be taken of the reſt, which were beſtowed likewiſe ſunderly into ſundry Abbeys, as to Oſney, to Frideſwide, to Abingdon, to Tame, to Biſſitor, to Dorcheſter, to Notley, to Aſhbridg, and divers moe; The Copy of the Biſhop's Letter ſent to the Abbot of Enſham, here followeth under written.

The Biſhop's Letter to the Abbot of Enſham.

The Copy of the Biſhops Letter to the Abbot of Enſham.

MY loving Brother, I recommend me heartily unto you: And whereas I have, according to the Law, put this bearer R. T. to perpetual Penance within your Monaſtry of Enſham, there to live as a Penitent, and not otherwiſe; I pray you, and nevertheleſs according unto the Law, command you to receive him, and ſee you order him there according to his Injunctions, which he will ſhew you if you require the ſame. As for his lodging, he will bring it with him: And his meat and drink he may have, ſuch as you give of your Alms. And if he can ſo order himſelf by his labour within your houſe in your buſineſs, whereby he may deſerve his meat and drink; ſo may you order him as ye ſee convenient to his deſerts, ſo that he paſs not the precinct of your Monaſtry. And thus fare you heartily well: From my place, &c.

As touching the reſidue of the Penance and Puniſhment inflicted to theſe Men, they do little or nothing diſagree, but had one order in them all. The manner and form whereof in the ſaid Biſhop's Regiſter doth proceed in condition as followeth.

Penance enjoined undere pain of relapſe, by John Longland Biſhop of Lincoln, the 19 day of December, Anno 1521.

Ex Regiſtro, Fol. 90. Penance enjoined to theſe Abiurats under pain of relapſe.

IN primis, That every one of them ſhall, upon a market-day, ſuch as ſhall be limited unto them, in the market-time, go thrice about the market at Burford, and then to ſtand up upon the higheſt greece of the Croſs there, a quarter of an hour with a Fagot of Wood every one of them upon his ſhoulder, and every one of them once to bear a Fagot of Wood upon their ſhoulders, before their Proceſſion upon a Sunday which ſhall be limited unto them at Burford, from the Quire door going out, to the Quire door going in, and all the high Maſs time, to hold the ſame Fagot upon their ſhoulders, kneeling upon the greece before the high Altar there; and every of them to do likewiſe in their own pariſh Church, upon ſuch a Sunday as ſhall be limited unto them: and once to bear a Fagot at a general Proceſſion at Uxbridg, when they ſhall be aſſigned thereto: and once to bear a Fagot at the burning of an Heretick, when they ſhall be moniſhed thereto.

Alſo every one of them to faſt, Bread and Ale only every Friday during their life; and every Even of Corpus Chriſti, every one of them to faſt Bread and Water during their Life, unleſs ſickneſs unfeigned let the ſame.

Alſo, to ſay every of them every Sunday, and every Friday, during their life, once our Lady Pſalter, and if they forget it one day, to ſay as much another day for the ſame.

Alſo they, nor none of them, ſhall not hide their mark upon their Cheek, neither with Hat, Cap, Hood, Kerchief, Napkin, or otherwiſe; nor ſhall ſuffer their Beards to grow paſt fourteen days; nor ever haunt again together with any ſuſpect perſon or perſons, unleſs it be in the open Market, Fair, Church, or common Inn or Alehouſe, where other people may ſee their Converſation.

And all theſe Injunctions they and every of them are to fulfil with their Penance, and every part of the ſame, under pain of relapſe.

And thus have you the Names, with the Cauſes and the Penance of them which were at this preſent time abjured. By which word * abjured is meant, that they were conſtrained by their Oath, ſwearing upon the Evangeliſts, and ſubſcribing with their hand, and a Croſs to the ſame, to ſay that they did utterly and voluntarily renounce, deteſt, and forſake, and never ſhould hold hereafter theſe or any other-like Opinions, contrary to the determination of the Holy Mother Church of Rome: And further, that they ſhould detect unto their Ordinary, whomſoever they ſhould ſee or ſuſpect hereafter to teach, hold, or maintain the ſame.

* Abjured, what it ſignifieth.

Here follow the Names of them which were condemned for relapſe, and committed unto the ſecular Power.

AMong theſe aforenamed Perſons which thus ſubmitted themſelves, and were put to Penance, certain there were, which becauſe they had been abjured before, as is above-mentioned, under Biſhop Smith, were now condemned for relapſe, and had Sentence read againſt them, and ſo were committed to the ſecular Arm to be burned: Whoſe Names here follow.

Martyrs.

Thomas Bernard.	Robert Rave.	Anno
James Morden.	John Scrivener.	1521.

Of theſe mention is made before, both touching their Abjuration, and alſo their Martyrdom. Unto whom we may adjoin, Joan Norman. Thomas Holmes.

This Tho. Holmes, albeit he had diſcloſed and detected many of his Brethren, as in the Table above is expreſſed; thinking thereby to pleaſe the Biſhop, and to ſave himſelf, and was thought to be a feed Man of the Biſhop for the ſame: yet notwithſtanding in the ſaid Biſhop's Regiſter appeareth the ſentence of Relapſe and Condemnation, written and drawn out againſt him; and moſt like it is that he was alſo adjudged and executed with the other.

Tho. Holms.

As touching the burning of John Scrivener, here is to be noted, that his Children were compelled to ſet fire unto their Father; in like manner as Joan Clerke alſo, Daughter of William Tilſeworth, was conſtrained to give fire to the burning of her own natural Father, as is above ſpecified.

Children compelled to ſet fire to their own Father.

The Example of which cruelty, as it is contrary both to God and Nature, ſo it hath not been ſeen nor heard of in the memory of the Heathen.

Where moreover is to be noted, that at the burning of this John Scrivener, one Thomas Dorman, mentioned before, was preſent, and bare a Fagot at Amerſham: whoſe Abjuration was afterward laid againſt him, at what time he ſhould depoſe for recovery of certain Lands from the School of Barchamſtead. This Thomas Dorman, (as I am credibly informed of certain about Amerſham) was Uncle to this our Dorman, and found him at School at Barchamſtead, under Maſter Reeve; which now ſo uncharitably abuſeth his Pen in writing againſt the contrary Doctrine, and raileth ſo fiercely againſt the Blood of Chriſt's ſlain Servants, miſcalling them to be a dunghil of ſtinking Martyrs.

A note of T. Dorman. This Maſter Dorman, becauſe he was put to School by his Uncle at Barchamſted to M. Reeve, being a Proteſtant: therefore he for the ſame cauſe, in the firſt ſentence of his preface ſaith, that he was brought up in Calvins School.

Well, howſoevever the favour of theſe good Martyrs do ſcent in the noſe of Mr. Dorman, I doubt not but they give a better odour and ſweeter ſmell in the preſence of the Lord: Pretioſa enim in conſpectu Domini mors ſanctorum ejus; precious in the ſight of the Lord is the death of his Saints. And therefore howſoever it ſhall pleaſe Maſter Dorman, with reproachful language to miſ-term the good Martyrs of Chriſt, or rather Chriſt in his his Martyrs; his unseemly usage, more Cart-like than Clerk-like, is not greatly to be weighed. For as the danger of his Blasphemy hinteth not them which are gone; to the contumely and reproach thereof as well comprehendeth his own Kindred, Friends, and Countrey, as any other else; and especially redoundeth to himself, and woundeth his own Soul, and none else, unto the great provoking of God's wrath against him, unless he be blessed with better Grace by time to repent.

Doctor Colet.

J. Colet Dean of Pauls.

MUch about this time, or not past two years before, died Doctor John Colet, of whom mention was made in the Table above. To whose Sermons these known men, about Buckingham-shire, had a great mind to resort. After he came from Italy and Paris, he first began to read the Epistles of St. Paul openly in Oxford, instead of Scotus and Thomas. From whence he was called by the King, and made Dean of Pauls: where he accustomed much to preach, not without a great Auditory, as well of the King's Court, as of the Citizens and others. His Diet was frugal, his Life upright, in Discipline he was severe: insomuch that his Canons, because of their straiter rule, complained that they were made like Monks. The honest and honourable State of Matrimony he ever preferred before the unchaste singleness of Priests. At his Dinner commonly was read either some Chapter of St. Paul, or of Solomon's Proverbs. He never used to sup. And although the blindness of that time carried him away after the common Error of Popery, yet in ripeness of judgment he seemed something to incline from the vulgar Trade of that Age. The religious order of Monks and Friers he fansied not; as neither he could greatly favour the barbarous Divinity of the School-Doctors, as of Scotus, but least of all of Thomas Aquinas: insomuch that when Erasmus, speaking in the praise of Thomas Aquinas, did commend him, that he had read many old Authors and had written many new Works, as Catena Aurea, and such like, to prove and to know his judgment: Colet first supposing that Erasmus had spoken in jest, but after supposing that he meant good faith, bursteth out in great vehemency, saying, What tell you me (quoth he) of the commendation of that man, who except he had been of an arrogant and presumptuous Spirit, would not define and discuss all things so boldly and rashly: and also, except he had been rather worldly-minded than heavenly, would never have so polluted Christ's whole Doctrine with man's prophane Doctrine, in such sort as he hath done?

Pauls Epistles first read openly in Oxford.

The commendation of Dr. Colet.

Colets judgment of T. Aquinas.

Dr. Colet accused.

The Bishop of London at that time was Fitzjames, of age no less than fourscore. Who (bearing long grudge and displeasure against Colet) with other two Bishops, taking his part, like to himself, entred Action of complaint against Colet to the Archbishop of Canterbury, being then William Warham. The matter of his Complaint was divided into three Articles: The first was for speaking against worshipping of Images: The second was about Hospitality, for that the entreating upon the place of the Gospel, Pasce, pasce, pasce, Feed, Feed, feed: when he had expounded the two first, for feeding with example of Life, and with Doctrine; in the third, which the School-men do expound for feeding with Hospitality, he left out the outward feeding of the Belly, and applied it another way. The third Crime wherewith they charged him, was for speaking against such as used to preach only by bosome Sermons, declaring nothing else to the people, but what they bring in their Papers with them. Which because the Bishop of London used then much to do for his age, he took it as spoken against him, and therefore bare him this displeasure. The Archbishop more wisely weighing the matter, and being well acquainted with Colet, so took his part against his Accusers, that he at that time was rid out of trouble.

The Bishop of London enemy to Dr. Colet.

The A.B. of Cant. a favourer of Dr. Colet.

William Tindal, in his Book answering Master Moor, addeth moreover, and testifieth, that the Bishop of London would have made the said Colet, Dean of Pauls, an Heretick, for translating the Pater-Noster into English, had not the Bishop of Canterbury holpen the Dean.

But yet the malice of Fitzjames the Bishop so ceased not: who being thus repulsed by the Archbishop, practised by another train how to accuse him unto the King. The occasion thus fell: It happened the same time, that the King was in preparation of War against France: whereupon the Bishop with his Co-adjutors, taking occasion upon certain Words of Colet, wherein he seemed to prefer Peace before any kind of War, were it never so just; accused him therefore in their Sermons, and also before the King.

K. Hen. 8.

Iniqua pax justissimo bello præferenda.

Furthermore it so befel the same time, that upon Good-friday Doctor Colet, preaching before the King, entreated of the Victory of Christ; exhorting all Christians to fight under the Standard of Christ, against the Devil: adding moreover, what an hard thing it was to fight under Christ's Banner, and that all they which upon private hatred or ambition took Weapon against their Enemy (one Christian to slay another) did not fight under the Banner of Christ, but rather of Satan: and therefore concluding his matter, he exhorted that Christian men in their Wars would follow Christ their Prince and Captain, in fighting against their Enemies, rather than the examples of Julius, or Alexander, &c. The King hearing Colet thus speak, and fearing lest by his words the hearts of his Soldiers might be withdrawn from his Wars, which he had then in hand, took him aside and talked with him in secret Conference, walking in his Garden. Bishop Fitzjames, Bricot, and Stapdish, who were his Enemies, thought now none other, but that Colet must needs be committed to the Tower, and waited for his coming out. But the King with great gentleness entertaining Doctor Colet, and bidding him familiarly to put on his Cap, in long courteous talk had with him in the Garden, much commended him for his Learning and Integrity of life; agreeing with him in all points, but that only he required him (for that the rude Soldiers should not rashly mistake that which he had said) more plainly to explain his words and mind in that behalf; which after he did: and so after long communication and great promises, the King dismissed Colet with these words, saying, Let every man have his Doctor as him liketh, this shall be my Doctor; and so he departed. Whereby none of his Adversaries durst ever trouble him after that time.

Colet called before the King.

Dr. Colet commended of the King.

Among many other membrable acts left behind him, he erected a worthy Foundation of the School of Pauls (I pray God the fruits of the School may answer the Foundation) for the cherishing up of youth in good letters, providing a sufficient Stipend as well for the Master, as for the Usher: whom he willed rather to be appointed out of the number of married men, than of single Priests with their suspected Chastity. The first Moderator of this School, was Guli. Lilius, a man no less notable for his Learning, than was Colet for his Foundation. Ex Epist. Erasm. ad Jodoc. Jonam. This Colet died the year of our Lord 1519.

Gulielm. Lillius ex Epist. Erasm. ad Jodoc. Jonam.

Not long before the death of this Colet and Lily, lived Gulielmus Grocinus and Gulielmus Latimerus, both English men also, and famously learned. This Grocinus, as began to read in his open Lecture in the Church of St. Paul, the Book of Dionysius Areopagita, commonly called Hierarchia Ecclesiastica (for the reading of the holy Scriptures in Pauls was not in ure) in the first entry of his Preface cried out with great vehemency against them, whosoever they were, which either denied or stood in doubt of the Authority of that Book: in the number of whom he noted Laurence Valla, and divers other of the like approved Judgment and Learning. But afterward the same Grocine, when he had continued a few weeks in his reading thereof, and did consider further in him, he utterly altred and recanted his former sentence, protesting openly, that the forenamed Book, in his judgment, was never written by that Author whom we read in the Acts of the Apostles to be called Dyonisius Areopagita. Ex Eras. ad Parisiens.

The tractation of these two couples above rehearsed, doth occasion me to adjoin also the remembrance of another couple of like learned men: the names of whom, not unworthy to be remembred, were Thomas Linacre and Richard Pace: which two followed much upon the time of Colet, and of William Lily. But of Richard Pace, which was Dean next after the aforesaid Colet, more convenient place shall serve us hereafter to speak, coming to the story of Cardinal Wolsey.

Thomas Linacre. Rich. Pace.

Moreover, to these two I thought it not out of season, to couple also some mention of Jeffery Chaucer and John Gower. Which although being much discrepant from these in course of years, yet may seem not unwor-

K. Hen. 8. thy to be matched with these forenamed persons, in commendation of their study and learning. Albeit concerning the full certainty of the time and death of these two, we cannot find; yet it appeareth in the Prologue of Gower's work, entituled Confessio Amantis, that he finished it in the sixteenth year of King Richard the second. And in the end of the eighth Book of his said Treatise he declareth that he was both sick and old when he wrote it: whereby it may appear that he lived not long after. Notwithstanding by certain Verses of the said Master Gower, placed in the later end of Chaucer's Works both in Latin and English, it may seem that he was alive at the beginning of the reign of King Henry the fourth, and also by a Book which he wrote to the same King Henry. By his Sepulture within the Chappel of the Church of St. Mary Overies, which was then a Monastery, where he and his Wife lie buried, it appeareth by his chain and his Garland of Laurel, that he was both a Knight, and flourishing then in Poetry. In the which place of his Sepulture were made in his Grave-stone three Books; the first bearing the Title, Speculum meditantis: the second, Vox clamantis: the third, Confessio amantis. Besides these, divers Chronicles and other Works moe he compiled.

The Books of John Gower.

Likewise as touching the time of Chaucer, by his own words in the end of his first Book of Troylus and Cresside, it is manifest that he and Gower were both of one time; although it seemeth that Gower was a great deal his ancient: both notably learned, as the barbarous rudeness of that time did give, both great Friends together, and both in like kind of study together occupied; so endeavouring themselves, and employing their time, that they, excelling many other in Study and Exercise of good Letters, did pass forth their lives here right worshipfully and godly, to the worthy Fame and Commendation of their name. Chaucer's Works be all printed in one Volume, and therefore known to all men.

Chaucer and Gower commended for their studious Exercise.

This I marvel to see the idle life of the Priests and Clergy-men of that time, seeing these Lay-persons shewed themselves in these kinds of liberal Studies so industrious and fruitfully occupied: but much more I marvel to consider this, how that the Bishops, condemning and abolishing all manner of English Books and Treatises which might bring the people to any light of knowledge, did yet authorise the Works of Chaucer to remain still and to be occupied. Who (no doubt) saw in Religion as much almost as even we do now, and uttereth in his Works no less, and seemeth to be a right Wicklevian, or else there was never any; and that all his Works almost, if they be throughly advised, will testifie (albeit it be done in mirth, and covertly) and especially the later end of his third Book of the Testament of Love: for there purely he toucheth the highest matter, that is, the Communion. Wherein, except a man be altogether blind, he may espie him at the full. Although in the same Book (as in all other he useth to do) under shadows covertly, as under a Vziour, he suborneth Truth in such sort, as both privily she may profit the godly-minded, and yet not be espied of the crafty Adversary. And therefore the Bishops, belike, taking his Works but for Jests and Toys, in condemning other Books, yet permitted his Books to be read.

Chaucer a right Wicklevian.

Chaucer's Books.

So it pleased God then to blind the Eyes of them, for the more commodity of his people, to the intent that through the reading of his Treatises, some fruit might redound thereof to his Church, as no doubt it did to many. As also I am partly informed, of certain which knew the Parties, which to them reported, that by reading of Chaucer's Works, they were brought to the true knowledge of Religion: And not unlike to be true. For to omit other parts of his Volume, whereof some are more fabulous than other, what Tale can be more plainly told than the Tale of the Ploughman? or what finger can point out more directly the Pope with his Prelates to be Antichrist, than doth the poor Pellican reasoning against the greedy Griffon? Under which Hypotyposis, or Poesie, who is so blind that seeth not by the Pellican the Doctrine of Christ, and of the Lollards to be defended against the Church of Rome? Or who is so impudent that can deny that to be true which the Pellican there affirmeth in describing the presumptuous pride of that pretensed Church? Again, what Egg can be more like, or Fig, unto another, than the words, properties, and conditions of that ravening Gryph resembleth the true Image, that is, the Nature and Qualities of that which we call the Church of Rome, in every point and degree? And therefore no great marvel if that narration was exempted out of the Copies of Chaucer's Works: which notwithstanding now is restored again, and is extant for every man to read that is disposed. This Geffery Chaucer, being born (as is thought) in Oxford-shire, and dwelling in Woodstock, lieth buried in the Church of the Minster of St. Peter at Westminster in an Isle on the south side of the said Church, not far from the door leading to the Cloister, and upon his Grave-stone first were written these two old Verses.

Here beginneth the Reformation of the Church of Christ in the time of Martin Luther.

ALthough it cannot be sufficiently expressed with Tongue, or Pen of man, into what miserable ruine and desolation the Church of Christ was brought in those later days: yet partly, by the reading of these Stories afore past, some intelligence may be given to them which have judgment to mark, or Eyes to see in what blindness and darkness the world was drowned during the space of these four hundred years before and more. By the viewing and considering of which Times and Histories, thou mayst understand (gentle Reader) how the Religion of Christ, which only consisteth in Spirit and Verity, was wholly turned into outward Observations, Ceremonies, and Idolatry. So many Saints we had, so many Gods, so many Monasteries, so many Pilgrimages. As many Churches, as many Reliques forged and feigned we had. Again, so many Reliques, so many lying Miracles we believed. Instead of the only living Lord, we worshipped dead Stocks and Stones. In place of Christ immortal, we adored mortal Bread. In stead of his Blood, we worshipped the Blood of Ducks; how the people were led, so that the Priests were fed, no care was taken. In stead of God's Word, Man's Word was set up. In stead of Christ's Testament, the Pope's Testament, that is, the Canon-Law. In stead of Paul, the Master of Sentences took place, and almost full possession. The Law of God was little read, the use and end thereof was less known; and as the end of the Law was unknown, so the difference between the Gospel and the Law was not understood, the benefit of Christ not considered, the effect of Faith not expended. Through the Ignorance whereof it cannot be told what infinite Errors, Sects, and Religions crept into the Church, overwhelming the world, as with a Flood of Ignorance and Seduction. And no marvel; for where the Foundation is not well laid, what Building can stand or prosper? The Foundation of all our Christianity is only this; The promise of God in the Blood of Christ his Son, giving and promising life to all that believe in him: Giving (saith the Scripture) unto us, and not bargaining or indenting with us. And that freely (saith the Scripture) for Christ's sake, and not conditionally for our Merits sake.

The corruption of the Church described.

The foundation of Christian Religion.

Furthermore, Freely (saith the Scripture) by Grace, that the Promise might be firm and sure, and not by the works that we do, which always are doubtful. By Grace (saith the Scripture) through promise to all and upon all that believe, and not by the Law, upon them that do deserve. For if it come by deserving, then it is not of Grace: If it be not of Grace, then it is not of Promise: and contrariwise, if it be of Grace and Promise, then it is not of works, saith St. Paul. Upon the Foundation of God's free Promise and Grace first builded the Patriarchs, Kings, and Prophets. Upon this same Foundation also Christ the Lord builded his Church. Upon which Foundation the Apostles likewise builded the Church Apostolical or Ca-

This

This Apoſtolical and Catholick Foundation ſo long as the Church did retain, ſo long it continued ſincere and ſound: which endured a long ſeaſon after the Apoſtles time. But after, in proceſs of years, through wealth and negligence crept into the Church, ſo ſoon as this Foundation began to be loſt, came in new Builders, which would build upon a new Foundation a new Church more glorious, which we call now the Church of Rome. Who being not contented with the old Foundation, and the Head-corner-ſtone, which the Lord by his Word had laid; in place whereof they laid the ground-work upon the Condition and Strength of the Law and Works. Although it is not to be denied, but that the Doctrine of God's holy Law, and of good Works according to the ſame, is a thing moſt neceſſary to be learned and followed of all men: yet it is not that Foundation whereupon our Salvation conſiſteth; neither is that Foundation able to bear up the weight of the Kingdom of Heaven, but is rather the thing which is builded upon the Foundation; which Foundation is Jeſus Chriſt, according as we are taught of St. Paul, ſaying; No man can lay any other Foundation beſide that which is laid, Chriſt Jeſus, &c.

The Doctrine of the Church corrupted.

But this ancient Foundation, which the old ancient Church of Chriſt laid (as I ſaid) hath been now of long time forſaken, and in ſtead thereof, a new Church, with a new Foundation hath been erected and framed, not upon God's Promiſe, and his free Grace in Chriſt Jeſus, nor upon free Juſtification by Faith, but upon merits and deſerts of men's working. And hereon have they planted all theſe their new devices, ſo infinite, that they cannot well be numbred; as Maſſes-Trecenaries, Dirges, Obſequies, Mattens, and Hours-ſinging-Service, Vigils, Midnight-riſing, Bare-foot going, Fiſh-faſting, Lent-faſt, Ember-faſt, Stations, Rogations, Jubilees, Advocation of Saints, Praying to Images, Pilgrimage-walking, Works of Supererogation, Application of Merits, Orders, Rules, Sects of Religion, Vowes of Chaſtity, wilful Poverty, Pardons, Relations, Indulgencies, Penance, and Satisfaction, with auricular Confeſſion, founding of Abbies, building of Chappels, giving to Churches: And who is able to recite all their laborious Buildings, falſely framed upon a wrong ground, and all for ignorance of the true Foundation, which is the free juſtification by Faith in Chriſt Jeſus the Son of God.

The life and manners of the Church corrupted.

Moreover note, that as this new-found Church of Rome was thus deformed in Doctrine, ſo no leſs was it corrupted in order of Life and deep Hypocriſie, doing all things only under pretences and diſſembled Titles. So under the pretence of Peter's Chair, they exerciſed a Majeſty above Emperors and Kings. Under the Vizour of their vowed Chaſtity reigned Adultery; under the cloke of profeſſed Poverty, they poſſeſſed the goods of the Temporalty; under the title of being dead unto the World, they not only reigned in the World, but alſo ruled the World; under the colour of the Keys of Heaven to hang under their girdle, they brought all the States of the World under their girdle, and crept not only into the Purſes of men, but alſo into their Conſciences: they heard their Confeſſions; they knew their Secrets; they diſpenſed as they were diſpoſed, and looſed what them liſted: And finally when they had brought the whole World under their Subjection, yet did their Pride neither ceaſe to aſcend, neither could their Avarice be ever ſatisfied. And if the example of Cardinal Wolſey and other Cardinals and Popes cannot ſatisfie thee, I beſeech thee (gentle Reader) turn over the aforeſaid Book of the Ploughmans Tale in Chaucer, above-mentioned, where thou ſhalt underſtand much more of their Demeanour than I have here deſcribed.

Habentes ſpeciem pietatis, ſed virtutem ejus abnegantes. 2 Tim. 3.

The Reformation of the Church neceſſary.

In theſe ſo blind and miſerable corrupt dayes of darkneſs and ignorance, thou ſeeſt, good Reader, (I doubt not) how neceſſary it was, and high time that Reformation of the Church ſhould come, which now moſt happily and graciouſly began to work through the merciful and no leſs needful Providence of Almighty God; who although he ſuffered his Church to wander and ſtart aſide, through the ſeduction of Pride and Proſperity along time, yet at length it pleaſed his goodneſs to reſpect his people, and to reduce his Church into the priſtine Foundation and frame again, from whence it was pitiouſly decayed. Whereof I have now conſequently to entreat; intending by the Grace of Chriſt to declare how, and by what means firſt this Reformation of the Church began, and how it proceeded, encreaſing by little and little unto this perfection which now we ſee, and more I truſt ſhall ſee. K. Hen. 8

The firſt beginning of Reformation how, and by what means.

And herein we have firſt to behold the admirable Work of God's Wiſdom. For as the firſt decay and ruine of the Church before began of rude ignorance, and lack of knowledg in Teachers: ſo, to reſtore the Church again by Doctrine and Learning, it pleaſed God to open to man the Art of Printing, the time whereof was ſhortly after the burning of John Hus and Hierome. Printing being opened, incontinently miniſtred unto the Church the Inſtruments and Tools of Learning and Knowledge, which were good Books and Authors which before lay hid and unknown. The Science of Printing being found, immediately followed the Grace of God: which ſtirred up good Wits aptly to conceive the light of Knowledge and of Judgment: by which Light darkneſs began to be eſpied, and ignorance to be detected; Truth from Error, Religion from Superſtition, to be diſcerned, as is above more largely diſcourſed, where was touched the inventing of Printing.

Printing the Fountain of Reformation.

Furthermore; after theſe Wits ſtirred up of God, followed other more, increaſing daily more and more in Science, in Tongues, and Perfection of Knowledge: who now were able not only to diſcern in matters of judment, but alſo were ſo armed and furniſhed with the help of good Letters, that they did encounter alſo with the Adverſary, ſuſtaining the cauſe and defence of Learning againſt Barbarity; of Verity againſt Error; of true Religion againſt Superſtition. In number of whom, amongſt many other here unnamed, were Picus, and Franciſcus Mirandula, Laur. Valla, Franc. Petrarcha, Doc. Weſalianus, Revelinus, Grocinus, Coletus, Rhenanus, Eraſmus, &c. And here began the firſt puſh and aſſault to be given againſt the ignorant and barbarous Faction of the Pope's pretenſed Church. Who after that by their learned Writings and laborious Travel, they had opened a Window of light unto the World, and had made (as it were) a way more ready for others to come after: Immediately, according to God's gracious appointment, followed Martin Luther, with others after him; by whoſe miniſtry it pleaſed the Lord to work a more full Reformation of his Church, as by their Acts and Proceedings hereafter ſhall follow (Chriſt willing) more amply to be declared.

And now coming to the time and ſtory of Martin Luther, whom the Lord did ordain and appoint to be the principal Organ and Miniſter under him, to reform Religion, and to ſubvert the See of the Pope: firſt, before we enter into the tractation hereof, it ſhall not be impertinent to the purpoſe, to infer ſuch Propheſies and Forewarnings as were ſent before of God, by divers and ſundry good men, long before the time of Luther, which foretold and propheſied of this Reformation of the Church to come.

Propheſies going before Martin Luther.

The Propheſie of John Hus touching the Reformation of the Church.

And firſt to begin with the Propheſie of John Hus, and Hierome, it is both notable, and alſo before-mentioned, what the ſaid John Hus at the time of his burning propheſied unto his Enemies, ſaying: That after an hundred years come and gone, they ſhould give account to God and to him.

Where is to be noted, that counting from the year 1415. (which year John Hus was burned) or from the year 1416. (when Hierome did ſuffer) unto the year 1516. (when Martin Luther began firſt to write) we ſhall find the Number of an Hundred Years expired.

Another Propheſie of John Hus touching the Reformation of the Church.

Likewiſe to this may be adjoyned the prophetical Viſion or Dream, which chanced to the ſaid John Hus lying in the Dungeon of the Friers in Conſtance, a little before he was burned: His Dream, as he himſelf reporteth in his Epiſtles writing to Maſter John Chlum, and as I have alſo before recorded the ſame, ſo will I now repeat the ſame again in like effect of words, as he wrote it himſelf in Latin; the effect of which Latin is this:

I pray you expound to me the Dream which I had this Night. I ſaw that in my Church at Bethlehem (whereof I was Parſon) they deſired and laboured to aboliſh

K. Hen. 8. boliſh all the Images of Chriſt, and did aboliſh them. I the next day following roſe up, and ſaw many other Painters, which painted both the ſame, and many more Images, and more fairer, which I was glad to behold: whereupon the Painters, with the great multitude of people, ſaid: Now let the Biſhops and Prieſts come, and put out theſe Images if they can. Which thing done, much people rejoyced in Bethlehem, and I with them: and riſing up, I felt my ſelf to laugh.

Ex Epiſt. 45. John Hus.

This Dream Maſter John of Chium firſt expounded. Then he in the next Epiſtle after expounded it himſelf to this effect: Stante mandato Dei, &c. That is, the Commandment of God ſtanding, that we muſt obſerve no Dreams, yet notwithſtanding, I truſt that the Life of Chriſt was painted in Bethlehem by me, through his Word, in the Hearts of Men; the which Preaching they went about in Bethlehem to deſtroy, firſt in commanding that no Preaching ſhould be, neither in the Church of Bethlehem, nor in the Chappels thereby: Secondly, that the Church of Bethlehem ſhould be thrown down to the ground. the ſame Life of Chriſt ſhall be painted up again by moe Preachers much better than I, and after a much more better ſort; ſo that a great number of people ſhall rejoyce thereat: all ſuch as love the Life of Chriſt, and alſo I ſhall rejoyce my ſelf, at what time I ſhall awake, that is, when I ſhall riſe again from the dead.

Another Propheſie of John Hus.

Alſo in his forty eighth Epiſtle he ſeemeth to have a like prophetical meaning, where he ſaith; That he truſted that thoſe things, which he ſpake then within the Houſe, ſhould afterward be preached above on the Houſe-top, &c.

Another Propheſie by John Hus.

And becauſe we are here in hand with the Propheſies of John Hus, it is not to be omitted what he writeth in a certain Treatiſe, De Sacerdotum & Monachorum carnalium abominatione; thus propheſying of the Reformation of the Church, The Church, he ſaith, cannot be reduced to its former dignity, and reformed, before all things firſt be made new, (the truth whereof appeareth by the Temple of Solomon) as well the Clergy and Prieſts, as alſo the People and Laity. Or elſe, except all ſuch as now be addicted to avarice, from the leaſt to the moſt, be firſt converted and renewed, as well the people as the Clerks and Prieſts, things cannot be reformed. Albeit, as my mind now giveth me, I believe rather the firſt, that is, that then ſhall riſe a new people, formed after the new Man, which is created after God. Of the which people, new Clerks and Prieſts ſhall come forth and be taken, which all ſhall hate Covetouſneſs and Glory of this Life, labouring to an heavenly Converſation. Notwithſtanding, all theſe things ſhall be done and wrought in continuance and order of time, diſpenſed of God for the ſame purpoſe. And this God doth, and will do of his own Goodneſs and Mercy, and for the riches of his Patience and Sufferance, giving time and ſpace of Repentance to them that have long lain in their ſins, to amend and flie from the face of the Lord's Fury, until at length all ſhall ſuffer together, and until both the carnal people, and Prieſts, and Clerks, in proceſs and order of time, ſhall fall away and be conſumed, as is the Cloth conſumed and eaten of the Moth, &c.

John Hus de Sacerd. & monachorum carnalium abominatione, cap. 73.

With this Propheſie of John Hus above mentioned, ſpeaking of the hundredth Years, accordeth alſo the Teſtimony of Hierome his fellow Martyr, in theſe Words; And I cite you all (ſaid he) to anſwer before the moſt high and juſt Judge, after an hundred years.

A Propheſie of Reformation by Hieronymus Pragenſis.

This Hierome was burnt Anno 1416; and Luther began to write, Anno 1516, which was juſt a hundred Year, according to the right account of Hierom's Propheſie.

Another Propheſie of Reformation by John Hilton Monk of Thuringe.

Philip Melanchthon in his Apology, Cap. de Votis Monaſt. teſtifieth of one John Hilton a Monk in Thuringe, who, for ſpeaking againſt certain Abuſes of the Place and Order where he lived, was caſt into Priſon. At length being weak and feeble through Impriſonment, he ſent for the Warden of the Covent, deſiring and beſeeching him to have ſome reſpect of his woful ſtate and pitiful caſe. The Warden rebuking and accuſing him for that he had done and ſpoken; he anſwered again and ſaid, That he had ſpoken nothing which might be prejudicial or hurtful to their Monkery, or againſt their Religion: but there ſhould come one (and aſſigned the year Anno 1516) who ſhould utterly ſubvert all Monkery, and they ſhould never be able to reſiſt him, &c.

Ex Phil. Melanc. in Apologia, cap. de Monaſt.

Long it were to induce here all Propheſies that be read in Hiſtories. Certain I mind briefly to touch and paſs over. And firſt to omit the Revelations of Briget (whereunto I do not much attribute) who propheſying of the Deſtruction of Rome in her fourth Book, Cap. 17. ſaith; 'That Rome ſhall be ſcoured and purged with three things, with Sword, Fire, and the Plough: reſembling moreover the ſaid Church of Rome to a Plant removed out of the old place into a new; alſo to a Body condemned by a Judge to have the ſkin flayn off; the Blood to be drawn from the Fleſh; the Fleſh to be cut in pieces; and the Bones thereof to be broken; and all the Marrow to be ſqueezed out from the ſame; ſo that no part thereof remain whole and perfect, &c. But to theſe Speculations of Briget I give no great Reſpect, as neither I do to the Predictions of Katherine de Senis.

Ex Revel. Briget. l. 4. cap. 15. Briget propheſieth of Reformation.

And yet notwithſtanding, Antonius writing of the ſame Katharine in his third part, Tit. 23. cap. 14. reciteth her Words thus, propheſying of the Reformation of the Church to Frier Reymund her ghoſtly Father: 'By theſe Tribulations (ſaith ſhe) God after a ſecret manner unknown to man, ſhall purge his holy Church, and after thoſe things ſhall follow ſuch a Reformation of the holy Church of God, and ſuch a Renovation of the holy Paſtors, that the only Cogitation and Remembrance thereof, maketh my Spirit to rejoyce in the Lord: And as I have oftentimes told you heretofore, the Spouſe, which is now all deformed and ragged, ſhall be adorned and decked with moſt rich and precious Ouches and Brouches: And all the Faithful ſhall be glad and rejoyce to ſee themſelves ſo beautified with ſo holy Paſtors. Yea, and alſo the Infidels, then allured by the ſweet ſavour of Chriſt, ſhall return to the Catholick Fold, and be converted to the true Biſhop and Shepherd of their Souls. Give thanks therefore to God; for after this ſtorm he will give a great calm, &c.

Antonius part 3. Hiſt. titul. 23. cap. 14. Katharina Senenſis propheſying of Reformation.

Of the Authority of this Propheteſs I have not to affirm or judge, but rather to hear what the Catholick Judges will ſay of this their own Saint and Prophet. For if they do not credit her Spirit of Propheſie, why then do they authorize her for a pure Saint among the Siſters of dear St. Dominick? If they warrant her Propheſie, let them ſay then, when was this glorious Reformation of the Church ever true or like to be true, if it be not true now in this marvellous alteration of the Church in theſe our latter days? Or when was there any ſuch Converſion of Chriſtian People in all Countries ever heard of, ſince the Apoſtles time, as hath been ſince the preaching of Martin Luther?

The Propheſie of Hierome Savonarola.

Of Hieronimus Savonarola I wrote before, ſhewing that he propheſied; That one ſhould paſs over the Alps like to Cyrus, who ſhould ſubvert and deſtroy all Italy. Which may well be applied to God's Word, and the Goſpel of Chriſt, ſpreading now abroad ſince Luther's time.

The Propheſie of Theodoricus.

Theodoricus, Biſhop of Croatia, lived near about the time when Hus and Hierome were martyred. Who in the end of his prophetical Verſes, which are extant in print, declareth; That the See of Rome, which is ſo horribly polluted with Simony and Avarice, ſhall fall, and no more oppreſs men with Tyranny, as it hath done, and that it ſhall be ſubverted by her own Subjects, and that the Church and true Piety ſhall flouriſh more again than ever it did before.

The Propheſie of Dr. Weſelius.

Noviomagus teſtifieth, that he, in the Year of our Lord 1520. heard Oſtendorpius, a Canon of Deventry ſay, that when he was a young man, Doctor Weſelius a Friſian, which was then an old Man, told him, 'That he ſhould live to ſee this new School Divinity of Scotus, Aquinas, and Bonaventure, to be utterly forſaken and exploded of all true Chriſtians.

A Propheſy of the Pope's Head.

In a Book of Carolus Bovillus, mention is made of a certain Viſion which one Nicholas, an Hermite of Helvetia, had; In which Viſion he ſaw the Pope's Head crowned with three Swords proceeding from his face, and three Swords coming coming toward it. This Viſion is alſo imprinted in the Books of Martin Luther, with his Preface before it.

Ex Flact. de teſtibus veritatis.

Nicholas Medlerus, being of late Superintendent of Brunſwick, affirmed and teſtified, 'That he heard and knew a 'certain Prieſt in his Country, that told the Prieſts there, 'that they laid aſide Paul under their Desks and Pews: but 'the time would come, when as Paul ſhould come abroad, 'and drive them under the Desks and dark Stalls, where 'they ſhould not appear, &c.

Matthius Flaccius, in the end of his Book entituled, de Teſtibus Veritatis, 'Speaketh of one Michael Stifelius; 'which Michael, being an old Man, told him, that he heard 'the Prieſts and Monks ſay, many times by old Propheſies, 'that a violent Reformation muſt needs come amongſt 'them: and alſo that the ſaid Michael heard Conradus 'Stifelius his Father many times declare the ſame: who al- 'ſo, for the great hatred he bare againſt this filthy ſect of 'Monks and Prieſts, told to one Peter Pirer, a Friend and 'Neighbour of his, that he ſhould live and ſee the day; 'and therefore deſired him, that when the day came, beſides 'thoſe Prieſts which he ſhould kill for himſelf, he would 'kill one Prieſt for his ſake. Hæc ex Flaccio.

The Goſpel beginneth his reformation with peace and quietneſs.

This Stifelius thought belike, that this Reformation ſhould be wrought by outward violence, and force of Sword; but he was therein deceived; altho the Adverſary uſeth all forcible means, and violent tyranny, yet the proceeding of the Goſpel always beginneth with peace and quietneſs.

In the Table of Amerſham-Men I ſignified a little before, how one Haggar of London, ſpeaking of this Reformation to come, declared, That the Prieſts ſhould make battel, and have the upper hand a while, but ſhortly they ſhould be vanquiſhed and overthrown for ever.

The fall of the Popedom ſignified by the fall of the Angel from the Church top of the Popes Caſtle. Ex Baleo, Cent. 8.

In the time of Pope Alexander the ſixth, and about the year of our Lord 1500, as is before ſpecified, The high Angel which ſtood in the top of the Pope's Church and Caſtle of St. Angel, was thrown down with a terrible Thunder into the River of Tibris: Whereby might ſeem to be declared the ruin and fall of the Popedom.

Another ſignification of the Popes ſubverſion.

To this may be adjoined that which in certain Chronicles, and in John Bale, is recorded; which ſaith, That in the year of our Lord, 1516, (which was the ſame year when Martin Luther began) Pope Leo the tenth did create one and thirty Cardinals: In the which year and day of their Creation, there fell a tempeſt of Thunder and Lightning in Rome, which ſo ſtrook the Church where the Cardinals were made, that it removed the little Child Jeſus out of the lap of his Mother, and the Keys out of St. Peter's hand. Which thing many then did interpret to ſignify and foreſhew the ſubverſion and alteration of the See of Rome.

Ex Joan Carione Franc. Mirandula, & aliis. Bloody Marks of the Lords Paſſion ſeen upon Mens Garments.

Hitherto pertaineth alſo a ſtrange portent and a prodigious token from Heaven, in the Year of our Lord 1505, in the which year, under the Reign of Maximilian the Emperor, There appeared in Germany, upon the Veſtures of Men, as well of Prieſts as Laymen, upon Womens Garments alſo, and upon their Rocks as they were ſpinning, divers Prints and Tokens of the Nails, of the Spunge, of the Spear, of the Lord's Coat, and of bloody Croſſes, &c. All which were ſeen upon their Caps and Gowns, as is moſt certainly teſtified and recorded by divers, which both did ſee, and alſo did write upon the ſame. Of whom firſt was Maximilian the Emperor, who both had and ſhewed the ſame to Franciſcus Mirandula, which wrote thereupon a Book in Latin Meetre called Stauroſticon; wherein, for the more credit, theſe Verſes be contained.

Non ignota cano, Cæſar monſtravit, & ipſi
Vidimus: Innumeros promſit Germania teſtes, &c.

The expoſition of this portent.

Of this alſo writeth Jo. Carion, Funcius, P. Melanchon, Flaccius, with divers other moe. Theſe Marks and Tokens, as they were very ſtrange, ſo were they diverſly expounded of many, ſome thinking that they portended Affliction and Perſecution of the Church to draw near: ſome, that God by that Token did admoniſh them, or foreſhewed unto them the true Doctrine of their Juſtification, which only is to be ſought in the Croſs and Paſſion of Chriſt, and no other thing. This I marvel, that Chriſtianus Maſſeus, and other of that Profeſſion, do leave it out. Belike they ſaw ſomething in it that made not for their liking. For whether it ſignifieth Perſecution to come upon the Germans, they cannot be evil that ſuffer and bear the Croſs with Chriſt: or whether it ſignifieth the true Doctrine of Chriſt coming to the Germans; it cannot otherwiſe be, but that the Doctrine of the Biſhop of Rome muſt needs be wrong, which is contrary to this which God hath ſtirred up in Germany. K. Hen. 8.

By theſe and ſuch-like Propheſies, it is evident to underſtand, the time not to be far off, when God of his determinate Providence was diſpoſed to reform and to reſtore his Church. And not only by theſe Propheſies the ſame might well appear, but alſo, and much rather, by the hearts of the people at that time; whoſe minds were ſo incenſed and inflamed with hatred againſt the pomp and pride of Rome, both thorow all Nations, and eſpecially the people of Germany, that it was eaſy to perceive the time was near at hand, when the pride of Popiſh Prelacy would have a fall. Such diſdain there was, ſuch contempt and deriſion began to riſe on every ſide then, againſt the Pope and the Court of Rome, that it might ſoon appear by the hearts of the people, that God was not diſpoſed to have it long to ſtand. For neither were their deteſtable doings ſo ſecret, that Men did not ſee them, neither did any Man behold them, having any ſparkle of godlineſs, that could abide them. And thereupon grew theſe Proverbs to their deriſion, in every Country: As in Germany it hath been a Proverb amongſt them.

Pro erbs againſt the corrupt Sea of Rome.

Was iſt nu inder werlt fur ein weſen,
Wir moegen fur den pfaffen nicht geneſen.

What is this, to ſee the World now round about,
That for theſe ſhaveling Prieſts no Man that once may rout?

Quam primum clericus ſuſcipit raſuram, ſtatim intrat in eum Diabolus.

That is;

As ſoon as a Clerk is ſhorn into his Order, by and by the Devil entreth into him.

In nomine Domini incipit omne malum.

That is;

In the Name of God beginneth all evil:
Alluding to the Pope's Bulls, which commonly ſo begin.

Item, When Bulls come from Rome, bind well your Purſes.
The nearer Rome, the further from Chriſt.
Item, He that goeth once to Rome, ſeeth a wicked Man.
He that goeth twice, learneth to know him.
He that goeth thrice, bringeth him home with him.
Item, The Court of Rome never regardeth the Sheep without the Wooll.
Once were wooden Chalices, and golden Prieſts: Ex Aven.
Now we have golden Chalices, and wooden Prieſts.
Once Chriſtian Men had blind Churches, and light Hearts;
Now they have blind Hearts, and light Churches.
Item, Many are worſhipped for Saints in Heaven, whoſe Souls be burning in Hell.

What ſhould I ſpeak of our Engliſh Proverb, which ſo vilely eſteemeth the filthy Friers, that it compareth them (ſaving thy reverence, good Reader) to a Fart?

In France, Gallus Senonenſis writeth four hundred years ago, that amongſt them it was an old ſaying; Romæ ſolui Satanam in perniciem totius Eccleſiæ: that is, That Satan was let looſe at Rome to deſtroy the whole Church.

Thomas Becket himſelf in his time, writing to the College of Cardinals, denieth it not, but to be a common word both through Town and City, Quod non ſit juſtitia Romæ: that is, That there is no Right at Rome.

To theſe may be adjoined alſo the A, B, C, which we find in the Margent of a certain old Regiſter, to be attributed to William Thorpe, whoſe Story we have comprehended in the Book before.

The A, B, C, againſt the pride of the Clergy.

K. Hen. 8.

¶ How long have ye the World captived,
In sore bondage of Men's Traditions?
Kings and Emperors ye have deprived.
Lewdly usurping their chief Possessions:
Much misery ye make in all Religions.
Now your Frauds be almost at their later cast,
Of God sore to be revenged at the last.
Poor People to oppress ye have no shame,
Quaking for fear of your bloody tyranny.
Rightful Justice ye have put out of frame,
Secking the lust of your God the belly.
Therefore I dare you boldly certify
Very little, tho you be thereof agast,
Yet God will be revenged at the last.

By these and such-like sayings, which may be collected innumerable, it may soon be seen what Hearts and Judgments the People had in those days of the Romish Clergy. Which thing, no doubt, was of God as a secret Prophesy, that shortly Religion should be restored: according as it came to pass about this present time, when Dr. Martin Luther first began to write, after that Picus Mirandula, and Laurentius Valla, and last of all Erasmus Roterodamus, had somewhat broken the way before, and had shaken the Monks houses. But Luther gave the stroke, and pluckt down the Foundation, and all by opening one Vein, long hid before, wherein lieth the Touchstone of all Truth and Doctrine, as the only principal Origen of our Salvation, which is our free justifying by Faith only in Christ the Son of God. The laborious travels, and the whole process, and the constant preachings of this worthy Man, because they are sufficiently declared in the History of Joannes Sleidanus, I shall the less need to stay long thereupon, but only to run over some principal matters of his Life and Acts, as they are briefly collected by Philip Melanthon.

The History of Martin Luther, with his Life and Doctrine described.

MArtin Luther, after he was grown in years, being born at Isleben in Saxony, Anno 1483, was set to the University, first of Magdeburg, then of Erford. In this University of Erford, there was a certain aged Man in the Covent of the Augustines, (who is thought to be Wesselus above mentioned) with whom Luther being then of the same Order, a Frier Augustine, had conference upon divers things, especially touching the Article of Remission of Sins; the which Article the said aged Father opened unto Luther after this sort; declaring, that we must not generally believe only forgiveness of sins to be, or to belong to Peter, to Paul, to David, or such good Men alone; but that God's express Commandment is, that every Man should believe his sins particularly to be forgiven him in Christ: and further said, that this interpretation was confirmed by the testimony of St. Bernard, and shewed him the place, in the Sermon of the Annunciation, where it is thus set forth: But add thou that thou believest this, that by him thy sins are forgiven thee. This is the Testimony that the Holy Ghost giveth thee in thy Heart, saying, Thy sins are forgiven thee. For this is the Opinion of the Apostle, that Man is freely justified by Faith.

An excellent declaration of St. Bernard touching Faith.

By these words Luther was not only strengthned, but was also instructed of the full meaning of St. Paul, who repeateth so many times this sentence, We are justified by Faith. And having read the Expositions of many upon this place, he then perceived, as well by the purpose of the old Man, as by the comfort he received in his Spirit, the vanity of those Interpretations, which he had read before of the Schoolmen. And so reading by little and little, with conferring the sayings and examples of the Prophets and Apostles, and continual invocation of God, and excitation of Faith by force of Prayer, he perceived that Doctrine most evidently. Then began he to read St. Augustines Books, where he found many comfortable sentences: among other, in the Exposition of the Psalms, and especially in the Book of the Spirit and Letter, which confirmed this Doctrine of Faith and Consolation in his heart not a little. And yet he laid not aside the Sententiaries, as Gabriel and Cameracensis. Also he read the Books of Occam, whose subtilty he preferred above Thomas Aquinus and Scotus. He read also and revolved Gerson: but above all the rest, he perused all over St. Augustine's Works with attentive cogitation. And thus continued he his study at Erford the space of four years in the Covent of the Augustines.

The profit of St. Austins Books.

About this time one Staupitius, a famous Man, minister ing his help to further the erection of an University in Wittenberg, and endeavouring to have Schools of Divinity founded in this new University: when he had considered the spirit and towardliness of Luther, he called him from Erford, to place him in Wittenberg, in the year 1508, and of his age 26. There his towardness appeared in the ordinary exercise, both of his disputations in the Schools, and preaching in Churches: where many wise and learned Men attentively heard Luther, namely Dr. Mellarstad.

The institution of the University at Wittenberg. Staupitius.

This Mellarstad would oftentimes say, that Luther was of such a marvellous spirit, and so ingenious, that he gave apparent signification, that he would introduce a more compendious, easie, and familiar manner of teaching, and alter and abolish the order that then was used.

The Judgment of Dr. Mellerstad upon Martin Luther.

There first he expounded the Logick and Philosophy of Aristotle, and in the mean while intermitted no whit his study in Theology. Three years after he went to Rome, about certain Contentions of the Monks; and returning the same year, he was graded Doctor, at the expences of Elector Frederick Duke of Saxony, according to the solemn manner of Schools; for he had heard him preach; well understood the quietness of his Spirit; diligently considered the vehemency of his words; and had in singular admiration those profound matters, which in his Sermons he ripely and exactly explained. This degree Staupitius, against his will, inforced upon him; saying merrily unto him, that God had many things to bring to pass in his Church by him. And tho these words were spoken merrily, yet it came so to pass anon after; as many Predictions or Presages prove true before a change.

Luther sent to Rome. Frederick Duke of Saxony. Luther commenced Doct.

After this, he began to expound the Epistle to the Romans, and consequently the Psalms: where he shewed the difference betwixt the Law and the Gospel. He also confounded the Error that reigned then in Schools and Sermons, teaching that Men may merit remission of sins by their proper works, and that they be just before God by outward Discipline, as the Pharisees taught. Luther diligently reduced the minds of Men to the Son of God. And as John Baptist demonstrated the Lamb of God which took away the sins of the World; Even so Luther shining in the Church as a bright Star after a long cloudy and obscure Sky, expresly shewed, that sins are freely remitted for the love of the Son of God, and that we ought faithfully to embrace this bountiful Gift.

Dr. Martin Luther beginneth to read the Epistle to the Romans.

Luther taught Jesus Christ.

These happy beginnings of so good matters, got him great authority, especially seeing his life also was correspondent to his profession. The consideration whereof, allured to him marvelously the hearts of his Auditors, and also many notable Personages.

All this while Luther yet altered nothing in the Ceremonies, but precisely observed his rule among his Fellows; he medled in no doubtful Opinions, but taught this only Doctrine, as most principal of all others to all Men, opening and declaring the Doctrine of Repentance, of remission of Sins, of Faith, of true comfort in times of Adversity. Every Man received good taste of this sweet Doctrine, and the Learned conceived high pleasure to behold Jesus Christ, the Prophets, and Apostles to come forth into light, out of darkness, whereby they began to understand the difference betwixt the Law and the Gospel; betwixt the promises of the Law, and the promise of the Gospel; betwixt Spiritual Justice, and Civil Things: which certainly could not have been found in Thomas Aquinus, Scotus, and such-like School-Clerks.

It hapned moreover about this time, that many were provoked by Erasmus's learned Works, to study the Greek and Latin Tongues; who perceiving a more gentle and ready order of teaching than before, began to have in contempt the Monks barbarous and sophistical Doctrine; and especially such as were of a liberal nature and good disposition. Luther began to study the Greek and Hebrew Tongue, to this end, that after he had learned the phrase and property of the Tongues, and drawn the Doctrine of the very Fountains, he might give more sound judgment.

Erasmus openeth the way before Luther.

As Luther was thus occupied in Germany, which was the year of our Lord 1516, Leo the tenth of that name succeeding after Julius the second, was Pope of Rome. Who under pretence of War againſt the Turk, ſent a Jubilee with his Pardons abroad through all Chriſtian Realms and Dominions, whereby he gathered together innumerable Riches and Treaſure. The Gatherers and Collectors whereof perſwaded the people, that whoſoever would give ten ſhillings, ſhould at his pleaſure deliver one Soul from the pains of Purgatory. For this they held as a general rule, that God would do whatſoever they would have him, according to the ſaying, Quicquid ſolveritis ſuper terram, erit ſolutum in Cœlis, &c. Whatſoever you ſhall looſe upon Earth, the ſame ſhall be looſed in Heaven. But if it were but one jot leſs than ten ſhillings, they preached that it would profit them nothing. *Ex Chriſtia. Ten ſhilling Pardons.

This filthy kind of the Pope's Merchandiſe, as it ſpread through all quarters of Chriſtian Regions, ſo it came alſo to Germany, through the means of a certain Dominick Frier named Tecellius, who moſt impudently cauſed the Pope's Indulgences or Pardons to be carried and ſold about the Country. Whereupon Luther, much moved with the blaſphemous Sermons of this ſhameleſs Frier, and having his heart earneſtly bent with ardent deſire to maintain true Religion, publiſhed certain Propoſitions concerning Indulgences, which are to be read in the firſt Tome of his Works, and ſet them openly on the Temple that joineth to the Caſtle of Wittenberg, the morrow after the Feaſt of all Saints, the year 1517.

Luthers Propoſitions of Pardons.

The firſt occaſion why Luther writ againſt Pardons.

This beggerly Frier, hoping to obtain the Pope's bleſſing, aſſembled certain Monks, and ſophiſtical Divines of his Covent, and forthwith commanded them to write ſomething againſt Luther. And whilſt he would not himſelf ſeem to be dumb, he began not only to invey in his Sermons, but to thunder againſt Luther; crying, Luther is an Heretick, and worthy to be perſecuted with Fire. And beſides this, he burned openly Luther's Propoſitions, and the Sermon which he wrote of Indulgences. This rage and fumiſh fury of this Frier, inforced Luther to treat more amply of the cauſe, and to maintain his matter.

The ſlander of Terellius the Frier.

And thus roſe the beginnings of this Controverſy; wherein Luther, neither ſuſpecting, nor dreaming of any change that might happen in the Ceremonies, did not utterly reject the Indulgences, but required a moderation in them: and therefore they falſly accuſe him, which blaze, that he began with plauſible matter, whereby he might get praiſe, to the end that in proceſs of time he might change the ſtate of the Common-weal, and purchaſe authority either for himſelf or other.

And certes, he was not ſuborned or ſtirred up by them of the Court, (as the Duke of Brunſwick wrote) inſomuch that the Duke Frederick was ſore offended that ſuch contention and controverſy ſhould ariſe, having regard to the ſequel thereof.

The praiſe of Frederick Duke of Saxony.

And as this good Duke Frederick was one, of all the Princes of our time, that loved beſt quietneſs and common tranquillity; neither was avaricious, but willingly bent to refer all his Counſels to the common utility of all the World, (as it is eaſy to be conjectured divers ways) ſo he neither encouraged nor ſupported Luther, but often repreſented ſemblance of heavineſs and ſorrow which he bare in his heart, fearing greater diſſenſions. But being a wiſe Prince, and following the counſel of God's rule, and well deliberating thereupon, he thought with himſelf, that the Glory of God was to be preferred above all things. Neither was he ignorant what blaſphemy it was, horribly condemned of God, obſtinately to repugn the Truth. Wherefore he did as a godly Prince ſhould do; he obeyed God, committing himſelf to his holy grace, and omnipotent protection. And altho Maximilianus the Emperor, Carolus King of Spain, and Pope Julius, had given commandment to the ſaid Duke Frederick, that he ſhould inhibit Luther from all place and liberty of preaching; yet the Duke, conſidering with himſelf the preaching and writing of Luther, and weighing diligently the teſtimonies and places of the Scripture which he alledged, would not withſtand the thing which he judged ſincere. And yet neither did he this, truſting to his own judgment, but was very anxious and inquiſitive to hear the judgment of others, which were both aged & learned. In the number of whom was Eraſmus, whom the Duke deſired to declare to him his opinion touching the matter of Martin Luther; ſaying and proteſting, that he would rather the ground ſhould open and ſwallow him, than he would bear with any opinions which he knew to be contrary to manifeſt truth; and therefore he deſired him to declare his judgment in the matter to him, freely and friendly. K. Hen. 8.

The judgment of Eraſmus touching Luther. Monks Bellies, and the Popes Crown not to be touched.

Eraſmus, thus being entreated of the Duke, began thus jeſtingly and merrily to anſwer the Dukes Requeſt, ſaying, That in Luther were two great faults; firſt, that he would touch the Bellies of Monks: the ſecond, that he would touch the Pope's Crown; which two matters in no caſe are to be dealt withal. Then, opening his mind plainly to the Duke, thus he ſaid, That Luther did dwell in detecting Errors, and that Reformation was to be wiſhed, and very neceſſary in the Church: and added moreover, that the effect of his Doctrine was true: but only that he wiſhed in him a more temperate moderation and manner of writing and handling. Whereupon Duke Frederick ſhortly after wrote to Luther ſeriouſly, exhorting him to temper the vehemency of his ſtile. This was at the City of Colen, ſhortly after the coronation of the new Emperor, where alſo Huttenus, Aloiſius, Marlianus, Ludovicus Vives, Halonius, with other learned Men, were aſſembled together, waiting upon the Emperor.

Ex Chr. caſp. Peucer. l. 5.

Ex Epiſt. Eraſm. ad Moguntinenſ.

Furthermore, the ſame Eraſmus, the year next following that, wrote up to the Archbiſhop of Mentz a certain Epiſtle touching the cauſe of Luther. In which Epiſtle thus he ſignifieth to the Biſhop; That many things were in the Books of Luther condemned of Monks and Divines, for heretical, which in the Books of Bernard and Auſtin are read for ſound and godly.

Alſo, That the World is burthened with Mens Inſtitutions, with School-Doctrines and Opinions, and with the tyranny of begging Friers: which Friers, when they are but the Popes Servants and Underlings, yet they have ſo grown in power and multitude, that they are now terrible, both to the Pope himſelf, and to all Princes. Who ſo long as the Pope maketh with them, ſo long they make him more than a God: but if he make any thing againſt their purpoſe or commodity, then they weigh his authority no more than a dream or phantaſie.

The Church burthened.

Once (ſaid he) it was counted an Hereſy when a Man repugned againſt the Goſpel, or Articles of the Faith: Now he that diſſenteth from Thomas Aquinas, is an Heretick; whatſoever doth not like them, whatſoever they underſtand not, that is Hereſy. To ſpeak Greek is Hereſy, or to ſpeak more finely than they do, that is with them Hereſy. And thus much by the way concerning the Judgment of Eraſmus.

Now to return, and to entreat ſomething orderly of the Acts and Conflicts of Luther with his Adverſaries. After that Tecellius the foreſaid Frier, with his fellow Monks and frierly Fellows, had cried out with open mouth againſt Luther, in maintaining the Pope's Indulgences; and that Luther again, in defence of his cauſe, had ſet up Propoſitions againſt the open abuſes of the ſame, marvel it was to ſee how ſoon theſe Propoſitions were ſparkled abroad in ſundry and far places, and how greedily they were catched up in the hands of divers both far and near. And thus the contention of this matter encreaſing between them, Luther was compelled to write thereof more largely and fully than otherwiſe he thought, which was in the Year of our Lord 1517.

Ex Paralip. Abbat. Urſperg.

Yet all this while Luther never thought of any alteration to come of any Ceremony, much leſs ſuch a reformation of Doctrine and Ceremonies as afterward did follow. But only hearing that he was accuſed to the Biſhop of Rome, he did write humbly unto him: in the beginning of which Writing he declareth the inordinate outrage of thoſe his Pardon-mongers, which ſo exceſſively did pill and poll the ſimple people, to the great ſlander of the Church, and ſhame to his Holineſs: and ſo proceeding, in the end of his writing thus he ſubmitteth himſelf.

The ſubmiſſion of Luther to the Pope.

Wherefore (ſaith he) moſt holy Father, I offer my ſelf proſtrate under the feet of your Holineſs, with all that I am, and that I have. Save me, kill me, call me, recall me, approve me, reprove me, as you ſhall pleaſe. Your voice, the voice of Chriſt in your ſpeaking, I will acknowledg. If I have deſerved death, I ſhall be contented to die: For the Earth is the Lord's, and all the fulneſs thereof, who is to be bleſſed for ever. Amen. This was in the year of our Lord 1518. Pſal. 24.

After that Martin Luther, provoked by Tecellius, had declared his mind in writing, lowly and humbly, and had ſet up certain Propoſitions to be diſputed; not long after, among other Monks and Friers, ſteppeth up one Silveſter de Priero, a Dominick Frier, who firſt began

K.Hen. 8. to publiſh abroad a certain impudent and railing Dialogue againſt him. Unto whom Luther anſwered again, firſt alledging the place of the Apoſtle; 1 Theſſ. 5. That we muſt prove all things. Alſo the place, Gal. 2. That if an Angel from Heaven do bring any other Goſpel than that we have received, he ought to be accurſed.

The anſwer of Luther againſt Silveſter.

Item, He alledged the place of Auſtin unto Hierome, where he ſaid Auſtin ſaith, That he was wont to give this honour only to the Books of Canonical Scripture, that whoſoever were the Writers thereof, he believeth them utterly not to have erred. But as touching all other Mens Writings, were they never ſo holy Men, or learned, he doth not believe them therefore, becauſe they ſo ſay, but in that reſpect as they do agree with the Canonical Scripture, which cannot err.

Item, He alledged the place of the Canon Law; Clem. de Pœnit. & remiſ. C. Abuſionibus. Wherein he proved, That theſe Pardon-ſellers, in their ſetting forth of the Pope's Indulgences, ought to go no further by the Law, than is enjoined them within the Letters of their Commiſſion.

And in the latter part of his Anſwer, thus Luther writeth to the Reader, Let Opinions (ſaith he) remain Opinions, ſo they be not Yokes to the Chriſtians. Let us not make Mens Opinions equal with the Articles of Faith, and to the decrees of Chriſt and Paul. Moreover, I am aſhamed (quoth he) to hear the common ſaying of theſe Divine School-Doctors, who holding one thing in the Schools, and thinking otherwiſe in their own Judgment, thus are wont ſecretly among themſelves, and with their privy Friends talking together, to ſay, Thus do we hold, and thus would we ſay being in the Schools: but yet (be it ſpoken here amongſt us) it cannot be ſo proved by the Holy Scriptures, &c. Ex Paralip. Abb. Uſperg.

Eckius writeth againſt Luther.

Next after this Silveſter, ſtept forth Eckius, and impugned the concluſions of Luther. Againſt whom encountred D. Andreas Bedenſtein, Archdeacon of Wittenberg, making his Apology in defence of Luther.

D. Andreas anſwereth for Luther.

Then was Martin Luther cited the 7th of Auguſt, by one Hieronymus Biſhop of Aſcalon, to appear at Rome. About which time Thomas Cajetanus, Cardinal, the Pope's Legat, was then Lieger at the City of Auguſta, who before had been ſent down in Commiſſion, with certain Mandates of Pope Leo, unto that City. The Univerſity of Wittenberg underſtanding of Luther's Citation, eſtſoons directed up their Letters, with their publick Seal, to the Pope in Luther's behalf. Alſo another Letter they ſent to Carolus Militius the Pop's Chamberlain, being a German born. Furthermore, good Frederick ceaſed not for his part to ſollicit the matter with his Letters and earneſt Suit with Cardinal Cajetanus, that the Cauſe of Luther might be freed from Rome, and removed to Auguſta, in the hearing of the Cardinal. Cajetanus, at the ſuit of the Duke, wrote unto the Pope: from whom he received this anſwer again the three and twentieth of the foreſaid month of Auguſt, 'That he had cited Luther to appear perſonally before him at Rome, by Hieronymus Biſhop of Aſcalon Auditor of the Chamber: which Biſhop diligently had done 'that was commanded him: but Luther, abuſing and contemning the gentleneſs offered, did not only refuſe to 'come, but alſo became more bold and ſtubborn continuing, or rather increaſing in his former Hereſy, as by his 'Writings did appear. Wherefore he would, that the Cardinal ſhould cite and call up the ſaid Luther to appear at 'the City of Auguſta before him; adjoining withal, the 'aid of the Princes of Germany, and of the Emperor, if 'need required: ſo that when the ſaid Luther ſhould appear, he ſhould lay hand upon him, and commit him to 'ſafe cuſtody, and after he ſhould be brought up to Rome: 'and if he perceived him to come to any knowledg or 'amendment of his fault, he ſhould releaſe him and reſtore him to the Church again, or elſe he ſhould be interdict, with all other his Adherents, Abetters, and Maintainers, of whatſoever ſtate or condition they were, whether they were Dukes, Marqueſſes, Earls, Barons, &c. 'Againſt all which Perſons and Degrees, he willed him to 'extend the ſame Curſe and Malediction (only the Perſon 'of the Emperor excepted) interdicting, by the Cenſure 'of the Church, all ſuch Lands, Lordſhips, Towns, Tenements, and Villages, as ſhould miniſter any harbour 'to the ſaid Luther, and were not obedient unto the 'See of Rome. 'Contrariwiſe, to all ſuch as ſhewed themſelves obedient, he ſhould promiſe full remiſſion of all their 'Sins.

The Univerſity of Wittenberg writeth to the Pope for Luther.

The Popes charge to his Legat againſt M. Luther.

Likewiſe the Pope directeth other Letters alſo the ſame time to Duke Frederick, complaining with many grievous words againſt Luther.

The Cardinal thus being charged with Injunctions from Rome, according to his Commiſſion, ſendeth with all ſpeed for Luther to appear at Auguſta before him.

Luther obedient to the Sea of Rome

About the beginning of October, Martin Luther yielding his obedience to the Church of Rome, came to Auguſta at the Cardinal's ſending, (at the charges of the noble Prince Elector, and alſo with his Letters of Commendation) where he remained three days before he came to his ſpeech; for ſo it was provided by his Friends, that he ſhould not enter talk with the Cardinal, before a ſufficient Warrant or ſafe Conduct was obtained of the Emperor Maximilian. Which being obtained, eſtſoons he entred, offering himſelf to the ſpeech of the Cardinal, and was there received of the Cardinal very gently: who, according to the Pope's commandment, propounded unto Martin Luther three things; or, as Sleiden ſaith, but two; to wit;

Luther appeareth before Cardinal Cajetanus.

Three things put to Luther by the Pope.

1. That he ſhould repent and revoke his Errors.
2. That he ſhould promiſe, from that time forward, to refrain from the ſame.
3. That he ſhould refrain from all things that might by any means trouble the Church.

When Martin Luther required to be informed wherein he had erred, the Legat brought forth the Extravagants of Clement, which beginneth, Unigenitus, &c. becauſe that he, contrary to that Canon, had held and taught in his fifty eight Propoſitions, That the Merits of Chriſt, are not the treaſure of Indulgences or Pardons. Secondly, The Cardinal, contrary to the ſeventh Propoſition of Luther, affirmed, that Faith is not neceſſary to him that receiveth the Sacrament.

Furthermore, another day, in the preſence of four of the Emperors Council, having there a Notary, and Witneſſes preſent, Luther proteſted for himſelf, and perſonally, in this manner following.

Proteſtation of M. Luther before the Cardinal.

'Imprimis, I Martin Luther, a Frier Auguſtine, proteſt, 'That I do reverence and follow the Church of Rome in all 'my ſayings and doings, preſent, paſt, and to come; and 'if any thing hath been, or ſhall be ſaid by me to the contrary, I count it, and will that it be counted and taken as 'as tho it had never been ſpoken. But becauſe the Cardinal hath acquired at the commandment of the Pope, three 'things of me to be obſerved:

1. 'That I ſhould return again to the knowledg of my 'ſelf.
2. 'That I ſhould beware of falling into the ſame again 'hereafter.
3. 'That I ſhould promiſe to abſtain from all things 'which might diſquiet the Church of God.

The anſwer of Luther, with his Propoſitions to the Cardinal.

'I proteſt here this day, That whatſoever I have ſaid, 'ſeemeth unto me to be ſound, true, and Catholick; yet 'for the further proof thereof, I do offer my ſelf perſonally, either here or elſewhere, publickly to give a reaſon of 'my ſayings. And if this pleaſe not the Legat, I am 'ready alſo in writing to anſwer his Objections, if he 'have any againſt me: and touching theſe things, to hear 'the ſentence and judgment of the Univerſities of the 'Empire, Baſil, Friburg, and Louvane. Hereof when they had received an anſwer in writing, they departed.

After this, Luther by and by prepareth an anſwer to the Legat, teaching, that the Merits of Chriſt are not committed unto Men: that the Pope's Voice is to be heard when he ſpeaketh agreeable to the Scriptures: that the Pope may err, that he ought to be reprehended, Acts 15. Moreover he ſhewed, that in the matter of Faith, not only the General Council, but alſo every faithful Chriſtian is above the Pope, if he leane to better Authority and Reaſon: that the Extravagant containeth untruths: that it is an infallible verity, that none is juſt: that it is neceſſary, for him that cometh to the receiving of the Sacrament, to believe: that Faith in the abſolution and remiſſion of ſins, is neceſſary: that he ought not, nor might not decline from the verity of the Scripture: that he ſought nothing but the light of the Truth, &c.

K. Hen. 8.

But the Cardinal would hear no Scriptures, he disputed without Scriptures; he devised Glosses and Expositions of his own head: and by Distinctions (wherewith the Divinity of the Thomists is full) like a very Proteus he avoided all things. After this, Luther being commanded to come no more in the presence of the Legate, except he would recant, notwithstanding abode there still, and would not depart. Then the Cardinal sent for Joannes Stupitius, Vicar of the Augustines, and moved him earnestly to bring Luther to recant of his own accord. Luther tarried the next day also, and nothing was said unto him. The third day moreover he tarried, and delivered up his mind in Writing: in which, first, 'he thanked him 'for his courtesie and great kindness, which he per-'ceived by the words of Stupitius, toward him; and 'therefore was the more ready to gratifie him in whatso-'ever kind of Office he could do him service: confessing 'moreover, that where he had been somewhat sharp and 'eager against the Pope's Dignity, that was not so much 'of his own mind, as it was to be ascribed to the impor-'tunity of certain which gave him occasion. Notwith-'standing, as he acknowledged his excess therein, so he 'was ready to shew more moderation in that behalf here-'after, and also promised to make amends for the same 'unto the Bishop, and that in the Pulpit, if he pleased. 'And as touching the matter of Pardons, he promised also 'to proceed no further in any mention thereof, so that his 'Adversaries likewise were bound to keep silence. But 'whereas he was prest to retract his sentence before defend-'ed; forasmuch as he had said nothing but with a good 'Conscience, and which was agreeable to the firm Te-'stimonies of the Scripture: therefore he humbly desired 'the determination thereof to be referred to the Bishop of 'Rome: for nothing could be more grateful to him, than 'to hear the voice of the Church speaking, &c.

Proteus was a Monster noted in Poets, which could change himself into all Forms and likenesses.

Luthers answer to the Cardinal.

Who doth not see by this so humble and honest submission of Luther, but that if the Bishop of Rome would have been answered with any Reason, or contented with sufficient mean, he had never been touched any further of Luther? but the secret purpose of God had a further work herein to do: for the time now was come, when God thought good that pride should have a fall. Thus while the unmeasurable desire of that Bishop sought more than enough (like to Esops Dog coveting to have both flesh and shadow) not only he missed that he gaped for, but also lost that which he had.

Pride will have a fall.

Esops Dog, All covet, all lose.

But to the purpose of our matter again: this Writing Luther delivered to the Cardinal, the third day after he was commanded out of his sight. Which Letter or Writing the Cardinal did little regard. When Luther saw that he would give no answer nor countenance to the Letter; yet notwithstanding he remained after that the fourth day, and nothing was answered: the fifth day likewise was passed with silence, and nothing done. At the length, by the counsel of his Friends, and especially because the Cardinal had said before, that he had a Commandment to imprison Luther and John Stupitius the Vicar; after that he had made and set up his Appeal where it might be seen and read, he departed, thinking that he had shewed such dangerous obedience long enough. Luther, a beholder and a doer of these things, recordeth the same, and sheweth the cause why he submitted himself to the Church of Rome: declaring also, that even those things which are most truly spoken, yet ought to be maintained and defended with humility and fear. Some things he suppresseth and concealeth, which he supposeth the Reader to understand, not without grief and sorrow. At length he protesteth, that he reverenceth and followeth the Church of Rome in all things, and that he setteth himself only against those, which, under the name of the Church of Rome, go about to set forth and commend Babylon unto us.

Luther obedient to the See of Rome.

Thus have you heard, how that Luther, being rejected from the speech and sight of Cajetanus the Cardinal, after six days waiting, departed by the advice of his Friends, and returned into Wittenberg; leaving a Letter in writing to be given to the Cardinal: wherein he declared sufficiently, first his Obedience in his coming, the Reasons of his Doctrine, his submission reasonable to the See of Rome, his long waiting after he was repelled from the Cardinal's speech, the Charges of the Duke, and finally, the cause of his departing. Besides this Letter to the Cardinal, he left also an Appellation to the Bishop of Rome, from the Cardinal, which he caused to be affixed before his Departure.

Another Letter of Luther to the Lega

Luther appealeth from the Cardinal to the Pope.

After that Luther was thus departed and returned again into his Countery, Cajetanus writeth to Duke Frederick a sharp and a biting Letter: in which first he signifieth unto him his gentle entertainment and good-will shewed to reduce Luther from his Error. Secondly he complaineth of the sudden departing of him, and of Stupitius. Thirdly, he declareth the pernicious danger of Luther's Doctrine against the Church of Rome. Fourthly, he exhorteth the Duke, that as he tendreth his own Honour and Safety, and regardeth the Favour of the high Bishop, he will send him up to Rome, or expel him out of his Dominions, forasmuch as such a Pestilence breeding, as that was, could not, neither ought by any means long so to be suffered.

The Letters of Cajetanus to Duke Frederick.

To this Letter of the Cardinal the Duke answereth again at large, purging both Luther and himself; Luther, in that he following his Conscience, grounded upon the Word of God, would not revoke that for an Error, which could be proved no Error: and himself he excuseth thus; that where it is required of him to banish him his Countrey, or to send him up to Rome, it would be little honesty for him so to do, and less Conscience, unless he knew just cause why he should so do: Which if the Cardinal would or could declare unto him, there should lack nothing in him which were the part of a Christian Prince to do. And therefore he desired him to be a means unto the Bishop of Rome, that Innocency and Truth be not oppressed before the crime or error be lawfully convicted.

The Dukes answer to the Cardinal for Luther.

This done, the Duke sendeth the Letter of the Cardinal unto Martin Luther. Who answered again to the Prince; shewing first how he came obediently unto Cajetanus with the Emperor's Warrant; and what talk there was between them: how Cajetanus prest him, against his Conscience and manifest Truth, to revoke these Errors. First, that the Merits of Christ's passion were not the Treasure of the Pope's Pardons. Secondly, that Faith was necessary in receiving the Sacraments. Albeit in the first he was content to yield to the Cardinal; in the second, because it touched a great part of our Salvation, he could not with a safe Conscience relent, but desired to be taught by the Scripture: or at least, that the matter might be brought into open Disputation in some free place of Germany, where the Truth might be discussed and judged of learned Men. The Cardinal not pleased with this, in great Anger cast out many menacing words, neither would admit him any more to his presence or speech: whereas he yet notwithstanding persisting in his Obedience to the Church of Rome, gave attendance, waiting upon the Cardinal's pleasure a sufficient time.

Luthers Letters to Duke Frederick.

At last, when no Answer would come; after he had waited the space of five or six days, to his great detriment, and greater danger, by the perswasion of his Friends he departed. Whereat if the Cardinal were displeased, he had most cause to blame himself. And now whereas the Cardinal threatneth me (saith he) not to let the Action fall, but that the process thereof shall be pursued at Rome, unless I either come and present my self, or else be banished your Dominions; I am not so much grieved for mine own cause, as that you should sustain for my matter any danger or peril. And therefore seeing there is no place nor Countrey which can keep me from the Malice of my Adversaries, I am willing to depart hence, and to forsake my Countrey, whithersoever it shall please the Lord to lead me: thanking God, which hath counted me worthy to suffer thus much for the Glory of Christ's Name.

Luther ready to be exiled.

Here (no doubt) was the cause of Luther in great danger, being now brought to this strait, that both Luther was ready to fly the Countrey, and the Duke again was as much afraid to keep him; had not the marvellous Providence of God (who had this matter in guiding) here provided a Remedy where the power of man did fail, by stirring up the whole University of Wittenberg; who seeing the cause of Truth thus to decline, with a full and general consent addressed their Letters unto the Prince, in defence of Luther and of his Cause; making their humble suite unto him, that he of his Princely Honour would not suffer Innocency, and the simplicity of Truth, so clear as is the Scripture, to be foiled and oppressed by meer Violence of certain malignant Flatterers about the Pope; but that that the Error firſt may be ſhewed and convicted, before the Party be pronounced guilty.

By the occaſion of theſe Letters, the Duke began more ſeriouſly in his mind to conſider the cauſe of Luther, and to read his Works, and alſo to hearken to his Sermons. Whereby (through God's holy working) he grew to knowledg and ſtrength, perceiving in Luther's quarrel more than he did before. This was about the beginning of December, Anno 1518.

New Indulgences ſet forth by Pope Leo. The Doctrine of the Church of Rome.

As this paſt on, Pope Leo playing the Lyon at Rome, in the mean time, in the Month of November, to ſtabliſh his ſeat againſt this defection which he feared to come, had ſent forth new Indulgences into Germany, and all quarters abroad, with a new Edict, wherein he declared this to be the Catholick Doctrine of the holy Mother-Church of Rome, Prince of all other Churches, that Biſhops of Rome, which are Succeſſors of Peter, and Vicars of Chriſt, have this Power and Authority given to releaſe and diſpenſe, alſo to grant Indulgences available both for the living and for the dead, lying in the pains of Purgatory: and this Doctrine he charged to be received of all faithful Chriſtian [illegible] under pain of the great Curſe, and utter ſeparation from the holy Church.

The Pope's Ale-ſtake to pick mens Purſes.

This Popiſh Decree and Indulgence, as a new Merchandiſe or Ale-ſtake to get Money, being ſet up in all quarters of Chriſtendom for the holy Fathers Advantage, came alſo to be received in Germany about the Month of December. Luther in the mean time, hearing how they were about in Rome to proceed and pronounce againſt him, provided a certain Appellation conceived in due form of Law, wherein he appealeth from the Pope to the general Council.

Luther appealeth from the Pope, to a General Council.

When Pope Leo perceived, that neither his Pardons would proſper to his mind, nor that Luther could be brought to Rome; to aſſay how to come to his purpoſe by crafty Allurements, he ſent his Chamberlain Carolus Miltitius above-mentioned, (which was a German) into Saxony to Duke Frederick, with a golden Roſe, after the uſual Ceremony accuſtomed every year to be preſented to him, with ſecret Letters alſo to certain Noble Men of the Duke's Council, to ſollicit the Pope's cauſe, and to remove the Duke's mind, if it might be, from Luther.

But before Miltitius approached into Germany, Maximilian the Emperor deceaſed in the Month of January, Anno 1519. At what time two there were which ſtood for the Election; to wit, Francis the French King, and Charles King of Spain, which was alſo Duke of Auſtria, and Duke of Burgondy. To make this matter ſhort, through the means of Frederick Prince Elector (who having the offer of the preferments refuſed the ſame) the Election fell to Carolus, called Carolus the fifth, ſirnamed Prudence: which was about the end of Auguſt.

The Diſputation at Lypſia.

In the Month of June before there was a publick Diſputation ordained at Lypſia, which is a City in Miſnia, under the Dominion of George Duke of Saxony, Uncle to Duke Frederick. This Diſputation firſt began through the occaſion of Joannes Eckius a Frier, and Andreas Caroloſtadius, Doctor of Wittenberg. This Eckius had impugned certain Propoſitions or Concluſions of Martin Luther, which he had written the year before touching the Pope's Pardons. Againſt him Caroloſtadius wrote in defence of Luther. Eckius again to anſwer Caroloſtadius, ſet forth an Apology. Which Apology Caroloſtadius confuted by writing. Upon this began the Diſputation, with ſafe conduct granted by Duke George, to all and ſingular perſons that would reſort to the ſame. To this Diſputation came alſo Martin Luther, with Philip Melanchon, who not paſt a year before was newly come to Wittenberg; Luther not thinking then to diſpute any matter, becauſe of his Appellation above-mentioned, but only to hear what there was ſaid and done.

Eckius againſt Caroloſtadius.

Luther cometh to the Diſputation. Melanchon newly come to Wittenberg.

The queſtion of Free-Will. αὐθαίρετον.

First, before the entry into the Diſputation it was agreed, that the Acts ſhould be penned by Notaries, and after divulged abroad. But Eckius afterward went back from that; pretending, that the penning of the Notaries ſhould be an hinderance and a ſtay unto them, whereby the heat of them in their Reaſoning ſhould the more languiſh, and their Vehemency abate. But Caroloſtadius without Notaries would not diſpute. The ſum of their Diſputations was reduced to certain Concluſions. Amongſt which, firſt came in queſtion to diſpute of Free-Will, which the Greeks call αὐθαίρετον: That is, Whether a man have of himſelf any Election or purpoſe to do that which is good: or (to uſe the terms of the School) Whether a Man of congruence may deſerve Grace, doing that which in him doth lie? Herein when the Queſtion was to be diſcuſſed, what the Will of man may do of it ſelf, without Grace: they through heat of contention (as the manner is) fell into other By-matters and Ambages little or nothing appertaining to that which Caroloſtadius propoſed. Eckius affirmed, that the pure ſtrength to do good is not in man's Will, but is given of God to man, to take Intereſt and Increaſe of man again, which firſt he ſeemed do deny. Then being asked of Caroloſtadius, whether the whole and full good work that is in man proceedeth of God? To this he anſwered, the whole good work, but not wholly: granting, that the Will is moved of God; but to conſent, to be in man's power. Againſt this Reaſoned Caroloſtadius, alledging certain places of Auſtin, and namely of St. Paul, which ſaith, That God worketh in us both to will, and to perform. And this ſentence of Caroloſtadius ſeemed to overcome. Eckius for his aſſertion inferred certain Eſcripts out of Bernard, which ſeemed little to the purpoſe. And thus was a whole Week loſt about this contentious and ſophiſtical Altercation between Eckius and Caroloſtadius.

God giveth his grace to [illegible] Totum. Totaliter.

Luther (as was ſaid) came, not thinking at all to diſpute; but having true liberty granted by the Duke, and under the Pope's Authority, was provoked, and forced againſt his Will, to diſpute with Eckius. The matter of their Controverſie was about the Authority of the Biſhop of Rome. Here is firſt to be admoniſhed, that Luther before had ſet forth in Writing this Doctrine: That they which do attribute the Preheminency to the Church of Rome, have no Foundation for them, but out of the Pope's Decrees, ſet forth not much paſt four hundred years heretofore: which Decrees he affirmed to be quite contrary to all ancient Hiſtories, above a thouſand years paſt, contrary alſo to the holy Scriptures, and unto the Nicene Council.

Luther diſputeth with Eckius.

Luther's Aſſertion againſt the Pope's Supremacy.

Againſt this Aſſertion Eckius ſet up a contrary Concluſion; ſaying, That they which hold that the Supremacy and Preheminency of the Church of Rome above all other Churches was not before the time of Pope Silveſter the firſt, do err, foraſmuch as they, which ſucceeded in the See and Faith of Peter, were always received for the Succeſſors of Peter, and Vicars of Chriſt in Earth.

The Aſſertion of Eckius for the Supremacy.

This being the laſt of all the other Themes of Eckius, yet thought he chiefly to begin with this againſt Luther, to bring him into more diſpleaſure with the Biſhop of Rome: wherein Luther himſelf much refuſed to diſpute, alledging that matter to be more odious than neceſſary for that preſent time; and that alſo for the Biſhop of Rome's ſake, he had much rather keep ſilence in the ſame. Whereunto if he muſt needs be urged, he would the Fault ſhould be underſtood of all men to be where it was, namely in his Adverſaries which provoked him thereunto, and not in himſelf. Eckius again clearing himſelf, tranſlateth all the Fault unto Luther, which firſt in his Treatiſe de Indulgentiis Papæ defended, that before Pope Silveſter's time the Church of Rome had no place of Majority or Preheminence above other Churches: and alſo before the Cardinal Cajetanus affirmed, That Pope Pelagianus wreſted many places of the Scripture out of their proper ſenſe, unto his own affection and purpoſe. Wherefore the Fault hereof (ſaid he) to him rather is to be imputed, which miniſtred the firſt Occaſion.

Diſputation between Luther and Eckius, about the Popes Supremacy.

Thus Luther being egged and conſtrained to diſpute, whether he would or no, the Queſtion began to be propounded touching the Supremacy of the Biſhop of Rome; which Supremacy Eckius did contend to be founded and grounded upon God's Law. Maſter Luther on the other ſide denied not the Supremacy of the Biſhop of Rome above other Churches, nor yet denied the ſame moreover to be Univerſal over all Churches; but only he affirmed it not to be inſtituted by God's Law. Upon this Queſtion the Diſputation did continue the ſpace of five days. During all which ſeaſon, Eckius very unhoneſtly and uncourteouſly demeaned himſelf, ſtudying by all means how to bring his Adverſary into the hatred of the Auditors, and into danger of the Pope. The reaſons of Eckius were theſe: Foraſmuch as the Church, being a civil Body, cannot be without an an head, therefore as it ſtandeth with God's Law, that other civil Regiments ſhould not be deſtitute of their head; ſo is it by God's Law requiſite, that the Pope ſhould be the Head of the Univerſal Church of Chriſt. To this Martin Luther anſwered, That he confeſſeth and granteth the Church not to be headleſs ſo long as Chriſt is alive, who is the only Head of the Church; neither doth the Church require any other Head beſide him, foraſmuch as it is a ſpiritual Kingdom, and not earthly: And he alledged for him the place of Coloſſ. 1. Eckius again produceth certain places out of Hierome and Cyprian, which made very little to prove the Primacy of the Pope to hold by God's Law. As touching the Teſtimony of Bernard, neither was the Authority of that Author of any great force in this caſe, neither was the place alledged ſo greatly to the purpoſe.

Hierome. Cyprian. Bernard.

Then came he to the place of St. Matthew, Tu es Petrus, &c. Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church, &c. To this was anſwered, 'That this 'was a Confeſſion of Faith; and that Peter there repre-'ſenteth the perſon of the whole Univerſal Church, as Au-'ſtin doth expound it. Alſo that Chriſt in that place 'meaneth himſelf to be the Rock, as is manifeſt to 'collect both by his Words, and order of the Sentence, 'and many other conjectures. Likewiſe to the place of St. John, Paſce oves meas, Feed my Sheep. (Which words Eckius alledged to be ſpoken properly and peculiarly to Peter alone.) Martin anſwered, 'That af-'ter theſe Words ſpoken, equal Authority was given 'to all the Apoſtles, where Chriſt ſaith unto them; 'Receive ye the Holy Ghoſt: whoſe ſins ſoever ye remit, 'they are remitted, &c. By theſe Words (ſaith he) 'Chriſt, aſſigning to them their Office, doth teach 'what is to feed, and what he ought to be that feedeth. After this, Eckius came to the Authority of the Council of Conſtance; alledging this amongſt other Articles: De neceſſitate ſalutis eſt credere Romanum Pontificem Oecumenicum eſſe: That is, That it ſtandeth upon neceſſity of our Salvation, to believe the Biſhop of Rome to be Supreme Head of the Church: Alledging moreover, that in the ſame Council it was debated and diſcuſſed, that the general Council could not err. Whereunto Martin Luther again did anſwer diſcreetly, ſaying, 'That all the 'Articles which John Hus did hold in that Council, were 'not condemned for heretical, with much other matter 'more. Again, of what Authority that Council of Con-'ſtance is to be eſteemed, that he left to other men's 'Judgments. This is moſt certain (ſaid he) that no 'Council hath ſuch Authority to make new Articles of 'Faith. Here Martin Luther began to be cried out of by Eckius and his Complices, for diminiſhing the Authority of general Councils; although indeed he meant nothing leſs, but ever laboured to confirm the authority of the ſame. Yet was he called Heretick and Sciſmatick, and one of the Bohemes Faction, with many other terms moe of reproachful contumely. Eckius then granted the authority of the Apoſtles to be equal: and yet not to follow thereby, the authority of all Biſhops therefore to be equal; For between Apoſtleſhip and Miniſtry (ſaith he) there is great difference. To conclude, Eckius in no caſe could abide that any creature ſhould decline from any word or ſentence of the Pope's Decrees, or the Conſtitutions of the Forefathers. To this again Luther anſwered, grounding himſelf upon the place ad Gal. 2. where St. Paul ſpeaking of the principal Apoſtles, ſaith; 'And of them which ſeemed to 'be great, what they were before it maketh no matter to 'me, for God accepteth no Man's perſon: Nevertheleſs, 'that they were of ſome Reputation did avail nothing at all, &c. Eckius to this ſaid, 'That as touching the Authori-'ty of the Apoſtles, they were all choſen of Chriſt, but 'were ordained Biſhops of St. Peter. And whereas Luther brought in the Conſtitution of the Decree, which ſaith; Ne Romanus Pontifex Univerſalis Epiſcopus nominetur, &c. Yea, let not the Biſhop of Rome be called Univerſal Biſhop, &c. To this Eckius anſwered on this ſort: That the Biſhop of Rome ought not to be called Univerſal Biſhop; yet he may be called (ſaith he) Biſhop of the Univerſal Church. And thus much touching the Queſtion of the Pope's Supremacy.

Mat. 16. Luther anſwereth to the place of St. Matth. John 21. The anſwer of Luther to the place of St. John, Paſce oves meas. The authority of the Council of Conſtance. Here is good Doctrine of Eckius, I trow.

From this matter they entred next to Purgatory, wherein Eckius kept no order; for when they ſhould have diſputed what power the Pope hath in Purgatory; Eckius turneth the ſcope of the Queſtion, and proveth that there is Purgatory; and alledgeth for him the place of Maccabees. Luther, leaning upon the Judgment of Hierome, affirmeth the Book of Maccabees not to be Canonical. Eckius again replieth, the Book of Maccabees to be of no leſs authority than the Goſpels. Alſo he alledgeth the place, 1 Cor. 3. He ſhall be ſaved, yet ſo as it were by fire. Moreover, he inferred the place of Matthew 5. Agree thou with thine Adverſary while thou art in the way with him, leſt he commit thee to Priſon, from whence thou ſhalt not eſcape till thou haſt paid the uttermoſt Farthing, &c. To this he added alſo the place of the Pſalms, We have paſſed through the Fire and Water, &c. How theſe places be wreſted to Purgatory, let the Reader diſcern and judge. Then was inferred the Queſtion of Indulgences, whereof Eckius ſeemed to make but a toy, and a matter of nothing, and ſo paſſed it over.

K. Hen. 8. 2 Mac. 12. 1 Cor. 3. Matth. 5. Pſal. 65. The queſtion of Indulgences.

At laſt they came to the Queſtion of Penance: touching which matter, the Reaſons of Eckius digreſſed much from the purpoſe, which went about to prove, that there be ſome manner of Pains of ſatisfaction: which thing Luther did never deny: but that for every particular Offence ſuch particular Penance is exacted of God's Juſtice upon the repentant Sinner, as is in man's power to remit or releaſe as pleaſeth him; ſuch Penance neither Luther, nor any true Chriſtian did admit.

The queſtion of Penance.

And thus have ye the chief Effect of this Diſputation between Luther and Eckius at Lypſia, which was in the Month of July, Anno 1519.

About the beginning of the ſame year 1519, Vlderick Zuinglius came firſt to Zurick, and there began to teach. Who in the ſixteenth Article in his Book of Articles, recordeth, that Luther and he both at one time, one not knowing nor hearing of another, began to write againſt the Pope's Pardons and Indulgences. Albeit, if the time be rightly counted, I ſuppoſe we ſhall find that Luther began a year or two before Zuinglius. Notwithſtanding, this doth Sleidan teſtifie, that in this preſent year, when Sampſon a Franciſcan came with the Pope's Pardons to Zurick, Vlderick Zuinglius did withſtand him, and declared his Chaffer and Pardons to be but a vain ſeducing of the people, to inveigle away their Money. Ex Sleid. lib. 1.

When Ulericus Zuinglius came to Zurick. Luther and Zuinglius began both at one time to write againſt the Pope.

The next year enſuing, which was 1520, the Friers and Doctors of Louvaine, and alſo of Colen, condemned the Books of Luther as heretical. Againſt whom Luther again effectually defended himſelf, and charged them with obſtinate Violence and malicious Impiety. After this, within few days flaſhed out from Rome the Thunderbolt of Pope Leo againſt the ſaid Luther, notwithſtanding, he ſo humbly and obediently before had reverenced both the perſon of the Pope, and agniſed the authority of his See, and had alſo dedicated unto him the Book intituled, De Chriſtiana libertate: that is, Of Chriſtian Liberty. In which Book theſe two points principally he diſcuſſeth and proveth; Luther's Books condemned at Louvaine and Colen. Pope Leo's Bull againſt Luther. Lutherus de Libertate Chriſtiana.

1. That a Chriſtian man is free, and Lord over all things, and ſubject to none.
2. That a Chriſtian man is a diligent Underling and Servant of all men, and to every man ſubject.

Moreover, in the ſame year he ſet out a Defence of all his Articles, which the Pope's Bull had before condemned.

Another Book alſo he wrote to the Nobility of Germany, in the which Book he impugneth and ſhaketh the three principal Walls of the Papiſts: the firſt whereof is this:

Lutherus ad Nobilitatem Germaniæ. Three Walls or Bulwarks of the Papiſts.

1. Whereas the Papiſts ſay, that no temporal or prophane Magiſtrate hath any power upon the Spiritualty, but theſe have power over the other.
2. Where any place of Scripture, being in controverſie, is to be decided, they ſay, No man may expound the Scripture, or be Judg thereof, but only the Pope.
3. When any Council is brought againſt them, they ſay, That no man hath authority to call a Council, but only the Pope.

Moreover, in the foreſaid Book divers other matters he handleth and diſcourſeth: That the Pope can ſtop no free Council; alſo what things ought to be handled in Councils: That the pride of the Pope is not to be ſuffered. What money goeth out of Germany yearly to the Pope, amounting to the Sum of three Millions of Florences. The true meaning of this Verſe he expoundeth: Tu ſupplex ora: tu protege, tuq; labora. Wherein the three Eſtates, with their Offices and Duties are described: to wit, the Minister, the Magistrate, and the Subjects. Furthermore, in the said Book he proveth and discusseth, that the Emperor is not under the Pope; but contrariwise, that the Donation of Constantine is not true, but forged: That Priests may have Wives; That the Voices of the People ought not to be separate from the Election of Ecclesiastical persons: That interdicting and suspending of Matrimony at certain times is brought in of Avarice: what is the right use of Excommunication: That there ought to be fewer Holy-days: That Liberty ought not to be restrained in Meats: That wilful Poverty and begging ought to be abolished: What damage and inconvenience have grown by the Council of Constance: and what misfortunes Sigismund the Emperor sustained, for not keeping faith and promise with John Hus and Hierome: That Hereticks should be convinced not by Fire and Faggot, but by evidence of Scripture, and God's Word: How Schools and Universities ought to be reformed: What is to be said and judged of the Popes Decretals: That the first teaching of Children ought to begin with the Gospels. Item, he writeth in the same Book against [illegible] among the Germans: Also against their [illegible] &c.

[illegible] moreover followed not long after the Coronation of the new Emperor Carolus Quintus, which was in the Month of October, at Aquisgrave.

After which Coronation, being solemnized about the Month of November, Pope Leo sent again to Duke Frederick two Cardinals his Legats, of whom the one was Hieronimus Leander, who after a few words of high Commendation first premised to the Duke touching his noble Progeny, and other his famous Vertues, they made two Requests unto him in the Pope's Name; first, That he would cause all Books of Luther to be burned. Secondly, that he would either see the said Luther there to be executed, or else would make him sure, and send him up to Rome unto the Pope's presence.

Duke Frederick's Answer to the Popes Legates, for Luther.

These two Requests seemed very strange unto the Duke: who, answering again to the Cardinals, said, That he being long absent from thence, about other publick Affairs, could not tell what there was done, neither did he communicate with the doings of Luther. Notwithstanding this he heard, that Eckius was a great Perturber not only of Luther, but of divers other learned and good men of his University. As for himself, he was always ready to do his duty; first, in sending Luther to Cajetanus the Cardinal at the City of August, and afterward, at the Pope's Commandment, would have sent him away out of his Dominion, had not Meltitius the Pope's own Chamberlain given contrary Counsel to retain him still in his own Countrey, fearing lest that in other Countreys he might do more harm, where he was less known: and so now also was as ready to do his duty, wheresoever Right and Equity did so require. But for so much as in this Cause he seeth much Hatred and Violence shewed on the one part, and no Error yet convicted on the other part, but that it had rather the approbation of divers well learned and sound Men of judgment; and forsomuch as also the cause of Luther was not yet heard before the Emperor, therefore he desired the said Legats to be a mean to the Pope's Holiness, that certain learned Persons of gravity and upright Judgment might be assigned to have the hearing and determination of this matter, and that his Error might first be known, before he were made an Heretick, or his Books burned. Which being done, when he should see his Error by manifest and sound Testimonies of Scripture revinced, Luther should find no favour at his Hands; otherwise he trusted that the Pope's Holiness would exact no such thing of him, which he might not with Equity and Honour of his Place and Estate, reasonably perform, &c.

The Popes Legats burn the Books of Luther.

Then the Cardinals, declaring to the Duke again, that they could no otherwise do, but according to the Form of their Prescript-commission, they must proceed, took the Books of Luther, and shortly after set fire upon them, and openly burnt them. Luther hearing this, in like manner called all the multitude of Students and learned Men in Wittenberg, and there taking the Pope's Decrees, and the Bull lately sent down against him, openly and solemnly, accompanied with a great number of people following him, set them likewise on fire, and burnt them, which was the tenth of December.

Luther burneth the Popes Decrees and Bulls at Wittenberg.

A little before these things thus passed between the Pope and Martin Luther, the Emperor had commanded and ordained a Sitting or Assembly of the States of all the Empire to be holden at the City of Wormes, against the sixth day of January next ensuing. In the which Assembly, through the means of Duke Frederick, the Emperor gave forth, That he would have the Cause of Luther there brought before him, and so it was. For at what time the Assembly was commenced in the City of Wormes, the day and month aforesaid, which was the sixth of January: Afterward upon the sixth day of March following, the Emperor, through the Instigation of Duke Frederick, directed his Letters unto Luther; signifying that for so much as he had set forth certain Books, he therefore, by the advice of his Peers and Princes about him, had ordained to have the Cause brought before him in his own hearing, and therefore he granted him Licence to come, and return home again. And that he might safely, and quietly so do, and be thereof assured, he promised unto him by publick Faith and Credit, in the name of the whole Empire, his Pasport and safe Conduct; as by the Instrument which he sent unto him, he might more fully be ascertained. Wherefore without all doubt or distrust, he willed him eftsoons to make his repair unto him, and to be there present the one and twentieth day after the receit thereof: and because he should not misdoubt any fraud or Injury herein, he assured unto him his Warrant and Promise.

K. Henry 8.

The Emperors Letter with his safe Conduct sent to Mr. Luther.

Martin Luther being thus provided for his safe Conduct by the Emperor, after he had been first accursed at Rome upon Maunday Thursday, by the Popes censure, shortly after Easter speedeth his Journey toward the Emperor at Wormes. Where the said Luther appearing before the Emperor and all the States of Germany, how constantly he stuck to the truth, and defended himself, and answered his Adversaries, and what Adversaries he had, here followeth in full History, with the acts and doings which there hapned, according as in our former Edition partly was before described.

M. Luther accursed at Rome by the Pope.

The Acts and Doings of Martin Luther before the Emperor at the City of Wormes.

IN the year of our Salvation 1521, about seventeen days after Easter, Martin Luther entred into Wormes, being sent for by the Emperor Charles the fifth of that name, &c. who, the first year of his Empire made an Assembly of Princes in the foresaid City. And whereas Master Luther had published three years before certain Propositions to be disputed in the Town of Wittenberg in Saxony, against the Tyranny of the Pope (which notwithstanding were torn in pieces, condemned and burned by the Papists, and yet by no manifest Scriptures, nor probable reason convinced) the matter began to grow to a tumult and uprore; and yet Luther maintained all this while openly his cause against the Clergy. Whereupon it seemed good to certain, that Luther should be called, assigning unto him an Herauld of Arms, with a Letter of safe Conduct by the Emperor and Princes. Being sent for, he came, and was brought to the Knights of the Rhodes place, where he was lodged, well entertained, and visited of many Earls, Barons, Knights of the Order, Gentlemen, Priests, and the Commonalty, who frequented his Lodging until night.

Luther is sent for to Wormes.

To conclude, he came, contrary to the expectation of many, as well Adversaries as other. For albeit he was sent for by the Emperor's Messenger, and had Letters of safe Conduct; yet for that a few days before his access his Books were condemned by publick Proclamation, it was much doubted of by many that he would not come: and the rather, for that his Friends deliberated together in a Village nigh hand, called Oppenhime (where Luther was first advertised of these occurrents) and many perswaded him not to adventure himself to such a present danger, considering how these Beginnings answered not the Faith of Promise made. Who when he had heard their whole perswasion and advice, he answered in this wise: As touching me, since I am sent for, I am resolved and certainly determined to enter Wormes, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ; yea, altho I knew there were so many Devils to resist me, as there are Tiles to cover the Houses in Wormes.

Constancy in Luther.

The fourth day after his repair, a Gentleman named Ulrick of Pappenheim, Lieutenant-General of the Men at Arms of the Empire, was commanded by the Emperor before dinner to repair to Luther, and to enjoin him at four of the Clock in the afternoon to appear before the Imperial Majesty, the Princes Electors, Dukes, and other Estates of the Empire, to understand the cause of his sending for: Whereunto he willingly agreed, as his duty was.

And after four a clock, Ulrick of Pappenheim, and Caspar Sturm the Emperor's Herauld (who conducted Master Luther from Wittenberg to Worms) came for Luther, and accompanied him through the Garden of the Knights of the Rhodes place, to the Earl Palatine's Palace: and lest the People that thronged in should molest him, he was led by secret stairs to the place where he was appointed to have audience. Yet many, who perceived the pretence, violently rushed in, and were resisted, albeit in vain: many ascended the Galleries, because they desired to behold Luther.

Luther is brought before the Emperor.

John Eckius propoundeth against M. Luther.

Thus standing before the Emperor, the Electors, Dukes, Earls, and all the Estates of the Empire assembled there, he was first advertised by Ulrick of Pappenheim to keep silence, until such time as he was required to speak. Then John Eckius above mentioned, who then was the Bishop of Triers general Official, with a loud and intelligible voice, first in Latin, then in Dutch, according to the Emperor's Commandment, said and proponed this sentence in manner as ensueth, or like in effect:

Martin Luther, the sacred and invincible Imperial Majesty hath enjoined, by the consent of all the Estates of the Holy Empire, that thou shouldest be appealed before the Throne of his Majesty, to the end I might demand of thee these two Points.

First, Whether thou confess these Books here (for he shewed a heap of Luther's Books written in the Latin and Dutch tongues) and which are in all places dispersed, entitled with thy name, be thine, and thou dost affirm them to be thine, or not?

Secondly, Whether thou wilt recant and revoke them, and all that is contained in them, or rather meanest to stand to that thou hast written?

Then, before Luther prepared to answer, Mr. Jerome Scurffius, a Lawyer of Wittenberg, required that the Titles of the Books should be read. Forthwith the foresaid Eckius named certain of the Books, and those principally which were imprinted at Basil; among the which he nominated his Commentaries upon the Psalter, his Book of Good Works, his Commentary upon the Lord's Prayer, and divers other which were not contentious.

M. Luthers answer.

After this, Luther answered thus in Latin and in Dutch.

'Two things are proponed unto me by the Imperial 'Majesty: First, Whether I will avouch for mine all those 'Books that bear my name. Secondly, Whether I will 'maintain or revoke any thing that hitherto I have devised and published. Whereunto I will answer as briefly 'as I can.

Luther refuseth to revoke his Books.

'In the first, I can do none other than recognize those 'Books to be mine which lastly were named, and certainly 'I will never recant any clause thereof. In the second, to 'declare whether I will wholly defend, or call back any 'thing comprised in them: forasmuch as there be questi-'ons of Faith, and the Salvation of the Soul, (and this 'concerneth the Word of God, which is the greatest and 'most excellent matter that can be in Heaven or Earth, 'and the which we ought duly evermore to reverence) this 'might be accounted in me a rashness of Judgment, and 'even a most dangerous attempt, if I should pronounce 'any thing before I were better advised; considering I 'might recite something less than the matter importeth, 'and more than the truth requireth, if I did not premedi-'tate that which I would speak. The which two things 'well considered, doth set before mine eyes this sentence 'of our Lord Jesus Christ: wherein it is said, Whosoever 'shall deny me before Men, I will deny him before my Fa-'ther. I require then for this cause, and humbly beseech 'the Imperial Majesty to grant me liberty and leisure to de-'liberate; so that I may satisfy the Interrogation made 'unto me, without prejudice of the Word of God, and 'peril of mine own Soul.

Luther desireth respite to answer.

Whereupon the Princes began to deliberate. This done, Eckius the Prolocutor pronounced what was their resolution, saying, 'Albeit, Mr. Luther, thou hast sufficiently 'understood by the Emperor's Commandment, the cause 'of thy appearance here, and therefore dost not deserve to 'have any further respit given thee to determine; yet the 'Emperor's Majesty, of his meer clemency, granteth thee 'one day to meditate for thy answer, so that to morrow 'at this instant hour thou shalt repair to exhibit thine O-'pinion, not in writing, but to pronounce the same with 'lively voice. K. Hen. 8.

This done, Luther was led to his lodging by the Herauld. But herein I may not be oblivious, that in the way going to the Emperor, and when he was in the Assembly of Princes, he was exhorted of other to be couragious, and manly to demean himself, and not to fear them that can kill the Body, but not the Soul; but rather to dread him that is able to send both Body and Soul to everlasting Fire.

Luther is exhorted to be constant.

Furthermore, he was encouraged with this sentence; When thou art before Kings, think not what thou shalt speak, for it shall be given to thee in that hour. Mat. 10

The next day, after four a clock, the Herauld came and brought Luther from his lodging, to the Emperor's Court, where he abode till six a clock, for that the Princes were occupied in grave Consultations; abiding there, and being environed with a great number of People, and almost smothered for the preass that was there. Then after, when the Princes were set, and Luther entred, Eckius the Official began to speak in this manner:

Eckius again propoundeth against Luther.

'Yesterday at this hour the Emperor's Majesty assigned 'thee to be here, Mr. Luther, for that thou didst affirm 'those Books that we named yesterday to be thine. 'Further, to the Interrogation by us made, whether thou 'wouldest approve all that is contained in them, or abolish 'and make void any part thereof, thou didst require time 'of deliberation, which was granted, and is now expired; 'albeit thou oughtest not to have opportunity granted to 'deliberate, considering it was not unknown to thee where-'fore we cited thee. And as concerning the matter of 'Faith, every Man ought to be so prepared, that at all 'times, whensoever he shall be required, he may give cer-'tain and constant reason thereof; and thou especially, be-'ing counted a Man of such learning, and so long time 'exercised in Theology. Then go to, answer even now 'to the Emperor's demand, whose bounty thou hast proved 'in giving thee leisure to deliberate; Wilt thou now main-'tain all thy Books which thou hast acknowledged, or re-'voke any part of them, and submit thy self?

The Official made this Interrogation in Latin and in Dutch. Martin Luther answered in Latin and in Dutch in this wise, modestly and lowly, and yet not without some stoutness of stomach, and Christian constancy; so as his Adversaries would gladly have had his courage more humbled and abased, but yet more earnestly desired his recantation; whereof they were in some good hope, when they heard him desire respite of time to make his answer.

His Answer was this.

M. Luther answereth for himself.

MOst magnificent Emperor, and you most noble Princes, and my most gentle Lords, I appear before you here at the hour prescribed unto me yesterday, yielding the obedience which I owe; humbly beseeching, for God's Mercy, your most renowned Majesty, and your Graces and Honours, that ye will minister to me this courtesie, to attend this cause benignly, which is the cause (as I trust) of Justice and Verity. And if by ignorance I have not given unto every one of you your just Titles, or if I have not observed the ceremonies and countenance of the Court, offending against them; it may please you to pardon me of your benignities, as one that only hath frequented Cloisters, and not courtly Civilities. And first, as touching my self, I can affirm or promise no other thing but only this; that I have taught hitherto, in simplicity of mind, that which I have thought to tend to God's Glory, and to the Salvation of Mens Souls.

Luther giveth account of his Faith before the Emperor.

Now as concerning the two Articles objected by your most excellent Majesty, Whether I would acknowledg those Books which were named, and be published in my name; and whether I would maintain and not revoke them: I have given a resolute answer to the first, in the which I persist,

K. Hen. 8. and shall persevere for evermore, that these Books be mine, and published by me in my name; unless it hath since happened, by some fraudulent misdealing of mine Enemies, there be any thing foisted into them, or corruptly corrected. For I will acknowledg nothing but that I have written, and that which I have written I will not deny.

He divideth his works into sorts.

Now to answer to the second Article; I beseech your most excellent Majesty, and your Graces, to vouchsafe to give ear. All my Books are not of one sort; there be some in which I have so simply and soundly declared and opened the Religion of Christian Faith, and of good Works, that my very Enemies are compelled to confess them to be profitable and worthy to be read of all Christians. And truly the Pope's Bull (how cruel and tyrannous soever it be) judgeth certain of my Books inculpable: albeit the same, with severe sentence, thundreth against me, and with monstrous cruelty condemneth my Books: which Books if I should revoke, I might worthily be thought to neglect and transgress the office of a true Christian, and to be one alone that repugneth the publick confession of all [illegible]. There is another sort of my Books which contain Invectives against the Papacy, and others of the Popes Doctrine which have with their pestiferous Doctrine, and pernicious Examples, corrupted the whole state of our Christian ye. Neither can any deny or dissemble this, (whereunto universal experience and common complaint of all bear witness) that the Consciences of all faithful Men be most miserably intrapped, vexed, and cruelly tormented by the Pope's Laws and Doctrines of Men. Also that the Goods and Substance of Christian People are devoured, especially in this noble and famous Country of Germany, and yet without order, and in most detestable manner are suffered still to be devoured, without all measure, by incredible tyranny: notwithstanding that they themselves have ordained to the contrary in their own proper Laws, as in the Distin. 9. & 25. Quest. 1, & 2. where they themselves have decreed, That all such Laws of Popes which be repugnant to the Doctrine of the Gospel, and the Opinions of the Ancient Fathers, are to be judged erroneous, and reproved.

The Pope proceedeth contrary to his own Doctrine.

If then I should revoke these, I can do no other but add more force to their tyranny, and open not only Windows but wide Gates to their Impiety, which is like to extend more wide, and more licentiously than ever it durst heretofore. And by the testimony of this my retraction, their insolent Kingdom shall be made more licencious, and less subject to punishment, intolerable to the common people, and also more confirmed and established, especially if this be bruited, that I Luther have done this by the Authority of your most excellent Majesty, and the sacred Roman Empire. O Lord, what a cover or shadow shall I be then to cloak their naughtiness and tyranny!

The rest, or third sort of my Books, are such as I have written against certain and private singular persons, to wit, against such as with tooth and nail labour to maintain the Romish Tyranny, and to deface the true Doctrine and Religion which I have taught and professed. As touching these, I plainly confess, I have been more vehement than my Religion and Profession required. For I make my self no Saint, and I dispute not of my Life, but of the Doctrine of Christ.

And these I cannot without prejudice call back. For by this Recantation it will come to pass, that tyranny and impiety shall reign, supported by my means, and so shall they exercise cruelty against God's people more violently and ragingly than before.

He requireth to be instructed, if he have erred.

Nevertheless, for that I am a Man, and not God, I can none otherwise enterprise to defend my Books, than did my very Lord Jesus Christ defend his Doctrine. Who being examined of his Learning before Annas, and having received a buffet of the Minister, said, If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the Evil.

John 18.

If the Lord (who was perfect and could not err) refused not to have testimony given against his Doctrine, yea of a most vile Servant; how much the more than I, that am but vile corruption, and can of my self do nothing but err, ought earnestly to see and require if any will bear witness against my Doctrine.

Therefore I require, for God's Mercy, your most excellent Majesty, your Graces and right honourable Lordships, or whatsoever he be of high or low degree, here to lay in his Testimony, to convict my Errors, and confute me by the Scriptures, either out of the Prophets, or the Apostles, and I will be most ready, if I be so instructed, to revoke any manner of Error: yea, and will be the first that shall consume mine own Books and burn them.

Dissentions and Divisions follow the Doctrine of Christ, not for any cause in the Doctrine, but in the Adversary.

I suppose hereby it may appear, that I have perpended and well weighed before the perils and dangers, the divisions and dissentions which have risen throughout the whole World by reason of my Doctrine, whereof I was vehemently and sharply yesterday admonished. Concerning which divisions of Men's Minds what other Men do judg I know not; as touching my self, I conceive no greater delectation in any thing, than when I behold discords and dissentions stirred up for the Word of God: For such is the course and proceeding of the Gospel: Jesus Christ saith, I came not to send Peace but a Sword; I came to set a Man at variance with his Father. Matth. 10.

And further, we must think, that our God is marvellous and terrible in his Counsels; lest perhaps that which we endeavour with earnest study to atchieve and bring to pass (if we begin first with condemning of his Word) the same redound again to an huge Sea of Evil: and lest the new reign of this young and bounteous Prince Charles (in whom, next after God, we all conceive singular hope) be lamentable, unfortunate, and miserably begun.

I could exemplify this with authorities of the Scriptures more effectually, as by Pharaoh, the King of Babylon, and the Kings of Israel, who then most obscured the bright Sun of their Glory, and procured their own ruin, when by sage Counsels they attempted to pacify and establish their Governments and Realms, and not by God's Counsels: for it is he that intrappeth the wily in their Wilfulness, and subverteth Mountains before they be aware. Wherefore it is good, and God's Work, to dread the Lord.

Mans counsel, without Gods Word and his fear, is unfortunate.

I speak not this, supposing that so politick and prudent heads have need of my Doctrine and Admonition, but because I would not omit to profit my Country, and offer my Duty or Service, that may tend to the advancement of the same. And thus I humbly commend me to your most excellent Majesty, and your honourable Lordships; beseeching you that I may not incur your displeasures, neither be contemned of you through the pursuit of my Adversaries. I have spoken.

Luther provoked again to submit him

These words pronounced, then Eckius, the Emperor's Prolocutor, with a stern countenance began, and said, That Luther had not answered to any purpose; neither behoved it him to call in question things in time past, concluded and defined by General Councils: and therefore they required of him a plain and direct answer, whether he would revoke or no?

Luthers absolute answer.

Then Luther: Considering (said he) your Soveraign Majesty, and your Honours, require a plain answer; this I say and profess as resolutely as I may, without doubting or sophistication, that if I be not convinced by testimonies of the Scriptures, and by probable reasons (for I believe not the Pope, neither his General Councils, which have erred many times, and have been contrary to themselves) my Conscience is so bound and captived in these Scriptures and Word of God which I have alledged, that I will not, nor may may not revoke any manner of thing; considering it is not godly or lawful to do any thing against Conscience. Hereupon I stand and rest: I have not what else to say. God have mercy upon me.

The Princes consulted together upon this answer given by Luther: And when they had diligently examined the same, the Prolocutor began to repel him thus:

Eckius again replieth.

Martin (said he) thou hast more immodestly answered than beseemed thy Person, and also little to the purpose. Thou divideth thy Books in three sorts, in such order as all that thou hast said maketh nothing to the Interrogation proponed: and therefore if thou hadst revoked those wherein the greatest part of thine Errors is contained, the Emperor's Majesty, and the noble clemency of others would have suffered the rest that be found to sustain no injury. But thou dost revive, and bringest to light again all that the General Council of Constance hath condemned, the which was assembled of all the Nation of Germany, and now dost require to be convinced with Scriptures; wherein thou erreth greatly. For what availeth it to re[illegible] dispu-diſputation of things ſo long time paſt condemned by the Church and Councils, unleſs it ſhould be neceſſary to give a reaſon to every Man of every thing that is concluded? Now where it is ſo, that this ſhould be permitted to every one that gainſtandeth the determination of the Church and Councils, and that he may once get this advantage, to be convinced by the Scriptures, we ſhall have nothing certain and eſtabliſhed in Chriſtendom.

And this is the cauſe wherefore the Emperor's Majeſty requireth of thee a ſimple anſwer, either negative or affirmative, whether thou mindeſt to defend all thy Works as Chriſtian, or no?

Then Luther, turning to the Emperor and the Nobles, beſought them not to force or compel him to yield againſt his Conſcience, confirmed with the Holy Scriptures, without manifeſt Arguments alledged to the contrary by his Adverſaries.

I have declared and rendred (ſaid he) mine unſwer ſimply and directly, neither have I any more to ſay, unleſs mine Adverſaries, with true and ſufficient probations grounded upon the Scripture, can reduce and reſolve my mind, and refel mine errors which they lay to my charge. I am tied (as I ſaid) by the Scriptures; neither may I, or can with a ſafe Conſcience aſſent unto them. For as touching General Councils, with whoſe authority only they preſs me, I am able to prove, that they have both erred, and have defined many things contrary to themſelves; and therefore the authority of them, he ſaid, not to be ſufficient, for the which he ſhould call back thoſe things, the verity whereof ſtandeth ſo firm and manifeſt in the Holy Scripture, that neither of him it ought to be required, neither could he ſo do without impiety.

General Councils have erred, and have been contrary to themſelves.

Whereunto the Official again anſwered, denying that any Man could prove the Councils to have erred. But Luther alledged that he could, and promiſed to prove it; and now night approaching, the Lords roſe and departed. And after Luther had taken his leave of the Emperor, divers Spaniards ſcorned and ſcoffed the good Man in the way going toward his lodging, hollowing and whooping after him a long while.

Upon the Friday following, when the Princes Electors, Dukes, and other Eſtates were aſſembled, the Emperor ſent to the whole Body of the Council a certain Letter, containing in effect as followeth.

The Emperor's Letter.

The Emperors Letter againſt Luther.

OUr Predeceſſors, who truly were Chriſtian Princes, were obedient to the Romiſh Church, which Martin Luther preſently impugneth. And therefore in as much as he is not determined to call back his Errors in any one Point, we cannot, without great infamy and ſtain of honour, degenerate from the examples of our Elders, but will maintain the ancient Faith, and give aid to the See of Rome. And further, we be reſolved to purſue Martin Luther and his Adherents, by Excommunication, and by other means that may be deviſed, to extinguiſh his Doctrine. Nevertheleſs we will not violate our Faith, which we have promiſed him, but mean to give order for his ſafe return to the place whence he came.

Conſultation upon the Emperors Letter.

THe Princes Electors, Dukes, and other Eſtates of the Empire, ſat and conſulted about this ſentence, on Friday all the afternoon, and Saturday the whole day, ſo that Luther had yet no anſwer of the Emperor.

Great reſort to M. Luther

During this time, divers Princes, Earls, Barons, Knights of the Order, Gentlemen, Prieſts, Monks, with other the Laity and common ſort viſited him. All theſe were preſent at all hours in the Emperor's Court, and could not be ſatisfied with the ſight of him. Alſo there were Bills ſet up, ſome againſt Luther, and ſome, as it ſeemed, with him. Notwithſtanding many ſuppoſed, and eſpecially ſuch as well conceived the matter, that this was ſubtilly done by his Enemies, that thereby occaſion might be offered to infringe the ſafe conduct given him. The which the Roman Embaſſadors with all diligence endeavoured to bring to paſs.

The Monday following, before ſupper, the Archbiſhop of Triers advertiſed Luther, that on Wedneſday next he ſhould appear before him at nine of the clock before dinner, and aſſigned him the place. On St. George's day, a certain Chaplain of the Archbiſhop of Triers, about ſupper-time, came to Luther, by the commandment of the Biſhop, ſignifying, that at that hour and place preſcribed, he muſt the morrow after have acceſs to his Maſter. K. Hen. 8.

Luther appeareth before the Archbiſhop of Triers.

The morrow after St. George's day, Luther obeying the Archbiſhop's Commandment, entred his Palace, being accompanied thither with his ſaid Chaplain, and one of the Emperor's Heralds, and ſuch as came in his company out of Saxony to Worms, with other his chief Friends: whereas Dr. Veus, the Marqueſs of Bades Chaplain, began to declare and proteſt in the preſence of the Archbiſhop of Triers, Joachim Marqueſs of Brandenburg, George Duke of Saxony, the Biſhops of Ausburg and Brandeburg, the Earl George, John Bock of Strausburg, Verdebeymer and Peutiger, Doctors, that Luther was not called to be conferred with, or to diſputation, but only that the Princes had procured licenſe of the Emperor's Majeſty, through Chriſtian charity, to have liberty granted unto them to exhort Luther benignly and brotherly.

Dr. Veus his Oration to M. Luther.

For the Authority of Councils.

He ſaid further, That albeit the Councils had ordained divers things, yet they had not determined contrary matters. And albeit they had greatly erred, yet their Authority was not therefore abaſed, or at the leaſt not ſo erred, that it was lawful for every Man to impugn their Opinions: inferring moreover many things of Zacheus and the Centurion: Alſo of the Traditions, and of Conſtitutions, and of Ceremonies ordained of Men, affirming that all theſe were eſtabliſhed to repreſs Vices, according to the quality of times; and that the Church could not be deſtitute of humane Conſtitutions. It is true (ſaid he) that by the Fruits the Tree may be known; yet of theſe Laws and Decrees of Men, many good Fruits have proceeded: and St. Martin, St. Nicholas, and many other Saints have been preſent at the Councils.

This he ſpake of Luthers words, who denied any good fruits to come of their Laws.

Moreover, that Luther's Book would breed great tumult, and incredible troubles; and that he abuſed the common ſort with his Book of Chriſtian liberty, encouraging them to ſhake off their Yoke, and to confirm in them a diſobedience; that the World now was at another ſtay, than when the Believers were all of one Heart and Soul, and therefore it was requiſite and behoveful to have Laws. It was to be conſidered, (ſaid he) albeit he had written many good things, and (no doubt) of a good mind, as de triplice Juſtitia, and other matters, yet how the Devil now by crafty means goeth about to bring to paſs, that all his Works for ever ſhould be condemned. For by theſe Books which he wrote laſt, Men (ſaid he) would judg and eſteem him, as the Tree is known, not by the Bloſſom, but by the Fruit. Pſal. 90.

Here he added ſomething of the noon Devil, and of the Spirit coming in the dark, and of the flying Arrow. All his Oration was exhortatory, full of rhethorical places of honeſty, of utility of Laws, of the dangers of Conſcience, and of the common and particular wealth; repeating oft this ſentence in the Proem, Middle, and Epilogue of his Oration: that this admonition was given him of a ſingular good will, and great clemency. In the ſhutting up of his Oration he added menacings, ſaying, That if he would abide in his purpoſed intent, the Emperor would proceed further, and baniſh him from the Empire; perſwading him deliberately to ponder, and to adviſe theſe and other things.

M. Luther anſwereth to Veus.

Martin Luther anſwered: Moſt noble Princes, and my moſt gracious Lords, I render moſt humble thanks for your benignities and ſingular good Wills, whence proceedeth this admonition: For I know my ſelf to be ſafe, as by no means I can deſerve to be admoniſhed of ſo mighty Eſtates.

The Council of Conſtance condemned the Word of God.

Then he frankly pronounced, that he had not reproved all Councils, but only the Council of Conſtance; and for this principal cauſe, for that the ſame had condemned the Word of God, which appeared in the condemnation of this Article proponed by John Hus: The Church of Chriſt is the communion of the Predeſtinate. It is evident (ſaid he) that the Council of Conſtance aboliſhed this Article, and conſequently the Article of our Faith; I believe the Holy Church Univerſal: and ſaid, that he was ready to ſpend Life and Blood, ſo he were not compelled to revoke the manifeſt Word of God; for in defence thereof we ought rather to obey God than Men: And that in this he could not avoid the ſcandal or offence of Faith; for there be two manner of Offences, to wit, of Charity, and of Faith. The ſlander of Charity conſiſteth in manners and in life: the offences of Faith

and

K.Hen. 8. and Doctrine conſiſt in the Word of God; and as touching this laſt, he could eſcape it no manner of ways; for it lay not in his power to make Chriſt not to be a ſtone of offence. If Chriſt's Sheep were fed with pure Paſture of the Goſpel; if the Faith of Chriſt were ſincerely preached, and if there were good Eccleſiaſtical Magiſtrates who duly would execute their office; we ſhould not need (ſaith he) to charge the Church with Mens traditions. Further, he knew well we ought to obey the Magiſtrates and higher Powers, how unjuſtly and ravenſly ſoever they lived: We ought alſo to be obedient to their Laws and Judgment: all which he had taught (ſaid he) in all his Works; adding further, that he was ready to obey them in all Points, ſo that they inforced him not to deny the Word of God.

The Princes conſulted about Martin Luther.

Theſe words finiſhed, Luther was bid ſtand aſide, and the Princes conſulted what anſwer they might give him. This done, they called him into a Parlour, whereas the foreſaid Doctor Peus repeated his former matters, admonithing Luther to ſubmit his Writings to the Emperor, and to the Princes Judgment.

[illegible] anſwered humbly and modeſtly, that he could not, neither would permit that Men ſhould ſay he would ſhun the Judgment of the Emperor, Princes, and ſuperior Powers of the Empire. So far was it off, that he would refuſe to ſtand to their trial, that he was contented to ſuffer his Writings to be diſcuſſed, conſidered, and judged of the ſimpleſt, ſo that it were done with the authority of the Word of God, and the holy Scripture: and that the Word of God made ſo much for him, and was ſo manifeſt unto him, that he could not give place, unleſs they could confound his Doctrine by the Word of God. This leſſon (ſaid he) he learned of S. Auguſtine, who writeth, That he gave this honour only to thoſe Books which are called Canonical, that he believed the ſame only to be true. As touching other Doctors, albeit in holineſs and excellency of Learning they paſſed, yet he would not credit them further than they agreed with the Touchſtone of God's Word. Further (ſaid he) St. Paul giveth us a leſſen, writing to the Theſſalonians, Prove all things, follow that is good. And to the Galathians, Tho an Angel ſhould deſcend from Heaven, if he preach any other Doctrine, let him be accurſed, and therefore not to be believed.

The Word of God only true.

1 Theſſ. 5.
Gal. 5.

Finally, he meekly beſought them not to urge his Conſcience, captived in the bands of the Word of God and holy Scripture, to deny the ſame excellent Word. And thus he commended his cauſe and himſelf to them, and ſpecially to the Emperor's Majeſty, requiring their favour, that he might not be compelled to do any thing, in this matter, againſt his Conſcience: in all other cauſes he would ſubmit himſelf with all kind of obedience and due ſubjection.

As Luther had thus ended his talk, Joachimus Elector, Marqueſs of Brandenburg, demanded if his meaning was thus, that he would not yield, unleſs he were convinced by the Scripture? Yea truly, right noble Lord (quoth Luther) or elſe by ancient and evident reaſons. And ſo the Aſſembly brake, and the Princes repaired to the Emperor's Court.

After their departure the Archbiſhop of Triers, accompanied with a few of his Familiars, namely John Eckius his Official, and Cochleus, commanded Luther to repair into his Parlour. With Luther was Hieronymus Scurffius, and Nicholas Ambſdorff, for his aſſiſtants. Then the Official began to frame an Argument, like a Sophiſt and Canoniſt, defending the Pope's cauſe: that for the moſt part at all times Holy Scriptures have engendred Errors, as the Error of Helvidius the Heretick, out of that place in the Goſpel, where it is expreſſed; Joſeph knew not his Wife till ſhe was delivered of her firſt Child. Further, he went about to overthrow this Propoſition, that the Catholick Church is the Communion of Saints.

Falſe Arguments for the Pope.

Mat. 1.

Martin Luther and Hierom Scurffe, reproved (but modeſtly) theſe Follies, and other vain and ridiculous matters, which Eckius brought forth as things not ſerving to the purpoſe. Sometime Cochleus would come in with his five Eggs, and laboured to perſwade Luther to deſiſt from his purpoſe, and utterly to refrain thenceforth to write or teach, and ſo they departed.

About evening the Archbiſhop of Triers advertiſed Luther by Ambſdorff, that the Emperor's Promiſe made unto him was prolonged two days, and in the mean ſeaſon he would confer with him the next day, and for that cauſe he would ſend Peutinger, and the Doctor of Bade, which was Vœus, the morrow after to him, and he himſelf would alſo talk with him.

Sollicitation to cauſe Luther to yield.

The Friday after, which was St. Mark's day, Peutinger, and the Doctor of Bade, travelled in the forenoon to perſwade Luther, ſimply and abſolutely to ſubmit the judgment of his Writings to the Emperor and Empire. He anſwered, he would do it, and ſubmit any thing they would have him, ſo they grounded upon authority of holy Scripture; otherwiſe he would not conſent to do any thing; for God ſaid by his Prophet, (ſaith he) Truſt ye not in Princes, nor in the Children of Men, in whom there is no health. Alſo, Curſed be he that truſteth in Man. And ſeeing that they did urge him more vehemently, he anſwered; We ought to yield no more to the judgment of Men, than the Word of God doth ſuffer. So they departed, and prayed him to adviſe for better anſwer; and ſaid, they would return after dinner.

Luthers condition.

And after dinner they returned, exhorting him as before, but in vain. They prayed him, that at the leaſt he would ſubmit his writing to the judgment of the next General Council. Luther agreed thereunto, but with this condition, that they themſelves ſhould preſent the Articles collected out of his Books to be ſubmitted to the Council in ſuch ſort, as notwithſtanding the ſentence awarded by the Council, ſhould be authoriſed by the Scripture, and confirmed with the teſtimonies of the ſame.

Falſe witneſs.

They then leaving Luther, departed, and reported to the Archbiſhop of Triers, that he had promiſed to ſubmit his Writings in certain Articles to the next Council, and in the mean ſpace he would keep ſilence; which Luther never thought: who neither with admonitions, nor yet menaces, could be induced to deny or ſubmit his Books to the judgments of Men (he had ſo fortified his cauſe with clear and manifeſt authorities of the Scripture) unleſs they could prove by ſacred Scripture, and apparent reaſons to the contrary.

The providence of God.

It chanced then by the ſpecial Grace of God, that the Archbiſhop of Triers ſent for Luther, thinking preſently to hear him. And when he perceived otherwiſe then Peutinger and the Doctor of Bade had told him, he ſaid that he would for no good, but that he had heard himſelf ſpeak: for elſe he was even now going to the Emperor, to declare what the Doctors had reported.

Familiar talk between the Archbiſhop and Luther.

Then the Archbiſhop entreated Luther, and conferred with him very gently, firſt removing ſuch as were preſent, as well of the one ſide as of the other. In this Conference Luther concealed nothing from the Archbiſhop; affirming, that it was dangerous to ſubmit a matter of ſo great importance to them, who, after they had called him under ſafe conduct, attempting him with new Commandments, had condemned his Opinion, and approved the Pope's Bull.

Moreover the Archbiſhop, bidding a Friend of his draw nigh, required Luther to declare what Remedy might be miniſtred to help this. Luther anſwered; That there was no better Remedy than ſuch as Gamaliel alledged in the fifth Chapter of the Acts of the Apoſtles, as witneſſeth St. Luke, ſaying; If this counſel, or this work, proceed of Men, it ſhall come to nought: but if it be of God, ye cannot deſtroy it. And ſo he deſired that the Emperor might be advertiſed to write the ſame to the Pope, that he knew certainly if this his enterpriſe proceeded not of God, it would be aboliſhed within three, yea within two years.

Luthers prophecy out of Gamaliel. Acts 5.

Luthers conſtancy.

The Archbiſhop enquired of him what he would do, if certain Articles were taken out of his Books, to be ſubmitted to the General Council. Luther anſwered, ſo that they be not thoſe which the Council of Conſtance condemned. The Archbiſhop ſaid, I fear they will be the very ſame: but what then? Luther replied, I will not, nor I cannot hold my peace of ſuch, for I am ſure by their Decrees the Word of God was condemned: therefore I will rather loſe head and life, then abandon the manifeſt Word of my Lord God.

Then the Archbiſhop, ſeeing Luther would in no wiſe give over the Word of God to the judgment of Men, gently bad Luther farewel; who at that inſtant prayed the Archbiſhop to intreat the Emperor's Majeſty to grant him gracious leave to depart. He anſwered he would take order for him, and ſpeedily advertiſe him of the Emperor's pleaſure.

Within a ſmall while after, John Eckius the Archbiſhops Official, in the preſence of the Emperor's Secretary, who had been Maximilian's Chancellor, ſaid unto Luther in his lodging, by the commandment of the Emperor: that ſince he had been admoniſhed diverſly of the Imperial Majeſty, the Electors, Princes, and Eſtates of the Empire, and that notwithſtanding he would not return to unity and concord, concord, it remained that the Emperor, as Advocate of the Catholick Faith, should proceed further: and it was the Emperor's Ordinance, that he should within 21 days return boldly under safe conduct, and be safely guarded to the place whence he came; so that in the mean while he stirred no Commotion among the people in his journey, either in conference, or by preaching.

Luther hearing this, answered very modestly, and christianly; Even as it hath pleased God, so is it come to pass, the name of the Lord be blessed. He said further, he thanked most humbly the Emperor's Majesty, and all the Princes and Estates of the Empire, that they had given to him benign and gracious audience, and granted him safe conduct to come and return. Finally he said, he desired none other of them, than a reformation according to the sacred Word of God, and consonancy of holy Scriptures, which effectually in his heart he desired: otherwise he was prest to suffer all chances for the Imperial Majesty, as life, and death, goods, fame, and reproach; reserving nothing to himself, but the only Word of God, which he would constantly confess to the latter end: humbly recommending him to the Emperor's Majesty, and to all the Princes and other Estates of the sacred Empire.

Luther's departure from Worms.

The morrow after, which was April 26, after he had taken his leave of such as supported him, and other his benevolent Friends that oftentimes visited him, and had broken his fast, at ten of the clock he departed from Worms, accompanied with such as repaired thither with him; having space of time limited unto him (as is said) for 21 days, and no more. The Emperor's Herauld Casper Sturm followed and overtook him at Oppenheim, being commanded by the Emperor to conduct him safely home.

The usual Prayer of Martin Luther.

CONfirm (O God) in us that thou hast wrought, and perfect the Work that thou hast begun in us, to thy Glory: So be it.

Ex histor. Philip. Melanct. Ex Sleidano. Ex Parali. Abb. Ursperg. Et ex Casp. Peucero.

Luther in his journey writeth to the Emperor and Nobles of Germany.

Martin Luther thus being dismissed of the Emperor, according to the promise of his safe conduct made (as you have heard) departed from Worms towards his Country, April 26, accompanied with the Emperor's Herauld, and the rest of his company, having only one and twenty days to him granted for his return, and no more. In the which mean space of his return he writeth to the Emperor, and to other Nobles of the Empire, repeating briefly to them the whole action and order of things there done, desiring of them their lawful good will and favour, which as he hath always stood in need of, so now he most earnestly craveth, especially in this, that his cause, which is not his, but the cause of the whole Church Universal, may be heard with indifferency and equity, and may be decided by the rule and authority of holy Scripture: signifying moreover, that whensoever they shall please to send for him, he shall be ready at their commandment, at any time or place, upon their promise of safety, to appear, &c.

The Doctors of Paris condemn the Books of Luther.

During the time of these doings, the Doctors and Schoolmen of Paris were not behind with their parts, but to shew their cunning, condemned the Books of Luther, extracting out of the same, especially out of his Book De Captivitate Babylonica, certain Articles as touching the Sacraments, Laws, and Decrees of the Church, equality of Works, Vows, Contrition, Absolution, Satisfaction, Purgatory, Free-will, Privileges of the Holy Church, Councils, Punishment of Hereticks, Philosophy, School-divinity, and other more. Unto whom Philip Melanthon maketh answer, and also Luther himself, albeit pleasantly and jestingly.

Philip Melanthon answereth the Parisians.

It was not long after this, but Charles the new Emperor, to purchase favour with the Pope (because he was not yet confirmed in his Empire) provideth and directeth out a solemn Writ of Outlawry against Luther, and all them that take his part; commanding the said Luther, whersoever he might be gotten, to be apprehended, and his Books burned. By which Decree, proclaimed against Luther, the Emperor procured no small thanks with the Pope; insomuch that the Pope, ceasing to take part with the French King, joined himself wholly to the Emperor. In the mean time Duke Frederick, to give some place for the time to the Emperor's Proclamation, conveyed Luther a little out of sight secretly, by the help of certain Noblemen whom he well knew to be faithful and trusty unto him in that behalf. There Luther being close and out of company, wrote divers Epistles, and certain Books also unto his Friends; among which he dedicated one to his company of Augustine Friers, entituled, De abroganda Missa: Which Friers the same time being encouraged by him, began first to lay down their private Masses. Duke Frederick, fearing lest that would breed some great stir or tumult, caused the censure and judgment of the whole University of Wittenberg to be asked in the matter; committing the doing thereof to four; Justus Jonas, Philip Melancth. Nic. Amhsdorffius, Joh. Dulcius.

M. Luther kept aside for a while.

Luthers Book, De Abroganda Missa, ad August. ences.

The minds of the whole University being searched, it was shewed to the Duke, that he should do well and godly, by the whole advice of the Learned there, to command the use of the Mass to be abrogate through his Dominion: and though it could not be done without tumult, yet that was no let why the course of true Doctrine should be stayed for the multitude, which commonly overcometh the better part. Neither ought such disturbance to be imputed to the Doctrine taught, but to the Adversaries, which willingly and wickedly kick against the Truth, whereof Christ also giveth us forewarning before. For fear of such tumults therefore, we ought not to surcease from that which we know is to be done, but constantly must go forward in defence of God's Truth, howsoever the World doth esteem us, or rage against it. Thus shewed they their Judgment to Duke Frederick.

The Mass laid down first at Wittenberg.

The judgment of the University of Wittenberg against the Mass.

It hapned moreover about the same year and time, that King Henry also, pretending an occasion to impugn the Book De Captivitate Babylonica, wrote against Luther. In which Book,

Anno 1521.

1. He reproveth Luther's Opinion about the Pope's Pardons.
2. He defendeth the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome.
3. He laboureth to refel all his Doctrine of the Sacraments of the Church.

King Henry writeth against Martin Luther.

This Book albeit it carried the King's Name in the Title, yet it was another that ministred the motion, another that framed the stile. But whosoever had the labour of this Book, the King had the thank and also the reward. For consequently upon the same, the Bishop of Rome gave to the said King Henry, for the stile against Luther, the stile and title of Defender of the Christian Faith, and to his Successors for ever.

King Henry made Defender of the Faith by the Pope.

Shortly after this, within the compass of the same year, Pope Leo, after he had warred against the Frenchmen, and had gotten from them, thorow the Emperor's aid, the Cities of Parma, Placentia, and Millan, he sitting at supper, and rejoicing at three great Gifts that God had bestowed upon him: 1. That he, being banished out of his Country, was restored to Florence again with Glory. 2. That he had deserved to be called Apostolick. 3. That he had driven the Frenchmen out of Italy. After he had spoken these words, he was stricken with sudden Fever, and died shortly after, being of the age of 47 years: albeit some suspect that he died of poison. Successor to whom was P. Adrian the 6th, Schoolmaster sometime to Charles the Emperor, who lived not much above one year and a half in his Papacy. During whose small time these three especial things were incident; A great Pestilence in Rome, wherein above 100000 were consumed. The loss of Rhodes by the Turk. And, 3. the capital War which the said P. Adrian, with the Emperor, and the Venetians and the K. of England, did hold against Francis the French King. This P. Adrian was a German born, brought up at Louain, & as in learning he exceeded the common sort of Popes, so in moderation of life and manners he seemed not altogether so intemperate as some other Popes have bin. And yet like a right Pope, nothing degenerating from his See, he was a mortal enemy against Martin Luther, and his Partakers. In his time, shortly after the Council of Worms was broken up, another Meeting or Assembly was appointed by the Emperor at Norenberg, of the Princes, Nobles, and States of Germany, Anno 1522.

Unto this Assembly the said Adrian sent his Letters in manner of a Brief, with an instruction also unto his Legat Cheregatus, to inform him how to proceed, and what causes to alledg against Luther, before the Princes there assembled. His Letter with the Instruction sent, because they are so hypocritically shadowed over with a fair shew and colour

Hen. 8. colour of painted zeal and religion, and bear resemblance of great truth and care of the Church, able to deceive the outward ears of them which are not inwardly in true Religion instructed: I thought therefore to give the Reader a light thereof, to the intent that by the experience of them he may learn hereafter in cases like to be prudent and circumspect, in not believing over-rashly the smooth talk or pretended persuasions of Men, especially in Church-matters, unless they carry with them the simplicity of plain truth, going not upon terms, but grounded upon the Word and revealed Will of God, with particular demonstrations, proving that by the Scripture which they pretend to persuade. First, the Letter of this Pope, conceived and directed against Luther, proceedeth in this effect:

Pope Adrian the Sixth, to the Renowned Princes of Germany, and to the Peers of the Roman Empire, greeting and Apostolical Benediction.

The example of Pope Adrian's Letter sent to the Princes of Germany.

Right Honourable Brethren, and dear Children, greeting and Apostolick benediction. After that we were first promoted through God's Divine Providence) to the Office of the Apostolick, he which hath so advanced us is our witness, how we, both day and night revolving in our minds, did cogitate nothing more than how to satisfy the parts of a good Pastor, in attending the health and cure of the Flock, both universally and singularly committed unto us: so that there is no one particular Sheep through the whole universal Flock so infected, so sick, or so far gone astray, whom our desire is not to recover, to seek out, and to reduce into the Lord's Fold again. And chiefly, from the first beginning of our pastoral function, our care hath always been, as well by our Messengers, as by our daily Letters, how to reclaim the minds of Christian Princes from these intestine Wars and Dissentions among themselves to Peace and Concord; or at least, if they would needs fight, that they would convert their Strength and Armor against the common Enemies of our Faith. And to declare this not only in word, but rather in deed, God doth know with what charges and expences we have burdened our selves, to extend our subsidy and relief to the Souldiers of Rhodes for defence of them-selves, and of the Christian Faith, against the Turkish Tyranny, by whom they were besieged.

If these Pastors care any thing for the Sheep, it is only for the Wooll.

And now to bend our care from these foreign matters, and to consider our inward troubles at home, we hear, to the great grief of our heart, that Martin Luther, a new raiser up of old and damnable Heresies, first after the fatherly Advertisements of the See Apostolick; then after the Sentence also of Condemnation awarded against him, and that by the assent and consent of the best Learned, and of sundry Universities also; and lastly, after the Imperial Decree of our well-beloved Son Charles, Elect Emperor of the Romans, and Catholick King of Spain, being divulged through the whole Nation of Germany; yet hath neither been by Order restrained, nor of himself hath refrained from his madness begun, but daily more and more, forgetting and contemning all Christian Charity and Godliness, ceaseth not to disturb and replenish the World with new Books, fraught full of Errors, Heresies, Contumelies and Sedition, (whether upon his own head, or by the help of other) and to infect the Countrey of Germany, and other Regions about, with this Pestilence; and endeavours still to corrupt simple Souls and manners of Men, with the Poyson of his pestiferous Tongue. And (which is worst of all) hath for his Fautors and Supporters, not of the Vulgar sort only, but also divers Personages of the Nobility; insomuch that they have begun also to invade the Goods of Priests, (which perhaps is the chief ground of this Stir begun) contrary to their Obedience which they owe to Ecclesiastical and Temporal Persons, and now also at last have grown unto Civil War and Dissention among themselves. Which thing how unfortunately it falleth out now, at this present season, especially amongst us Christians, you may soon repute with your selves, and consider. For altho the Apostle hath told us before, That Heresies must needs be, that they which be tried may be made manifest, &c. yet was there never time so inconvenient to raise up Heresies, or so necessary for the repressing thereof when any such are raised, as now: For whereas the Devil, the perpetual Enemy of Mankind, roaring in the shape of a Lion, by the power of the Turks doth continually invade the Flock of Christ; how can we then resist the violent In- vasions of him oppressing us without, so long as we nourish at home the same Devil, under the colour of a wily Dragon, sowing such Heresies, Discords, and Seditions among our selves? And albeit it were in our power easily to vanquish these foreign Adversaries, yet were that but labour lost, serving to no profit, to subdue our Enemies without, and at home with Heresies and Schisms to be divided.

Who soweth these heresies, but he which will not let the Scripture take place?

We remember, before the time of our Papacy, when we were in Spain, many things we heard then of Luther, and of his perverse Doctrine. Which Rumors and Tidings, altho of themselves they were grievous to be heard, yet more grievous they were for this, because they proceeded out of that Countrey, where we our self, after the Flesh, took our first beginning: But yet this comfort we had, supposing that either for the iniquity, or else for the foolishness thereof being so manifest, this Doctrine would not long hold; reputing thus with our self, that such pestiferous (a) Plants, translated from other Countries to Germany, would never grow up to any proof in that ground, which was wont to be a weeder out of all Heresies and Infidelity. But now since this evil Tree (whether by God's judgment correcting the Sins of the People, or by the negligence of such as first should have resisted such beginnings) hath so enlarged and spread his branches so far; you therefore, both Princes and People of Germany, must this consider and provide, lest you, which at the first springing up of this Evil might peradventure be excused, as no doers thereof, now, through this your overmuch sufferance, might be found inexcusable, and seem to consent to that which you do not resist.

(a) He meaneth the Doctrine of John Hus translated into Germany.

Here we omit and pass over, what Enormity, and more than Enormity that is, that such a great and so devout a Nation should by one Friar, (who relinquishing the Catholick Faith and Christian Religion, which he before professed, playeth the Apostata, and hath lied to God) be now seduced from that way, which first (b) Christ our Redeemer and his blessed Apostles have opened unto us; which so many Martyrs, so many holy Fathers, so many great learned Men, and also your own Fore-elders, and old Ancestors have always hitherto walked in; as tho only Luther had all wit and cunning; as tho he only now first had received the Holy-Ghost, (as the Heretick Montanus used to boast of himself) or as tho the Church (from which Christ our Saviour promised himself never to depart) hath erred hitherto always in dark shadows of Ignorance and Perdition, till now it should be illuminate with new resplendent beams of Luther. All which things there is no doubt, but to such as have judgment will seem ridiculous, but yet may be pernicious to simple and ignorant minds; and to other, which being weary of all good Order, do gape still for new Changes, may breed matter and occasion of such Mischiefs, as partly your selves have experience already. And therefore do you not consider (O Princes and People of Germany) that these be but Prefaces and Preambles to those Evils and Mischiefs which Luther, with the Sect of his Lutherans, do intend and purpose hereafter? (c) Do you not see plainly, and perceive with your eyes, that this defending of the verity of the Gospel, first begun by the Lutherans to be pretended, is now manifest to be but an Invention to spoil your Goods, which they have long intended? Or do you think that these Sons of Iniquity do tend to any other thing, than under the name of Liberty to supplant Obedience, and so to open a general (d) License to every Man to do what him listeth? And suppose you that they will any thing regard your Commandments, or esteem (e) your Laws, which

(b) Christ and his Apostles taught us, that we are saved by faith only in the Son of God; the same doth Luther preach, and the Pope denieth. Holy Martyrs and Fathers in the old time minister'd the Communion in both kinds to the people, and taught that Faith was necessary in receiving the Sacrament; the same doth Luther affirm, and the Pope denieth. The old way of the Fathers was this, that they never had any Advocates and Mediators but Christ alone, and that they never sold the merits of Christ's passion for money: In the same way doth Luther now walk, whereas the Pope now hath devised a new way to walk in for Money, with an hundred other new Devices, new Sects, and new Ordinances, which the old Fathers never knew. (c) The Doctrine of Luther hath been preached in Germany above these forty years, and yet is there never a Prince, nor Magistrate, nor Citizen in Germany, God be praised, which by the Doctrine of Luther is worse by one half-penny; whereas by the Pope, good reckoning hath been made, that Germany hath been worse by three millions of Florins by the year. Out of the Territory of the Bishop of Mentz amounteth to the Pope, for the Archbishop's pall, twenty six thousand Florins. In the Council of Basil it was openly declared, that nine millions of Gold were gathered in the time of Pope Martin, and translated to Rome. Now let the Princes of Germany consider this. (d) The preaching of Christian liberty of the Soul breaketh no Civil Order touching the outward obedience of the Body. But the Pope would have the Souls of Men in his bondage, and therefore he cannot abide this inward liberty of the Spirit to be touched, for that were against the Popes Purse and Profit, which were an Heresy intolerable. (e) This is no good consequence; Luther burned the Pope's stinking Decretals, ergo he will not stick also to burn the Books of the Civil Law.

K.Hen.8.

so contemptuously vilipend the holy Canons and Decrees of the Fathers, yea, and the most holy Councils also, (to whose Authority the Emperor's Laws have always given room and place) and not only vilipend them, but also with a diabolical audacity have not feared to rend them in pieces, and set them on a light fire? They which refuse to render due obedience to Priests, to Bishops, yea, to the high Bishop of all, and which daily before your own faces make their Booties of Church-Goods, and of things consecrated to God; think ye that they will refrain their sacrilegious hands from the spoil of Lay-mens Goods? yea, that they will not pluck from you whatsoever they can rap or reave? Finally, to conclude, (f) how can you hope that they will more spare you, or hold their murdering hands from your Throats, which have been so bold to vex, to kill, to slay the Lord's Anointed, which are not to be touched? Nay, think you not contrary, but this miserable Calamity will at length redound upon your Goods, your Houses, Wives, Children, Dominions, Possessions, and these your Temples which you hallow and reverence, except you provide some speedy Remedy against the same.

(f) The persecuting Pagans in the old time did object to the old Fathers of the Primitive Church, the Blasphemies of Thiestes Supper, and of the Incest of Oedipus, the worshipping of an Asses Head. In much like sort doth the Pope here lay unto Luther Riots, Rebellions, and all Mischiefs he can devise, not because they are true, but because he would have the World so to believe.

Wherefore we exhort your Fraternities, Nobilities, and Devotions of all and singular in the Lord, and beseech you for Christian Charity and Religion, (for which Religion your Fore-fathers oft-times have given their blood to uphold and encrease the same) and notwithstanding require you also, in virtue of that obedience (g) which all Christians owe to God, and blessed St. Peter, and to his Vicar here on Earth, that setting aside all other quarrels and dissentions among your selves, you confer your helping hands every Man to quench this publick Fire, and endeavour and study, the best way ye can, how to reduce the said Martin Luther, and all other Fautors of these Tumults and Errors, to better conformity and trade both of Life and Faith. And if they who be infected, shall refuse to hear your Admonitions; yet provide that the other part, which yet remaineth sound, by the same contagion be not corrupted. He to whom all secrets of Men are open, doth know how we both for our Nature, and also for our pastoral Office, whereto we are called, are much more prone to remit than to revenge. But when this pestiferous Canker cannot with supple and gentle Medicines be cured, more sharp Salves must be proved, and fiery Searings. The putrified Members must be cut off from the Body, lest the sound parts also be infected. So God did cast down into Hell the Schismatical Brethren. (h) Dathan and Abiram. And him that would not obey the Authority of the Priest, God commanded to be punished with death. So Peter, Prince of the Apostles, denounced sudden death to Ananias and Saphira, which lied unto God. So the old and godly Emperors commanded (i) Jovinianus and Priscillianus, as Hereticks, to be beheaded. So St. Hierom wisheth Vigilantius, as an Heretick, to be given to the destruction of the flesh, that the Spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord. So also did our Predecessors in the Council of (k) Constance condemn to death John Hus and his Fellow Hierom, which now appeareth to revive again in Luther. The worthy (l) acts and examples of which Forefathers, if you in these doings (seeing otherwise ye cannot) shall imitate, we do not doubt but God's merciful Clemency shall eftsoons relieve his Church; which, being now sore vexed of Infidels, hath her eyes chiefly and principally directed upon you, as being the most puissant and most populous Nation that we have in Christendom.

(g) Obedience to God, and to St. Peter, and to his Vicar, do not well match together by the Scripture; for the obedience to the Creator is one, and the obedience to the Creature is another.

(h) Let the Pope follow the Word of God, as Moses did, be sent of God expressly as Moses was; and then let Luther be punished as Dathan and Abiram were. Again; If the Pope be the successor of Peter, and have his authority, why then doth not the Pope, bearing the keys of Peter, exercise the power of his Spirit upon Luther his great Enemy, as Peter did upon Ananias and Saphira?

(i) If Jovinianus, Priscillianus, and Vigilantius were proved Hereticks, they were proved not only by Canons and Councils, but by Scripture; so was Luther never.

(k) Your Fathers in the Council of Constance did kill the Prophets of God, and you make up their Graves. But thanks be unto God, which hath given such light unto the World, to understand your cruel impiety in killing John Hus, which you thought should never be espied.

(l) You have well imitated your Forefathers already, in burning so many Lutherans; and yet how have you prospered against the Turkish Infidels the space of these forty years?

Wherefore upon the blessing of Almighty God, and of blessed Saint Peter, which here we send unto you, take courage unto you, as well against the false Dragon, as the strong Lion, that both these, that is, as well the inward Heresies, as the foreign Enemies, by you being overcome, you may purchase to your Honours an immortal Victory, both here and in the World to come. This we give you to understand, that whatsoever the Lord hath given us to aid you withal, either in Money or Authority, we will not fail to support you therewith, yea, and to bestow our Life also in this holy quarrel, and for the health of our Sheep to us committed. Other things as touching the matter of Luther, we have committed to this Cheregatus our Legat, whom we have directed purposely for the same unto your Assembly, whom we wish you to credit, as being our trusty Legat.

The false Dragon resembleth the Pope, and the strong Lion the Turk.

The false Dragon here seem this it is time to bestir him.

Datum Rom. apud S. Petrum, sub annulo Piscatoris, die 25. Novemb. Anno 1522, Pontificatus nostri anno primo.

By this Letter above prefixed, thou hast, gentle Reader, to note and understand, what either wily persuasions, or strength of authority could devise against Luther, here not to have lacked. If plausible terms, or glossing sentences, or outward facing and bracing could have served, where no ground of Scripture is brought, this might seem apparently a pithy Epistle. But if a Man should require the particulars or the specialities of this Doctrine which he here reprehendeth, to be examined and tried by God's Word, there is no substance in it, but only words of office, which may seem well to serve for waste Paper. And yet I thought to exhibit the said Letter unto thee, to the intent that the more thou seest Man's strength with all his policy bent against Luther, the more mayest thou consider the Almighty Power of God, in defending the cause of this poor Man against so mighty Enemies.

Now hear further what Instructions the said Pope Adrian sent to his Legat Cheregatus, how and by what reasons to move and inflame the Princes of Germany to the destruction of Luther and his Cause, and yet was not able to bring it to pass.

Instructions given by Pope Adrian to Cheregatus his Legat, touching his proceedings in the Diet of Norimberg, how and by what persuasions to incense the Princes against Luther.

IN primis, you shall declare to them the great grief of our Heart for the prosperity of Luther's Sect, to see the innumerable Souls, redeemed with Christ's Blood, and committed to our pastoral Government, to be turned away from the true Faith and Religion into perdition by this occasion; and that especially in the Nation of Germany, being our native Country, which hath ever been heretofore, till these few years past, most faithful and devout in Religion: and therefore our desire to be the greater that this Pestilence should be stopped betime, lest the same happen to that Countrey of Germany, which happened of late to Bohemia. And us for our part, there shall be no lack to help forward what we may. As likewise we desire them to endeavour themselves to the uttermost of their power, whom these causes ought to move, which here we direct unto you to be declared to them.

Instructions of the Pope against Luther.

First, the (e) honour of God, which before all other things, ought to be preferred, whose honour by these Heresies is greatly defaced, and his Worship not only diminished, but rather wholly corrupted. Also the Charity toward our Neighbour, by which Charity every Man is bound to reduce his Neighbour out of error; otherwise God will require at their hands all such as by their negligence do perish.

The first cause to stir Men against Luther.

(e) The Honour of God consisteth principally in honouring Jesus the Son of God, whom the Father hath sent. Now examine (good Reader) whether more extolleth the honour of Christ, the Doctrine of Luther, or the Doctrine of the Pope. Luther sendeth us only to Christ; the Pope sendeth us to other Patrons and Helpers. Luther's Doctrine tendeth wholly to the glory of Christ; The Pope's Doctrine, if it be well weighed, tendeth to the glory of Man. Luther cleaveth only to the Scripture, the Pope leaneth to the Canons and Councils of Men.

The ſecond cauſe, to move them againſt Luther, is the Infamy of their Nation; which being counted before time always moſt Chriſtian, now by the Sectaries of Luther is evil ſpoken of in all other Quarters.

The third cauſe is the reſpect of their own Honour, which notoriouſly will be diſtrained, if they, which moſt excel in Nobility and Authority among the Germans, ſhall not bend all their power to expel theſe Hereſies; First, for that they ſhall appear to be degenerate from their Progenitors, who, being preſent at the Condemnation of John Hus and other Hereticks, are ſaid ſome of them with their own hands to have led John Hus to the Fire. Secondly, for that they, or the greater part of them, approved with their Authority the Imperial Edict ſet forth of late in condemnation of Martin Luther. (a) Now except they ſhall follow the execution of the ſame, they ſhall be noted inconſtant, or may be thought to favour the ſame, ſeeing it is manifeſt, that they may eaſily exterminate him if they were diſpoſed.

(a) This Edict of the Emperor above touched, was deviſ'd and ſet out, not knowing to divers of the Princes there, and ſeemeth chiefly to be brought about by the Pope and his Flatterers about him. Look more hereof in the Story of Sleidan. lib. 3.

The fourth Cauſe.

The fourth Cauſe is the Injury wrought by Luther to them, their Parents, and Progenitors, foraſmuch as their Fathers, Progenitors, and themſelves alſo have always holden the ſame Faith which the Catholick Church of Rome hath appointed: contrary to the which Faith Luther with his Sectaries now doth hold, ſaying, that many things are not to be believed which their foreſaid Anceſtors have holden to be of Faith. It is manifeſt therefore, that they be condemned of Luther for Infidels and Hereticks, and ſo conſequently, by Luthers Doctrine, all their Fore-elders and Progenitors which have deceaſed in this our Faith, be in Hell; for Error in Faith importeth Damnation.

The fifth Cauſe.

The fifth Cauſe to remove them, is, that they ſhould well adviſe and conſider the end whereunto all theſe Lutherians do tend: which (b) is, that under the ſhadow of Evangelical Liberty, they may aboliſh all Superiority and Power. For altho at the firſt beginning they pretended only to annul and repreſs our Power Eccleſiaſtical, as being falſely and tyrannouſly uſurped againſt the Goſpel: yet foraſmuch as liberty is their only Foundation and Pretence; by the which Liberty the Secular Power and Magiſtrates cannot bind men by any Commandments, be they never ſo juſt or ſo reaſonable, (c) to obey them under pain of mortal Sin: it is manifeſt that their Scope is to infeeble and infringe, as much or more, the Secular State alſo, altho covertly they pretend to ſalve it: to the end, that when the Secular Princes ſhall belive this their working not to be directed againſt them, but only againſt the uſurped Domination of the Church and Church-men; then the Laity (which commonly hath been always againſt men of the Church) holding with them, ſhall ſuffer the Churchmen to be devoured. Which done, no doubt but (d) they will afterward practiſe the like upon the Secular Princes and Poteſtates, which now they attempt againſt our Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction.

(b) The Doctrine of Luther tendeth againſt the uſurped power of the See of Rome; Ergo the Doctrine of Luther diſſolveth all obedience due to Magiſtrates. This Conſequence is to be denied; for the power of Magiſtrates is of God; and he that reſiſteth them, reſiſteth God. So is not the uſurped power of the Pope. (c) If the Pope doth ſay, that no precepts of Magiſtrates do oblige under pain of mortal ſin, he ſaith not true; if he ſay Luther ſo teacheth, he believeth Luther; who teacheth all men to be ſubject unto Magiſtrates, no man more. (d) Whoſo conſidereth the Doctrine of Luther, De libertate Chriſtiana, ſhall find this to be a falſe ſlander. For how is it like that he meaneth any Rebellion, who, deſcribing a Chriſtian, calleth him a Servant and an Underling to all men.

The ſixth Cauſe.

The ſixth cauſe to move and perſwade them againſt Luther, is this, for them to conſider the Fruits which follow that Sect: as Slanders, Offences, Diſturbance, Robberies, Murthers, (e) Seditions, Diſſentions, which this Sect hath, and daily doth ſtir up through whole Germany: Alſo Blaſphemies, ſlanderous Words, Scoffings, (f) Jeſts and bitter Taunts, which are ever in their Mouths; againſt which, unleſs that they ſhall find a preſent Remedy, it is to be feared leſt the Deſolation of God's Wrath will fall upon Germany, being ſo divided; or rather upon the Princes of Germany, who, having the Sword given of God into their Hands for the ſuppreſſion of Malefactors, ſuffer ſuch Enormities among their Subjects. Curſed is he (ſaith the Prophet) which doth the work of the Lord negligently, and holdeth back his Sword from the Blood of evil doers. Jeremiah 28. K. Hen. 8.

(e) The cauſe why the Pope doth charge the Lutherans with Sedition, did riſe upon this: becauſe one Franciſcus Sickingus a valiant man, and a great favourer of Luther, did war againſt the Archbiſhop of Triers, for with-holding two certain perſons from judgment, which ſhould have appeared, and by his means did not. (f) As for ſlanderous words and bitter taunts, with what face can the Pope charge Luther, being himſelf ſo impudent and bitter, as in this his preſent Letter is manifeſt to be ſeen? wherein he ſheweth himſelf in his own colours what he is.

The ſeventh reaſon is, that the Princes ſhould conſider how Luther uſeth the ſame way of ſeducing the People of Chriſt, as hath the venomous Viper Mahumet practiſed in deceiving ſo many thouſands of Souls, in permitting to them the liberty of thoſe things which Fleſh deſireth, and afterward in exempting them from ſuch things as be more ſharp in the Law; but that Luther a little more temperately handleth the matter, whereby he may deceive more effectually: For (g) Mahumet giveth Licence to have many Wives, and to divorce and marry other at their pleaſure. This Luther to draw unto him the favour of Nuns, Monks, and Prieſts, ſuch as be laſcivious in fleſh, preacheth that Vows of perpetual Continency be unlawful, and much leſs to be obligatory: and therefore permitteth unto them that they may marry; forgetting by the way what the Apoſtle writeth of young Widows, ſaying: That when they wax wanton againſt Chriſt, then will they marry, having condemnation, becauſe they have made void their firſt Faith, 1 Tim. 5. The ſeventh Cauſe.

(g) If the Doings and properties of Mahumet be rightly conſidered, none ſhould be found ſo aptly to reſemble him, as the Pope himſelf. He declineth from the Word of God, ſo doth the Pope. He killeth and ſlayeth the contrary part, ſo doth the Pope. He holdeth Salvation by Works of the Law, ſo doth the Pope: and if Mahumet give liberty of fleſh, ſo doth not Luther, but the Pope both taketh it, and alſo diſpenſeth with the ſame. Mahumet would not have his Religion reaſoned upon; no more will the Pope. Briefly, as the Sect of Mahumet is divided into many ſundry ſorts of Religion, and of religious men; ſo hath the Sect of the Pope his Friers, Monks, Nuns, Hermits and other ſwarms of an infinite variety.

Theſe and other ſuch like Reaſons being opened and laid before them, you ſhall then in our name exhort the foreſaid Princes, Prelates and People, to awake and imploy their diligence how to gainſtand; firſt the injury of theſe Lutherans toward God, and toward his holy Religion: Secondly, their Villany toward the whole Nation of the Germans, and their Princes, and eſpecially the ſhameful Contumely towards their Fathers and Elders, whom in effect they condemn to Hell. In conſideration whereof you ſhall call upon them to remember themſelves, and to proceed effectually to the execution of the Apoſtolical Sentence, and of the Emperor's Edict; giving pardon to them that will amend and acknowledg their fault: the other, which obſtinately perſiſt in their error, puniſhing with the Rod of diſtrict ſeverity, according to the Decrees of the Canons and Laws of the Church, that by their example ſuch as ſtand may remain in Faith, and they which are fallen may be reduced.

And if any ſhall object again, that Luther was condemned by the Apoſtolick See before he was heard, and that his Cauſe ought firſt to have been heard and adjudged before he was convicted. You ſhall anſwer, that thoſe * things which pertain to Faith are to be believed for their own authority, and not to be proved. Take away (ſaith Ambroſe) Arguments where Faith is ſought: there the Fiſhers, not the Philoſophers, muſt be believed. Truth it is, and we grant no leſs, but that lawful defence and hearing ought not to be denied in ſuch Caſes, where queſtion is of the Fact, whether it were done or not, as whether he ſpake, preached, writ, or not? But where the matter is of God's Law, or in cauſe of the Sacraments, there muſt we always ſtand to the authority of Holy Fathers, and of the Church. Now all things almoſt, wherein Luther diſſenteth from other, are reproved before by divers Councils: neither ought thoſe things to be called into queſtion, which have been defined before by general Councils, and the Univerſal Church, but ought to be received by Faith. For elſe he doth injury to the Synod of the Church; who ſo bringeth again into controverſie things once rightly diſcuſſed and ſetled. Otherwiſe what certainty can there be amongſt men, or what end ſhall there be of contending and diſputing, if it ſhall be lawful for every lewd and preſumptuous perſon to decline from the things which have been received and ratified by the conſent, not of one, nor of a few, but of ſo many Ages, ſo many wiſe Heads, and of the Catholick Church, which God never permitteth to err in matters unto Faith appertaining? And how can it otherwiſe be choſen, but that all muſt be full of diſturbance, offences, and confuſion, unleſs the things which have been once, yea many

K. Hen. 8. many times by right Judgment constituted be observed of all men as inviolable? Wherefore seeing Luther and his fellows do condemn the Councils of holy Fathers, do burn the holy Canons, do confound all things at their pleasure, and do disquiet the whole World, what remaineth, but that they are to be rejected and exploded, as enemies and perturbers of the publick peace?

Further, this you shall say unto them, that we confess our selves, and deny not, but that God suffereth this Persecution to be inflicted upon his Church for the sins of men, especially of Priests and Prelates of the Clergy. For certain it is, That the hand of the Lord is not shortned, that he cannot save; but our sins have divided between God and us, and therefore he hideth his face from us that he will not hear us. The Scripture testifieth, That the sins of the People do issue out from the sins of the Priests. And therefore (saith St. Chrysostom) Christ, going about to cure the sick City of Hierusalem, first entred into the Temple, to corrected the sins of the Priests like a good Physician, which first beginneth to cure the Disease from the very root. We know that in this (b) holy See here have been many abominable things of long time wrought and practised: as Abuses in matters spiritual, and also Excesses in life and manners, and all things turned clean contrary. And no marvel if the Sickness (c) first beginning at the Head, that is, at the high Bishops, have descended afterward to inferiour Prelates. All we (that is, Prelates of the Church) have declined every one after his own way; Neither hath there been one that hath done good, no not one. Wherefore need it is, that all we give glory to God, and that we humble our Souls to him, considering every one of us from whence he hath fallen; and that every one do judg himself before he be judged of God in the Rod of his Fury. For the redress whereof you shall insinuate unto them, and promise in our behalf, that in us shall be lacking no diligence of a better Reformation, first beginning with own Court; that like as the contagion first from thence descended into all the inferiour parts; so Reformation and Amendment of all that is amiss, from the same place again, shall take his beginning. Whereunto they shall find us so much the more ready, for that we see the whole World so desirous of the same. We our selves (as you know) never sought this Dignity, but rather coveted, if we otherwise might, to lead a private life, and in a quiet State to serve God: And also would utterly have refused the same, had not the fear of God, and the manner of our Election, and misdoubting of some Schism to follow after, urged us to take it. And thus took we the Burthen upon us, not for any Ambition of Dignity, or to inrich our Friends and Kinsfolks, but only to be obedient to the Will of God, and for Reformation of the Catholick Church, and for relief of the Poor, and especially for the Advancement of Learning and learned Men, with such other things moe, as appertaineth to the charge of a good Bishop and lawful Heir of St. Peter. And tho all Errors, Corruptions, and Abuses be not straightways amended by us, men ought not thereat to marvel. The Sore is great, and far grown, and is not single, but of manifold Maladies together compacted, and therefore to the curing thereof we must proceed by little and little, first beginning to cure the greater and the most dangerous, lest while we intend to amend all, we destroy all. All sudden mutations in a Common-wealth (saith Aristotle) are Perilous: and he that wringeth too hard, straineth out Blood: Prov. 30.

And whereas in your last Letters you writ, that the Princes complain, how this See hath been and is prejudicial to their Ordinances and Agreements. Hereunto you shall thus answer: That such Excesses, which have been done before our time, ought not to be imputed to us, who always have misliked these Derogations; and therefore bid them so assure themselves, that though they had required no such matter, we of our own accord would have refrained the same; partly for that it is good, right and reason, that every one have that which is due unto him: and partly also that the said noble Nation of Germany shall have by us no hinderance, but furtherance rather, so much as in us shall lie to do for them.

And as touching the Processes which they desired to have removed away a Rota, and to be referred down to the Parties, you shall signifie unto them, that we will gratifie them herein as much as honestly we may. But because our Auditors are now presently absent from the City, by reason of the Plague, we cannot be informed as yet touching the quality of those Processes. As soon as they shall return (which we hope will be shortly) we shall do in the Princes favour what reasonably we may.

Further; Whereas we understand, that there be many fresh flourishing Wits in Germany, and many well learned men, which are not seen unto, but be rejected and unlooked to, while in the mean time, through the Apostolical Provisions, Dignities, and Promotions are bestowed upon Tapsters, and Dancers, and unfit persons; we will therefore that you inquire out what those learned men are, and what be their Names, to the intent that when any such Vacation of Benefices in Germany doth fall, we of our own voluntary motion may provide for them accordingly. For why? we consider how much it is against God's Glory, and against the health and edification of Souls, that Benefices and Dignities of the Church have so long time been bestowed upon unworthy and unable persons.

As touching the Subsidy for Hungarians, we send no other Information to you, but that which we gave you at your departure; save only that we will you to extend your diligence therein, as we also will do the like, in solliciting the matter with the Princes and Cities of Italy, that every one may help after his Ability. Ex Orth. Gratian.

These Popish Suggestions and Instructions of the Pope himself against Luther, I thought, Christian Reader, to set before thine Eyes, to the intent thou mayst see here (as in a Pattern, and go no further) all the Crimes, Objections, Exclamations, Suspicions, Accusations, Slanders, Offensions, Contumelies, Rebukes, Untruths, Cavillations, Railings, whatsoever they have devised, or can devise, invent, articulate, denounce, infer, or surmise against Luther and his teaching. They cry, Heresie, Heresie; but they prove no Heresie. They cry, Councils, Councils; and yet none transgresseth Councils more than themselves. If Councils go always with Scripture, then Luther goeth with them: If Councils do jarr sometime from the Scripture, what Heresie is in Luther in standing with Scripture against those Councils? And yet neither hath he hitherto spoken against any Councils, save only the Council of Constance. They inflame Kings and Princes against Luther, and yet they have no cause wherefore. They accuse him for teaching Liberty. If they mean the Liberty of the Flesh, they accuse him falsely: If they mean the Liberty of the Spirit, they teach wickedly which teach contrary: And yet when they have all said, none live so licentiously as themselves. They pretend the Zeal of the Church, but under that Church lieth their own private Welfare, and Belly-cheer. They charge Luther with Disobedience, and none are so disobedient to Magistrates and Civil Laws, as they. They lay to his Charge Oppression and spoiling of Lay-men's Goods: And who spoileth the Lay-men's Livings so much as the Pope? For Probation whereof, let the Pope's Accounts be cast, what he taketh out of every Christian Realm. Briefly, turn only the Names of the Persons, and instead of Luther's Name, place the Name of the Pope, and the effect of this Letter above prefixed, shall agree upon none more aptly, than upon the Pope himself, and his own Sectaries. Now to proceed further in the Process of this foresaid matter, let us see what the Princes again for their parts answer to these foresaid Suggestions and Instructions of Pope Adrian, sent unto them in the Diet of Norenberg, in the Cause of Luther: the Answer of whom here followeth under-written.

(b) And how then can this be called an holy See, where so many abominable Impieties, and manifold Excesses, both in spiritual matters, and also in external Life, are seen and practised? such Ambition in the Prelates; such pride in the Pope, such avarice in the Court; and finally where such corruption is of all things, as you your selves do here confess; and cannot deny?

(c) True it is, that the sickness hath begun in the head, that is, at the very triple Crown: and therefore the sickness being great, and having need of a sharp Physician, God hath sent Luther unto the Pope (as Erasmus writeth of him) as a meet Physician to cure his Disease; yet he refuseth to be healed.

Caiaphas himself could never prophesie more truly.

The Pope promiseth Reformation of his own Court, but when beginneth he?

You proceed so by little and little, that nothing at all is seen.

Sudden mutations be not for the Popes purpose: but the Lord promiseth to come suddenly, when he is not looked for.

Rota is some skill in the Court or Chancery of Rome.

The Pope flattereth for advantage. And why then have you abused the Church so long with these Apostolical Provisions, and yet do not redress the same?

Luther cried out of, without any just cause.

Liberty of Flesh, Liberty of Spirit.

Turn only the names of the persons, and all the Accusations of the Papists against the Lutherans agree chiefly unto themselves.

The Answer of the noble and reverend Princes, and States of the sacred Roman Empire, exhibited to the Pope's Ambassador.

The answer of the Princes of Germany, to the Popes Letter and Instructions.

THe noble and renowned Prince Lord Ferdinandus, Lieutenant to the Emperor's Majesty, with other reverend Peers in Christ, and mighty Princes Electors, and other States and Orders of this present Assembly of the Roman Empire in Norenberg convented, have gratefully received, and diligently perused the Letters sent in form of a Brief, with the Instructions also of the most holy Father in Christ and Lord, Lord Adrian the high Bishop of the holy and and universal Church of Rome, presented unto them in the cause of Luther's Faction.

Pope Adrian a German born.

By the which foresaid Letters and Writings whereas first they understand his Holiness to have been born, and to have had his native Origine and Parentage out of this noble Nation of Germany, they do not a little rejoice. Of whose egregious Vertues and Ornaments, both of mind and body, they have heard great fame and commendation, even from his tender years: by reason whereof they are so much the more joyous of his advancement and preferment, by such consent of Election, to the high top of the Apostolical Dignity, and yield to God most hearty thanks for the same: praying also, from the bottom of their hearts, for his excellent clemency, and perpetual glory of his name, and for health of Souls, and incolumity of the universal Church, that God will give his Holiness long continuance of felicity. Having no misdoubt, but that, by such a full and consenting election of such a Pastor of the universal Catholick Church, great profit and commodity will ensue. Which thing to hope and look for, his Holiness openeth to them an evident declaration in his own Letters, testifying and protesting what a care it is to him both day and night, how to discharge his pastoral Function, in studying for the health of the Flock to him committed: and especially in converting the minds of Christian Princes from War to Peace. Declaring moreover, what subsidy and relief his Holiness hath sent to the Souldiers of Rhodes, &c. All which things they perpending with themselves, conceive exceeding hope and comfort in their minds, thus reputing and trusting that this concord of Christian Princes will be a great help and stay to the better quieting of things now out of frame; without which neither the state of the Common-wealth, nor of Christian Religion, can be rightly redressed, and much less the tyranny of the barbarous Turks repressed.

Wherefore the excellent Prince, Lord Lieutenant to the Emperor's Majesty, with the other Princes Electors, and Orders of this present Assembly, most heartily do pray, that his Holiness will persist in this his purpose and diligence, as he hath vertuously begun, leaving no stone unremoved, how the disagreeing hearts of Christian Princes may be reduced to quiet and peace; or if that will not be, yet at least some truce and intermission of domestical dissensions may be obtained for the necessity of the time now present, whereby all Christians may join their powers together, with the help of God, to go against the Turk, and to deliver the People of Christ from his barbarous tyranny and bondage. Whereunto both the noble Prince Lord Lieutenant, and other Princes of Germany, will put to their helping hands, to the best of their ability.

Can any good thing come out of Rome?

The Pope much grieved for the prospering of Luther.

And whereas by the Letters of his Holiness, with his Instruction also exhibited unto them by his Legat, they understand that his Holiness is afflicted with great sorrow for the prospering of Luther's Sect, whereby innumerable Souls, committed to his charge, are in danger of perdition, and therefore his Holiness vehemently desireth some speedy Remedy against the same to be provided, with an explication of certain necessary Reasons and Causes, whereby to move the German Princes thereunto; and that they will tender the execution of the Apostolick Sentence, and also of the Emperor's Edict set forth touching the suppressing of Luther. To these the Lord Lieutenant, and other Princes and States do answer, that it is to them no less grief and sorrow than to his Holiness; and also they do lament as much for these impieties and perils of Souls, and inconveniences which grow in the Religion of Christ, either by the Sect of Luther, or any otherwise. Further, what help or counsel shall lie in them for the extirpating of Errors, and decay of Souls health, what their moderation can do, they are willing and ready to perform; considering how they stand bound and subject, as well to the Pope's Holiness, as also to the Emperor's Majesty. But why the Sentence of the Apostolick See, and the Emperor's Edict against Luther, hath not been put in execution hitherto, there hath been (said they) causes great and urgent, which have led them thereto: as first, in weighing and considering with themselves, that great evils and inconveniences would thereupon ensue. For the greatest part of the People of Germany have always had this perswasion, and now by reading Luther's Books are more therein confirmed, that great grievances and inconveniences have come to this Nation of Germany by the Court of Rome; and therefore if they should have proceeded with any rigor in executing the Pope's Sentence, and the Emperor's Edict, the multitude would conceive and suspect in their minds, this to be done for subverting the verity of the Gospel, and for supporting and confirming the former abuses and grievances, whereupon great Wars and Tumults (no doubt) would have ensued: which thing of the Princes and States there hath been well perceived by many Arguments. For the avoiding whereof, they thought to use more gentle Remedies, serving more opportunely for the time.

K. Hen. 8.

Causes why the Princes have not proceeded by the Popes Sentence hitherto.

Grievances received by the Court of Rome.

Again, whereas the reverend Lord Legat (said they) in the name of the Pope's Holiness, hath been instructed, to declare unto them, that God suffereth this Persecution to rise in the Church for the sins of Men, and that his Holiness doth promise therefore to begin the Reformation with his own Court, that as the corruption first sprang from thence to the inferior parts, so the redress of all again should first begin with the same: Also, whereas his Holiness, of a good and fatherly heart, doth testify in his Letters, that he himself did always mislike that the Court of Rome should intermeddle so much; and derogate from the Concordates of the Princes, and that his Holiness doth fully purpose in that behalf, during his Papacy, never to practice the like, but so to endeavour, that every one, and especially the Nation of the Germans, may have their proper due and right, granting especially to the said Nation his peculiar favour: who seeth not by these premises, but that this most holy Bishop omitteth nothing which a good Father, or a devout Pastor may or ought to do to his Sheep? Or who will not be moved hereby to a loving reverence, and to amendment of his defaults; namely, seeing his Holiness so intendeth to accomplish the same in deed, which in word he promiseth, according as he hath begun?

The Pope answered with his own words.

And thus undoubtedly both the noble Lord Lieutenant, and all other Princes and States of the Empire, well hope that he will, and pray most heartily that he may do, to the glory of our eternal God, to the health of Souls, and to the tranquility of the publick State. For unless such abuses and grievances, with certain other Articles also, which the secular Princes (assigned purposely for the same) shall draw out in writing, shall be faithfully reformed, there is no true peace and concord between the Ecclesiastical and Secular Estates, nor any true extirpation of this Tumult and Errors in Germany, that can be hoped. For partly by long Wars, partly by reason of other grievances and hindrances, this Nation of Germany hath been so wasted and consumed in Mony, that unneth it is able to sustain it self in private Affairs, and necessary upholding of Justice within it self; much less then to minister aid and succour to the Kingdom of Hungary, and to the Croatians, against the Turk. And whereas all the States of the sacred Roman Empire do not doubt, but the Pope's Holiness doth right well understand how the German Princes did grant and condescend for the mony of Annates to be levied to the See of Rome for term of certain years, upon condition that the said Mony should be converted to maintain War against the Turkish Infidels, and for defence of the Catholick Faith: and whereas the term of these years is now expired long since, when as the said Annates should be gathered, and yet that mony hath not been so bestowed to that use, whereto it was first granted. Wherefore if any such necessity should now come, that any publick helps or contributions against the Turk, should be demanded of the German people, they would answer again, Why is not that mony of Annats, reserved many years before to that use, now bestowed and applied? and so would they refuse to receive any more such burthens for that cause to be laid upon them.

Grievances of the Germans complained of to the Pope. Vide infra.

Annates falsly pretended of the Pope, to maintain War against the Turk.

Wherefore

K. Hen. 8.

Annates is a certain portion of money wont to be paid to the Court of Rome, out of the one years Fruits at the vacation of an Ecclesiastical living.

Wherefore the said Lord Lieutenant, and other Princes and degrees of the Empire, make earnest petition, that the Pope's Holiness will with a fatherly consideration expend the premises, and surcease hereafter to require such Annates, which are accustomed after the death of Bishops and other Prelates, or Ecclesiastical Persons, to be paid to the Court of Rome, and suffer them to remain to the Chamber of the Empire, whereby Justice and Peace may be more commodiously administred, the tranquility of the publick State of Germany maintained, and also by the same due helps may be ordained and disposed to other Christian Potentates in Germany, against the Turk, which otherwise without the same is not to be hoped for.

Item, Whereas the Pope's Holiness desireth to be informed, what way were best to take in resisting these Errors of the Lutherans. To this the Lord Lieutenant, with other Princes and Nobles, do answer, that whatsoever help or counsel they can devise, with willing hearts they will be ready thereunto. Seeing therefore the State, as well Ecclesiastical as Temporal, is far out of frame, and have so much corrupted their ways; and seeing not only of Luther's part, and of his Sect, but also by divers other occasions besides, so many errors, abuses, and corruptions have crept in; much requisite and necessary it is, that some effectual Remedy be provided, as well for redress of the Church, as also for repressing the Turks tyranny. Now what more present or effectual Remedy can be had, the Lord Lieutenant, and other Estates and Princes do not see, than this, that the Pope's Holiness, by the consent of the Emperor's Majesty, do summon a free Christian Council in some convenient place of Germany, as at Strasburg, or at Mentz, or at Colen, or at Metz, and that with as much speed as conveniently may be, so that the Congregation of the said Council be not deferred above one year: in the which Council it may be lawful for every person that there shall have interest, either Temporal or Ecclesiastical, freely to speak and consult, to the glory of God, and health of Souls, and the publick wealth of Christendom, without impeachment or restraint, whatsoever Oath or other Bond to the contrary notwithstanding: yea, and it shall be every good Mans part there to speak, not only freely, but to speak that which is true, to the purpose, and to edifying, and not to pleasing or flattering, but simply and uprightly to declare his judgment, without all fraud or guile. And as touching by what ways these Errors and tumults of the German people may best be stayed and pacified in the mean time, until the Council be set, the foresaid Lord Lieutenant, with the other Princes, thereupon have consulted and deliberated; that forasmuch as Luther, and certain of his Fellows, be within the Territory and Dominion of the noble Duke Frederick, the said Lord Lieutenant and other States of the Empire shall so labour the matter with the aforenamed Prince, Duke of Saxony, that Luther and his followers, shall not write, set forth, or print any thing during the said mean space; neither do they doubt but that the said noble Prince of Saxony, for his Christian piety, and obedience to the Roman Empire, as becometh a Prince of such excellent vertue, will effectually condescend to the same.

Remedy of Reformation.

A General Council in Germany required.

An interim before the Council.

Writing and Printing for a time suspended.

Item, The said Lord Lieutenant and Princes shall labour so with the Preachers of Germany, that they shall not in their Sermons teach or blow into the Peoples ears such matter whereby the multitude may be moved to rebellion or uproar, or to be induced into error; and that they shall preach and teach nothing but the true, pure, sincere, and holy Gospel, and approved Scripture, godly, mildly, and Christianly, according to the doctrine and exposition of the Scripture, being approved and received of Christ's Church, abstaining from all such things which are better unknown than learned of the people, and which to be subtily searched, or deeply discussed, is not expedient. Also, that they shall move no contention of disputation among the vulgar sort: but whatsoever hangeth in controversy, the same they shall reserve to the determination of the Council to come.

The Office of Preaching tempered.

Item, The Archbishops, Bishops, and other Prelats within their Dioceses, shall assign godly and learned Men, having good judgment in the Scripture, which shall diligently and faithfully attend upon such Preachers; and if they shall perceive the said Preachers either to have erred, or to have uttered any thing unconveniently, they shall godly, mildly, and modestly advertise and inform them thereof, in such sort as no Man shall justly complain the truth of the Gospel to impeached. But if the Preachers, continuing still in their stubbornness, shall refuse to be admonished, and will not desist from their lewdness, then shall they be restrained and punished by the Ordinaries of the place, with punishment for the same convenient.

Preachers limited within certain bounds.

Furthermore, the said Princes and Nobles shall provide and undertake, so much as shall be possible, that, from henceforth during the foresaid time, no new Book shall be imprinted, especially none of these famous Libels, neither shall they privily or apertly be sold. Also order shall be taken amongst all Potentates, that if any shall set out, sell, or imprint any new work, it shall first be seen and perused of certain godly, learned, and discreet Men appointed for the same: so that if it be not admitted and approved by them, it shall not be permitted to be published in print, or to come abroad. Thus by these means they hope well, that the Tumults, Errors, and Offensions among the people, shall cease; especially if the Pope's Holiness himself shall begin with an orderly and due reformation, in the foresaid grievances above mentioned, and will procure such a free and Christian Council as hath been said, and so shall the people be well contented and satisfied. Or if the tumult shall not so fully be calmed as they desire, yet the greater part thus will be quieted: for all such as be honest and good Men, no doubt, will be in great expectation of that General Council, so shortly and now ready at hand to come. Finally, as concerning Priests which contract Matrimony, and religious Men leaving their Cloisters, whereof intimation was also made by the Apostolical Legat, the foresaid Princes do consider, that forsomuch as in the Civil Law there is no penalty for them ordained, they shall be referred to the Canonical Constitutions, to be punished thereafter accordingly; that is, by the loss of their Benefices and Privileges, or other condign Censures: & that the said Ordinaries shall in no case be stopped or inhibited by the secular Powers, from the correction of such: but that they shall add their help and favour to the maintenance of Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, and shall direct out their publick Edicts and Precepts, that none shall impeach or prohibit the said Ordinaries in their Ecclesiastical Castigation, upon such Transgressors to be administred.

Against selling and printing of famous Libels.

Famous Libels be such Books as rail against the fame of any person, shewing no name of the Aut'or thereof.

For Priests or religious Men that marry.

To conclude, The redoubted Prince Lord Lieutenant, and other Princes, Estates, and Orders of the publick Empire, vehemently and most heartily do pray and beseech that the Pope's Holiness, and the reverend Lord his Legat will accept and take all the premises to be no otherwise spoken and meant, than of a good free, sincere, and a Christian mind. Neither is there any thing that all the foresaid Princes, Estates, and Nobles, do more wish and desire, than the furtherance and prosperous estate of the holy Catholick Church of Rome, and of his Holiness. To whose wishes, desires, and obedience, they offer and commend themselves most ready and obsequious, as faithful Children. Ex Orth. Gratian.

Thus hast thou, loving Reader, the full discourse, both of the Pope's Letter, and of his Legat's Instructions, with the Answer also of the States of Germany to the said Letter and Instructions to them exhibited in the Diet of Norenberg. In the which Diet what was concluded, and what order and consultation was taken, first touching the Grievances of Germany, which they exhibited to the Pope, then concerning a General Council to be called in Germany, also for printing, preaching, and for Priests Marriage, hath been likewise declared, &c. Ex Joan. Sleidano.

The occasion of this matter, moved against Priests Marriage, came first by the Ministers of Strasburg, which about this time began to take Wives, and therefore were cited by the Bishop of Strasburg to appear before him at a certain day, as violaters of the Laws of Holy Church, the Holy Fathers, the Bishops of Rome, and of the Emperor's Majesty, to the prejudice both of their own order of Priesthood, and Majesty of Almighty God: but they referred their cause to the hearing of the Magistrates of the same City; who, being Suiters for them unto the Bishops, laboured to have the matter either released, or at least to be delayed for a time.

Ministers of Strasburg troubled for their Wives.

Long it were to recite all the Circumstances following upon this Diet or Assembly of Norenberg, how their Decree was received of some, of some neglected, of divers diversly wrested and expounded. Luther writing his Letters upon the same Decree, to the Princes, thus made his exposition of the meaning thereof: that whereas the Preachers were commanded to preach the pure Gospel, after the Doctrine of the Church received, he expounded the meaning thereof to be, not after the Doctrine of Thomas Aquinas, or Scotus, or ſuch other late School-writers, but after the Doctrine of Hilarie, Cyprian, and Auſten, and other ancient Doctors, and yet the Doctrine of the ſaid Anceſtors no farther to be received, but as it ſhould agree with the Scripture.

Luther expounded the Decree of Norenberg.

Secondly, As concerning new Books not to be ſold nor printed, he expounded the meaning thereof to extend no further, but that the Text of the Bible, and Books of the Holy Scripture might be printed notwithſtanding, and publiſhed to all Men.

And as for the prohibition of Prieſt's Marriage, he writeth to the Princes, and deſireth them to bear with the weakneſs of Men; declaring that branch of their Decree to be very hard; which tho it ſtand with the Pope's Law, yet it accordeth not with the Goſpel, neither conduceth to good manners, nor to honeſty of Life, &c.

An hundred grievances of the Germans againſt the Pope.

Furthermore, Whereas in the ſame Seſſion of Norenberg, mention was made before of certain grievances collected to the number of an hundred, and exhibited to the Biſhop of Rome, it were tedious likewiſe to inſert them all: yet to give ſome taſte of a few I judg it not unprofitable; to the intent that the World may ſee and judg, not only what abuſes and corruptions, moſt monſtrous and incredible, lay hid under the glorious title of the Holy Church of Rome: but alſo may underſtand, with what hypocriſy and impudence the Pope taketh upon him ſo grievouſly to complain upon M. Luther, and other: when in all the univerſal Church of Chriſt, there is none ſo much to be blamed all manner of ways, as he himſelf, according as by theſe hainous complaints of the German Princes, here following, againſt the Pope's intolerable oppreſſions and grievances, may right well appear. Which grievances being collected by the Princes of Germany at Norenberg, to the number of an hundred, I wiſh might be fully and at large ſet forth to the ſtudious Reader, whereby might appear the ſubtil ſleights and intolerable frauds of that pretenſed Church. But forſomuch as it were too long to comprehend the whole, I have thought good to exhibit ſome part thereof for example, as giving only a certain taſte, whereby thou mayeſt more eaſily conceive, what to think and eſteem of all the reſidue, which both to me would be tedious to write, and perhaps more grievous to thee to hear.

Certain Grievances and Oppreſſions of Germany, againſt the Court of Rome, collected and exhibited by the Princes, at the Council of Norenberg, to the number of an hundred, whereof certain ſpecialities here follow.

Forbidding of marriage in divers degrees, not forbidden by Gods Law.

AMongſt other burdens and grievances, this is not leaſt to be regarded, that many things are prohibited by Mens conſtitutions, and many things exacted, which are not prohibited or commanded by any precept of God: as the innumerable obſtacles of Matrimony invented and brought in, whereby Men were forbid to marry in caſes of Kindred, which ſtand upon divers degrees: as upon affinity, publick honeſty, ſpiritual kindred, kindred by Law, and kindred in Blood, &c. And likewiſe in forbidding the uſe of Meats, which God hath created for Mans neceſſity, and taught by the Apoſtle indifferently to be received with thankſgiving. By theſe, and many other humane conſtitutions, Men are yoked in bondage, until by mony they obtain ſome diſpenſation of thoſe Laws, at their hands which made them: ſo that Mony ſhall make that lawful for rich Men, which is clearly prohibited unto the poor. By theſe ſnares of Mens Laws and Conſtitutions, not only great ſums of Mony are gathered out of Germany, and carried over the Alps, but alſo great iniquity is ſprung up among Chriſtians: many offences and privy hatreds do riſe, by reaſon that poor Men do ſee themſelves intangled with theſe ſnares, for no other cauſe, but for that they do not poſſeſs the Thorns of the Goſpel; for ſo Chriſt doth often call Riches.

Forbidding of Meats, not forbidden by Gods Law.

Times forbidden.

Times of Marriage reſtrained, and after releaſed for Mony.

THe like practice alſo is to be ſeen in the times reſtrained from Marriage, by the Heads of the Church of Rome, from the Septuageſima Sunday, ſomewhat before Lent: when as notwithſtanding both the Clergy and the Seculars in the mean time will live licentiouſly, and that openly in the face of all the World. But this interdict proceedeth to this effect: if a Man ſhall preſume ſo to do upon his own liberty, without compounding. But otherwiſe if there be any hope of Mony, then that which was before unlawful, is now made lawful for every Man to do freely. And this is alſo another drawing Net, whereby great ſums of Mony are dragged out of the Germans purſes. Whereupon alſo hangeth another grievance as great as this; that in ſuing out a Diſpenſation, the ſtate of the poor and of the rich is not indifferently weighed: For where the rich eſcapeth many times for little or nought, and goeth clear away, the poor Man ſhall be ſure to pay for the ſhot.

K. Hen. 8.

A complaint for ſelling Remiſſion of Sins for Mony.

BUt eſpecially the burden and grievance of the Pope's Indulgences and Pardons be moſt importable: whenas the Biſhops of Rome, under pretence of building ſome Church in Rome, or to war againſt the Turk, do make out their Indulgences with their Bulls: perſwading and promiſing to the ſimple people ſtrange and wonderful benefits of remiſſion à pœna & culpa, that is, from all their ſins and puniſhment due for the ſame, and that not in this life only, but alſo after this life, to them that be dead burning in the fire of Purgatory. Through the hope and occaſion whereof, true piety is almoſt extinct in all Germany, while every evil diſpoſed perſon promiſeth to himſelf, for a little Mony, licenſe and impunity to do what him liſteth: whereupon followeth Fornication, Inceſt, Adultery, Perjury, Homicide, Robbing, and Spoiling, Rapine, Uſury, with a whole flood of all Miſchiefs, &c.

A complaint againſt the Immunities of Clergy-men.

ITem, Whoſoever he be that hath received any Eccleſiaſtical Orders, great or ſmall, thereby he doth contend to be freed from all puniſhment of the ſecular Magiſtrate, how great offence ſoever he do: neither doth he unadviſedly preſume thereupon, but is maintained in that liberty to ſin, by the principal Eſtates of the Clergy. For it hath often bin ſeen, that whereas by the Canonical Laws, Prieſts are forbidden to marry, afterward they diligently labour and go about day and night to attempt and try the chaſtity of Matrons, Virgins, and of the Wives, Daughters, and Siſters of the Lay-men: and through their continual inſtance and labour, partly with Gifts and Rewards, and flattering words, partly by their ſecret confeſſions (as they call them) as it hath been found by experience, they bring to paſs that many Virgins and Matrons, which otherwiſe would be honeſt, have been overcome and moved to ſin and wickedneſs: and it hapneth oftentimes, that they do detain and keep away the Wives and Daughters from their Husbands and Fathers, threatning them with Fire and Sword, that do require them again. Thus through their raging Luſt, they heap and gather together innumerable Miſchiefs and Offences. It is to be marvelled at, how licentiouſly, without puniſhment, they daily offend in Robberies, Murther, accuſing of Innocents, Burning, Rapine, Theft, and counterfeiting of falſe Coin, beſides a thouſand other kinds of miſchiefs, contrary and againſt all Laws both of God and Man, not without great offence of others, truſting only upon the freedom and liberty of ſin, which they uſurp unto themſelves by the privilege of their Canons. For whenas they once perceive that it is lawful for them to do what they liſt without controllment, then they do not only contemn the Civil Magiſtrates, but alſo their Biſhops and Superiors, whatſoever they either command or forbid them to do.

The licentiouſneſs of prieſts.

And moreover, to the intent they may be the more maintained in their miſchief and wickedneſs, contrary to all reaſon and equity, it is partly forbidden the Archbiſhops and Biſhops to condemn theſe Malefactors openly, except they be firſt degraded, which muſt be done with ſumptuouſneſs and pomp: whereby it hapneth very ſeldom, that thoſe annointed naughty Packs, do receive condign puniſhment. Beſides that, the Biſhops are ſo bound by their Chapters, that they dare not puniſh any perſon which hath taken Orders, by the Canonical Laws, be the puniſhment never ſo light or ſmall. By reaſon whereof, the matter ſo falleth out, that through this unequal partiality between the laity and the Clergy, great hatred, diſcord, and diſſention is ſprung and riſen. It is alſo not a little to be feared, that if the Clergy, which are the cauſe of this grievance, and of other miſchiefs (which daily they do proceed to perpetrate) have not like Laws, equal Judges, and like Puniſhment, their offenſive Life will move and ſtir up ſome great Tumults and Sedition amongſt the common People, not only againſt the Clergy themſelves, but alſo againſt the Superiors and Magiſtrates, for that they leave ſo notorious Offences unpuniſhed.

K. Hen. 8.

Wherefore Neceſſity and Juſtice doth require, that the ſaid prejudicial Privileges of the Clergy ſhould be abrogate and taken away, and in their place it be provided, ordained, and decreed, That the Clergy, of what order or degree ſoever they be, ſhall have like Laws, like Judgment and Puniſhment as the Laity have: ſo that they ſhall pretend no prerogative or freedom in like offence, more than the Laymen; but that every one of the Clergy offending, under the Judg where the offence is committed, ſhall be puniſhed for his fact, according to the meaſure and quality of his offence, in ſuch like manner as other Malefactors are, with the puniſhment appointed by the common Laws of the Empire. Which thing (without doubt) will pleaſe the true Miniſters of the Church, ſuch as are honeſt and learned, and they will not think their Power and Authority thereby in any caſe diminiſhed. By this means it ſhall be brought to paſs, that ſuch as are of the Clergy only by name, and otherwiſe naughty wicked Men, through the obedience due unto their Magiſtrates, ſhall be compelled to live more honeſtly; and all ſedition and privy hatred between them and the Laity ſhall be put away; and finally, thereby the Laity ſhall be more moved and ſtirred to love and reverence ſuch of the Clergy as be of a ſound life.

Prieſts ought to be ſubject to the ſame puniſhments as are the Lay-People.

Complaint of Excommunication abuſed.

Excommunication abuſed in the Church of Rome.

ITem, At Rome and in other places many Chriſtians are excommunicate by the Archbiſhops, Biſtops, or by their Eccleſiaſtical Judges, for prophane cauſes, through the deſire and covetouſneſs of Money and Lucre. The Conſciences of Men, which are weak in faith, thereby are burdened and brought unto deſperation. And finally, for Money and Lucre, a matter of no importance is made to tend to the deſtruction both of Body and Soul, contrary to the Law both of God and Man; foraſmuch as no Man ought to be excommunicate but only for Hereſy, or for ſome heinous fact perpetrate; nor to be counted as ſeparate from the Chriſtian Catholick Church, as the Scriptures do witneſs. Therefore the Princes, Nobles, States, and Laity of the Sacred Empire, deſire and require the Pope's Holineſs, that as a faithful Chriſtian, and loving Father, he will remove the ſaid Burden of Excommunication, uſed both in the See of Rome, and alſo in the Sees of all other Archbiſhops and Eccleſiaſtical Judges; and finally decree, that no Man ſhall hereafter be excommunicate, but only for a manifeſt convict Crime of Hereſy: For it is too wicked a thing, that faithful Chriſtians, for every light Offence touching any temporal goods or gain, or for any other worldly matter, but only for obſtinacy of Hereſy, or ſome great enormity, ſhould be excluded from Almighty God, and the Catholick Congregation.

The Church burdened with a number of Holy-days.

The number of Holy-days to be diminiſhed.

MOreover, the common People are not a little oppreſſed with the great number of Holy-days, for that there are now ſo many Holy-days, that the Husbandmen have ſcarcely time to gather the Fruits of the Earth, which they have brought forth with ſo great labour and travel, being often in danger of Hail, Rain, and other Storms; which Fruits notwithſtanding, if they were not letted with ſo many Holy-days, they would gather and bring home without any loſs. Beſides that, upon theſe Holy-days innumerable Offences are committed and done, rather than God honoured or worſhipped. Which thing is ſo manifeſt, that it needeth no witneſs. For that cauſe the Eſtates of the Sacred Empire think it beſt, and moſt profitable for the Chriſtian Commonwealth, that this great number of Holy-days ſhould be diminiſhed, which ought rather to be celebrate in ſpirit and verity, than with the external Worſhip, and be better kept with abſtinence from Sin.

Suſpending and hallowing of Church-yards gainful to the Pope, and chargeable to the People.

Hallowing of Church-yards abuſed for Money.

FUrthermore, if it happen that two or more do fight without any weapon in a Church-yard, only with their fiſts, or by the hair, that there be never ſo little blood ſhed, by and by the Clergy have recourſe to Interdictment, and do not ſuffer any more Chriſtian Burials there to be done, before that all the Citizens with great pomp and expences do cauſe it to be conſecrated and hallowed again, with no leſs charge than when at the firſt, of a prophane place, it was hallowed for Burial: all which things do redound to the charges and coſts of the Laity. And tho the Churches or Chappels be never ſo little which are ſo hallowed, yet the Suffragans do burden and oppreſs the ſimple poor Houſholders, be they never ſo bare or needy, with ſuperfluous expences, and require moreover gifts of the People, which is not for their eaſe to give.

Baptizing of Bells.

Alſo the Suffragans have invented, that no other but only themſelves may baptize Bells for the Lay-People: Whereby the ſimple People, upon the affirmation of the Suffragans, do believe, that ſuch Bells ſo baptized will drive away evil Spirits and Tempeſts. Whereupon a great number of God-fathers are appointed, eſpecially ſuch as are rich, which at the time of baptizing, holding the Rope wherewithal the Bell is tied, the Suffragan ſpeaking before them, as is accuſtomed in the baptizing of young Children, they all together do anſwer, and give the name to the Bell. The Bell having a new Garment put upon it, as is accuſtomed to be done unto the Chriſtians; after this they go unto ſumptuous Banquets, whereunto alſo the Goſſips are bidden, that thereby they might give the greater reward; and the Suffragans, with their Chaplains and other Miniſters, are ſumptuouſly fed. Yet doth not this ſuffice, but that the Suffragan alſo muſt have a reward, which they do call a ſmall gift or preſent: whereby it happeneth oftentimes, that even in ſmall Villages a hundred Florins are conſumed and ſpent in ſuch Chriſtenings. Which is not only ſuperſtitious, but alſo contrary unto Chriſtian Religion, a ſeducing of the ſimple People, and meer Extortion. Notwithſtanding the Biſhops, to enrich their Suffragans, do ſuffer theſe things, and others far worſe. Wherefore ſuch wicked and unlawful things ought to be aboliſhed.

Bells wear Coats.

A queſtion whether theſe Goſſips that chriſten Bells may marry together by the Canon Law?

Spoiling of the People by baptizing of Bells.

Complaint againſt Officials, and other Eccleſiaſtical Judges.

Againſt Officials.

THe Officials alſo of Archbiſhops for the moſt part are unlearned and unable Men; beſides that, Men of evil conditions, taking thought for nothing but only for Money. Alſo how corruptly they live, and continue in notorious crimes and tranſgreſſions, it is daily ſeen. Whereby the Laity, whom they ought to correct and puniſh for their Offences, and inſtruct in Chriſtian Godlineſs, are not in any point by them amended, but rather by them encouraged and confirmed in their Offences. Beſides this, the Laity are miſerably robbed and ſpoiled of their Goods by theſe light and vile Officials, in whoſe Conſciences there is no ſpark of Chriſtian Pity and Godlineſs, but only a wicked Deſire and Covetouſneſs. Which thing the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, if they were indeed ſuch as they are called, that is to ſay, the Paſtors and Shepherds of Chriſt, without doubt they would no longer ſuffer or commit Chriſt's Flock to wicked and offenſive Paſtors to be fed and nouriſhed.

How the Eccleſiaſtical Judges do annex certain ſpecial Cauſes, being Lay matters, unto their own juriſdiction, and will by no means releaſe the ſame.

Lay-matters brought into the ſpiritual Court for Money.

WHenſoever any Cauſes are pleaded in Judgment before an Eccleſiaſtical Judg, either for raviſhing of Virgins, or for Children unlawfully born out of Wedlock, or for Servants Wages, or any other matters concerning Widows, the Eccleſiaſtical Judges being called upon by the Superiors of the Laity which do contend, they will neither defer that Judgment, nor by any means will be entreated to remit them to their ordinary Juriſdiction.

The Gain that riſeth to the Clergy by falſe Slanders and Rumors.

Scolding matters brought to the ſpiritual Court for gain and lucre.

IT happeneth oftentimes that Men and Women, through ſiniſter and falſe Reports and Slanders, are brought before the Official or Eccleſiaſtical Judg, as Men guilty, and ſhall not be declared innocent before they have cleared themſelves by an Oath; which Purgation ſo made, they are reſtored again to their former eſtimation. And albeit that the Damages and Coſts ought to be repayed again unto ſuch as be ſo falſly accuſed, yet notwithſtanding the Innocents themſelves are forced to pay two gilderns and a quarter for their Letters of Abſolution. And this is the cauſe why that the Officials and other Eccleſiaſtical Judges do ſo greedily follow the Action of ſuch unlawful, falſe and ſlanderous Accuſations, challenging the hearing thereof only unto themſelves; which thing (no doubt) redoundeth to the great and moſt ſingular hurt and detriment of all Men: For oftentimes it happeneth, that Women fall together in contention, through anger, hatred, or ſome other affection, do ſpeak evil or ſlander one another, and outrage ſo much, that the one oftentimes accuſeth the other, either of Adultery or Witchery. Which thing being brought before the Official, ſhe which through her anger had ſo ſlandered the other, is forced by an Oath to excuſe and purge her ſelf, that whatſoever injurious or ſlanderous word ſhe had ſpoken, came not of any deliberate purpoſe or intent, but through wrath and diſpleaſure. In like manner the other, which is accuſed either of Adultery or Sorcery, is commanded by her Oath to declare her Innocency, that ſhe is not guilty of thoſe facts. So that it is evident unto all Men, that in ſuch caſes, whether they be guilty or not guilty, they muſt ſwear, if they will keep their good name and fame. Whereby not only the unlawful lucre of Gain and Money is ſought, but alſo wilful Perjury forced, and the Secular Power and Judges letted from the puniſhment thereof, ſo that contrary to all reaſon Offences do remain unpuniſhed.

Complaint againſt ſpiritual Judges, taking Secular Cauſes from the Civil Magiſtrate.

The wreſting of temporal Cauſes unto the ſpiritual Court for gain of money.

ALbeit there be many Cauſes ſo indifferent to both Juriſdictions, that they may be pleaded and puniſhed as well by the Civil Magiſtrate as Eccleſiaſtical Judg; notwithſtanding it happeneth oftentimes, that when as the Civil Magiſtrates would exerciſe their Office and Juriſdiction in this behalf, they are forbidden and letted by the Eccleſiaſtical Judges, under pain of Excommunication. Which thing if it ſhould long continue and be ſuffered, the Eccleſiaſtical Judges would ſhortly take away all manner of Cauſes from the Civil Magiſtrate, and his Juriſdiction; which is intolerable, and derogatory both unto the Emperor's Majeſty, and other States of the Empire. And albeit that by the Common Laws manifeſt Perjuries, Adulteries, Witchcrafts, and ſuch other like, may indifferently be puniſhed by Eccleſiaſtical or Civil Judges for the time being, ſo that prevention in this behalf taketh place; notwithſtanding the Eccleſiaſtical Judges go about to uſurp unto themſelves and their Juriſdiction all ſuch manner of Cauſes: which Burden and Grievance the Civil Juriſdiction and Power ought not to ſuffer.

A Complaint againſt Eccleſiaſtical Judges, intermeddling with Caſes of the Secular Court, but will not ſuffer their Caſes once to be touched of the other.

The Clergy may deal in Civil Cauſes, but the Civil Magiſtrate muſt not deal in theirs.

MOreover, the Eccleſiaſtical Judges ſay, that in ſuch caſes it is lawful for them to take prophane matters into their hands, if the Civil Magiſtrate be found negligent in executing of Juſtice: but contrariwiſe, they will not ſuffer that the like Order ſhould be kept with them, neither will they permit that in Eccleſiaſtical Matters any Man may complain unto the Civil Magiſtrate for lack of Juſtice, and require the adminiſtration of Juſtice at his hand. Albeit, they do define all Laws generally common, and determine how the Canon Laws may help and aſſiſt the Civil, and contrariwiſe the Civil Laws the Canon.

Complaint againſt certain Miſorders of Cathedral Churches, for uſing double Puniſhment for one Offence againſt the Law.

K. Hen. 8.

FOraſmuch as it is forbidden both by God's Law and Man's, that any Man ſhould be beaten with two Rods, that is to ſay, to be puniſhed with two kinds of Torments; worthily therefore do all wiſe Men deteſt and abhor the odious Statutes of divers Cathedral Churches, whereby Murderers, both Men and Women, and other, as well light as grievous Offenders, have been hitherto vexed and tormented: for hitherto it hath been accuſtomed, that ſuch as were guilty of Murther, and ſuch other Crimes, (which they call Caſes reſerved unto the Biſhops) after they had made their Auricular Confeſſion, were compelled (to their great ignominy and ſhame) to do penance in the ſight of all the People: which Penance were not ſo much to be diſallowed, bearing ſome ſemblance of the Inſtitution of the Primitive Church, if ſo be it theſe buſy Officials (being contented therewith) would not extort more and greater Sums of Money than were right and lawful, and ſo puniſh thoſe Offenders with double puniſhment; wherewithal it is to be marvelled how many are offended and grieved. How wicked a thing this is, and how far it differeth from Chriſt's Inſtitution, we will refer it to every good Conſcience to judge.

Certain Orders of Cathedral Churches reprovable.

Complaint of Officials for maintaining unlawful Uſury.

FUrthermore, the Officials, being allured through the greedy and unſatiable deſire of Money, do not only not forbid unlawful Uſuries and Gains of Money, but alſo ſuffer and maintain the ſame. Moreover, they taking a yearly Stipend and Penſion, do ſuffer the Clergy and other religious Perſons unlawfully to dwell with their Concubines and Harlots, and to beget Children by them. Both which things how great peril, offence, and detriment they do bring both unto Body and Soul, every Man may plainly ſee (ſo that it need not to be rehearſed) except he will make himſelf as blind as a Mole.

Officials taking Penſions of Prieſts for keeping Concubines.

Complaint of Officials permitting unlawful cohabitation with other, when the Husband or Wife are long abſent.

FUrthermore, where it ſo happeneth (as it doth oftentimes) that either the good Man, or the good Wife, by means of War, or ſome other Vow, hath taken in hand ſome long Journey, and ſo tarrieth longer than ſerveth the appetite of the other, the Official, taking a reward of the other, giveth licenſe to the Party to dwell with any other Perſon, not having firſt regard, or making inquiſition whether the Husband or Wife, being abſent, be in health or dead. And becauſe theſe their doings ſhould not be evil ſpoken of, they name it a Toleration of Sufferance, not without great offence to all Men, and to the great contempt of holy Matrimony.

Complaint of Canons in Cathedral Churches, which have their Biſhop ſworn unto them before he be choſen.

THis is alſo unlawful and plainly wicked, that the Canons of Cathedral Churches, in whoſe hand the principal part of Eccleſiaſtical Judgments, Synods, and Cenſures do conſiſt, and the Canons of other Collegiate Churches, which have power and authority to chuſe their Superior and Biſhop, will chuſe none to their Biſhop, except he bind himſelf firſt with an Oath, and plainly ſwear, yea, and oftentimes is bound by Bond and Inſtruments, ſealed with their Seals, to them and their Eccleſiaſtical Judges, that in no matter, be it never ſo grievous, intolerable, or diſhoneſt, he ſhall be againſt them; and if it happen at any time that they do offend, they may do it alſo without puniſhment for him.

The practice in Chapters of Cathedral Churches to make the Biſhops ſworn unto them.

Complaint

K. Hen. 8.

Complaint againſt Incorporations or Impropriations, and other pilling of the People by Church-Men.

The inconvenience of Impropriations.

MAny Pariſh-Churches are ſubject unto Monaſteries, and to the Parſons of other Churches, by means of Incorporations, (as they call them) or otherwiſe, which they are bound alſo, according to the Canon Laws, to foreſee and look unto by themſelves, when as they do put them forth unto others to be governed, reſerving for the moſt part unto themſelves the whole Stipend of the Benefits and Tithes; and moreover aggravate and charge the ſame with ſo great Penſions, that the Hireling-Prieſts, and other Miniſters of the Church, cannot have thereupon a decent and competent living. Whereby it cometh to paſs, that theſe Hireling-Prieſts (for that they muſt needs have whereupon to live) do with unlawful exactions miſerably ſpoil and devour the poor Sheep committed unto them; and conſume all their ſubſtance. For when as the Sacraments of the Altar and of Baptiſm are to be adminiſtred, or when the firſt, the ſeventh, the thirtieth, and Year-day muſt be kept; when Auricular Confeſſion cometh to be heard, the Dead to be buried, or any other Ceremony whatſoever about the Funeral is to be done, they will not do it freely, but extort and exact ſo much Money, as the miſerable Communalty is ſcarce able to diſburſe: and daily they do increaſe and augment theſe their Exactions, driving the ſimple poor People to the payment thereof, by threatning them with Excommunication, or by other ways compelling them to be at charge: which otherwiſe through poverty are not able to maintain Obſequies, Year-minds, and ſuch other like Ceremonies, as to the Funerals of the Dead be appertaining.

Buying and ſelling of Burials complained of.

Gain gotten by telling Burial.

IT is ordained by the Pope's Canons, That Burial in the Church ſhould be denied only unto them which being known to be manifeſt and notorious Offenders, have departed this life without receiving of the Sacrament. But the Clergy, not regarding thoſe Decrees, will not ſuffer ſuch as by chance are drowned, killed, ſlain with Falls or Fire, or otherwiſe by chance have ended their lives, (albeit it be not evident that they were in deadly Sin) to be buried in the Churches, until ſuch time as the Wives, Children, or Friends of thoſe Men ſo dead, do with great Sums of Money purchaſe and buy the Burial of them in the Church-yard.

Chaſte and continent Prieſts compelled to pay Tribute for Concubines.

Concubines permitted for Money, and chaſte Prieſts compelled to pay Tribute for Concubines.

ALſo in many places the Biſhops and their Officials do not only ſuffer Prieſts to have Concubines, ſo that they pay certain Sums of Money, but alſo compell continent and chaſte Prieſts, which live without Concubines, to pay Tribute for Concubines, affirming that the Biſhop hath need of Money: which being paid, it ſhall be lawful for them either to live chaſte, or to keep Concubines. How wicked a thing this is, every Man doth well underſtand and know.

THeſe, with many other Burthens and Grievances more, to the number of an hundred, the Secular States of Germany delivered to the Pope's Legate; having (as they ſaid) many more and more grievous Grievances beſides theſe, which had likewiſe much need of redreſs: but becauſe they would not exceed the limits of reaſonable brevity, they would content themſelves (they ſaid) with theſe aforeſaid hundred, reſerving the reſt to a more apt and more convenient opportunity; ſtedfaſtly truſting and hoping, that when thoſe hundred Grievances already by them declared, ſhould be aboliſhed, the other would alſo decay and fall with them. Of the which foreſaid Grievances and Complaints here is moreover to be noted, that a great part was offered up before to the Emperor at the Council of Worms; but becauſe no redreſs thereof did follow, therefore the Secular States of Germany thought good to exhibit the ſame now again, with divers more annexed thereunto, to Cheregatus, the Pope's Legat in this preſent Aſſembly of Noremberg, deſiring him to preſent the ſame to Pope Adrian. This was about the year of our Lord 1523. Which being done, the Aſſembly of Noremberg brake up for a time, and was prorogued to the next year following.

The Diet of Noremberg began anno 1522, and brake up Anno 1523.

In this mean time Pope Adrian died. After him ſucceeded Pope Clement the Seventh, who the next year following, which was Anno 1524. ſent down his Legate, Cardinal Campeius, unto the Council of the German Princes aſſembled again at Noremberg, about the Month of March, with Letters alſo to Duke Frederick, full of many fair Petitions and ſharp Complaints, &c. But as touching the Grievances above-mentioned, no word nor meſſage at all was ſent, neither by Campeius, nor by any other. Thus, where any thing was to be complained of againſt Luther, either for ſuppreſſion of the Liberty of the Goſpel, or for upholding of the Pope's Dignity, the Pope was ever ready with all diligence to call upon the Princes: but where any redreſs was to be required for the publick wealth of Chriſtian People, or touching the neceſſary reformation of the Church, herein the Pope neither giveth ear or anſwer.

The death of Pope Adrian. Pope Clement the Seventh. Cardinal Campeius the Pope's Legate ſent into Germany. The Pope only ſeeketh his own dignity, but publick Reformation never tendreth.

And thus having diſcourſed ſuch matters occurrent between the Pope and Princes of Germany, at the Synod of Noremberg, let us now proceed, returning again to the Story of Luther, of whom ye heard before, how he was kept ſecret and ſolitary for a time, by the advice and conveyance of certain Nobles in Saxony, becauſe of the Emperor's Edict above mentioned. In the mean time, while Luther had thus abſented himſelf out of Wittenberg, Andreas Caroloſtadius, proceeding more roughly and eagerly in Cauſes of Religion, had ſtirred up the People to throw down Images in the Temples, beſides other things more. For the which cauſe Luther, returning again into the City, greatly miſliked the order of their doings, and reproved the raſhneſs of Caroloſtadius, declaring that their proceedings herein were not orderly, but that Pictures and Images ought firſt to be thrown out of the Hearts and Conſciences of Men; and that the People ought firſt to be taught, that we are ſaved before God, and pleaſe him only by Faith; and that Images ſerve to no purpoſe: This done, and the People well inſtructed, there was no danger in Images, but they would fall of their own accord. Not that he repugned to the contrary (he ſaid) as tho he would maintain Images to ſtand or to be ſuffered: but that this ought to be done by the Magiſtrate, and not by force, upon every private Man's head, without order and authority. Ex Joan. Sleid. lib. 3.

Caroloſtadius caſteth down Images in Wittenberg.

Luther miſliketh caſting out of Images by ſtrong hand.

Ex Joan. Sleid. lib. 3.

Furthermore, Luther writing of Caroloſtadius, affirmed, that he alſo joined with the ſentence of them, which began then to ſpread about certain parts of Saxony, ſaying, that they were taught of God that all Wickedneſs being utterly ſuppreſſed, and all the wicked doers ſlain, a new full perfection of all things muſt be ſet up, and the Innocent only to enjoy all things, &c.

The cauſes diſcuſſed why Luther permitted Images to ſtand.

The cauſe why Luther ſo ſtood againſt that violent throwing down of Images, and againſt Caroloſtadius, ſeemeth partly to riſe of this, by reaſon that Pope Adrian, in his Letters ſent to the Princes and States of Germany, doth grievouſly complain and charge the Sect of Luther for Sedition and Tumults, and Rebellion againſt Magiſtrates, as ſubverters and deſtroyers of all Order and Obedience, as appeareth by the words of the Pope's Letter before expreſſed: therefore Martin Luther, to ſtop the mouth of ſuch ſlanderers, and to prevent ſuch ſiniſter ſuſpitions, was enforced to take this way which he did, that is, to proceed as much as he might by Order and Authority.

Two things to be noted in Luther for bearing with Images.

Wherein are to be noted by the way two ſpecial points touching the doctrine and doings of Martin Luther, eſpecially for all ſuch who in theſe our days, now abuſing the name and authority of Luther, think themſelves to be good Lutherans, if they ſuffer Images ſtill to remain in Temples, and admit ſuch things in the Church, which themſelves do wiſh to be away.

The firſt is, the manner how and after what ſort Luther did ſuffer ſuch Images to ſtand: For although he aſſented not, that the vulgar and private Multitude tumultuouſly by violence ſhould rap them down; yet that is no argument now for the Magiſtrate to let them ſtand.

And tho he allowed not the Miniſters to ſtir up the People by forcible means to promote Religion; yet that argueth not thoſe Magiſtrates to be good Lutherans, which may and ſhould remove them, and will not.

The ſecond Point to be noted is, To conſider the cauſe why that Luther did ſo ſtand with ſtanding of Images; which cauſe was Time, and not his own Judgment: for albeit in Judgment he wiſhed them away, yet Time ſo ſerved not therethereunto then, as it serveth now: For then the Doctrine of Luther first beginning to spring, and being but in the blade, was not yet known whereto it tended, nor to what it would grow, but rather was suspected to tend to disobedience and sedition; and therefore the Pope hearing of the doings of Carolostadius in Wittenberg, and of other like, took his ground thereby to charge the Sect of Luther with sedition, uproars, and dissolute liberty of Life. And this was the cause why Luther compelled then by necessity of time to save his Doctrine from slander of sedition and tumult being laid to him by the Pope, (as ye have heard) was so much offended with Carolostadius and others, for their violence used against Images. For otherwise had it not been for the Pope's Accusations, there is no doubt but Luther would have been as well contented with abolishing of Images, and other Monuments of Popery, as he was at the same time contented to write to the Friars Augustines for abrogating of private Masses. And therefore as Luther in this doing is to be excused, the circumstances considered; so the like excuse perhaps will not serve the overmuch curious imitation of certain Lutherans in this present Age now; which, considering only the fact of Luther, do not mark the purpose of Luther, neither do expend the circumstances and time of his doings: being not much unlike to the ridiculous Imitators of King Alexander the Great, which thought it not sufficient to follow him in his vertues, but they would also counterfeit him in his stooping, and all other gestures besides. But to these living now in the Church, in another age than Luther did, it may seem (after my mind) sufficient to follow the same way after Luther, or to walk with Luther to the Kingdom of Christ, tho they jump not also in every footstep of his, and keep even the same pace and turnings in all points as he did.

κοζηλία. Lutherans of this age.

How Luther is to be followed.

Luther not to be contemned for one little blemish.

And contrarywise, of the other sort, much less are they to be commended, which running as much on the contrary string, are so precise, that because of one small blemish, or for a little stooping of Luther in the Sacrament, therefore they give clean over the reading of Luther, and fall almost in utter contempt of his Books. Whereby is declared, not so much the niceness and curiousness of these our days, as the hindrance that cometh thereby to the Church is greatly to be lamented. For albeit the Church of Christ (praised be the Lord) is not unprovided of sufficient plenty of worthy and learned Writers, able to instruct in matters of Doctrine; yet in the chief points of our consolation, where the glory of Christ, and the power of his passion, and strength of faith is to be opened to our Conscience; and where the Soul, wrestling for death and life, standeth in need of serious consolation, the same may be said of Martin Luther, among all the other variety of Writers, that St. Cyprian was wont to say of Tertullian, Da magistrum, Give me my Master. And albeit that Luther went a little awry, and dissented from Zuinglius in this one matter of the Sacrament; yet in all other states of Doctrines they did accord, as appeared in the Synod holden at Marpurg, by Prince Philip Lantgrave of Hesse, which was in the year of our Lord 1529. where both Luther and Zuinglius were present, and conferring together, agreed in these Articles:

Commendation of Martin Luthers Doctrine.

Cyprian so much delighted in reading of Tertullian, that whensoever he called for his Book, he had reach him his Master.

1. On the Unity and Trinity of God. 2. In the Incarnation of the Word. 3. In the Passion and Resurrection of Christ. 4. In the Article of Original Sin. 5. In the Article of Faith in Christ Jesus. 6. That this Faith cometh not of Merits, but by the gift of God. 7. That this Faith is our Righteousness. 8. Touching the externe Word. 9. Likewise they agreed in the Articles of Baptism. 10. Of good Works. 11. Of Confession. 12. Of Magistrates. 13. Of Mens Traditions. 14. Of Baptism of Infants. 15. Lastly, concerning the Doctrine of the Lord's Supper: This they did believe and hold; first, that both the kinds thereof are to be ministred to the People according to Christ's institution; and that the Mass is no such work for the which a Man may obtain grace both for the Quick and the Dead. Item, that the Sacrament (which they call of the Altar) is a true Sacrament of the Body and Blood of the Lord. Item, that the spiritual manducation of his Body and Blood is necessary for every Christian Man. And furthermore, that the use of the Sacrament tendeth to the same effect as doth the Word, given and ordained of Almighty God, that thereby infirm Consciences may be stirred to belief by the Holy-Ghost, &c. Ex Paral. Abbat. Ursp.

The consent between Luther and Zuinglius in cases of Doctrine.

In all these Sums of Doctrine above recited, Luther and Zuinglius did consent and agree; neither were their opinions so different in the matter of the Lord's Supper, but that in the principal points they accorded. For if the question be asked of them both, What is the material substance of the Sacrament, which our outward Senses do behold and feel? they will both confess Bread, and not the Accidents only of Bread. Further, if the question be asked, whether Christ be there present? they will both confess his true presence to be there, only in the manner of presence they differ. Again, ask, Whether the material substance laid before our eyes in the Sacrament, is to be worshipped? they will both deny it, and judg it Idolatry. And likewise for Transubstantiation, and the Sacrifice of the Mass, they both do abhor, and do deny the same: as also the Communion to be in both kinds administred, they do both assent and grant.

K. Hen 8.

Luther and Zuinglius agree in the presence, only in the manner of the presence they differ.

Only their difference is in this, concerning the sence and meaning of the words of Christ, Hoc est corpus meum, This is my Body, &c. which words Luther expoundeth to be taken nakedly and simply as the letter standeth, without trope or figure; and therefore holdeth the Body and Blood of Christ truly to be in the Bread and Wine, and so also to be received with the mouth. Uldricus Zuinglius, with Joannes Oecolampadius, and other more, do interpret these words otherwise; as to be taken not literally, but to have a spiritual meaning, and to be expounded by a trope or figure, so that the sence of these words, This is my Body, is thus to be expounded: This signifieth my Body and Blood. Ex Joan. Sleid. lib. 5. With Luther consented the Saxons, with the other side of Zuinglius went the Helvetians. And as time did grow, so the division of these opinions increased in sides, and spread in farther Realms and Countries: the one part being called, of Luther, Lutherans; the other having the name of Sacramentaries. Notwithstanding, in this one unity of opinion, both the Lutherans and Sacramentaries do accord and agree, that the Bread and Wine there present is not transubstantiate into the Body and Blood of Christ, (as is said) but is a true Sacrament of the Body and Blood.

But hereof sufficient, touching this division between the Lutherans and the Zuinglians. In which division, if there have been any defect in Martin Luther, yet is that no cause why either the Papists may greatly triumph, or why the Protestants should despise Luther: For neither is the Doctrine of Luther touching the Sacrament so gross, that it maketh much with the Papists; nor yet so discrepant from us, that therefore he ought to be exploded. And tho a full reconciliation of this difference cannot well be made, (as some have gone about to do) yet let us give to Luther a moderate interpretation; and if we will not make things better, yet let us not make them worse than they be, and let us bear, if not with the manner, yet at least with the time of his teaching; and finally, let it not be noted in us, that we should seem to differ in Charity more (as Bucer said) than we do in Doctrine. But of this hereafter more (Christ willing) when we come to the History of John Frith.

Lutherans and Zuinglians differ more in Charity than in Doctrine.

They which write the Life of Saints, use to describe and extoll their holy Life and godly Vertues, and also to set forth such Miracles as be wrought in them by God. Whereof there lacketh no plenty in M. Luther, but rather time lacketh to us, and opportunity to tarry upon them, having such haste to other things. Otherwise what a miracle might this seem to be, for one Man, and a poor Friar, creeping out of a blind Cloister, to be set up against the Pope, the Universal Bishop, and God's mighty Vicar in Earth; to withstand all his Cardinals, yea, and to sustain the malice and hatred almost of the whole World being set against him; and to work that against the said Pope, Cardinals, and Church of Rome, which no King nor Emperor could ever do, yea, durst never attempt, nor all the learned Men before him could ever compass. Which miraculous work of God I recount nothing inferior to the miracle of David overthrowing great Goliah. Wherefore if Miracles do make a Saint, (after the Pope's definition) what lacketh in Martin Luther, but Age and Time only, to make him a Saint? who standing openly against the Pope, Cardinals, and Prelates of the Church, in number so many, in power so terrible, in practice so crafty, having Emperors and all the Kings of the Earth against him; who teaching and preaching Christ the space of nine and twenty years, could without touch of his Enemies,

A notable miracle of God to overthrow the Pope by a poor Friar.

K.Hen. 8.

Three miracles noted in Luther.

mies, ſo quietly in his own Country where he was born, die and ſleep in peace. In the which Martin Luther, firſt to ſtand againſt the Pope was a great Miracle; to prevail againſt the Pope, a greater; ſo to die untouched, may ſeem greateſt of all, eſpecially having ſo many Enemies as he had. Again, neither is it any thing leſs miraculous, to conſider what manifold dangers he eſcaped beſides: as when a certain Jew was appointed to come to deſtroy him by poyſon, yet was it ſo the will of God, that Luther had warning thereof before, and the face of the Jew ſent to him by picture, whereby he knew him, and avoided the Peril.

Martin Luther miraculouſly preſerved.

Another time, as he was ſitting in a certain place upon his Stool, a great Stone there was in the Vault over his head where he did ſit; which being ſtaid miraculouſly ſo long as he was ſitting, as ſoon as he was up, immediately fell upon the place where he ſate, able to have cruſh'd him all in pieces, if it had light upon him.

Martin Luther vehement and mighty in Prayer.

And what ſhould I ſpeak of his Prayers, which were ſo ardent unto Chriſt, that (as Melanchon writeth) they which ſtood under his Window where he ſtood praying, might ſee his tears falling and dropping down. Again, with ſuch power he prayed, that he (as himſelf confeſſeth) had obtained of the Lord, that ſo long as he lived, the Pope ſhould not prevail in his Country; after his death (ſaid he) let them pray who could.

A miraculous work of the Lord in delivering a young Man out of the Devils danger by Chriſtian Prayer.

And as touching the marvellous works of the Lord, wrought hereby Men, if it be true which is credibly reported by the Learned, what miracle can be more miraculous, than that which is declared of a young Man about Wittenberg, who, being kept bare and needy by his Father, was tempted by a way of Sorcery to bargain with a Devil, or a Familiar (as they call him) to yield himſelf body and ſoul into the Devil's power, upon condition to have his wiſh ſatisfied with Money. So that upon the ſame an Obligation was made by the young Man, written with his own blood, and given to the Devil: this caſe you ſee how horrible it was, and how damnable; now hear what followed. Upon the ſudden wealth and alteration of this young Man, the matter firſt being noted, began afterward more and more to be ſuſpected, and at length, after long and great admiration, was brought unto Martin Luther to be examined. The young Man, whether for ſhame or fear, long denied to confeſs, and would be known of nothing; yet God ſo wrought, being ſtronger than the Devil, that he uttered unto Luther the whole ſubſtance of the cauſe, as well touching the Money, as the Obligation. Luther underſtanding the matter, and pitying the lamentable ſtate of the Man, willed the whole Congregation to pray, and he himſelf ceaſed not with his prayers to labour; ſo that the Devil was compelled at the laſt to throw in his Obligation at the window, and bad him take it again unto him. Which Narration, if it be ſo true, as certainly it is of him reported, I ſee not the contrary, but that this may well ſeem comparable with the greateſt miracle in Chriſt's Church that was ſince the Apoſtles time.

Furthermore, as he was mighty in his Prayers, ſo in his Sermons; God gave him ſuch a grace, that when he preached, they which heard him thought every one his own Temptation ſeverally to be noted and touched. Whereof, when ſignification was given unto him by his Friends, and he demanded how that could be; mine own manifold temptations (ſaid he) and experiences are the cauſe thereof. For this thou muſt underſtand (good Reader) that Luther from his tender years was much beaten and exerciſed with ſpiritual Conflicts, as Melanchon in deſcribing his Life doth teſtify. Alſo Hieron. Wellerus, Scholar and Diſciple of the ſaid Martin Luther, recordeth, that he oftentimes heard Luther his Maſter thus report of himſelf, That he had been aſſaulted and vexed with all kinds of temptations, ſaving only one, which was with Covetouſneſs; with this Vice he was never (ſaid he) in all his life troubled, nor once tempted,

Ex Phil. Melanch. in orat. funebri. Ex Hieron. Wellero.

Luther never in all his life tempted with covetouſneſs.

Martin Luther how long he lived and taught.

And hitherto concerning the Life of Martin Luther, who lived till the year of his age ſixty three, continued writing and preaching about twenty nine years. As touching the order of his death, the words of Melanchon be theſe:

The Sickneſs of Luther.

In the year of our Lord 1546, and the 17*th* of February, Dr. Martin Luther ſickned a little before Supper of his accuſtomed Malady, to wit of the oppreſſion of humors in the orifice or opening of the Stomach, whereof I remember I have ſeen him oft diſeaſed in this place. This Sickneſs took him after Supper, with the which he vehemently contending, required ſeceſs into a By-chamber, and there he reſted on his bed two hours, all which time his pains increaſed: And as Dr. Jonas was lying in his Chamber, Luther awaked, and prayed him to riſe, and to call up Ambroſe his Childrens Schoolmaſter, to make fire in another Chamber. Into the which when he was newly entred, Albert Earl of Mansfield, with his Wife, and divers others, (whoſe names in theſe Letters for haſte were not expreſſed) at that inſtant came into his Chamber. Finally, feeling his fatal hour to approach, before nine of the clock in the morning, Feb. 18. he commended himſelf to God with this devout Prayer:

The quiet death of Luther.

The Prayer of Luther at his death.

The Prayer of Luther at his death.

MY heavenly Father, eternal and merciful God, thou haſt manifeſted unto me thy dear Son, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, I have taught him, I have known him, I love him as my Life, my Health, and my Redemption; whom the Wicked have perſecuted, maligned, and with injury afflicted. Draw my Soul to thee.

After this he ſaid as enſueth, thrice: I commend my Spirit into thy hands, thou haſt redeemed me, O God of Truth. God ſo loved the World, that he gave his only Son, that all thoſe that believe in him ſhould have life everlaſting. John 3.

Having repeated oftentimes his prayers, he was called to God, unto whom ſo faithfully he commended his Spirit, to enjoy, no doubt, the bleſſed Society of the Patriarchs, Prophets, and Apoſtles in the Kingdom of God the Father, the Son, and the Holy-Ghoſt. Let us now love the memory of this Man, and the Doctrine that he hath taught. Let us learn to be modeſt and meek: let us conſider the wretched Calamities and marvellous Changes, that ſhall follow this Miſhap and doleful Chance. I beſeech thee, O Son of God, crucified for us, and reſuſcitated Emmanuel, govern, conſerve, and defend thy Church. Hec Melanchon.

The death of Duke Frederick.

Fredericus Prince Elector died long before Luther, in the year of our Lord 1525, leaving no iſſue behind him, for that he lived a ſingle life, and was never married: wherefore after him ſucceeded John Frederick Duke of Saxony.

Mention was made a little before of the Miniſters of Strasburgh, which becauſe of their marriage were in trouble, and cited by the Biſhop to appear before him, and there to be judged, without the precinct of the City of Strasburgh; whereas there had been a contrary order taken before between the Biſhop and the City, that the Biſhop ſhould execute no judgment upon any, but under ſome of the Magiſtrates of the ſaid City of Strasburgh. Whereupon the Senate and the Citizens taking into their hands the cauſe of theſe married Miniſters, in defence of their own Right and Liberties, wrote (as is ſaid) to their Biſhop of Strasburgh, and cauſed the Judgment thereof a while to be ſtayed. By reaſon whereof the matter was brought at length before Cardinal Campeius, Legate, ſent by Pope Clement to the Aſſembly of Noremberg, Anno 1524.

Diſceptation between the Senate of Strasburgh and Cardinal Campeius, about married Miniſters.

The chief doer in this matter was one Thomas Murnerus, a Franciſcan Friar, who had commenced a grievous complaint againſt the Senate and City of Strasburgh, before the foreſaid Cardinal Campeius. Wherefore the Senate, to purge themſelves, ſent their Embaſſadors, thus clearing their cauſe, and anſwering to their accuſation: That they neither had been nor would be any Let to the Biſhop, but had ſignified to him before by their Letters, that whatſoever he could lay againſt thoſe married Prieſts, conſonant to the Law of God, they would be no ſtay, but rather a furtherance unto him to proceed in his action. But the Senate herein was not a little grieved, that the Biſhop, contrary to the Order and Compact which was taken between him and them, did call the ſaid Miniſters out of the Liberties of their City; for ſo it was between them agreed, that no Eccleſiaſtical Perſon ſhould be adjudged but under ſome Judg of their own City. But now contrary to their ſaid agreement, the Biſhops called thoſe Miniſters out of their Liberties; and ſo the Miniſters, claiming the Right and Privilege of the City, were condemned, their cauſe being neither heard nor known. And now if the Senate ſhould ſhew themſelves any thing more ſharp or rigorous unto thoſe Miniſters, claiming the Right of the City, the People, no doubt, would not take it well, but haply would riſe up in ſome commotion againſt them in the quarrel and defence of their Franchiſes and Liberties.

Murnerus a Friar, an accuſer of married Miniſters.

The Senate of Strasburgh purge themſelves to Cardinal Campeius.

The Biſhop of Strasburgh breaketh the Agreement made, and the Liberties of the City.

And

And where it is objected, that they receive Prieſts and men of the Clergy into the Freedom and Protection of their City: to this they anſwered, That they did nothing herein, but that which was correſpondent to the ancient uſage and manner of the City before: and moreover, that it was the Biſhops own requeſt and deſire made unto them ſo to do.

The anſwer of Campeius to the Ambaſſadors. The Popes Prelates be lawleſs, and can break no order whatſoever they do.

To this the Cardinal again, adviſing well the Letters of the Biſhop, and the whole order of the matter which was ſent unto him, declared, that he right well underſtood by the Letters ſent, that the Miniſters indeed (as the Embaſſadours ſaid) were called out from the Freedom and Liberties of the City, and yet no order of Law was broken therein; foraſmuch as the Biſhop (ſaid he) had there no leſs power and authority, than if he were his own Vicar Delegate, and therefore he deſired them, that they would aſſiſt the Biſhop in puniſhing the foreſaid Miniſters, &c.

The Ambaſſadors Reply againſt the Cardinal.

After much other talk and reaſoning on both Parties, wherein the Ambaſſadours argued in defence of their Freedom, that the Judgment ſhould not be tranſferred out of the City: Among other Communication, they inferred moreover, and declared, how in the City of Strausburg were many, yea, the moſt part of the Clergy, which lived viciouſly and wickedly with their Strumpets and Harlots, whom they kept in their Houſes, to the great offence of the People, ſhame to Chriſt's Church, and pernitious Example of others; and yet the Biſhop would never once ſtir to ſee any puniſhing or correction thereof. Wherefore if the Senate (ſaid the Ambaſſadors) ſhould permit the Biſhop to extend his Cruelty and Extremity againſt theſe married Miniſters, for not obſerving the Biſhop of Rome's Law, and leave the other notorious Whoremaſters, which break the Law of God, to eſcape unpuniſhed, doubtleſs it would redound to their great danger and peril, not only before God, but alſo among the Commons of their City, ready to riſe upon them.

Holy Matrimony puniſhed, wicked Whoredom eſcapeth.

Campeius anſwereth.

To this Campeius anſwered, What Compoſition or Bargain was betwixt the Biſhop and them, he knew not, but ſurely the act of the one was manifeſt, and needed no great Tryal in Law of proving and confeſſing, and therefore they were ſequeſtred and abandoned from the Communion of the Church, ipſo facto. As for the other ſort of them, which keep Harlots and Concubines, altho (ſaid he) it be not well done, yet doth it not excuſe the enormity of their Marriage. Neither was he ignorant, but that it was the manner of the Biſhops of Germany, for Money to wink at Prieſts Lemans, and the ſame alſo was evil done indeed: And further, that the time ſhould come when they ſhall be called to an account for the ſame: but yet nevertheleſs it is not ſufferable that Prieſts therefore ſhould have Wives. And if Compariſon ſhould be made (ſaid he) much greater offence it were, a Prieſt to have a Wife, than to have and keep at home many Harlots. His Reaſon was this; for they that keep Harlots (ſaid he) as it is naught that they do, ſo do they acknowledge their ſin: the other perſwade themſelves that they do well, and ſo continue ſtill without Repentance, or Conſcience of their Fact. All men (ſaid he) cannot be chaſte, as John the Baptiſt was; yet can it not be proved by any example, to be lawful for Prieſts, profeſſing Chaſtity, to leave their ſingle life, and to marry: no not the Greeks themſelves, which in Rights be differing from us, do give this Liberty to their own Prieſts to marry: wherefore he prayed them to give their aid to the Biſhop in this behalf.

Ipſo facto, that is, upon the very doing of the act, without any farther judgment or tryal by the Law.

A fit reaſon for a carnal Cardinal; better it is to have many Concubines than one Wife.

Touching the Greek Church this Cardinal ſpeaketh untruly.

The Ambaſſadors Reply.

Whereunto the Ambaſſadors replied again, ſaying, That if he would firſt puniſh the Whoremaſters, then might the Senate aſſiſt him the better in correcting the other: but the Cardinal was ſtill inſtant upon them, that firſt they ſhould aſſiſt their Biſhop, and then if the Biſhop would not puniſh Whoredom, he would come thither himſelf and ſee them puniſhed accordingly.

The Aſſembly or Dyet at Ratiſbone.

This Cardinal Campeius, how he was ſent by Pope Clement the ſixth to the ſecond Aſſemby or Dyet of Norenberg, Anno 1524, and what was there done by the ſaid Cardinal, is before ſignified. After this Council of Norenberg, immediately followed another Sitting at Ratisbone, where were preſent Ferdinandus, Campeius, the Cardinal of Salisburg, the two Dukes of Bavaria, the Biſhops of Trent and Ratisbone; alſo the Legats of the Biſhops, Bambergh, Spires, Strausburgh, Ausburgh, Conſtance, Baſil, Friſing, Paſſame, and Brixime. By whom in the ſaid Aſſembly it was concluded; K. Hen. 8.

That foraſmuch as the Emperor, at the requeſt of Pope Leo, had condemned, by his publick Edict ſet forth at Worms, the Doctrine of Luther for erroneous and wicked; and alſo it was agreed upon in both the Aſſemblies of Norenbergh, that the ſaid Edict ſhould be obeyed of all men; they likewiſe, at the requeſt of Cardinal Campeius, do will and command the foreſaid Edict to be obſerved through all their Fines and Precincts: That the Goſpel, and all other holy Scriptures, ſhould be taught in Churches according to the Interpretation of the ancient Forefathers: That all they which revive any old Hereſies before condemned, or teach any new thing contumelious, either againſt Chriſt, his bleſſed Mother, and holy Saints, or which may breed any occaſion of Sedition, are to be puniſhed according to the Tenour of the Edict aboveſaid: That none be admitted to preach without the Licence of his Ordinary: That they which be already admitted, ſhall be examined how, and what they preach: That the Laws which Campeius is about to ſet forth for Reformation of manners, ſhall be obſerved: That in the Sacraments, in the Maſs, and all other things, there ſhall be no Innovation, but all things to ſtand as in fore-time they did: That all they which approach to the Lord's Supper without Confeſſion and Abſolution, or do eat Fleſh on days forbidden, or which do run out of their Order; alſo Prieſts, Deacons, and Sub-deacons, that be married, ſhall be puniſhed: That nothing ſhall be printed without conſent of the Magiſtrate: That no Book of Luther, or any Lutheran ſhall be printed or ſold: That they of their Juriſdiction, which ſtudy in the Univerſity of Wittenberg, ſhall every one repair home within three Months after the publiſhing hereof, or elſe turn to ſome other place free from the Infection of Luther, under pain of confiſcating all their Goods, and loſing their Inheritance: That no Benefice, nor other office of teaching, be given to any Student of that Univerſity. Item, That certain Inquiſitors fit for the ſame, be appointed to enquire and examine the Premiſſes. Item, leſt it may be ſaid, that this Faction of Luther taketh his origen of the corrupt Life of Prieſts, the ſaid Campeius, with other his Aſſiſtants in the ſaid Convocation of Ratisbone, chargeth and commandeth, that Prieſts live honeſtly, go in decent Apparel, play not the Merchants, haunt not the Taverns, be not covetous, nor take money for their Miniſtration; ſuch as keep Concubines to be removed; the number alſo of Holy-days to be diminiſhed, &c.

Popiſh Decrees made at the Council of Ratisbone.

Campeius' miſſed of his purpoſe in Germany.

Theſe things would Campeius have had Enacted in a full Council, and with the conſents of all the Empire: but when he could not bring that to paſs, by reaſon that the minds of divers were gone from the Pope; he was fain therefore to get the ſame ratified in this particular Conventicle, with the Aſſents of theſe Biſhops above reherſed.

Theſe things thus hitherto diſcourſed, which fully may be ſeen in the Commentaries of John Sleiden, it remaineth next after the Story of Martin Luther, ſomewhat to adjoyn likewiſe touching the Hiſtory of Zuinglius, and of the Helvetians. But before I come to the explication of this Story, it ſhall not be inconvenient, firſt to give ſome little touch of the Towns, called Pages, of theſe Helvetians, and of their League and Confederation firſt begun amongſt them.

The Hiſtory of the Helvetians or Switzers, how they firſt recovered their Liberty, and after were joyned in League together.

THE Helvetians, whom otherwiſe we call Switzers, are divided principally into thirteen Pages. The Names of whom are Tigurini, Bernates, Lucernates, Urani, Suicenſes, Untervaldii, Tugiani, Glareanti, Baſilienſes, Solodurii, Friburgii, Scafuſiani, Apecelenſes. Furthermore, to theſe be added ſeven other Pages, albeit not with ſuch a full Bond as the other be, together conjoyned; which be theſe: Rheti, Lepontii, Seduni, Veragri, Sangalli, Mulluſiani, Rotulenſes. Of theſe thirteen confederate Pages above recited, theſe three were the firſt, to wit, Urania, Suicenſes, and Silvanii, or (as ſome call them) them) Untervaldii, which joyned themſelves together.

If credit ſhould be given to old Narrations, theſe three Pages or Valleys * firſt ſuffered great Servitude and Thraldom under cruel Rulers or Governours: inſomuch that the Governour of Sylvania (a) required of one of the Inhabitants a yoke of his Oxen; which when the Townſmen denied to give him, the Ruler ſent his ſervant by force to take his Oxen from him. This when the Servant was about to do, cometh the poor man's Son, and cutteth off one of his Fingers, and upon the ſame avoided. The Governour hearing this, taketh the poor man and putteth out his eyes.

* Note that the Pages in Suitzerland are for the moſt part ſituate in Valleys.

(a) Extortion in Rulers.

At another time in the ſaid Sylvania, as the good man of the Houſe was abſent abroad, the Governour which had then the rule of the Town, entring into the Houſe, commanded the Wife to prepare for him a Bath, and to let him have his pleaſure of her. Whereunto ſhe being unwilling deferred the Bath as long as ſhe might, till the return of her Husband. To whom then ſhe making her complaint, ſo moved his mind, that he, with his Ax or Hatched which he had in his hand, flew upon the adulterous Ruler and ſlew him.

Example of true Chaſtity in a Matron.

Adultery juſtly puniſhed.

Another example of like violence is reported of the Ruler of Suicia and Sylvania, who, ſurpriſed with the like Pride and Diſdain againſt the poor Underlings, cauſed his Cap to be hanged upon a Pole, charging and commanding by his Servant, all that paſſed by to do obeyſance to his Cap. Which when one named William Tell refuſed to do, the Tyrant cauſed his Son to be tied, with an Apple ſet upon his Head, and the Father with a Croſs-bow, or a like Inſtrument, to ſhoot at the Apple. After long refuſing, when the woful Father could not otherwiſe chuſe, being by force conſtrained, but muſt level at the Apple; as God would, he miſt the Child, and ſtruck the Mark. This Tell being thus compelled by the Tyrant to ſhoot at his Son, had brought with him two Shafts; thinking that if he had ſtruck the Child with one, the other he would have let drive at the Tyrant. Which being underſtood, he was apprehended and led to the Ruler's Houſe: but by the way eſcaping out of the Boat between Urania and Brun, and paſſing through the Mountains with as much ſpeed as he might, he lay in the way ſecretly as the Ruler ſhould paſs, where he diſcharged his Arrow at the Tyrant and ſlew him.

Example of ſingular tyranny.

Will. Tell.

Pride and Tyranny well rewarded.

And thus were theſe cruel Governours utterly expelled out of theſe three Valleys or Pages aforeſaid; and after that ſuch order was taken by the Emperor Henricus the ſeventh, and alſo by the Emperor Lodovicus Duke of Bavaria, that henceforth no Judge ſhould be ſet over them, but only of their own Company, and Town-dwellers. Ex Seb. Munſter. Coſmog. lib. 3.

Ex Seb. Munſter. Coſmog. l. 3.

It followed after this, in the year of our Lord, 1315, that great Contention and War fell between Frederick Duke of Auſtria, and Ludovick Duke of Bavaria, ſtriving and fighting the ſpace of eight years together about the Empire. With Ludovicus held the three Pages aforeſaid; who had divers Conflicts with Lupoldus, Brother to the aforenamed Frederick Duke of Auſtria, fighting in his Brother's quarrel. As Lupoldus had reared a mighty Army of twenty thouſand Footmen and Horſemen, and was come to Egree, ſo to paſs over the Mountains to ſubdue the Pages; he began to take advice of his Council, by what way or paſſage beſt he might direct his Journey towards the Switzers. Whereupon as they were buſie in conſulting, there ſtood a Fool by, named Kune de Stocken, which hearing their advice, thought alſo to ſhoot his Bolt withal, and told them, that their Counſel did not like him: For all you (quoth he) conſult how we ſhould enter into yonder Country; but none of you giveth any counſel how to come out again after we be entred. And in concluſion, as the Fool ſaid, ſo they found it true. For when Lupoldus with his hoſt had entred into the Streights and Valleys between the Rocks and Mountains, the Switzers with their Neighbours of Urania and Sylvania, lying in privy wait, had them at ſuch advantage, and with tumbling down Stones from the Rocks, and ſudden coming upon their Backs in blind Lanes, did ſo incumber them, that neither they had convenient ſtanding to fight, nor room almoſt to fly away. By reaſon whereof a great part of Lupoldus Army there, being incloſed about the place, called Morgarten, loſt their lives, and many in the flight were ſlain. Lupoldus with them that remained, retired and eſcaped to Turgoia. This Battel was fought Anno 1315, the ſixteenth day of November.

A Fools bolt ſometimes hits the mark.

After this, the Burgers of theſe three Villages, being continually vexed by Frederick Duke of Auſtria, for that they would not acknowledge him for Emperor, aſſembled themſelves in the Town of Urania, Anno 1316, and there entred a mutual League and Bond of perpetual Society and Conjunction, joyning and ſwearing themſelves, as in one Body of a Common-wealth, and publick Adminiſtration together. After that came to them Lucernates, then Tygiani, after them the Tiguriues, next to them followed Bernates, the laſt almoſt of all were the Baſilians, then followed after the other ſeven Pages above recited.

The firſt League between the three Pages.

And thus have ye the Names, the Freedom, and Confederation of theſe Switzers, or Cantons, or Pages of Helvetia, with the Occaſions and Circumſtances thereof, briefly expreſſed. Now to the purpoſe of our Story intended, which is to declare the ſucceſs of Chriſt's Goſpel and true Religion received among the Helvetians: alſo touching the Life and Doctrine of Zuinglius, and order of his Death, as here enſueth.

The Acts and Life of Zuinglius: and of receiving the Goſpel in Switzerland.

IN the tractation of Luther's Story, mention was made before of Ulricus Zuinglius, who firſt abiding at Glarona, in a place called then our Lord's Ermitage, from thence removed to Zurick about the year of our Lord 1519, and there began to teach, dwelling in the Minſter among the Canons or Prieſts of that Cloſe; uſing with them the ſame Rites and Ceremonies during the ſpace of two or three years, where he continued reading and explaining the Scriptures unto the people with great travel, and no leſs dexterity. And becauſe Pope Leo the ſame year had renewed his Pardons again through all Countries (as is above declared) Zuinglius zealouſly withſtood the ſame, detecting the Abuſes thereof by the Scriptures, and of other Corruptions reigning then in the Church, and ſo continued by the ſpace of two years and more, till at length Hugo Biſhop of Conſtance (to whoſe Juriſdiction Zurick then alſo did belong) hearing thereof, wrote his Letter to the Senate of the ſaid City of Zurick, complaining grievouſly of Zuinglius; who alſo wrote another Letter to the Colledge of Canons, where Zuinglius was at the ſame time dwelling, complaining likewiſe of ſuch new Teachers which troubled the Church, and exhorted them earneſtly to beware, and to take diligent heed to themſelves. And foraſmuch as both the Pope and the Emperor's Majeſty had condemned all ſuch new Doctrine by their Decrees and Edicts, he willed them therefore to admit no ſuch new Innovations of Doctrine, without the common conſent of them to whom the ſame did appertain. Zuinglius hearing thereof, referreth his cauſe to the judgment and hearing of the Senate, not refuſing to render to them an account of his Faith. And for ſo much as the Biſhop's Letter was read openly in the Colledg, Zuinglius directeth another Letter to the Biſhop again, declaring that the ſaid Letter proceeded not from the Biſhop, and that he was not ignorant who were the Authors thereof; deſiring him not to follow their ſiniſter Counſels; for that Truth (ſaid he) is a thing invincible, and cannot be reſiſted. After the ſame tenour certain other of the City likewiſe wrote unto the Biſhop, deſiring him that he would attempt nothing that ſhould be prejudicial to the liberty and free courſe of the Goſpel: requiring moreover, that he would forbear no longer the filthy and infamous life of Prieſts, but that he would permit them to have their lawful Wives, &c. This was in the year of our Lord 1522.

Zuinglius againſt the Popes Pardons.

Anno 1521.

The Biſhop of Conſtance complaineth againſt Zuinglius.

Beſides this, Zuinglius wrote alſo another Letter to the whole Nation of the Helvetians, admoniſhing them in no caſe to hinder the paſſage of ſincere Doctrine, nor to infer any moleſtation to Prieſts that were married. For as for the Vow and Coaction of their ſingle life, it came (ſaith he) of the Devil, and a deviliſh thing it is. And therefore whereas the ſaid Helvetians had ſuch a Right and Cuſtom in their Towns and Pages, that when they received any new Prieſt into their Churches, they uſed to premoniſh him before to take his Concubine, leſt he ſhould attempt any miſuſe with their Wives and Daughters: he exhorted them that they would no leſs grant unto them to take their Wives in honeſt Matrimony, than to take Concubines and Harlots, againſt the Precept of God.

Prieſts Marriage.

An old uſe of the Helvetians to forewarn their Prieſts to take Concubines.

Thus

Zuinglius extolled by Adherents.

Thus as Zuinglius continued certain years, labouring in the Word of the Lord, offence began to riſe at this new Doctrine, and divers ſtept up, namely the Dominick Friers on the contrary ſide, to preach and inveigh againſt him. But he, keeping himſelf ever within the Scriptures, proteſted that he would make good by the Word of God that which he had taught. Upon this, the Magiſtrates and Senate of Zurick ſent forth their Commandment to all Prieſts and Miniſters within their Dominion, to repair to the City of Zurick againſt the nine and twentieth day of January next enſuing (this was Anno 1523) there every one to ſpeak freely, and to be heard quietly touching theſe Controverſies of Religion, what could be ſaid: directing alſo their Letters to the Biſhop of Conſtance, That he would either make his repair thither himſelf, or elſe ſend his Deputy. When the day appointed came, the Biſhop's Vicegerent, which was Joannes Faber, was alſo preſent. The Conſul firſt declaring the cauſe of this their Frequency and Aſſembly (which was for the Diſſention newly riſen about matters of Religion) required, that if any there had to object or infer againſt the Doctrine of Zuinglius, he ſhould freely and quietly declare and utter his mind.

Diſputation at Zurick about Religion.

Joan. Faber Stapulenſis againſt Zuinglius. Ex Joan. Sleid. lib. 3.

Zuinglius had diſpoſed his matter before, and contrived all his Doctrine in a certain order of places, to the number of ſixty ſeven Articles: which Articles he had publiſhed alſo abroad before, to the end that they which were diſpoſed, might reſort thither the better prepared to the Diſputation. When the Conſul had finiſhed that which he would ſay, and had exhorted others to begin: then Faber, firſt entring the matter, began to declare the cauſe of his ſending thither, and afterward would perſwade, that this was no place convenient, nor time fit for the diſcuſſing of ſuch matters by Diſputation, but rather that the Cognition and Tractation thereof belonged to a General Council, which, he ſaid, was already appointed, and now near at hand. Notwithſtanding Zuinglius ſtill continued urging and requiring him, that if he had there any thing to ſay or to diſpute, he would openly and freely utter his mind. To this he anſwered again, That he would confute his Doctrine by Writing. This done, with a few other words on both ſides had to and fro, when no man would appear there to offer any Diſputation, the Aſſembly brake, and was diſcharged. Whereupon the Senate of Zurick incontinent cauſed to be proclaimed through all their Dominion and Territory, that the Traditions of Men ſhould be diſplaced and abandoned, and the Goſpel of Chriſt purely taught out of the Old and New Teſtament: Anno 1523. ex Joan. Sleid. lib. 3.

Sixty ſeven Articles of Zuinglius.

John Faber refuſeth Diſputation.

The Aſſembly of Zurick broke up without Diſputation.

The Goſpel publickly received at Zurick.

Traditions of Men aboliſhed.

When the Goſpel thus began to take place, and to flouriſh in Zurick and certain other places of Helvetia, the year next following, Anno 1524, another Aſſembly of the Helvetians was convented at Lucerna, where this Decree was made on the contrary part: That no man ſhould deride or contemn the Word of God, which had been taught now above a thouſand and four hundred years heretofore: nor the Maſs to be ſcorned, wherein the Body of Chriſt is conſecrated, to the honour of God, and to the Comfort both of the quick and the dead.

Conſtitutions in the Council of Lucerna.

That they who are able to receive the Lords Body at Eaſter, ſhall confeſs their ſins in Lent to the Prieſts, and do all other things, as the uſe and manner of the Church requireth.

That Rights and Cuſtoms of holy Church be kept.

That every one obey his own proper Paſtor and Curate, and receive the Sacraments of him, after the manner of holy Church, and pay him his yearly Duties.

That honour be given to Prieſts.

Item, to abſtain from Fleſh-eating on Faſting-days, and in Lent to abſtain from Eggs and Cheeſe.

That no opinion of Luther be taught privily or apertly, contrary to the received Determination of holy Church; and that in Taverns and at Table no mention be made of Luther, or any new Doctrine.

That Images and Pictures of Saints in every place be kept inviolate.

That Prieſts and Miniſters of the Church be not compelled to render account of their Doctrine, but only to the Magiſtrate.

That due Aid and Supportation be provided for them, if any Commotion do happen.

That no perſon deride the Reliques of the Holy Spirit, or of our Lady, or of St. Anthony.

Finally, That all the Laws and Decrees ſet forth by the Biſhop of Conſtance, be obſerved. K. Hen. 8.

Theſe Conſtitutions whoſoever ſhall tranſgreſs, let them be preſented to the Magiſtrate, and Overſeers to be ſet over them that ſhall ſo tranſgreſs.

The Letter of the Helvetians to the Tigurines.

After theſe things concluded thus at Lucerna, the Cantons of Helvetia together direct their publick Letter to the Tigurines or men of Zurick; wherein they may much lament and complain of this new broached Doctrine which hath ſet all men together by the ears, through the occaſion of certain raſh and new fangled Heads which have greatly diſturbed both the State of the Church, and of the Common-wealth, and have ſcattered the Seeds of Diſcord, whereas before time all things were well in quiet. And although this Sore, ſaid they, ought to have been looked to betime, ſo that they ſhould not have ſuffered the Glory of Almighty God, and of the bleſſed Virgin, and other Saints ſo to be diſhonoured, but rather ſhould have beſtowed their Goods and Lives to maintain the ſame; yet notwithſtanding they required them now to look unto the matter, which otherwiſe would bring to them Deſtruction both of Body and Soul: as for example, they might ſee the Doctrine of Luther, what Fruit it brought. The rude and vulgar People now (ſaid they) could not be holden in, but would burſt forth to all Licence and Rebellion, as hath appeared by ſufficient Proofs of late; and like is to be feared alſo among themſelves, and all by the occaſion of Zuinglius, and of Leo Juda, which ſo took upon them to expound the Word of God after their own Intepretation, opening thereby whole Doors and Windows to Diſcord and Diſſention. Albeit of their Doctrine they were not certain what they did teach; yet what inconvenience followed upon their Doctrine, they had too much experience. For now all Faſting was laid down, and all days are alike to eat both Fleſh and Eggs, as well one as another: Prieſts and religious perſons both Men and Women brake their Vows, ran out of their order, and fell to marrying; God's Service was decayed, ſinging in the Church left, and Prayer ceaſed; Prieſts grew in contempt, Religious Men were thruſt out of their Cloiſters; Confeſſion and Penance was neglected; ſo that men would not ſtick to preſume to receive at the holy Altar, without any Confeſſion made to the Prieſt before. The holy Maſs derided and ſcorned; our bleſſed Lady, and other Saints blaſphemed; Images pluckt down and broken in pieces, neither was there any honour given to the Sacrament. To make ſhort, men now were grown unto ſuch a Licence and Liberty, that unneth the Holy Ghoſt could be ſafe within the Prieſt's hands, &c.

Zuinglius and Leo Juda were Preachers at this time in Zurick.

The Diſorder of all which things as it is of no ſmall importance, ſo it was, ſaid they, to them ſo grivous and lamentable that they thought it their part to ſuffer the ſame no longer. Neither was this the firſt time (they ſaid) of this their complaining, when in their former Aſſembly they ſent unto them before the like Admonition, writing to them by certain of the Clergy, and craving their aid in the ſame, which ſeeing it is ſo, they did now again earneſtly call upon them touching the Premiſſes, deſiring them to ſurceaſe from ſuch doings, and to take a better way, continuing in the Religion of their old Anceſtors which were before them. And if there were any ſuch thing, wherein they were grieved and offended againſt the Biſhop of Rome the Cardinal, Biſhops, or other Prelates, either for their Ambition in heaping, exchanging and ſelling the Dignities of the Church, or for their oppreſſion in pilling men's Purſes with their Indulgences, or elſe for their uſurped Juriſdiction and Power, which they extend too far, and corruptly apply it to matters external and political, which only ought to ſerve in ſuch caſes as be ſpiritual: if theſe and ſuch other Abuſes were the cauſes, wherewith they were ſo grievouſly offended, they promiſed that, for the Correction and Reformation thereof, they would alſo themſelves joyn their diligence and good will thereto, forſomuch as themſelves alſo did not a little miſlike therewith, and therefore would confer their Counſels together with them, how and by what way ſuch Grievances might beſt be removed.

To this effect were the Letters of the Helvetians written to the Senate and Citizens of Zurick. Whereunto the Tigurines made their Anſwer again the one and twentieth day of March, the ſame year, in manner as followeth.

K. Hen. 8.

An Answer again of the Titurgines, to the Letter aforesaid.

 The Letter of the Tigurines, answering again the letter of the Helvetians.*

First, * declaring, how their Ministers had laboured and travelled among them, teaching and preaching the Word of God unto them the space now of five years. Whose Doctrine at the first seemed to them very strange and novel, because they never heard the same before. But after that they understood and perceived the † scope of that Doctrine only to tend to this, to set forth Christ Jesus unto us, to be the Pillar and Refuge of our Salvation, which gave his Life and Blood for our Redemption, and which only delivered us also sinful Misers from eternal death, and is the only Advocate of Mankind before God; they could no otherwise do, but with ardent affection receive so wholesome and joyful message.

† If the scope of Doctrine be well marked, between the Papists and the Protestants, it will not be hard for any Man to judg which is the true Doctrine. For the whole end and scope of the Pope's Doctrine, tendeth to set up the honour and wealth of Man, as may appear by the Doctrine of Supremacy, of Confession, of the Mass, of the Sacrament of the Altar, &c. All which do tend to the magnifying of Priests; like as Purgatory, Obsequies, Pardons, and such other serve for their profit. Contrariwise, the teaching of the Protestants, as well touching Justification, original Sin, as also the Sacraments and Invocation, and all other such like, tend only to the setting up of Christ alone, and tasting down of Man.

The holy Apostles and faithful Christians, after they had received the Gospel of Christ, did not fall out by and by in debate and variance, but lovingly agreed and consented together: and so they trusted (said they) that they should do, if they would likewise receive the Word of God, setting aside Mens Doctrines and Traditions dissonant from the same.

Whatsoever Luther or any other Man doth teach, whether it be right or wrong, it is not for the names of the Persons, why the Doctrine which they teach, should be either evil or well-judged upon, but only for that it agreeth with, or disagreeth from the Word of God: for that were but to go by affection, and were prejudicial to the Authority of the Word of God, which ought to rule Man, and not to be measured by Man.

No injury to Saints, if Christ only be worshipped.

And if Christ only be worshipped, and Men taught solely to repose their confidence in him; yet neither doth the blessed Virgin, nor any Saint else, receive any injury thereby, who being here in Earth, received their Salvation only by the Name of him.

Who be they that wrest the Scripture?

And whereas they charge their Ministers with wresting the Scripture after their own interpretation, God had stirred up such Light now in the hearts of Men, that the most part of their City have the Bible in their hand, and diligently peruse the same: so that their Preachers cannot so wind the Scriptures awry, but they shall quickly be perceived. Wherefore there is no danger why they should fear any Sects or Factions in them; but rather such Sects are to be objected to those, who for their gain and dignity, wrest the Word of God after their own Affections and Appetites.

Error many times objected where none can be proved.

And whereas they, and other, have accused them of Error, yet was there never Man that could prove any Error in them: Altho divers Bishops of Constance, of Basil, of Curiake, with divers Universities besides: Also they themselves have been sundry times desired so to do; yet to this present day neither they, nor ever any other so did; neither were they, nor any of all the foresaid Bishops, at their last Assembly, being requested to come, so gentle to repair unto them, save only the Schaffusians and Sangallians. In the which foresaid Assembly of theirs, all such as were then present, considering throughly the whole case of the matter, condescended together with them.

And if the Bishops haply will object again, and say, that the Word of God ought not so to be handled of vulgar people; they answered the same not to stand with equity and reason. For albeit it did belong to the Bishops Office, to provide that the Sheep should not go astray, and most convenient it were that by them they should be reduced into the way again; yet because they will not see to their charge, but leave it undone, referring all things to the Fathers and to Councils: therefore right and reason it is, that they themselves should hear and learn, not what Man doth determine, but what Christ himself doth command in the Scripture. Neither have their Ministers given any occasion of this division; but rather it is to be imputed to such, which for their own private lucre and preferments, contrary to the Word of the Lord, do seduce the people into Error, and grievously offending God, do provoke him to plague them with manifold Calamities. Who, if they would renounce the greediness of their own gain, and would follow the pure Doctrine of his Word, seeking not the Will of Man, but what is the Will of God, no doubt but they should soon fall to agreement.

 It was the Pope's Law then, that in Lent no Man should eat Flesh, or Eggs, nor any other white meat; wherein it may seem to be verified which St. Paul doth prophesy, 1 Tim. 4. In the latter days certain shall depart from the Faith, hearkning to the Doctrine of Devils, forbidding to marry, and to eat, &c.*

* As for the eating of Flesh and Eggs, altho it be free to all Men, and forbidden to none by Christ; yet they have set forth a Law to restrain rash intemperance, and uncharitable offension of other.

And as touching Matrimony, God is himself the Author thereof, who hath left it free for all Men. Also Paul willeth a Minister of the Church to be the Husband of one Wife.

Priests Marriage.

And seeing that Bishops for Mony permit their Priests to have Concubines, which is contrary both to God's Law, and to good example; why then might not they as well obey God in permitting lawful Matrimony which he hath ordained, as to resist God in forbidding the same? The like is to be said also of Women vowing chastity; of whom this they judg and suppose, that such kind of Vows and coacted Chastity, are not available nor allowed before God: and seeing that Chastity is not all Mens gift, better it were to marry, (after their judgments) than filthily to live in single life.

Vows of chastity not agreeing to God's Law.

Monastries first given to the poor, but now serve to feed the rich.

As for Monasteries, and other houses of Canons, they were first given for relief only of the poor and needy; whereas now they who inhabit them are wealthy, and able to live of their own Patrimony in such sort, as many times some one of them hath so much, as well might suffice a great number. Wherefore it seemeth to them not unconvenient, that those goods should be converted again to the use of the poor: Yet nevertheless they have used therein such moderation, that they have permitted the Inhabitants of those Monasteries to enjoy the possessions of their goods, during the term of their natural Life, lest any should have cause of just complaint.

Goods of Monastries converted to the relief of the poor.

Ornaments of Churches better bestowed upon the poor.

Ornaments of Churches serve nothing to God's Service; but this is well agreeing to the Will and Service of God, that the poor should be succoured. So Christ commanded the young Man in the Gospel that was rich, not to hang up his Riches in the Temple, but to sell them, and distribute them to the needy.

Good Priests not to be contemned, the rabble of them to be diminished.

The Order of Priesthood they do not contemn; such Priests as will truly discharge their duty, and teach soundly, they do magnify. As for the other Rabble, which serve to no publick Commodity, but rather damnify the Commonwealth, if the number of them were diminished by little and little, and their livings put to better use, they doubted not but it were a service well done to God. Now whether the singing and Prayers of such Priests be available before God, it may be doubted, forasmuch as many of them understand not what they say, or sing, but only for hire of Wages do the same.

Confession to the Priest. Confession to Christ.

As for secret Confession, wherein Men do detect their sins in the Priests ear, of what virtue this confession is to be esteemed, they leave it in suspence. But that confession, whereby repenting sinners do fly to Christ, our only Intercessor, they recount not only to be profitable, but also necessary to all troubled Consciences. As for satisfaction, which Priests do use, they reckon it but a practice to get Mony, and the same to be not only erroneous, but also full of impiety. True penance and satisfaction is, for a Man to amend his life.

Bishop neither will feed the Flock, nor yet suffer them to feed themselves.

The Order of Monkery.

The Orders of Monkery, come only by the invention of Man, and not by the institution of God.

The use of Sacraments.

And as touching the Sacraments, such as be of the Lord's Institution, them they do not despise, but receive with all reverence, neither do suffer the same to be despised of any person, nor to be abused otherwise than becometh, but to use rightly according to the prescript rule of God's Word. And so with the like reverence they use the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, according as the Word prescribeth, not, as many do abuſe it, to make of it an Oblation and a Sacrifice.

False tale-carriers.

And if the Meſſengers ſent to them of the Clergy, in their Letters mentioned, can juſtly charge them with any hindrance, or any error, they will be ready either to purge themſelves, or to ſatisfy the offence. And if they cannot, then reaſon would that theſe Meſſengers of the Clergy ſhould hereafter look better to their doings, and to their Doctrine, and to ceaſe from ſuch untrue ſlanders and contumelies.

The only way of true reformation is, that the Word of God only be received. The Pope cannot abide the preaching of the Word, and why.

Finally, Whereas they underſtand by their Letters how deſirous they are to have the Pope's Oppreſſions and Exactions, and uſurped Power aboliſhed, they are right glad thereof and joyful, ſuppoſing that the ſame can by no means be brought to paſs, except the Word of God only and ſimply be received. For otherwiſe, ſo long as Mens Laws and Conſtitutions ſhall ſtand in force, there will be no place of Reformation. For by the preaching of God's Word, their eſtimation and dignity muſt needs decay: and that they well perceive, and therefore by all means do provide how to ſtop the courſe of the Word: and becauſe they ſee themſelves too weak to bring their purpoſe about, they fly to the aid of Kings and Princes. For the neceſſary Remedy whereof, if they ſhall think good to join their conſent, there ſhall nothing be lacking in their behalf, what they are able either in counſel or goods to do in the matter; declaring moreover, that this ſhould have been ſeen to long before. Which being ſo, they prayed and deſired them to accept in good part, and diligently to expound that which they did write. As for their own part, they required nothing elſe more, than peace both between them and all Men. Neither was it ever their intent to ſtir any thing that ſhould be prejudicial againſt their League and Band agreed upon between them. But in this cauſe which concerneth their eternal Salvation, they can do no otherwiſe but as they have done, unleſs their error by learning might be proved and declared unto them.

The Tigurines will be judged by the Scriptures.

Wherefore, as they did before, ſo now they deſire again, that if they think this their Doctrine to be repugnant to the Holy Scripture, they will gently ſhew and teach them their error, and that before the end of the month of May next enſuing: for ſo long they will abide waiting for an anſwer, as well from them, as from the Biſhop of Conſtance, and alſo from the Univerſity of Baſil. And thus much containeth the Anſwer of the Tigurines unto the Letter of their other Colleagues of Helvetia.

The Biſhop of Conſtance anſwereth the Tigurines by writing.

In the mean time, as this paſſed on, and the month of May, above mentioned, was now come, the Biſhop of Conſtance, with the advice of his Council about him, did anſwer the Tigurines, as he was requeſted of them to do, in a certain Book firſt written, and afterward printed; wherein he declareth what Images and Pictures thoſe were, which the prophane Jews and Gentiles in the old time did adore, and what Images theſe be which the Church hath from time to time received and admitted; and what difference there is between thoſe Idols of the Jews and Gentiles, and theſe Images of the Chriſtians. The concluſion hereof was this; that whereas the Scripture ſpeaketh againſt Images, and willeth them not to be ſuffered, that is to be underſtood of ſuch Images and Idols, as the Jews and Idolatrous Gentiles did uſe: yet nevertheleſs, ſuch Images and Pictures as the Church hath received, are to be uſed and retained.

A Popiſh diſtinction between the Images of Gentiles, & Images of the Chriſtians. Ex Jo. Sleid. lib. 4.

From this he entreth next into the diſcourſe of the Maſs, where he proveth, by divers and ſundry Teſtimonies, both of the Pope's Canons and Councils, the Maſs to be a Sacrifice and Oblation.

The Book of the Biſhop of Conſtance writen to the Senate of Zurick, in defence of the Maſs and Images.

This Book being thus compiled and written, he ſent it unto the Senate of Zurick, about the beginning of June, willing and exhorting them by no manner of means to ſuffer their Images, or the Maſs to be abrogated; and ſhortly after he publiſhed the ſaid Book in print, and ſent it to the Prieſts and Canons of the Minſter of Zurick, requiring them to follow the cuſtom of the Church received, and not to ſuffer themſelves otherwiſe to be perſwaded by any Man.

The anſwer of the Tigurines to the Biſhops Book.

The Senate again, anſwering to the Biſhop's Book, about the midſt of Auguſt, did write unto him: firſt, declaring that they had read over and over again his Book with all diligence: The which Book, forſomuch as the Biſhop had divulged abroad in print, they were therefore right glad, becauſe the whole World thereby might judg between them the better. After this, they explained unto him the Judgment and Doctrine of their Miniſters and Preachers: and finally, by the authority and teſtimonies of the Scripture, convinced his Opinion, and proved the Doctrine of his Book to be falſe. But before they ſent their Anſwer to him, about the 13*th* day of June, they commanded all the Images, as well within the City as through their Dominions, to be taken down and burned quietly, and without any tumult. A few months after an Order was taken in the ſaid City of Zurick, between the Canons of the Church and City, for diſpoſing the Lands and Poſſeſſions of the College.

K. Hen. 8.

Images aboliſhed within all the Dominions of Zurick.

It would grow to a long diſcourſe, to comprehend all things by order of circumſtance, that hapned among the Helvetians upon this new alteration of Religion; but briefly, to contract, and to run over the chief Specialities of the matter, here is firſt to be noted, that of the Helvetians which were confederate together in the 13 pages, chiefly, ſix there were which moſt diſdained and maligned this Religion of the Tigurines: to wit, Lucernates, Urani, Suitenſes, Untervaldii, Tugiani, Friburgenſes; theſe in no caſe could be reconciled. The reſt ſhew themſelves more favourable. But the other, which were their Enemies, conceived great grudg, and raiſed many ſlanderous reports and falſe rumors againſt them, and laid divers things to their charge: as, firſt, for refuſing to join their conſent to the publick League of the other Pages with Francis the French King: then for diſſenting from them in Religion: and thirdly, for refuſing to ſtand to the Popiſh Decree made the Year before at Ratisbone, by Ferdinandus, and other Biſhops above mentioned. They laid moreover to their accuſation, for aiding the Vualſutenſes their Neighbours, againſt Ferdinandus their Prince; which was falſe. Alſo for joining league ſecretly with other Cities, without their knowledg; which was likewiſe falſe.

Certain Pages or Towns of the Suitzers complained againſt the Tigurines.

False matter of accuſation laid againſt the Tigurines by the other Pages.

Item, That they ſhould intend ſome ſecret Conſpiracy againſt them, and invade them with War; which was as untrue as the reſt. Many other quarrels beſides they pretended againſt the Tigurines, which were all falſe and cavelling ſlanders: as that they ſhould teach and preach, That Mary the Mother of Chriſt had more Sons; and that James the younger, the Apoſtle, did die for us, and not Chriſt himſelf. Againſt theſe and ſuch other untruths, being meer matters of cavillation and ſlander, the Tigurines did fully and amply purge and acquit themſelves by writing, and did expoſtulate vehemently with them, not only for theſe falſe and wrongful ſuſpitions, of their parts undeſerved, but alſo for other manifold Injuries received and born at their hands, among which other Wrongs and Injuries, this was one; that the Burghmaſters of Turegia had apprehended a certain Preacher, named Joannes Oxlinus, and led him home as Priſoner unto his houſe; being taken within the precinct and limits of the City of Zurick, contrary to Law and Order.

What ſlanderous tongues can do.

The Tigurines anſwer again to the complaint of the Pages.

John Oxlinus a Preacher apprehended for Religion.

Finally, After much diſcourſing, wherein they in a long Letter declared their diligence and fidelity at all times, in keeping their League, and maintaining the liberty and dignity of their Country; as touching the cauſe of Religion, if that were all the matter of their offence, they offered themſelves willing to hear, and more glad to amend, if any could prove any error in them by the Scripture. Otherwiſe if none ſo could, or would prove wherein they did err by the Word of God, they could not, they ſaid, alter any thing in the ſtate of that Religion wherein their Conſciences were already ſtaid by the Word of God and ſetled, whatſoever peril or danger ſhould happen to them for the ſame.

Altho here was no cauſe why theſe Pages or Cantons, which were ſo confederate together in the League of Peace, ſhould diſagree amongſt themſelves: yet herein we may ſee the courſe and trade of the World, that when difference of Religion beginneth a little to break the knot of Amity, by and by how Friends be turned to Foes, what ſuſpitions do ariſe, what quarrels and grudges do follow, how nothing there liketh Men, but every thing is taken in the worſt part; ſmall Motes are made Mountains, Vertues made Vices, and one Vice made a thouſand, and all for lack only of a little good will betwixt Party and Party. For as Love and Charity commonly among Men, either covereth or ſeeth not the Faults of their Friends, ſo Hatred and Diſdain,

What love and hatred doth among Men.

K.Hen. 8.

Diſdain, taking all things to blame, can find nothing in their Foes that they can like. And thus did it happen between theſe good Men of Zurick, and theſe other Suitzers above mentioned.

Theſe Letters of the Tigurines to the other Cantons, were written upon the occaſion of their apprehending the Preacher, Joannes Oxlinus above-mentioned, Januar. 4. 1525.

The Maſs with all its Ceremonies put down in Zurick.

And in the month of April next following, the Magiſtrates and Senate of the ſaid City of Zurick, commanded the Maſs, with all the Ceremonies and Appurtenances thereto belonging, to be put down, as well within the City, as without throughout all their Juriſdiction: and inſtead thereof was placed the Lord's Supper, the reading of the Prophets, Prayer, and Preaching.

concerning a Meeting or a Diſputation to be had at Baden: where were preſent among the Divines, Joannes Faber, Eckius, and Murnerus above mentioned. The Biſhops alſo of Lucerna, Baſil, Curiake, and Lauſanna, ſent thither their Legats. The Concluſions there propounded were theſe.

Theams or Propoſitions propounded in the Diſputation at Baden.

That the true Body and Blood of Chriſt is in the Sacrament.

That the Maſs is a Sacrifice for the quick and dead.

That the bleſſed Virgin, and other Saints, are to be invocated as Mediators and Interceſſors.

That Images ought not to be aboliſhed.

That there is a Purgatory.

Eckius defended. Oecolampadius againſt Eckius. Zuinglius excuſeth himſelf for not coming to the Diſputation.

Which Concluſions or Aſſertions, Eckius took upon him ſtoutly to defend. Againſt him reaſoned Oecolampadius, (who was then chief Preacher at Baſil) with certain other more. Zuinglius at that time was not there preſent, but by writing confuted the Doctrine of Eckius; declaring withal the cauſes of his abſence: which were for that he durſt not, for fear of his life, commit himſelf unto the hands of Lucernates, Urani, Suitii, Unterualdii, and Tugiani, his Enemies: and that he refuſed not to diſpute, but the place only of the diſputation; excuſing moreover that he was not permitted of the Senate to come: nevertheleſs, if they would aſſign the place of diſputation, either at Zurick, or at Berne, or at Sangallum, thither he would not refuſe to come. Briefly, the concluſion of the diſputation was this, that all ſhould remain in that Religion which hitherto they had kept, and ſhould follow the Authority of the Council, neither ſhould admit any other new Doctrine within their Dominions, &c. This was in the month of June, the ſaid year above-mentioned.

As the time proceeded, and diſſention about Religion increaſed, it followed the next year after, Anno 1527, in the month of December, that the Senate and People of Berne, (whoſe power among all the Suitzers chiefly excelleth) conſidering how neither they could have the acts of the Diſputation of Baden communicated unto them, and that the variance about Religion ſtill more and more increaſed, aſſigned another Diſputation within their own City, and ſending forth writings thereof, called unto the ſame all the Biſhops bordering near about them, as the Biſhops of Conſtance, Baſil, Sedune, Lauſanna; warning them both to come themſelves, and to bring their Divines with them, or elſe to loſe all ſuch poſſeſſions as they had lying within the bounds of their precinct. After this they appointed out certain Eccleſiaſtical Perſons of their Juriſdiction to diſpute, preſcribing and determining the whole Diſputation to be decided only by the Authority of the Old and New Teſtament. To all that would come thither, they granted ſafe conduct. Alſo they appointed, that all things there ſhould be done modeſtly, without injury and brawling words; and that every one ſhould have leave to ſpeak his mind freely, and with ſuch deliberation, that every Man's ſaying might be received by the Notary, and penned: with this proviſo made before, that whatſoever there ſhould be agreed upon, the ſame ſhould be ratified, and obſerved through all their Dominions: and to the intent Men might come thither better prepared before, they propounded in publick writing, ten Concluſions in the ſaid Diſputation to be defended of their Miniſters by the Scriptures; which Miniſters were, Franciſcus Colbus, and Bertholdus Haller. The Theams or Concluſions were theſe.

Theams to be diſputed.

1. That the true Church, whereof Chriſt is the Head, riſeth out of God's Word, and perſiſteth in the ſame, and heareth the voice of no other.

2. That the ſame Church maketh no Laws without the Word of God.

3. That Traditions, ordained in the Name of the Church, do not bind, but ſo far forth as they be conſonant to God's Word.

4. That Chriſt only hath made ſatisfaction for the ſins of the World: and therefore if any Man ſay there is any other way of Salvation, or mean to put away ſin, the ſame denieth Chriſt.

5. That the Body and Blood of Chriſt cannot be received really and corporally, by the Teſtimony of the Scripture.

6. That the uſe of the Maſs, wherein Chriſt is preſent and offered up to his Heavenly Father, for the Quick and the Dead, is againſt the Scripture, and contumelious to the Sacrifice which Chriſt made for us.

7. That Chriſt only is to be invocated, as the Mediator and Advocate of Mankind to God the Father.

8. That there is no place to be found in the holy Scripture, wherein Souls are purged after this Life: and therefore all thoſe Prayers and Ceremonies, yearly Diriges and Obits, which are beſtowed upon the dead; alſo Lamps, Tapers, and ſuch other things, profit nothing at all.

9. That to ſet up any Picture or Image to be worſhipped, is repugnant to the Holy Scripture; and therefore, if any ſuch be erected in Churches for that intent, the ſame ought to be taken down.

10. That Matrimony is prohibited to no ſtate or order of Men, but for eſchewing of Fornication generally is commanded and permitted to all Men by the Word of God. And foraſmuch as all Fornicators are excluded, by the teſtimony of Scripture, from the Communion of the Church, therefore this unchaſte and filthy ſingle Life of Prieſts, is moſt of all unconvenient for the Order of Prieſthood.

The Letters and Anſwer of the Suitzers to the Senate and People of Bern.

When the Senate and People of Berne had ſent abroad their Letters with theſe Themes and Concluſions to all the Helvetians, exhorting them both to ſend their learned Men, and to ſuffer all other to paſs ſafely through their Countries: the Lucernates, Uranites, Suilzians, Untervaldians, Tugians, Glareans, Soloturnians, and they of Friburg, anſwered again by contrary Letters, exhorting and requiring them in any caſe to deſiſt from their purpoſed enterprize: putting them in remembrance of their League and compoſition made, and alſo of the Diſputation of Baden above-mentioned, of the which Diſputation they were themſelves (they ſaid) the firſt beginners and authors: ſaying moreover, that it was not lawful for any Nation or Province to alter the ſtate of Religion, but the ſame to belong to a General Council: wherefore they deſired them that they would not attempt any ſuch wicked act, but continue in the Religion which their Parents and Elders had obſerved: and in fine, thus in the end of their Letters they concluded, that they would neither ſend, nor ſuffer any of their learned Men to come, nor yet grant ſafe conduct to any others to paſs through their Country. To this and ſuch-like effect tended the Letters of theſe Suitzers above-named.

All which notwithſtanding, the Lords of Bern proceeding in their intended purpoſe, upon the day preſcribed (which was Jan. 7.) began their Diſputation. Of all the Biſhops before ſignified (which were aſſigned to come) there was not one preſent. Nevertheleſs the City of Baſil, Zurick, and Schafuſe, and Abbecella, Sangallium, Mulluſia, with the Neighbours of Rhetia, alſo they of Strasburg, Ulms, Ausburg, Lindave, Conſtance, and Iſne, ſent thither their Embaſſadors.

The diſputation begins. The part defendant. The part opponent. The Pope's Doctrine cannot abide the trial of the Scripture.

The Doctors above-mentioned, of the City of Bern, began the Diſputation. Whereat the ſame time were preſent Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, Bucerus, Capito, Blaurerus, with other more; all which defended the affirmative of the Concluſions propounded. On the contrary ſide, of them which were the Opponents, the Chieftain was Conradus Tregerus a Frier Auguſtine: who to prove his Aſſertion, when he was driven to ſhift out of the Scripture to ſeek help of other Doctors, and the Moderators of the Diſputation would not permit the ſame, (being contrary to the order before appointed) he departed out of the place, and would diſpute no more.

Reformation of Religion in Berne. Maſſes and Images put down at Berne.

The Diſputation endured 19 days; in the end whereof it was agreed by the aſſent of the moſt part, that the concluſions there diſputed, were conſonant to the truth of God's Word, and ſhould be ratified not only in the City of Berne, but alſo proclaimed by the Magiſtrates in ſundry other Cities near adjoining: Furthermore, That Maſſes, Altars, and Images, in all places, ſhould be aboliſhed.

The Popes Clergy cannot abide to be reſtrained from Fornication and Adultery.

At the City of Conſtance, certain things began to be altered a little before. Where alſo, among other things, Laws were made againſt Fornication and Adultery, and all ſuſpect or unhoneſt Company; whereat the Canons (as they are called) of the Church taking great grief and diſpleaſure, departed the City. In the ſaid City was then Teacher, Ambroſius Blaurerus, a learned Man and born of a noble Stock, who had been a Monk a little before, profeſſed in the Monaſtery of Alperſpake, in the Dutchy of Wittenberg, belonging to the Dominion of Ferdinandus. Which Blaurerus, by reading of Luther's Works, and having a good Wit, had changed a little before his Religion, and alſo his Coat, returning again home unto his Friends; and when his Abbat would have had him again, and wrote earneſtly to the Senate of Conſtance for him, he declared the whole caſe of the matter in writing, propounding withal, certain conditions, whereupon he was content (as he ſaid) to return. But the conditions were ſuch, that the Abbat was rather willing and contented, that he ſhould remain ſtill at Conſtance, and ſo he did.

After this Diſputation thus concluded at Berne, (as hath been ſaid) the Images and Altars, with Ceremonies and Maſſes, were aboliſhed at Conſtance.

Reformation of Religion at Genua.

They of Geneva alſo, for their parts were not behind, following likewiſe the example of the City of Berne, in extirpating Images and Ceremonies. By reaſon whereof the Biſhop and Clergy there left and departed the City in no ſmall anger.

The Lance-knights of Bern and Zurick, forſake their League with the French King.

The Bernates, after they had redreſſed with them the ſtate of Religion, they renounced the League made before with the French King, refuſing and forſaking his warly ſtipend, whereby they were bound at his call to feed his Wars; following therein the example of the Tigurines, which before had done the like, and were contented only with their yearly Penſion that the King payeth to every Page of the Helvetians, to keep peace.

Reformation of Religion in Strasburg.

After that the rumor of this Diſputation and Alteration of Berne, was noiſed in other Cities and Places abroad, firſt the Miniſters of Strasburgh, encouraged by this occaſion, began likewiſe to affirm and teach, that the Maſs was wicked, and a great blaſphemy againſt God's holy Name, and therefore was to be abrogated, and inſtead thereof the right uſe of the Lord's Supper to be reſtored again. Which, unleſs they could prove by the manifeſt Teſtimonies of the Scripture to be true, they would refuſe no manner of puniſhment. On the contrary part, the Biſhop of Rome's Clergy did hold and maintain, that the Maſs was good and holy; whereupon kindled great contention on both ſides: which when the Senate and Magiſtrates of the City would have brought to a Diſputation, and could not, becauſe the Prieſts would not condeſcend to any reaſoning; therefore ſeeing they ſo accuſed the other, and yet would come to no trial of their cauſe, the ſaid Magiſtrates commanded them to ſilence. The Biſhop in the mean while ceaſed not with his Letters and Meſſengers daily to call upon the Senate, deſiring the Senate to perſevere in the ancient Religion of their Elders, and to give no ear to thoſe new Teachers, declaring what danger and peril it would bring upon them.

The Biſhop of Strasburg to the Senate.

The Senate of Strasburg replieth to the Biſhop.

The Senate again deſired him, as they had done oftentimes before, that ſuch things which appertained to the true Honour and Worſhip of God, might be ſet forward, and all other things, which tended to the contrary, might be removed and taken away, for that properly belonged to his Office to ſee to: But the Biſhop, ſtill driving them off with delays, pretended to call an Aſſembly for the ſame, appointing alſo time and place for the hearing and diſcuſſing of thoſe Controverſies, where indeed nothing was performed at all: but with his Letters he did often ſollicite them to ſurceaſe their enterprize, ſometimes by way of intreating, ſometimes with menacing words terrifying them; and at laſt, ſeeing he could nothing by that way prevail, he turned his ſuit to the Aſſembly of the Empire, which was then at Spires collected, intreating them to ſet in a foot, and to help what they could with their Authority.

The Biſhop of Strasburg complaineth to the Council of Spires.

The Meſſage from the Council of Spires to the City of Strasburg.

They, ready to ſatisfy the Biſhop's requeſt, ſent a ſolemn Embaſſy to the Senate and Citizens of Strasburg, about December the year aboveſaid, requiring them not to put down the Maſs; for neither it was, ſaid they, in the power of the Emperor, nor of any other Eſtate, to alter the ancient Religion received from their Forefathers, but either by a General, or by a Provincial Council; which Council if they ſuppoſed to be far off, at leaſt that they would take a pauſe till the next ſitting of the Empire, which ſhould be with ſpeed: where their Requeſts being propounded and heard, they ſhould have ſuch reaſonable anſwer, as ſhould not miſcontent them: For it was (ſaid they) againſt all Law and Reaſon, for a private Magiſtrate to infringe and diſſolve thoſe things, which by general conſent of the whole World have been agreed upon: and therefore good reaſon required, that they ſhould obtain ſo much at their hands: or elſe if they ſhould obſtinately proceed in this their attempt, ſo with force and violence to work as they began, it might fortune, the Emperor, their ſupream Magiſtrate under God, and alſo Ferdinandus his Deputy, would not take it well, and ſo ſhould be compelled to ſeek ſuch Remedy therein, as they would be ſorry to uſe. Wherefore their requeſt was, and advice alſo, that they ſhould weigh the matter diligently with themſelves and follow good counſel: who in ſo doing, ſhould not only glad the Emperor, but alſo work that which ſhould redound chiefly to their own commendation and ſafety.

The Biſhops of Hildiſſem and of Straſburg, travel to keep the City of Strasburg in their old Religion.

Beſides the Meſſengers thus ſent from the Council of Spires, the Biſhop alſo of Hildeſſem had been with them a little before, exhorting them in the Emperor's Name after like manner. Neither did the Biſhop of Strasburg alſo ceaſe with his Meſſengers and Letters daily to labour his Friends there, and eſpecially ſuch of the Senators as he had to him bound by any fealty, or otherwiſe by any Gifts or Friendſhip, that, ſo much as in them did lie, they ſhould uphold the Maſs, and gainſtand the contrary proceeding of the other.

The Senate of Strasburg in the mean time, ſeeing the matter did ſo long hang in controverſy the ſpace now of two Years, and the Preachers daily and inſtantly calling upon them for a Reformation; and ſuit alſo being made to them of the Citizens, aſſembled their great and full Council to the number of 300 (as in great matters of importance they are accuſtomed to do) and there with themſelves debated the caſe, declaring on the one ſide, if they aboliſhed the Maſs, what danger they ſhould incur by the Emperor: On the other ſide, if they did not, how much they ſhould offend God; and therefore, giving them reſpite to conſult, at the next meeting required them to declare their advice and ſentence in the matter. When the day came that every Man ſhould ſay his mind; ſo it fell out, that the Voices and Judgments of them which went againſt the Maſs, prevailed. Whereupon immediatly a Decree was made, the twentieth of February, Anno 1529, that the Maſs ſhould be ſuſpended and laid down, till the time that the adverſary part could prove by good Scripture, the Maſs to be a ſervice available and acceptable before God.

Reformation of Religion of Strasburg.

The Maſs overthrown at Stransburg.

This Decree being eſtabliſhed by the conſent of the whole City, the Senate eftſoons commanded the ſame to be proclaimed, and to take full place and effect, as well within the City, as alſo without, ſo far as their Limits and Dominion did extend; and afterward by Letters certified their Biſhop touching the doing thereof. Who hearing this news, as heavy to his heart as lead, did ſignify to them again, how he received their Letters, and how he underſtood by them the effect and ſum of their doings: all which he was enforced to digeſt with ſuch patience as he could, tho they went ſore againſt his ſtomach, ſeeing for the preſent time he could no otherwiſe chuſe: hereafter would ſerve, he ſaid, he would ſee thereunto, according as his Charge and Office ſhould require.

The Biſhops patience perforce.

Thus how the Maſs was overthrown in Zurick, in Berne, and Geneva, and in Strasburg, you have heard.

Reformation beginneth at Basil. Joannes Oecolampad.

heard. Now what followed in Basil, remaineth likewise to understand. In this City of Basil was Oecolampadius Preacher (as is above signified) by whose diligent labour and travel, the Gospel began there to take such Fruit, that great dissention there also arose among the Citizens about Religion, and especially about the Mass. Whereupon the Senate of Basil appointed, That after an open Disputation it should be determined by Voices, what were to be done therein. This notwithstanding the Papists, still continuing in their former purpose, began more stoutly to inveigh against the other part; and because they were so suffered by the Magistrate without punishment, it was therefore doubted by the Commons, that they had some privy Maintainers among the Senators. Whereupon certain of the Citizens were appointed, in the name of the whole Commons, to sue to the Senators, and to put them in remembrance of their promise. Whose Suit and Request was this, That those Senators which were the aiders and supporters of the Papists, might be displaced, for that it did as well tend to the contempt of their former Decree there made, as also to the publick disturbance of the City. But when this could not be obtained of the Senate, the Commons, upon Febr. 8. the year aboveSaid, assembled themselves in the gray-Friers Church, and there, considering with themselves upon the whole matter, repaired again with their Suit into the Senate, but not in such humble wise as before: And therewithal gathered themselves in the publick places of the City, to fortify the same, albeit as yet without Armour. The same evening the Senate sent them word, That at their request they granted, that those Senators, although remaining still in office, yet should not sit in the Council what time any matter of Religion should come in talk.

The Popish Senators displeased at Basil.

Religion in Basil defended by the Commons.

By this Answer the Commons, gathering that the whole State was governed by a few, took thereat grief and displeasure, protesting openly, that they would take counsel by themselves hereafter, what they had to do, not only in cases of Religion, but also in other matters of Civil Government, and forthwith took them to Armour, keeping the Towers and Gates, and other convenient places of the City with Watch and Ward, in as forcible wise, as if the Enemy had been at hand.

The next day the Senate, requiring respite to deliberate, was contented to commit the matter to them, whom the Commons before had sent as suiters unto them. Which offer the Citizens did not refuse, but with this condition, that these Senators, which were guilty, should in the mean season follow their Plea, as private Persons, upon their own private Costs and Charges: the other, which defended the publick Cause for the behoof of their Posterity, should be maintained by the publick Charges of the City. This the Senate was glad to grant unto, with some other like matters of lighter weight, to appease their rage.

It hapned the very same day, that certain of the Citizens, such as were appointed to go about the City for the viewing of things, came into the high Church, where one of them thrusting at a certain Image with his Staff, eftsoons it fell down and brake. By the occasion whereof, other Images also in like sort were served after the same devotion. But when the Priests came running to them, which seemed to be greatly offended therewith, they, because they would not pass their Commission, staid their hands and departed.

God's handy work in throwing down Images in Basil.

It followed upon this, that when word hereof was brought to the Citizens which stood in the Market-place, the matter being made worse unto them than it was, they incontinent discharged out 300 armed Men, to rescue their Fellows in the Church, supposing them to be in danger. Who coming to the Church, and not finding their Fellows there, and all things quiet, save only a few Images broken down; they likewise, lest they should have lost all their labour, threw down all the other Idols and Images which they found there standing; and so passing through all Churches in the City, did there also the like: and when certain of the Senate came forth to appease the tumult, the Citizens said, that which you have stood about these three years, consulting and advising whether it were best to be done or not, that shall we dispatch in one hour, that from henceforth never more contention shall grow between us for Images; and so the Senate permitted them free leave without any more resistance: and twelve Senators were displaced from their order, albeit without note of reproach or dishonesty. Also a Decree the same time was made, that as well within the City of Basil, as without, throughout all their Jurisdiction, the Mass with all Idols should be abandoned: and further, that in all such matters and cases as concerned the Glory of God, and the Affairs of the publick Wealth, besides the number of the other Senators, 260 of the Burgers or Citizens, should be appointed out of every Ward in the City to sit with them in Council. These Decrees being established, after they had kept watch and ward about the City 3 days and nights, every one returned again to his house quiet and joyful, without any blood or stroke given, or anger wreaked, but only upon the Images.

Images thrown down at Basil.

12 Senators displaced at Basil.

Mass put down at Basil.

On the 3*d* day, which was Ashwednesday, (as the Pope's ceremonial Church doth call it) all the wooden Images were distributed among the poor of the City, to serve them for firewood. But when they could not well agree in dividing the prey, but fell to brawling among themselves, it was agreed that the said Images should be burnt altogether: so that in nine great heaps all the Stocks and Idols there the same day were burnt to ashes before the great Church door. And thus by God's Ordinance it came to pass, that the same day wherein the Pope's Priests are wont to shew forth all their mourning, and do mark Mens foreheads with ashes, in remembrance that they be but ashes, was to the whole City festival and joyful, for turning their Images to Ashes, and so is observed and celebrated every year still unto this present day, with all mirth, plays and pastimes, in remembrance of the same Ashes, which day may there be called a right Ashwednesday of God's own making. The Men of Zurich, of Bern, of Solodure, hearing what business was at Basil, sent their Embassadors to be a mean between them; but before the Embassadors came, all was ceased and at quiet.

Ex Farrag. Epist. Erat.

Ashwednesday at Basil, a day of all pastime.

A true Ashwednesday of God's own making

All this mean space the Emperor and the French King were together occupied in Wars and Strife. Which as it turned to the great dammage and detriment of the French King, who in the said Wars was taken Prisoner by the Emperor, so it hapned commodious and opportune for the success of the Gospel; for else it is to be thought that these Helvetians and other Germans, should not have had that leisure and rest to reform Religion, and to link themselves in league together, as they did. But thus Almighty God of his secret Wisdom disposeth Times and Occasions to serve his Will and Purpose in all things. Albeit Ferdinandus the Emperor's Brother, and Deputy in Germany, remitted no time nor diligence to do what he could in resisting the proceedings of the Protestants, as appeared both by the Decree set forth at Ratisbone, and also at Spires, in the which Council of Spires, Ferdinandus at the same time, which was the year of our Lord 1529, had decreed against the Protestants in effect as followeth.

God's providence to be noted for the success of the Gospel.

The Decree made at Spires by Ferdinandus

First, That the Edict of the Emperor made at Worms, should stand in force through all Germany, till the time of the General Council which should shortly follow. Also, that they which already had altered their Religion, and now could not revoke the same again for fear of Sedition, should stay themselves, and attempt no more Innovations hereafter, till time of the General Council.

Item, That the Doctrine of them which hold the Lord's Supper otherwise than the Church doth teach, should not be received, nor the Mass should be altered: and there, whereas the Doctrine of Religion was altered, should be no impediment to the contrary, but that they which were disposed to come to Mass, might safely therein use their devotion; against Anabaptists likewise; and that all Ministers of the Church should be injoined to use no other interpretation of holy Scripture, but according to the exposition of the Church Doctors: other matters that were disputable not to be touched. Moreover, that all Persons and States should keep peace, so that for Religion, neither the one part should infer molestation to the other, nor receive any confederates under their protection and safeguard. All which Decrees they which should transgress, to be outlawed and exiled.

The Decree of Spires resisted by Protestants.

Unto this sitting at Spires, First, the Embassadors of Strasburg were not admitted, but repelled by Ferdinandus, because they had rejected the Mass: And therefore the said City of Strasburg denied to pay any contribution against the Turk, except they with other Germans might be likewise admitted unto their Councils. The other Princes which were received and not repelled, as the Duke of Saxony, and George of Brandenburgh, Ernestus, Erneſtus, and Franciſcus, Earls of Lunenburg, Landgrave Anhaldius, did utterly gainſtand the Decree, and ſhewed their cauſe, in a large Proteſtation written why they ſo did: Which done, all ſuch Cities which ſubſcribed and conſented to the ſaid Proteſtation of the Princes; eftſoons conjoined themſelves in a common League with them, whereupon they had their name therefore called Proteſtants. The names of the Cities were theſe; Argentia, or Strasburg, Norimberg, Ulmes, Conſtance, Ruteling, Winſſemium, Meminge, Lindavia, Campodunum, Hailbrunum, Iſna, Wiſſeburgum, Norlinge, Sangallum.

The name of Proteſtants, how it firſt began.

Furthermore, as touching the Helvetians, (from whence we have ſomewhat digreſſed) how the City of Berne and Zurick had conſented and joined together in reformation of true Religion, you heard before. Wherefore the other Pages in Helvetia, which were of contrary profeſſion, in like manner confederated themſelves in League with Ferdinandus: the number and names of which Pages eſpecially were five, to wit, Lucernates, Urani, Suitenſes, Untervaldii, and Tugiani, which was in the year aboveſaid; to the intent, that they conjoining their power together, might overrun the Religion of Chriſt, and the profeſſors of the ſame. Who alſo, for hatred and deſpight, hanged up the Arms of the foreſaid Cities of Zurick and of Berne upon the Gallows, beſides many other Injuries and Grievances which they wrought againſt them. For the which cauſe the ſaid Cities of Berne and Zuricke raiſed their power, intending to ſet upon the foreſaid Switzers, as upon their capital Enemies. But as they were in the Field, ready to encounter one Army againſt the other, through the means of the City of Straſburg, and other Interceſſors, they were parted for that time, and ſo returned.

Quinq; pag. The popiſh Pages in Helvetia confederate with Ferdinandes

As touching the Council of Ausburg, which followed the next year after the Aſſembly of Spires, Anno 1530, how the Princes and Proteſtants of Germany, in the ſame Council exhibited their Confeſſion, and what labour was fought to confute it, and how conſtantly Duke Frederick perſiſted in defence of his Conſcience againſt the threatning words and replications of the Emperor; alſo in what danger the ſaid Princes had been, had not the Lantgrave privily by night ſlipt out of the City pertaineth not to this place preſently to diſcourſe.

The Council of Ausburg. The Confeſſion of the Proteſtants at Ausburg.

To return therefore unto Zuinglius and the Helvetians, of whom we have here preſently to treat: You heard before how the tumult and commotion between the two Cities of Zurick and Berne, and the other five Cities of the Cantons, was pacified by the means of interceſſion; which Peace ſo continued the ſpace of two years. After that the old Wound waxing raw again began to burſt out, and gather to an head: which was by reaſon of certain injuries, and opprobrious words and contumelies, which the reformed Cities had received of the other; wherefore the Tigurines and the Bernates, ſtopping all paſſages and ſtraits, would permit no Corn nor Victual to paſs unto them. This was in the year of our Lord 1531.

And when great trouble was like to be thereby, the French King, with certain other Townſhips of Switzerland, as the Glarians, Friburgians, Soloturnians, and other coming between them, laboured to ſet them at agreement, drawing out certain conditions of Peace between them: which Conditions were theſe. That all Contumelies and Injuries paſt ſhould be forgotten. That hereafter neither part ſhould moleſt the other. That they which were baniſhed for Religion, ſhould again be reſtored. That the five Pages might remain without diſturbance in their Religion, ſo that none ſhould be reſtrained amongſt them from the reading of the Old and New Teſtament. That no kind of diſquietneſs ſhould be procured againſt them of Berne and Zurick: and that either part ſhould confer mutual helps together, one to ſuccour the other, as in times paſt. But the five Pagemen would not obſerve theſe Covenants made, neither would their malicious Hearts be brought to any conformity. Wherefore the Bernates and Tigurines, ſhewing and declaring, firſt, their cauſe in publick writing, to purge and excuſe the neceſſity of their War, being preſſed with ſo many wrongs, and in manner conſtrained to take the Sword in hand, did, as before beſet the high-ways and paſſages, that no furniture of Victual or other Forrage could come to the other Pages. By reaſon whereof, when they of the five Towns began to be pinched with want and penury, they armed themſelves ſecretly, and ſet forward in warlick array towards the borders of Zurick, whereas then was lying a Gariſon of the Zurick Men, to the number of a thouſand and more. Whereupon word was ſent incontinent to the City of Zurick, to ſuccour their Men with ſpeed; but their Enemies approached ſo faſt, that they could hardly come to reſcue them. For when they were come to the top of the Hill, whereby they muſt needs paſs, they ſaw their Fellows being in great diſtreſs in the Valley under them: whereupon they, incouraging themſelves, made down the Hill with more haſte than order, ſtriving who might go faſteſt: but the nature of the Hill was ſuch, that there could but one go down at once. By reaſon whereof, foraſmuch as they could not keep their Ranks to join all together, it followed that they, being but few in number, were diſcomfitted and overmatched of the multitude, which was October 11, the year aforeſaid. Among the number of them that were ſlain, was alſo Uldricus Zuinglius, the bleſſed Servant and Saint of God. Alſo the Abbot of Capella, and Commendator Kunacenſis, with thirteen other learned and worthy Men were ſlain, being as is thought, falſly betrayed, and brought into the hands of their Enemies.

Uldricus Zuinglius ſlain.

As touching the cauſe which moved Zuinglius to go out with his Citizens to the War, it is ſufficiently declared and excuſed, both by Jo. Sleid, and eſpecially by Oecolampadius, in his Epiſtle, (ap Mart. Frechtum. & Som. Epiſt. l. 4.) where firſt is to be underſtood, that it is an old received manner among the Zurick Men, that when they go forth in Warfare, the chief Miniſter of the Church goes with them. Zuinglius alſo of himſelf being a Man (ſaith Sleid.) of a ſtout and bold courage, conſidering if he ſhould remain at home, when War ſhould be attempted againſt his Citizens, and if he, which in his Sermons did ſo incourage others, ſhould now faint ſo cowardly, and tarry behind at home when time of danger came, what ſhame and diſdain might worthily riſe to him thereby, thought not to refuſe to take ſuch part as his Brethren did.

Ex Joan. Sleid. lib. 8. Ex Epiſt. Joan. Oecolampad. l. 4.

Oecolampad. moreover addeth, that he went not out as a Captain of the Field, but as a good Citizen with his Citizens, and a good Shepherd ready to die with his Flock. And which of them all, ſaith he, that moſt cry out againſt Zuinglius, can ſhew any ſuch noble heart in him, to do the like? Again, neither did he go out of his own accord, but rather deſired not to go; foreſeeing belike, what danger thereof would enſue. But the Senate being importune upon him, would have no nay, urging and inforcing him moſt inſtantly to go: among whom were thought to have been ſome falſe Betrayers, ſaying and objecting to him, that he was a daſtard if he refuſed to accompany his Brethren, aſwell in time of danger as in peace. Moreover the ſaid Zuinglius, among other ſecular Arts, had alſo ſome skill in ſuch matters of warfare. Hæc Oecolampad. When he was ſlain, great cruelty was ſhewn upon the dead Corps; ſuch was their hatred to him, that their malice could not be ſatisfied, unleſs alſo they ſhould burn his body being dead. Ex com. Joan Sleid. lib. 8.

Zuinglius excuſed for his going out to War.

The report goeth, that after his body was cut firſt in four pieces, and then conſumed with fire; three days after his death, his Friends came to ſee whether any part of him was remaining, where they found his heart in the aſhes whole and unburned; in much like manner as was alſo the heart of Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury, which in the aſhes was found and taken up unconſumed, as it is credibly reported.

Zuinglius his dead body burned. Ex Oſwaldo Miconio de vita & obitu Zuinglii. The heart of Zuinglius found whole in the Aſhes.

Furthermore, ſuch was then the rage of theſe five Pages againſt the foreſaid Abbot Capellenſis, that they took him being ſlain, and putting out both his eyes, clothed him in a Monk's Coul, and ſet him in the Pulpit to preach, railing and jeſting upon him in moſt deſpiteful manner. Ex Epiſt. Oecolamp. ad Wolfgangum Capitonem. l. 4. Ulderick Zuinglius was when he died of the Age of 44 years, younger than Martin Luther by four years.

The Bernates, who were purpoſed the ſame time to atchieve War againſt the Untervaldians bordering near unto them, when they heard of this diſcomfiture of the Tigurines, to comfort them again, deſired them to be of good chear and courage, promiſing that they would not fail but come, and revenge their quarrel. Again, when the Tigurines had aſſembled their Power together, which was the eighth day after the Battel, and had received aid from the Schaffuſians, Mulluſians, Sangalles, and from Baſil, (the Bernates at this time were nothing hasty) out of the whole number they chose out certain Enligns, which setting forth in the night, lay in the Hill beside Mecinge, intending when the Moon was up, to take the Town of Ingie, lying near at hand, upon the sudden. Which when their Enemies had perceived, which were encamped not far from them, with all speed and most secreet manner they came upon them being at rest, the 24*th* day of October, and to put them in more fear, made a wonderful clamorous outcry: so it fell out in conclusion, that many on both Parties were slain. And albeit the five Pagemen had the upper hand; yet would they of Zurick nothing relent in their Religion. At the last, through mediation, a Peace was concluded, and thus the matter agreed: that the Tigurines, Bernates, and Basilians, should forsake the League which they had lately made with the City of Strasburg, and the Lantgrave: likewise should the five Page-men give over their League and Composition made with Ferdinandus: and hereof Obligations were made and sealed in the latter end of November.

Another skirmish between the Tigurines, and the five Pagemen in Suitzerland.

Peace concluded between the Protestants and the Papists in Suitzerland.

Oecolampadius the Preacher of the City of Strasburg, above recorded, hearing of the death of Zuinglius his dear Friend, took thereat inward grief and sorrow; insomuch that it is thought to have increased his Disease, and so he also departed this life, the same year and month of November above mentioned, being of the age of 49 years, elder than Martin Luther by one year. Altho this Oecolampadius then died, yet his learned and famous Commentaries upon the Prophets, with other worthy Works which he left behind him, live still and shall never die.

The next year following, which was Anno 1532, in the month of August, died also the worthy and memorable Prince John Frederick Duke of Saxony, who for testimony of Christ and of his Gospel, sustained such Trials, so many Brunts, and so vehement Conflicts with the Emperor, and that especially at the Council assembled at Ausburge; that unless the almighty hand of the Lord had sustained him, it had not been possible for him, or any Prince, to have indured so constant and unremoveable against so many perswasions and assaults, as he did to the end. After him succeeded John Frederick his Son, &c.

And thus have you the History of Zuinglius, and of the Church of Switzerland, with their Proceedings and Troubles, from the first beginning of their Reformation of Religion, set forth and described. Whereunto we will add one certain Epistle of the said Zuinglius, taken out of his other Epistles, and so therewith close up his Story. Which Epistle I thought here to record, especially for that in the same, among other matters, profitably is expounded for true meaning of the Apostle, writing to the Corinthians concerning how to judg the Lord's Body, to the intent that the simple thereby may the better be informed. The words of his Letter be these as follow.

A Letter of Uldricus Zuinglius.

Unto your Questions propounded to me in your former Letters, (well-beloved Brother) I have sent you here mine Answer. First, I am also in the same mind with you, that the Lord's Supper is a very Thanksgiving: for so the Apostle himself meaneth, saying, Ye shall shew forth the Lord's Death. Where the word of shewing forth, signifieth as much as Praising or Thanksgiving. Wherefore seeing it is an Eucharist, or a Thanksgiving; in my judgment, no other thing ought to be obtruded to Mens Consciences, but only with due reverence to give thanks. Nevertheless, yet this is not to be neglected, that every Man do prove and examine himself; for so we ought to search and ask our own Consciences, What Faith we have in Christ Jesus? which if it be sound and sincere, we may approach without stay to this Thanksgiving. For he that hath no Faith, and yet faineth or pretendeth to have, eateth his own judgment; for he lieth to the Holy Ghost. And whereas you suppose, that Paul in this place doth not reprove them which sit at the Table eating Meats offered to Idols, I dissent from you therein. For Paul a little before writeth vehemently against those arrogant persons, which, bragging upon their knowledg, thought they might lawfully eat of such Meats offered to Idols, sitting and eating at the Lord's Table: You cannot (saith he) be partakers both of the Lord's Table, and the Table of Devils, &c. Wherefore St. Paul's meaning is, that every one should try and examine himself what Faith he hath. Whereupon it followeth, that he which hath a right Faith, must have no part nor fellowship with those things which be given to Idols; for he is now a Member of another Body, that is of Christ: so that he cannot join himself now to be one Body with Idolaters. And therefore those be they which do not judg or discern the Lord's Body, that make no difference between the Church of Christ, and the Church of Idolaters. For they which sit at the Lord's Table, eating of Idol Meats, do make no difference at all between the Lord's Supper, and the Supper of the Devils; which be they whom Paul saith not to judg the Body of our Lord, that is, which make no discrepance, nor give any more regard to Christ's Church, than to the Church of Devils. Whereas if we would judg our selves, that is, if we would throughly search and examine our own Consciences as we should, in coming to the Table of the Lord, we finding any Faith in us, would never go to the Table, or make thereof the Feast of Devils: wherefore your judgment herein is not amiss in expounding the Word of judging in St. Paul, to signify as much as considering, perpending and inquiring.

1 Cor. 10. & 11.

The place of St. Paul of judging the Lord's Body expounded.

Who be they which judg, not the Lord's Body.

To your second Question, I answer, That Jesus took Bread, and brake, &c. Also he took the Cup, &c. Ista verba sunt peculiariter agentis, non hospitaliter invitantis; that is, These words declare the action of one which properly doth a thing, and not the hospitality of one which inviteth another to eat.

Jesus took Bread.

Touching your third Question, out of the 6th Chap. of John, Doth this offend you? Herein I do fully agree with you.

As for this word Ostren, which is your fourth Question, I understand thereby the time of the great Feast or Solemnity, which we keep in remembrance of the great deliverance of God's People from the thraldom now of Satan, before from the thraldom of Pharaoh. Neither is it greatly material with what word we express the thing, so the thing it self be one, and the analogy and consonancy of the Scripture be kept: for both the Scripture calleth Christ the Lamb, and St. Paul calleth him our Easter or Passeover. Now your word, Wanderfest, well pleaseth me, for the Passeover, or Pesah.

The word Easter.

To your fifth Interrogation, of Christ's descending into Hell; I suppose this Particle was inserted into the Creed by the Sentence of the Fathers, to declare how the Fathers, which died in the Faith, were redeemed by the death of Christ. For Christ led away Captivity, wherewith they were holden, with him up into Heaven: so that his going down into Hell, non sic intelligatur, quasi circumscriptive, sed potentionaliter; that is, be not so understood, as circumscriptively, which is, when a thing is present by circumscription of any one place, but by power, which is by the operation of the Spirit, which is not comprehended in any certainty of place, but without prescription of certain place is diffused every where: so that the Article of Christ's descending into Hell importeth as much, as that his death redeemed them which were in Hell. Whereunto St. Peter also seemeth to have respect, where he saith, * The Gospel also was preached to them which were dead; that is, That they also did feel the good tidings of the Gospel, their redemption by the Son of God: and that they which rose again with Christ in the Spirit, be now with him in Heaven, who nevertheless in flesh shall be judged, what time the Son of God and of Man shall come to judg both the quick and the dead. Return to the places of Peter, the one in his first Epistle, the other in the later: and so be you contented with this present Answer rashed up in haste. Fare ye heartily well. And comfort my William, the good aged Father, by the Grace of God which is in you. Commend me to John Eggenberge.

The descending of Christ into Hell. Circumscriptive, potentionaliter. Ut mors illius eos quiescant apud inferos redimeret.

From Zurick, Septemb. 1. 1527.

FRom the first beginning of this whole Book and History hitherto, good Reader, thou hast heard of many and sundry troubles, and much business in the Church of Christ, concerning the Reformation of divers Abuses and great Errors crept into the same, namely in the Church of Rome, as appeareth by the doings of them, in divers and sundry places, whereof mention hath been made heretofore in this said History. For what godly Man hath there been, within the space of these five hundred years, either vertuously disposed, or excellently learned, which hath not disproved the the miſordered doings and corrupt examples of the See and Biſhop of Rome from time to time, unto the coming of this Luther? wherein this appeareth to me, and may alſo appear no leſs to all godly diſpoſed Men to be noted, not without great admiration, that ſeeing this aforeſaid Romiſh Biſhop hath had great Enemies and Gainſayers continually from time to time, both ſpeaking and working, preaching and writing againſt him, yet notwithſtanding never any could prevail before the coming of this Man. The cauſe whereof, altho it be ſecretly known unto God, and unknown unto Men, yet ſo far as Men by conjectures may ſuppoſe, it may thus not unlikely be thought: That whereas other Men before him, ſpeaking againſt the pomp, pride, whoredom, and avarice of the Biſhop of Rome, charged him only, or moſt eſpecially, with examples and manners of Life; Luther went further with him, charging him not with Life, but with his Learning; not with his Doings, but with his Doctrine; not picking at the Rine, but plucking up the Root; not ſeeking the Man, but ſhaking his Seat; yea, and charging him with plain Hereſy, as prejudicial and reſiſting plainly againſt the Blood of Chriſt, contrary to the true ſenſe and direct underſtanding of the ſacred Teſtament of God's holy Word. For whereas the Foundation of our Faith, grounded upon the holy Scripture, teacheth and leadeth us to be juſtified only by the worthineſs of Chriſt, and the only price of his Blood; the Pope proceeding with a contrary Doctrine, teacheth us otherwiſe to ſeek our Salvation, not by Chriſt alone, but by the way of Mens meriting and deſerving by Works. Whereupon roſe divers ſorts of Orders and religious Sects among Men, ſome profeſſing one thing, and ſome another, and every Man ſeeking his own Righteouſneſs, but few ſeeking the Righteouſneſs of him which is ſet up of God to be our Righteouſneſs, Redemption, and Juſtification.

The Pope charged with Hereſy by Luther.

The foundation of the Popes Doctrine contrary to Chriſtian Faith.

Martin Luther therefore, urging and reducing things to the foundation and touchſtone of the Scripture, opened the eyes of many, which before were drowned in darkneſs. Whereupon it cannot be expreſſed what joy, comfort, and conſolation came to the hearts of Men, ſome lying in darkneſs and ignorance, ſome wallowing in ſin, ſome being in deſpair, ſome macerating themſelves by works, and ſome preſuming upon their own Righteouſneſs, to behold that glorious benefit of the great liberty and free juſtification ſet up in Chriſt Jeſus. And briefly to ſpeak, the more glorious the benefit of this Doctrine appeared to the World after long ignorance, the greater perſecution followed upon the ſame. And where the Elect of God took moſt occaſion of comfort and of ſalvation, thereof the Adverſaries took moſt matter of vexation and diſturbance, as commonly we ſee the true Word of God to bring with it ever diſſention and perturbation; and therefore truly it was ſaid of Chriſt, That he came not to ſend Peace on Earth, but the Sword. And this was the cauſe why that, after the Doctrine and Preaching of Luther, ſo great troubles and perſecutions followed in all quarters of the World; whereby aroſe great diſquietneſs amongſt the Prelates, and many Laws and Decrees were made to overthrow the ſame, by cruel handling of many good and Chriſtian Men. Thus while Authority, armed with Laws and Rigor, did ſtrive againſt ſimple verity; lamentable it was to hear how many poor Men were troubled, and went to wrack, ſome toſt from place to place, ſome exiled out of the Land for fear, ſome cauſed to abjure, ſome driven to Caves in Woods, ſome wracked with torment, and ſome purſued to death with Faggot and Fire. Of whom we have now (Chriſt willing) in this Hiſtory following to intreat, firſt beginning with certain that ſuffered in Germany, and then to return to our own Stories, and Martyrs here in England.

Mat. 10. Great perſecution after the Doctrine of Luther.

Henry Voes and John Eſch Friers Auguſtines.

IN the year of our Lord 1523, two young Men were burnt at Bruxels, the one named Henry Voes, being of the age of 24 years; and the other John Eſch, which before had been of the Order of the Auguſtine Friers. They were degraded the firſt day of July, and ſpoiled of their Friers Weed, at the Suit of Egmondanus the Pope's Inquiſitor; and the Divines of Lovaine; for that they would not retract and deny their Doctrine of the Goſpel, which the Papiſts call Lutheraniſm. Their Examiners were Hochetratus, and others, who demanded of them, What they did believe? They ſaid, The Books of the Old Teſtament and the New, wherein were contained the Articles of the Creed. Then were they asked, whether they believed the Decrees of the Councils, and of the Fathers? They ſaid, Such as were agreeing to the Scripture they believed. After this they proceeded further, asking, Whether they thought it any deadly ſin to tranſgreſs the Decrees of the Fathers, and of the Biſhop of Rome? That (ſaid they) is to be attributed only to the Precepts of God, to bind the Conſcience of Man, or to looſe it. Wherein when they conſtantly perſiſted and would not turn, they were condemned and judged to be burned. Then they began to give thanks to God their Heavenly Father, which had delivered them through his great goodneſs, from that falſe and abominable Prieſthood, and made them Prieſts of his holy Order, receiving them unto him as a Sacrifice of ſweet Odour. Then there was a Bill written, which was delivered unto them to read openly before the People, to declare what Faith and Doctrine they held. The greateſt Error that they were accuſed of, was, That Men ought to truſt only in God, foraſmuch as Men are liers and deceitful in all their Words and Deeds, and therefore there ought no truſt or affiance to be put in them.

The cauſe of their accuſation and martyrdom.

As they were led unto the place of Execution, which was the firſt of July, they went joyfully and merrily, making continual proteſtation that they died for the Glory of God, and the Doctrine of the Goſpel, as true Chriſtians, believing and following the Holy Church of the Son of God; ſaying alſo, that it was the day which they had long deſired. After they were come to the place where they ſhould be burned, and were diſpoiled of their Garments, they tarried a great ſpace in their Shirts, and joyfully embraced the Stake that they ſhould be bound to, patiently and joyfully enduring whatſoever was done unto them, praiſing God with Te Deum laudamus, and ſinging Pſalms, and rehearſing the Creed, in teſtimony of their Faith. A certain Doctor, beholding their jollity and mirth, ſaid unto Henry, that he ſhould take heed ſo fooliſhly to glorify himſelf. To whom he anſwered, God forbid that I ſhould glory in any thing, but only in the Croſs of my Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Another counſelled him to have God before his eyes: unto whom he anſwered, I truſt that I carry him truly in my heart. One of them ſeeing that fire was kindled at his feet, ſaid, Methinks ye do ſtrew Roſes under my feet. Finally, the ſmoke and the flame mounting up to their faces, choaked them.

Behold how conſtantly and joyfully theſe Martyrs take their death.

Henry being demanded amongſt other things, whether Luther had ſeduced him or no: yea, ſaid he, even as Chriſt ſeduced his Apoſtles. He ſaid alſo, that it was contrary to God's Law, that the Clergy ſhould be exempted from the Power and Juriſdiction of the Magiſtrate ordained of God; for ſuch as were ordained in Office by the Biſhops, have no power, but only to preach the Word of God, and to feed their Flock therewithal. After their death, their Monaſtery was diſſolved at Antwerp. The Preſident thereof, by the Papiſts called Jacobus Lutherianus, after divers and ſundry troubles and afflictions was forced to recant at Bruxels; but afterward his mind being renewed by the Holy Ghoſt, embracing that again which before he had renounced, he fled unto Luther. Ex 6. Tomo M. Lutheri, fol. 397.

Againſt all reaſon that the Clergy ſhould be exempted from the civil Magiſtrate.

Henry Sutphen, Monk put to death in Diethmar.

Henry Sutphen.

THE next year after the burning of thoſe two Chriſtian Martyrs at Bruxels above mentioned, with like Tyranny alſo was martyred and burned without all order of Judgment or juſt Condemnation, about the City of Diethmar in the borders of Germany, one Henry Sutphen, Monk, Anno 1524. of whom mention is partly touched in the Commentaries of John Sleiden lib. 4. but his Hiſtory is more amply deſcribed of Luther, of Paulus Eberus in his Calend. of Ludov. Rabus Criſpinus, and others. This Sutphen had been before with Martin Luther, and afterward coming to Antwerp, was from thence excluded for the Goſpel, and ſo came to Breme, not to the end there to preach, but for that he was minded to go to Wittenberg, being driven from Antwerp, as is above ſaid. Who being at Breme, was there required by certain godly Citizens of Breme to make one or two brief Exhortations upon the Goſpel. Whereunto, through the earneſt Love and Zeal that was in him, he was eaſily aſſured and perſwaded. He made his firſt Sermon unto the People the Sunday before St. Martins day. When the People heard him preach the Word of God ſo ſincerely, they deſired him again the ſecond time, and were ſo in love with his Doctrine, that the whole Pariſh required him to tarry amongſt them to preach the Goſpel; which thing, for fear of danger, for a time he refuſed. When the religious Rout had underſtanding hereof, eſpecially the Canons, Monks, and Prieſts, they went about with all endeavour to oppreſs him, and thruſt both him out of the City, and alſo the Goſpel of Chriſt (for that was their chief ſeeking:) whereupon they went unto the Senate, deſiring that ſuch an Heretick might be baniſhed the Town, which in his Doctrine preached againſt the Catholick Church. Upon the complaint of the Canons, the Senate ſent for the Wardens and head Men of the Pariſh where Henry had preached; who being come together, the Senate declared unto them the Complaint of the Canons and all the other religious men. Whereunto the Citizens of Breme, taking their Preachers part, anſwered, that they knew none other, but that they had hired a learned and honeſt man to preach unto them, which ſhould teach them ſincerely and truly the Word of God. Notwithſtanding if the Chapter-houſe or any other man could bring Teſtimonial or Witneſs, that the Preacher had taught any thing which either ſavoured of Hereſie, or were repugnant to the Word of God, they were ready, they ſaid, with the Chapter-houſe to perſecute him: for God forbid that they ſhould maintain an Heretick. But if contrariwiſe the Canons of the Chapter-houſe, and the other religious men will not declare and ſhew that the Preacher, whom they had hired, had taught any Error or Hereſie, but were ſet only of malice by violence to drive him away, they might not (ſaid they) by any means ſuffer the ſame. Whereupon they deſired the Senate, with all humble obedience, that they would not require it of them, but grant them Equity and Juſtice, ſaying, that they were minded to aſſiſt their Preacher always, and to plead his Cauſe.

The Citizens of Breme excuſe their Preacher.

This Anſwer the Senate commanded to be declared to the Chapter-houſe. When as the religious ſort underſtood that they could prevail little or nothing with their words, burſting out into a fury, they began to threaten, and therewithal went ſtraight unto the Archbiſhop to certifie him how that the Citizens of Breme were become Hereticks, and would no longer obey their religious ſort, with many other like things in their Complaint, ſo that it was to be feared, leſt the whole City ſhortly ſhould be ſeduced.

The Monks and Prieſts complain again of the Preacher to the Archbiſhop of Breme.

When the Biſhop heard tell of theſe things, ſtraightway he ſent two which were of his Council unto Breme, requiring that Henry ſhould be ſent unto him without delay. When they were demanded why they ſhould have him ſent, they anſwered, becauſe he preached againſt the holy Church. Being again demanded in what Points or Articles, they had nothing to ſay. One of theſe Counſellors was the Biſhops Suffragan, a naughty pernicious Hypocrite that ſought by all means poſſible to carry away the ſaid Henry captive. Finally they received this anſwer of the Senators, That foraſmuch as the Preacher, being hired of the Churchwardens, had not hitherto been convict for any Heretick, and that no man had declared any erroneous or heretical Article that he had taught, they ſaid they could by no means obtain of the Citizens that he ſhould be carried away: wherefore they earneſtly deſired the Biſhop, that he would ſpeedily ſend his learned men unto Breme to diſpute with him; and if he were convinced, they promiſed without any delay that he ſhould be juſtly puniſhed and ſent away: if not, they would in no wiſe let him depart. Whereunto the Suffragan anſwered with a great Proteſtation, requiring that he might be delivered into his hands for the quietneſs of the whole Country, taking God to his witneſs, that in this behalf he ſought for nothing elſe, but only the commodity of his Country. But for all this they could prevail nothing, for the Senate continued ſtill in their former mind. Whereupon the Suffragan being moved with anger, departed from Breme, and would not confirm their Children.

The Preacher cited to appear before the Archbiſhop.

False Accuſation.

The Senate denies to ſend the Preacher to the Biſhop.

The Senate of Breme require a Diſputation of the Archbiſhop.

The Suffrag. would not confirm their Children for anger.

When he came unto the Biſhop, he declared the anſwer of the Senate, and what he had heard and learned of the Prieſts and Monks there. Afterward, when daily news came, that the Preacher did ſtill more and more preach, and teach more heinous matter againſt the Religious Rout, they attempted another way, ſuborning great Men to admoniſh the Citizens of Breme into what Jeopardy their Commonwealth might fall by means of their Preacher, preaching contrary to the Decree of the Pope and Emperor. Beſides that, they ſaid, that he was the Priſoner of the Lady Margaret; for which cauſe they had gotten Letters of the Lady Margaret, requiring to have her Priſoner ſent unto her again.

When the Prelates cannot prevail by power, they fall to practice.

All theſe crafts and ſubtilties did nothing at all prevail, for the Senate of Breme anſwered all things without blame. Whenas the Biſhop ſaw this his enterprize alſo fruſtrate, he attempted another way, whereby he had certain hope, that both he, and alſo the Word of God with him ſhould be wholly oppreſſed. Whereupon they decreed a Provincial vincial Council, not to be holden at Breme, as it was accuſtomed, but at Bucſtade, which place they thought moſt meet for their purpoſe.

To this Council were called the Prelates and learned Men of the Dioceſs, to determine what was to be believed, and whereunto to truſt.

A Council of Prieſts called againſt Henry Sutphen.

Alſo to the ſaid Council was Henry called, notwithſtanding that they had already decreed to proceed againſt him, as againſt a manifeſt Heretick, albeit he was not yet convict, nor had pleaded his cauſe before them. Wherefore the Rulers of the City, together with the Commonalty, detained him at home, foreſeeing and ſuſpecting the malice of the Council. Then the ſaid Henry gathered a Sum of his Doctrine into a few Articles, and ſent it with his Letters unto the Archbiſhop; excuſing his Innocency, offering himſelf to be ready, if he were convict of any error by the Teſtimony of the holy Scripture, to recant the ſame: notwithſtanding earneſtly requiring, that his Errors might be convicted by the holy Scriptures, by the Teſtimony whereof he had hitherto approved his Doctrine, and doubted not hereafter to confirm the ſame: but this took no place amongſt thoſe anointed Prelates. What the determination of their Judgment was, it may hereupon well be gathered, in that ſhortly afeer they ſet upon the Church-porch the Bull of the Pope Leo the Xth, and Decree of the Emperor made at Wormes. Whereupon Henry contemning their madneſs, proceeded daily in preaching the Goſpel, adding always this Proteſtation, That he was ready willingly to give account touching his Faith and Doctrine to every man that would require the ſame. In the mean time the holy Catholicks could not be idle, but ſent their Chaplains unto every Sermon to trap him in his words. But God, whoſe Foot-paths are in the midſt of the Floods, would have his marvellous power to be ſeen in them; for he converted many of them: inſomuch that the greater part of thoſe that were ſent to hearken, did openly witneſs his Doctoine to be God's Truth, againſt which no man could contend, and ſuch as in all their lives before they had not heard; perſwading them likewiſe, that they forſaking all Impiety, ſhould follow the Word of God, and believe the ſame, if they would be ſaved. But the chief Prieſts, Canons, and Monks were ſo indurate and blinded with Pharaoh, that they became the worſe for theſe Admonitions. When as God ſaw the time convenient that Henry ſhould confirm the verity that he had preached, he ſent him among the cruel Murtherers appointed for that ſlaughter, by this occaſion as followeth.

Henry Sutphen ſent for to preach at Meldorph.

It hapned in the year of our Lord 1524, that this Henry was ſent for by Letters, by Nicholas Boy Pariſh Prieſt, and other faithful Chriſtians of the Pariſh of Meldorph, which is a Town in Diethmar, to preach the Goſpel unto them, and deliver them out of the Bondage of Antichriſt, which in that place had full Dominion.

Theſe Letters being received upon St. Katharine's Evening, calling together ſix Brethren, honeſt Citizens, he opened the matter unto them, how that he was ſent for by them of Diethmar, to preach the Goſpel; adding moreover, that he was not only a Debtor unto them, but to all other which required his aid. Wherefore he thought good to go to Diethmar, to ſee what God would work by him, requiring alſo that they would help him with their advice, by what means he might beſt take his Journey, that no man ſhould know of it, that thereby he might not be letted or ſtopped; which thing without doubt had come to paſs, if his purpoſe had been known to the People. Unto whom the Citizens anſwered, deſiring him that he would not depart for a time, foraſmuch as the Goſpel had not yet taken ſo deep root in the People, but was as yet weak and eſpecially in the Villages thereabout, and that the Perſecution was very great, willing him alſo to have reſpect unto this, that he was by them called to the Office of Preaching: and if they of Diethmar deſired a Preacher, he ſhould ſend ſome other in his place, for they had before perceived the Diſpoſition and Untruſtineſs of them of Diethmar: beſides that, it was not in their power to give him free liberty to depart, without the conſent of the whole Commonalty. Whereunto Henry made anſwer in this manner, That albeit he could not deny but that he was ſent for by them, yet now there were many godly Men at Breme, whoſe labour they might uſe in his abſence, in preaching of the Goſpel. Beſides that the Papiſts were for the moſt part vanquiſhed and overthrown, and their Folly known, even unto Women and Children; adding thereunto that he had now preached the Goſpel by the ſpace of two years at Breme, and that they of Diethmar lived without a Paſtor even in the midſt of Wolves: wherefore he could not with a ſafe Conſcience deny their requeſt. And whereas they alledged that they could not licence him without the conſent of the whole Congregation, that, ſaid he, was but of ſmall effect; foraſmuch as he would not utterly forſake them, but determined only to remain with them of Diethmar for a month or two, to lay a Foundation, and then to return again; deſiring them, that after his departure they would declare unto the Congregation how he was ſent for by them of Diethmar, to whom he could not ſay nay: willing them alſo to excuſe his ſudden departure, for that he was forced to depart ſecretly, becauſe of his Adverſaries privily laying wait in every place for him; thinking that he ſhould ſcarcely avoid them, which had always gone about to bring him to his death. Finally, they ſhould promiſe to the Congregation in his name, that when he had performed his Enterpriſe, he would ſtraight return again. They being perſwaded with theſe words, conſented unto him, ſtedfaſtly hoping that they of Diethmar ſhould be converted to the true Faith: which people above all other have been always given to Idolatry.

K. Hen. 8.

In this rude Country of Diethmar M. Rogers our Countryman was ſuperintendent in time of the ſix Articles, where he with great danger of his life did very much good.

Having prepared all things toward his ſetting forth, the two and twentieth day of October he took his Journey, and came to Meldorph whither he was ſent for: where he was joyfully received of the Pariſh Prieſt and others, as ſoon as he was come thither. Albeit he had not yet preached, the Devil with his members by and by began to fret and fume for anger. Above all other, one Auguſtine Tornborch, Prior of the Black Friers, began to fume, who went out of hand unto Mr. J. Swicken his companion, and Commiſſary to the official of Hamburg, to take counſel what was to be done, leſt they ſhould loſe their Kingdom. Finally, it was decreed by them above all things to withſtand the beginnings, that he ſhould not have licence to preach: for if by any means it happened that he preached, and the people ſhould hear him, it was to be feared that the wickedneſs and craft of the Prieſts and Monks ſhould be opened; which being made manifeſt, they knew plainly that it would be but a Folly to reſiſt, remembring what had happened lately before in Breme. This Determination had, the Prior the next day early in the Morning (for he had not ſlept well all night for cares) went with great ſpeed unto Heyda, to ſpeak with the eight and forty Preſidents of the Country: unto whom with great complaints he ſhewed how that a ſeditious fellow, a Monk was come from Breme, which would ſeduce all the People of Diethmar, as he had done the Bremers. There was moreover that did aſſiſt this Prior, Mr. Gunterus, Chancellor of the Country, and Petrus Hannus, both enemies unto the Goſpel. Theſe ſtoutly aſſiſted the Prior, perſwading the other forty ſix, being ſimple and unlearned Men, that they ſhould obtain great favour and good will of the Biſhop of Breme, if they would put this Heretick Monk to death. When theſe poor and unlearned men heard theſe words, they decreed that this Monk ſhould be put to death, neither heard, nor ſeen, much leſs convict.

The Prior of the Black-Friers with the forty eight Preſidents conſpire the death of Henry.

The chief doers of this Conſpiracy.

Furthermore, this Prior obtained Letters from the forty eight Preſidents to the Pariſh Prieſt, commanding him under great penalty, that he ſhould put the Monk out of his houſe, and command him to depart without preaching. With theſe Letters he came ſpeedily to Meldorph, and delivered the Letters over-night unto the Pariſh Prieſt; truſting that by their Threatnings and Commandments, the ſaid Henry ſhould be feared from preaching, diligently watching whether he did preach or not.

Nicholas Boyes Pariſh Prieſt of Meldroph, commanded to put away Henry.

When as the Pariſh Prieſt had read over the Letters, he marvelled not a little at that proud Commandment, for that it had not been heard of before that the forty eight Preſidents ſhould meddle with Eccleſiaſtical matters, and that it had been of long time uſed, that the ruling thereof ſhould be in the hands of the Pariſh Prieſt: and long time before it was decreed by the whole Province, and cuſtomably uſed, that in every Church the Pariſh Prieſt ſhould have free liberty to receive or put out the Preacher. Theſe Letters the Pariſh Prieſt delivered unto Henry; which when he had diligently looked over, he anſwered, that foraſmuch as he was come being ſent for by the whole Congregation to preach the Goſpel of Chriſt, he would ſatisfie that Vocation, becauſe he ſaw it would be acceptable table unto the whole Congregation, and that he ought rather to obey the Word of God, than Man. Alſo, that if it pleaſed God that he ſhould loſe his Life in Diethmar, there was as near a way to Heaven, as in any other place; for that he doubted nothing at all, that once he muſt ſuffer for the Goſpel's ſake. Upon this Courage and Boldneſs, the next day Henry went up into the Pulpit, and made a Sermon, expounding the place of Paul, which is, Rom. 1. Teſtis eſt mihi Deus, &c. that is, God is my Witneſs; and the Goſpel of the day. After the Sermon was done, the whole Congregation being called together, the Prior delivered the Letters that were ſent by the forty eight Preſidents, the Tenor whereof was this: That they of Meldorph ſhould be fined with a Fine of a thouſand Gilderns, if they ſuffered the Monk to preach; and commanded moreover, that they ſhould ſend Ambaſſadors unto Heida with full Power and Authority. When they heard theſe Letters read, they were much moved, becauſe they were ſo charged contrary to the cuſtom of the Country; foraſmuch as every Pariſh Prieſt hath always had Authority, according to his Diſcretion, to chuſe or put away the Preacher. Briefly, they all determined with one voice, to keep Henry for their Preacher, and to defend him: for when they had heard the Sermon, they were greatly offended with the Prior.

Hen. preacheth at Meldorph.

After Dinner Henry preached again, expounding the place of St. Paul, Rom. 15. Debemus nos qui potentes ſumus. &c. We ought which are ſtrong, &c. The next day the Citizens of Meldorph ſent their Meſſengers unto Heida, offering to anſwer in all Cauſes before all Men, for their Preacher, whom they have received. Beſides that, the Meſſengers declared what Chriſtian and godly Sermons they heard him preach. The Pariſh Prieſt alſo wrote Letters by the ſaid Legats unto the forty eight Rulers, wherein he excuſed himſelf, that it was never his mind, nor the intent of the ſaid Henry to move Sedition, but only ſincerely to preach the Word of God, and offer himſelf ready to anſwer for the ſaid Henry to all men, whenſoever he ſhould be called; moſt earneſtly deſiring them not to give credit unto the Monks, which being blinded with hatred and avarice, had fully determined to oppreſs the Truth: ſaying moreover, that it was againſt all reaſon, that a man ſhould be condemned, before the Truth be tried out, and his cauſe declared; and if, after due Inquiſition had, he ſhould be convict, then he ſhould ſuffer condign Puniſhment. This ſubmiſſion with the publick Teſtimonial was nothing eſteemed or regarded, neither was there any anſwer given thereunto, but every man repined and murmured thereat. Laſt of all, one Peter Dethleues, one of the Seigniours, anſwered; That albeit there were divers Diſſentions in every place about the Chriſtian Faith, and that they as men ignorant could not redreſs the ſame, yet this their ſentence ſhould be holden and ratified; which was, that the Judgment of determining this Diſſention ſhould be reſerved to the next Council, which by the report of Maſter Chancellor was now in hand to be called and gathered. Alſo until all Diſcord and Diſſention ſhould be appeaſed, whatſoever was received and believed by their Neighbours, he promiſed in the name of the reſt, that they would willingly receive and believe the ſame. So that if the Word of God hath not hitherto been clearly and ſincerely preached (as they ſaid) unto the People, and that there be now ſome which can teach and preach the ſame more ſincerely; it is not their mind or intent to withſtand or reſiſt their good doings, but that the Preſidents would wiſh this one thing diligently to be taken heed of, that there be no occaſion given by any man to move Sedition, and in the mean time he commanded all men quietly to give over all matters until Eaſter next, and by that time it ſhould be appeaſed, what ſhould be received, and what left undone. With this Anſwer they were all very well contented; and the Meſſengers returned again to Meldorph with great joy and gladneſs, declaring to the whole Congregation what Anſwer was made, conceiving a ſure hope that the matter would ſhortly come to paſs.

The Citizens of Meldorph write in defence of their Preacher.

Good Counſel of Peter Dethleues.

Upon St. Nicholas day, this Henry preached twice, firſt upon the Goſpel, Homo quidam nobilis, &c. A certain Noble man, &c. Secondly upon this Text, Plures facti ſunt Sacerdotes, &c. There are many made Prieſts, &c. with ſuch a ſpirit and grace, that all men had him in admiration, praying God moſt earneſtly, that they might long have ſuch a Preacher. Upon the day of the Conception of our Lady, he alſo made two Sermons upon the firſt Chapter of Matthew, expounding the Book of the Generation; wherein he rehearſed the Promiſes made by God unto our Foreſathers, and under what Faith our Fathers, that then were, had lived; adding alſo, that all reſpect of Works being ſet apart, we muſt be juſtified by the ſame Faith. All theſe things were ſpoken with ſuch boldneſs of Spirit, that all men greatly marvelled at him, giving thanks to God for his great Mercy, that had ſent them ſuch a Preacher, deſiring him moreover, that he would tarry with them all Chriſtmaſs to preach; for they feared leſt he ſhould be ſent for to ſome other place.

Luke 9. Heb. 7.

In the mean ſpace, the Prior and Maſter John Schink were not idle: for when the Prior perceived that his malicious Enterpriſe took no good ſucceſs, he adjoyned unto him a Companion, William a Doctor of the Jacobins, and ſo went up to Laudanum to the Monks Franciſcans, and Minors, for help and counſel. For thoſe kinds of Friers above all others are beſt inſtruct by their Hypocriſie to deceive the poor and ſimple People. Theſe Friers ſtraightway ſent for certain of the Rulers, which had all the Rule and Authority, and eſpecially Peter Hannus, Peter Swine, and Nicholas Roden; unto whom they declared, after their accuſtomed manner, with great Complaints, what an Heretick Monk had preached, and how he had obtained the Favour almoſt of all the ſimple people; which if they did not ſpeedily provide for, and withſtand the beginnings, and put the Heretick to death, it would come to paſs, that ſhortly the honour of our Lady, and all Saints, together with the two Abbeys, ſhould utterly come to ruine and decay.

The Prior and the Monks againſt conſpire againſt the Goſpel.

When theſe ſimple and ignorant men heard theſe words, they were greatly moved. Whereunto Peter Swine anſwered thus, That they had before written unto the Pariſh Prieſt and to Henry what was beſt to be done; notwithſtanding, if they thought good, they would write again. No, ſaid the Prior, this matter muſt be attempted another way: for if you write unto the Heretick, he will by and by anſwer you again. And it is to be feared, leſt the contagion of his Hereſie alſo do infect you, being unlearned men: for if you give him leave to ſpeak, and to anſwer, there is no hope that you ſhall overcome him. Wherefore they finally determined to take this Henry by night, and burn him before the People ſhould know it, or he come to his defence to anſwer. This device pleaſed all men, but eſpecially the Franciſcan Friers. Petrus Hannus the Priors chief Friend, willing to get the chief Praiſe and thanks of this matter, by the help of Maſter Gunter, did aſſociate unto him certain other Rulers of the Towns near adjoyning, whoſe names are here not to be hidden, becauſe they ſo much affected Praiſe and Glory. The Names of the Preſidents were theſe, Peter Hannus, Peter Swine's Son, Henricke Londane, John Holneus, Lawrence Hannemanus, Nicolas Wiſlingbourgus, Ambroſe and John Brenthuſius, Marquardus Kremmerus, Henſtedanus Ludecus, Joannes Wiſlingus, and Petrus Groſſus, Preſident of Hemingſtate. All theſe Preſidents, and all other that were of Counſel to this pretence, aſſembled together in the Pariſh of the new Church, in the Houſe of M. Gunter, where alſo the Chancellor was conſulting together with them how they might burn the ſaid Henry ſecretly, coming upon him without any Judgment or Sentence. They concluded the next day after the Conception of our Lady, to meet at Henning, which is five Miles from Meldorph, with a great Band of Husbandmen. This Determination thus made, they layed Scouts in every place, that there ſhould no news of their pretenſed Miſchiefs come to Meldorph; commanding that as ſoon as it began to wax dark, they ſhould all gather together. There aſſembled above five hundred men of the Country, unto whom was declared the cauſe of their Aſſembly, and alſo they were inſtructed what was to be done; for before no man knew the cauſe of the Aſſembly, but only the Preſidents. When the Husbandmen underſtood it, they would have returned back again, refuſing ſuch a deteſtable and horrible deed. The Preſidents with moſt bitter threats kept them in obedience; and to the intent they ſhould be the more couragious, they gave them three Barrels of Hamborough Beer to drink.

A drunken Murder.

About midnight they came in Armour to Meldorph. The Jacobines and Monks prepared Torches for them, that Henry ſhould not ſlip away ſuddenly in the dark. They had alſo with them a falſe Betrayer, named Hennegus, by whoſe whoſe Treaſon they had perfect knowledg of all things. With great violence they burſt into the houſe of the Pariſh Prieſt, breaking and ſpoiling all things, as the manner of that drunken People is. If they found either Gold or Silver they took it away. When they had ſpoiled all things, they violently fell upon the Pariſh Prieſt, and with great noiſe cried out, Kill the Thief, Kill the Thief. Some of them took him by the hair of the Head, and pulled him out into the dirt, forcing him to go with them as Priſoner: Other ſome cryed out, ſaying, that the Pariſh Prieſt was not to be medled withal, for they had no Commiſſion to take him. After they had ſatisfied their Luſt upon the Pariſh Prieſt, with great Rage and Fury they ran upon Henry, and drawing him naked out of his Bed, bound his hands hard behind him: whom being ſo bound, they drew to and fro ſo long, that Peter Hannus, which otherwiſe was unmerciful and a cruel Perſecutor of the Word of God, willed them that they ſhould let him alone; for that without doubt he would follow of his own mind. Then they committed the guiding of him to John Balco, who rather drew him by violence than led him: when he was brought to Hemmingſted, they asked of him how and for what intent he came to Diethmar? unto whom he gently declared the whole cauſe of his coming: but they all in a rage cried out, Away with him, away with him; for if we hear him talk any longer, it is to be feared that he will make us alſo Hereticks. Then he, being marvellous weary and faint, required to be ſet on horſe-back, for his Feet were all cut and hurt with the Ice, becauſe he was led all night barefoot. When they heard him ſay ſo, they mocked and laughed at him, ſaying, Muſt we hire an Horſe for an Heretick, he ſhall go a foot whether he will or no? Becauſe it was night they carried him naked to Heida. Afterward they brought him to a certain man's Houſe named Calden, and bound him there with Chains in the Stocks. The Maſter of the houſe ſeeing the cruel deed, taking compaſſion upon Henry, would not ſuffer it to be done. Wherefore he was carried away to a Prieſts houſe, the Officials Servant of Hamburgh, and ſhut up in a Cupboard, and was kept by the rude People, which all the night mocked and ſcorned him. Amongſt all other there came unto him, Simon in Altennord, and Chriſtian, Pariſh Prieſt of the new Church, both alike ignorant and wicked Perſecutors of the Word of God, demanding of him why he had forſaken his holy Habit? unto whom he friendly anſwered by the Scriptures; but thoſe ignorant Perſons underſtood nothing what he ſaid. Mr. Gunterus alſo came unto him, inquiring whether he had rather to be ſent to the Biſhop of Breme, or receive his Puniſhment in Diethmar? unto whom Henry anſwered, If I have preached any thing contrary to God's Word, or done any wicked Act, it is in their hands to puniſh me therefore. Gunterus anſwered, Hark, I pray you good Friends, hark, he deſireth to ſuffer in Diethmar. The common People all the night continued in immoderate drinking and ſwilling.

Hennegus the Betrayer of the Preacher.

A drunken Conſultati-Crucifie, Crucifie.

In the Morning about eight of the clock, they gathered together in the Market-place to conſult what they ſhould do: Where the ruſtical People boiling with drink, cried out, Burn him, Burn him, to the Fire with the Heretick. Without doubt, if we do it, we ſhall this day obtain great Glory and Praiſe both of God and Man; for the longer he liveth, the more he will ſeduce with his Hereſie. What need many words? Sure he was to die; for they had condemned this good Henry without any Judgment (his Cauſe not being heard) to be burned. At laſt they commanded the Crier to proclaim, That every man that was at the taking of him, ſhould be ready in Armour to bring him forth to the Fire. Amongſt all other the Friers Franciſcans were preſent, incouraging the drunken rude People, ſaying, Now you go the right way to work. Then they bound the ſaid Henry, Hands, Feet, and Neck, and with great noiſe brought him forth to the Fire. As he paſſed by, a certain Woman ſtanding in her door, beholding that pitiful ſight, wept abundantly. Unto whom Henry turning himſelf, ſaid, I pray you weep not for me. When he came to the Fire, for very weakneſs he ſate down upon the ground. By and by there was preſent one of the Preſident's named May, which was evidently known to be corrupted and bribed with money to this purpoſe, he condemned the ſaid Henry to be burned, pronouncing this Sentence upon him.

Foraſmuch as this Thief hath wickedly preached againſt the worſhip of our bleſſed Lady, by the Commandment and Sufferance of our Reverend Father in Chriſt, the Biſhop of Breme, and my Lord I condemn him here to be burned and conſumed with Fire. Unto whom Henry anſwered, I have done no ſuch thing: and, lifting up his Hands towards Heaven, he ſaid, O Lord forgive them, for they offend ignorantly, not knowing what they do: thy Name, O Almighty God, is holy.

A falſe Sentence of a corrupt Judge.

In the mean time a certain Woman, the Wife of one Jungar, Siſter of Peter Hannus, offered her ſelf to ſuffer a thouſand ſtripes, and to give them much money, ſo that they would pacifie the matter, and keep him in Priſon, until that he might plead his matter before the whole Convocation of the Country. When they had heard theſe words, they waxed more mad, and threw the Woman down under feet, and trod upon her, and beat the ſaid Henry unmercifully. One of the ruſtical ſort ſtruck him behind on the head with a ſharp Daggar. John Holms of the new Church ſtruck him with a Mace. Other ſome thruſt him in the Back, and in the Arms. And this was not done once or twice, but as often as he began to ſpeak. Maſter Gunter cried out, incouraging them, ſaying, Go to boldly good Fellows, truly God is with us preſent.

After this, he brought a Franciſcan Frier unto Henry, that he ſhould be confeſſed. Whom Henry demanded in this manner; Brother, when have I done you injury, either by word or deed, or when did I ever provoke you to anger? Never ſaid the Frier. What ſhould I then confeſs unto you, ſaid he, that you think you might forgive me? The Frier, being moved at theſe words, departed. The fire as often as it was kindled, would not burn. Notwithſtanding they ſatisfied their minds upon him, ſtriking and pricking him with all kind of Weapons. The ſaid Henry ſtanding in the mean time in his Shirt before all this rude people; at the laſt they having gotten a great Ladder, bound him hard thereunto, and caſt him into the fire. And when he began to pray, and to repeat his Creed, one ſtruck him upon the Face with his Fiſt, ſaying, Thou ſhalt firſt be burnt, and afterward pray and prate as much as thou wilt. Then another treading upon his Breaſt, bound his Neck ſo hard to a ſtep of the Ladder, that the Blood guſhed out of his Mouth and Noſe. This was done to ſtrangle him withal, for they ſaw that for all his ſore Wounds he would not die.

The Martyrdom of Hen. Sutphen.

After he was bound to the Ladder, he was ſet upright. Then one running unto him, ſet his Halbert for the Ladder to lean againſt (for thoſe Countrymen uſe no common Hangman, but every man exerciſeth the Office without difference) but the Ladder, ſlipping away from the point of the Halbert, cauſed that the Halbert ſtruck him through the Body. Then they caſt this good man, Ladder and all upon the Wood, which tumbling down, light upon the one ſide. Then John Holmes ran unto him, and ſtruck him with a Mace upon the Breaſt, till he was dead and ſtirred no more. Afterward they roaſted him upon the Coals; for the Wood, as often as it was ſet on fire, would not burn out. And thus this godly Preacher finiſhed his Martyrdom, which was Anno 1524. *Ex Epiſt. The lamentable Martyrdom of John Clerk of Melden in France.

John Clerk of Melden, Martyr.

MElden is a City in France, ten miles distant from Paris, where John Clerk was first apprehended and taken, Anno. 1523, for setting up upon the Church-door a certain Bill against the Pope's Pardons lately sent thither from Rome, in which Bill he named the Pope to be Antichrist. For the which his Punishment was this, That three several days he should be whipped, and afterward have a Mark imprinted in his Forehead, as a note of Infamy. His Mother being a Christian Woman, altho her Husband was an Adversary, when she beheld her Son thus pitiously scourged, and ignominiously deformed in the Face, constantly and boldly did incourage her Son, crying with a loud voice, Blessed be Christ, and welcome be these Prints and Marks.

John Clerk scourged for calling the Pope Antichrist.

John Clerk marked in the Forehead.

After this Execution and Punishment sustained, the said John departed that Town, and went to Rosie in Bry, and from thence removed to Metz in Lotharing, where he remained a certain space, applying his Vocation, being a Woolt-carder by his Occupation. Whereas he the day before that the People of that City should go out to the Suburbs to worship certain blind Idols near by (after an old use and custom amongst them received) being inflamed with the zeal of God, went out of the City to the place where the Images were, and brast them all down in pieces. The next morrow after when the Canons, Priests, and Monks, keeping their old Custom, had brought with them the people out of the City to the place of Idolatry, to worship as they were wont, they found all their Blocks and Stocks almighty ly broken upon the ground. At the sight whereof they being mightily offended in their minds, set all the City on a Gog to search out the Author thereof, who was not hard to be found; forsomuch as this foresaid Clerk, besides that he was noted of them to be a man much addicted that way, he was also seen somewhat late in the Evening before to come from the same place into the City. Wherefore he being suspected and examined upon the same, at first confessed the Fact, rendring also the cause which moved him so to do. The People hearing this, and being not yet acquainted with that kind of Doctrine, were moved marvellously against him, crying out upon him in a great rage. Thus his cause being informed to the Judges, wherein he defended the pure Doctrine of the Son of God, he was condemned, and led to the place of Execution, where he sustained extreme Torments. For first his Hand was cut off from his right Arm, then his Nose with sharp Pinsons was violently pluckt from his Face; after that both his Arms and his Paps were likewise pluckt and drawn with the same Instrument. To all them that stood looking on, it was an horror to behold the grievous and doleful sight of his Pains: again to behold his patience, or rather the Grace of God giving him the gift to suffer, it was a wonder. Thus quietly and constantly he indured in his Torments, pronouncing, or in a manner singing the Verses of the hundred and fifteenth Psalm; Simulacra eorum sunt argentum & aurum, &c. Their Images are Silver and Gold, the work only of man's hand, &c. The residue of his life that remained in his rent Body, was committed to the fire, and therewith consumed; which was about the year of our Lord, 1524. Ex Pantal. & Crisp.

John Castellane, Doctor and Martyr.

THE year next ensuing, which was 1525, Master John Castellane born at Tourney, a Dr. of Divinity, after that he was called to the knowledg of God, and became a true Preacher of his Word, and had preached in France, in a place called Barleduc, also at Vittery in Partoise, at Chalon in Champaine, and in the Town of Vike, which is the Chamber and Episcopal Seat of the Bishop of Metz in Lorain, after he had laid some Foundation of the Doctrine of the Gospel in the Town of Metz, in returning from thence he was taken Prisoner by the Cardinal of Lorain's Servants, by whom he was carried from Goize to the Castle of Nommenie; whereupon the Citizens of Metz took no little displeasure and grievance, who being grievously offended to have their Preacher so to be apprehended and imprisoned, within short space after took certain of the Cardinals Subjects, and kept them Prisoners so long, until the Abbat of St. Anthonies in Viennois, called Theodore de Chaumont, Vicar General, as well in Causes Spiritual as Temporal, through the Jurisdiction both of the Cardinal, and Bishoprick of Metz, Toulouse and Verdune, being furnished with an Officer and Commission from the See of Rome, came to the said Town of Metz; and after divers Declarations made to the Provost, and to the other Justices and Counsellors of the City, he so wrought and brought to pass, that immediately the said Subjects of the Cardinal were set at liberty: but John Castellane was kept still Prisoner in the Castle of Nommenie, and was most cruelly handled from the time of the fourth day of May, until the twelfth day of January: during all which he persevered constant in the Doctrine of the Son of God. Whereupon he was carried from Nommenie to the Town and Castle of Vike, always persevering constantly in the profession of the same Doctrine; so that they did proceed unto the Sentence of his Degradation, that he might be delivered over unto the secular Power, according to the custom and manner. And forsomuch as the form and manner of the Sentence and Process of degrading is notable, and hath been reported unto us word for word, we have thought good here to annex the same, to declare the horrible Blasphemies joyned with gross and bruitish subtilty, in those high Mysteries which the Enemies of the Truth do use in their Process against the Children of God; whereby every man, even the most ignorant, may evidently perceive the horrible Blindness that these unshamefac'd Catholicks are blinded withal.

The Sentence of Degradation.

The Sentence of his Degradation. Ex actis Episcopalibus

CConcerning the Process inquisitory, formed and given in form of an Accusation against thee John Castellane, Priest, and Religious Man of the Fri.rs Ereniites of the Order of St. Austin; understanding likewise thy Confession which thou hast made of thine own good Will, maintaining false and erroneous Doctrine; and marking also besides this the godly Admonitions, and charitable Exhortations which we made unto thee in the Town of Metz, which thou like unto the Serpent Aspis, hast refused and given no ear unto: Also considering thine Answers made and reiterate unto Interrogatories, by means of thine Oath, in the which devillishly thou hast hidden and kept back not only the Truth, but also, following the example of Cain, hast denied to confess thy sins and mischievous offence: And finally, hearing the great number of Witnesses sworn and examined against thee, their Persons and Depositions diligently considered, and all other things worthy of consideration being justly examined, the Reverend Master Nicolas Savin, Doctor of Divinity, and Inquisitor of the Faith, Assistant unto us, hath entred Process against thee, and given full Information thereof; this our purpose and intent being also communicated unto divers Masters and Doctors both of the Civil and Canon Laws here present, which have subscribed and signed thereunto, whereby it appeareth, that thou John Castellane hast oftentimes, and in divers places openly and manifestly spread abroad, and taught many erroneous Propositions, full of the Heresie of Luther, contrary and against the Catholick Faith, and the Verity of the Gospel, and the holy Apostolick See, and so accursedly looked back and turned thy face, that thou art found to be a Lyer before Almighty God. It is ordained by the sacred Rules of the Canon-Law, that such as through the sharp Darts of their venomous Tongue do pervert the Scriptures, and go about with all their power to corrupt and infect the Souls of the Faithful, should be punished and corrected with most sharp Correction, to the end that others should be afraid to attempt the like, and apply themselves the better to the study of Christian Concord, through the example set before their eyes, as well of Severity, as of Clemency. For these Causes and others rising upon the said Process, by the Apostolick Authority, and also the Authority of our said Reverend Lord the Cardinal, which we do use in this our Sentence definitive, which we sitting in our Judgment-seat declare in these Writings, having God only before our eyes, and surely Tru'y you ſay, for your meaſure is death definitive, and therefore look you for the ſame meaſure again at Gods hand.

* If Luther be to be noted of Cruelty, which teacheth all men, and killeth no man, what then is to be noted in the Pope, which killeth all Gods Children and teacheth none?

conſidering, that what Meaſure we do meet unto others, the ſame ſhall be meaſured to us again: We pronounce and declare ſententially and definitively thee John Caſtellane, *being here preſent before us, and judge thee, becauſe of thy Deſerts, to be excommunicate with the moſt great Excommunication, and therewithal to be culpable of Treaſon againſt the Divine Majeſty, and a mortal Enemy of the Catholick Faith, and Verity of the Goſpel; alſo to be a manifeſt Heretick, and a Follower and Partaker of the execrable * cruelty of* Martin Luther, a ſtirrer up of old Hereſies already condemned: and therefore as thou oughteſt to be depoſed and deprived of all Prieſtly Honour and Dignity, of all thy Orders, of thy ſhaving and religious Habit, alſo of thy Eccleſiaſtical Benefices, if thou haſt any, and from all Priviledge of the Clergy: So we here preſently do depoſe, deprive, and ſeparate thee, as a rotten Member, from the Communion and Company of all the faithful: And being ſo deprived, we judge that thou oughteſt to be actually degraded: that done, we leave thee unto the ſecular Powers, committing the Degradation and actual Execution of this our Sentence unto the Reverend Lord and Biſhop here preſent, with the Authority and Commandment aforeſaid.

This Sentence being thus ended with their Catholick Sermon alſo, the ſaid Biſhop of Nicopolis ſitting in his Pontificalibus in the Judgment-ſeat, being Suffragan of Metz, with the Clergy, Nobles and People about him, proceeded to the degrading (as they call it) of the ſaid Mr. John Caſtellane. Thus the ſaid Maſter John Caſtellane being prepared and made ready to his Degradation by the Officers of the ſaid Biſhop, was apparelled in his Prieſtly Attire, and afterward brought forth of the Chappel by the Prieſts which were thereunto appointed, with all his Prieſtly Ornaments upon him, and holding his hands together, he kneeled down before the Biſhop. Then the Officers gave him the Chalice in his hands, with Wine and Water, the Patine, and the Hoſt; all which things the ſaid Biſhop which degraded him, took from him, ſaying; We take away from thee, or command to be taken from thee, all Power to offer Sacrifice unto God, and to ſay Maſs, as well for the quick as the dead.

D. Caſtellane degraded.

Moreover, the Biſhop ſcraped the Nails of both his Hands with a piece of Glaſs, ſaying, By this ſcraping we take away from thee all power to ſacrifice, to conſecrate, and to bleſs, which thou haſt received by the anointing of Prieſts anointed Fingers.

thy Hands. Then he took away from him the Cheſil, ſaying; By good right we do diſpoil thee of this Prieſtly Ornament, which ſignifieth Charity: for certainly thou haſt forſaken the ſame, and all Innocency. Then taking away the Stole, he ſaid: Thou haſt villanouſly rejected and deſpiſed the ſign of our Lord, which is repreſented by this Stole: wherefore we take it away from thee, and make thee unable to exerciſe and uſe the Office of Prieſthood, and all other things appertaining to Prieſthood. The Degradation of the order of Prieſthood being thus ended, they proceeded to the order of Deacon. Then the Miniſters gave him the Book of the Goſpels, which the Biſhop took away, ſaying; We take away from thee all power to read the Goſpels in the Church of God, for it appertaineth only to ſuch as are worthy. After this he ſpoiled him of the Dalmatike, which is the Veſture that the Deacons uſe, ſaying; We deprive thee of this Levitical Order; forſomuch as thou haſt not fulfilled thy Miniſtry and Office. After this the Biſhop took away the Stole from behind his back, ſaying; We juſtly take away from thee the white Stole which thou hadſt received undeſiledly, which alſo thou oughteſt to have born in the preſence of our Lord: and to the end that the People dedicate unto the name of Chriſt, may take by thee example, we prohibit thee any more to exerciſe or uſe the Office of Deaconſhip. Then they proceeded to the degrading of Subdeaconſhip, and taking away from him the Book of the Epiſtles, and his Subdeacon's Veſture, depoſed him from reading of the Epiſtles in the Church of God: and ſo orderly proceeding unto all the other Orders, degraded him from the Order of Benet and Collet, from the Order of Exorciſt, from the Lectorſhip, and laſt of all, from the Office of Door-keeper, taking from him the Keys, and commanding him hereafter not to open or ſhut the Reveſtry, nor to ring any more Bells in the Church. That done, the Biſhop went forward to degrade him from his firſt ſhaving, and taking away his Surplice, ſaid unto him; By the Authority of God Almighty, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, and by our Authority we take away from thee all Clarkly Habit, and deſpoil thee of all Ornament of Religion: Alſo we do depoſe and degrade thee of all Order, Benefit and Priledg of the Clergy, and as one unworthy of that Profeſſion, we commit thee to the ſervitude and ignominy of the ſecular State. Then the Biſhop took the Sheers and began to clip his head, ſaying in this manner. We caſt thee out as an unthankful Child of the Lord's Heritage, whereunto thou waſt called, and take away from thy head the Crown,

The degrading thus ended, the Procurator Fiſcal of the Court and City of Metz, required of the Notary an Inſtrument or Copy of the degrading: then the Miniſters of the Biſhop turned him out of his clerkly Habit, and put upon him the Apparel of a ſecular Man. That done, foraſmuch as he which is degraded, according to the inſtitution of Pope Innocent the third, ought to be delivered unto the ſecular Court, the Biſhop that degraded him proceeded no further, but ſaid in this manner; We pronounce that the ſecular Court ſhall receive thee into their charge, being thus degraded of all clerkly honour and privilege.

Note here theſe Perſecutors, how they will ſeem outwardly to be Lambs, but inwardly are ravening Wolves.

This done, the Biſhop, after a certain manner, intreated the ſecular Judg for him, ſaying, My Lord Judg, we pray you as heartily as we can, for the love of God, and the contemplation of tender pitty and mercy, and for the reſpect of our Prayers, that you will not in any point do any thing that ſhall be hurtful to this miſerable Man, or tending to his death, or maiming of his Body. Theſe things thus done, the ſecular Judg of the Town of Vike, confirming the foreſaid Sentence, condemned the foreſaid Mr. John Caſtellane to be burned quick: which death he ſuffered the twelfth day of January, 1525, with ſuch a conſtancy, that not only a great company of ignorant people were thereby drawn to the knowledg of the Verity, but alſo a great number, which had already ſome taſte thereof, were greatly confirmed by that his conſtant and valiant death.

Joannes Diazius, a Spaniard, Martyr, killed of his own Brother at Neoberge in Germany, Anno 1546.

The cruel murthering of John Diazius.

OF this John Diazius, the full Proceſs and Hiſtorie is ſet forth in Latin, wherein the whole circumſtance is debated at large, whereof the brief ſum is this; John Diazius, a Spaniard born, firſt being at Paris thirteen years, from thence returned to Geneva, then to Baſil, and after to Strasburg: from whence he was ſent Embaſſador with Bucer and others, to the Council at Ratisbone; where he talking with Peter Malvenda his Country-man, the Pope's Factor, ſo declared his Religion unto him, that Malvenda wrote to the Frier, which was the Emperor's Confeſſor, touching the ſaid John Diazius: at the opening and reading of which Letters, one Marquina another Spaniard was preſent. Upon this it followed, whether by this Confeſſor, or by Marquina, that Alphonſius Diazius, Brother to John Diazius, which was one of the Pope's Lawyers in Rome, had knowledg given him of his Brother John.

The Emperors Confeſſor.

Alphonſus Diazus came from Rome to kill his Brother.

When the communication of Ratisbone was diſſolved and broken up, John Diazius from Ratisbone, went to the City of Neoberge, within the Dominion of Otto Henry Palatine, about the expedition of Bucer's Book there to be printed. As John Diazius was there occupied, it was not long but Alphonſus his Brother was come from Rome to Ratisbone, where Malvenda was, bringing with him a peſtilent Cut-throat, a notorious Ruffian or Homicide, belonging to the City of Rome. Malvenda and Alphonſus, conſulting together about the diſpatch of their deviliſh purpoſe, firſt laboured to hunt out by the Friends of Diazius, where Diazius was; whereof Alphonſius and the Homicide having knowledg by certain of his ſecret Friends, pretending great matters of importance, came to Neoberge, where Diazius was printing of Bucer's Book: where after long debating of Matters of Religion between the two Brethren, Alphonſus ſeeing the heart of his Brother John to be ſo conſtantly planted on the ſure Rock of God's Truth, that by no wiſe he could either be removed from his Opinion, or perſuaded to ride in his Company (being otherwiſe counſelled by Bucer and his Friends) fained himſelf friendly to take his leave of his Brother and to depart: But ſhortly after, ſecretly with his ruffianly murtherer he returned again, and by the way they bought a certain Hatchet of a Carpenter.

This done, Alphonſus ſendeth his Man, being diſguiſed, with Letters unto his Brother, he himſelf following after. As John Diazius in the morning was riſen out of his Bed to read the Letters, the wretched Hangman with his Hatchet, clove his Head unto the Brains, leaving the Hatchet in his Head; and ſo he with Alphonſus took them to their Horſes, which ſtood without the City Gate, with as much ſpeed as they might. They of Neoberge, hearing of the horrible Act, ſent out certain Horſemen, making great journies after them. Who coming to Auguſta, and hearing the Murderers to be paſſed before, were out of hope to overtake them, and ſo returned. One in the Company, more zealous than the reſt, would not return, but purſued them ſtill, and in the City of Oenipont, cauſed them to be ſtayed and put in Priſon. Otto Palatine, hearing of their taking, writeth to the Magiſtrates of Oenipont for Judgment. Which Magiſtrates at firſt ſeemed very willing thereunto: But in concluſion, through the practice of Papiſts, and crafty Lawyers, the Sentence judicial was ſo delayed, from day to day, then from hour to hour, that the Emperor's Letters came in poſt-haſte, requiring the Matter to be ſtaid, and reſerved to his hearing. And thus the terrible murder of Cain and his Fellow, was boulſtered out by the Papiſts. The like whereof, from the memory of Men, was never heard of, ſince the firſt example of Cain, which for Religion ſlew his own Brother Abel. But altho true Judgment in this World be perverted, yet ſuch bloody Cains, with their wilful murder, ſhall not eſcape the hands of him, who ſhall judg truly both the Committers, and the Bolſterers alſo of all miſchievous wickedneſs. Ex Claud. Senat.

God will have murther known.

Cain ſtill killeth Abel.

Anno 1546, Charles the Emperor held an armed-Council at Auguſta, after his Victory gotten in Germany. Where Julius Pflug, Michael Sidonius, and John Iſlebius, going about to concord together the Goſpel of Chriſt, with the Traditions of the Pope, that is, to make a hodg-potch of them both, drew and framed out a new form of Religion, called Interim. Whereupon began a new matter of Perſecution in Germany. For the Emperor proceeded ſtraitly againſt them which would not receive his Interim, intending thereby to have wrought ſome great maſtery againſt the Goſpellers, but the Lord diſappointed his purpoſe.

Interim.

Among them which withſtood this Spaniſh Interim, beſides others, were alſo the Citizens of Conſtantia. For the which three thouſand Spaniards, privily by night, came againſt the Town of Conſtance, where they killed three of the Watchmen of the Town, which watching in the Suburbs, went forth to view the noiſe which they heard in the Woods. The device of the Spaniards was, in the morning when the Citizens were at the Sermon, ſuddenly to ſet upon the City and take it; ſo, no doubt, intending to have gone further. But, as the Lord would, ſomething began to be ſuſpected in the Night, by the Watchmen on the Suburbs on the other ſide the Water, whereby the Council and Citizens had intelligence to be in readineſs. When the morning came, the Spaniards were ready at the Gate to break into the City. But being driven from thence, and their Captain Alphonſus ſlain, they went to the Bridg which goeth over the Rhine. But being beaten alſo from thence with ſhot, and great Pieces from the Walls, and a great number of them drowned in the River, the Spaniards breaking down the hinder part of the Bridg, becauſe the Citizens ſhould not purſue them, they recoiled back into the Suburbs, and burned them with the dead Bodies alſo that were ſlain, ſo that the number of the Spaniards that were killed could not be known: Only an hundred of honeſt Citizens were miſſing. Ex Joan. Sleid. Lib. 21.

The aſſaults of the Spaniards againſt the City of Conſtance.

At the ſame time many godly Miniſters of the Churches in Germany, were in great danger, eſpecially ſuch as refuſed to receive the Interim: of whom ſome were caſt into Priſon. In which number of Priſoners, was Martin Frecius, Superintendent of Ulms, with four other Preachers more: alſo his Brother George, for coming but to his houſe to comfort him. For the which cauſe Muſculus the ſame time, with other Preachers more, went from Ausburg, Brentius from Hala, Blaurerus from Conſtance, Bucer from Strasburg.

It would find another Volume, to comprehend the Acts and Stories of all them, which in other Countries, at the riſing of the Goſpel, ſuffered for the ſame. But praiſed be the Lord, every Region almoſt hath his own Hiſtory-writer, which ſufficiently hath diſcharged that part of duty, as every one in matters of his own Country is beſt acquainted: wherefore I ſhall the leſs need to overſtrain my travel, or to overcharge this Volume therewith. Only it ſhall ſuffice me to collect three or four Hiſtories, recorded by Oecolampadius and the reſt, to bring into a brief Table, and ſo return to occupy my ſelf with our own Domeſtical Matters here done at home.

The Hiſtory of a good Paſtor, murthered for preaching of the Goſpel: Written by John Oecolampadius.

A good Prieſt murthered for evil will.

IN the year of our Lord 1525, there was a certain good and godly Miniſter, who had committed ſomething in the commotion there raiſed by the ruſtical Clowns of the Country, which, they ſaid that knew him, was but of ſmall importance. He becauſe he had offended his Prince before, not with any fact or crime, but with ſome word ſomething ſharply ſpoken, was therfore condemned to be hang'd.

After Sentence was given, there was a Gentleman of a cruel heart ſent with a certain troop of Men to apprehend the ſaid Prieſt, and to hang him. Who, coming into his houſe, ſaluted him friendly, pretending as tho their coming had been to make good chear; for he was a good Houſe-keeper, and the Gentlemen of the Country thereabouts uſed oft-times to reſort unto his houſe familiarly. This Prieſt made ready for them in ſhort ſpace a very ſumptuous Banquet, whereof they did eat and drink very chearfully. After Dinner was ended, and that the Prieſt was yet at the Table thinking no hurt, the Gentleman ſaid to his Servants, take you this Prieſt our Hoſt and hang him, and that without delay; for he hath well deſerved to be hanged for the great offence he hath committed againſt his Prince. The Servants were marvellouſly aſtoniſhed with his words, and abhorring to do the deed, ſaid unto their Maſter, God forbid that we ſhould commit any ſuch crime, to hang a Man that hath intreated us ſo gently: for the meat, which he hath given us, is yet in our ſtomachs undigeſted. It were a wicked act for a Nobleman to render ſo great an evil for a good turn; but eſpecially to murder an innocent. Briefly, the Servants ſought no other occaſion, but only to give him way to fly, that they might alſo avoid the execution of that wicked purpoſe.

Ungentleneſs in a Gentleman.

As the Gentleman and his Servants were thus contending, the Prieſt ſaid unto them, I beſeech you ſhew no ſuch cruelty upon me, rather lead me away captive unto my Prince, where I may purge my ſelf. I am falſly accuſed, and I truſt to pacify his anger which he hath conceived againſt me. At leaſt remember the hoſpitality which I have ever ſhewed to you, and all Noblemen at all times reſorting to my houſe. But principally ſpeaking to the Gentleman, he adverti ſed him of the perpetual ſting which would follow upon an evil Conſcience: proteſting that he had faithfully and truly taught them the Doctrine of the Goſpel, and that was the principal cauſe why he had ſuch evil will: which long time before he had foreſeen would come to paſs, for ſo much as he had oftentimes in the Pulpit reproved ſharply and openly the horrible Vices of the Gentlemen, which maintained their people in their vicious living, and they themſelves were given unto blaſphemy and drunkenneſs, whereas they ſhould ſhew example of Faith, true Religion, and Soberneſs, but they had oftentimes reſiſted him, ſaying, that it was not his part to reprove them, for ſo much as they were his Lords, and might put him to death if they would: that all things which they did were allowable, and that no Man ought to gainſay it: alſo that he went about ſome things in his Sermons, that would come to an evil end.

Many things may be pretended, but Religion is ever the cauſe why good Men go to wrack.

This good Man, whatſoever he could ſay, could not make his matter ſeem good; for the Gentleman continued in his wicked enterprize, and pricked forth his Servants ſtill to accompliſh their purpoſe: for it was reſolved by the Prince, that he ſhould be put to death, and turning himſelf unto the Prieſt, he ſaid, that he could gain nothing by preaching in ſuch ſort, but that he ſhould fully determine himſelf to die, for the Prince had given expreſs commandment to hang him, whoſe favour he would not loſe to ſave his life.

Kindneſs unkindly rewarded with unkindneſs.

At laſt the Servants, after great ſorrow and lamentation, bound their Hoſt, and hanged him upon a Beam in his own houſe, the Gentleman ſtanding by and looking upon.

This good Man, ſeeing no remedy, ſpake none other words but only, Jeſus have mercy upon me; Jeſus ſave me. This is the truth of this moſt cruel act, which a Turk would ſcarcely have committed againſt his mortal Enemy. Now let every Man judg with himſelf, which of them have the greateſt advantage, either they which commit the cruelty againſt the good, or the good Men which do ſuffer the ſame unjuſtly. The firſt ſort have a continual gnawing in their Conſcience, and the other obtain an immortal Crown.

The like Hiſtory of the death of a certain Miniſter, named M. Pet. Spengler, which was drowned in the year of our Lord 1525; collected by Oecolampadius.

A deſcription of a good Miniſter or Curat.

IN a certain Village named Schlat, in the Country of Briſgois, there was a vigilant Miniſter, a Man very well learned in the Scriptures, of a good name, for that he lived a godly and a blameleſs life, having long time faithfully done his Office and Duty, being alſo courteous and gentle, and well-beloved of Men, but eſpecially of the Biſhop of Conſtance with whom he was in great Authority, peaceable and quiet with all Men that he had to do withal. He quieted Diſcords and Contentions with a marvellous prudency, exhorting all Men to mutual charity and love. In all Aſſemblies whereſoever he came, he greatly commended honeſt life and amendment of manners. When the purity of the Goſpel began to ſhine abroad, he began to read with great affection the Holy Scriptures, which long time before he had read, but without any underſtanding. When he had recovered a little judgment, and came to more underſtanding by continual reading, being alſo further grown in age, he began to conſider with himſelf, in how great darkneſs and errors the whole Order of Prieſts had been a long time drowned. O good God, ſaid he, who would have thought it, that ſo many learned and holy Men have wandred out of the right way, and could have ſo long time been wrapped in ſo great Errors, or that the Holy Scripture could have been ſo deformed with ſuch horrible abuſes: for he never well underſtood before, he ſaid, that the Goſpel was the Verity of God, in that order, wherein it is written, ſeeing it containeth ſo much touching the Croſs, Perſecution, and Ignominious death; and yet the Prieſts lived in great proſperity, and no Man durſt maintain any quarrel againſt them without danger. He alſo ſaw that the hour was come that the Goſpel ſhould be diſplay'd, that Perſecution was at hand, that the Enemies of the Truth began now to rage, that the wicked and proud lifted up their heads on high, and feared not to enterprize and take in hand all kind of miſchief and wickedneſs againſt the Faithful, that the Biſhops, which ought by their vertue and power to defend the Word, were more barbarous and cruel than any Tyrants had been before. He, thus conſidering the preſent eſtate of the World, put all doubt from his heart, and ſaw preſently before his eyes, that Jeſus Chriſt had taught the Truth, ſeeing ſo many Bodies of the Faithful were daily ſo tormented, beaten, exiled, baniſhed, drowned, and burned. For who can report the great torments, which the innocent have indured theſe years paſſed, even by thoſe which call themſelves Chriſtians, and for no other cauſe, but only for the true confeſſion of Jeſus Chriſt? This good Paſtor conſidering with himſelf the Laws and Doctrine of the Church of Rome to ſwerve from the truth of Chriſt, eſpecially in reſtraining Marriage: to the end that he would not defile himſelf with Fornication, he married a Maid of his, ſuch an one as feared God, by whom afterward he had many fair Children.

The Croſs diſcerneth between true Chriſtians & counterfeit. He that ſeeketh to live godly in Chriſt, ſhall ſuffer perſecution. 2 Tim. 3.

About this time the People of the Country had raiſed a great Commotion, who in their rage went to Monaſteries, and Prieſts houſes, as if they had taken in hand ſome Pilgrimage, and ſpared nothing that they could find to eat. That which they could not eat, they either caſt under feet, or carried it away with them. One Company of this ruſtical ſort lodged themſelves in the houſe of this good Prieſt: for they made no difference between the good and the bad. Theſe Royſters took from him all that they could find, leaving nothing behind them, inſomuch as they took away away the very Hose from his Legs, for all that he could do: albeit that he gently intreated them, shewing that it was Theft and a hanging matter that they did, yet they continued still in their madnes like Beasts.

As they were departing out of the house, the good Priest could not refrain himself from weeping, saying unto them, I tell you before, these your inordinate doings will redound to some great mischief to your selves. For what madness is this? what meaneth this rage and tumult, wherein you keep no order or equity, neither have any respect between Friend and Foe? Who thus stirreth you up? what counsel do you follow, or to what end do you this? Like Thieves you spoil whatsoever you can lay hands upon. And think you not but these things which you now rob, raven, and steal, you shall be compelled hereafter to restore again to your great detriment. What sedition did ever come to good end? You pretend the Gospel, and have no peace of the Gospel either in your mouths or in your hearts. These excesses, said he, ye never learned of me, who ever have taught you the true Word of God. This your Gospel, said he, is rather the Gospel of the Devil than of God, which vexeth all the World with violence and wrong, spoiling and robbing without regard. The true Gospel of Jesus Christ teacheth you to do good unto all Men, to avoid dissentions and perjury. This I say unto you, that in these your doings you offend God, and provoke his just vengeance to plague you, which will never suffer these Evils to escape unpunished. You find written in the Gospel, That which thou wouldest not should be done to thee, do not to other. You offend also the Nobility, and your lawful Magistrates, whom you are sworn and bound unto. It is no small matter, I tell you, to raise up Sedition, to stir up other, and to disturb the state of the Common-wealth: and when this tumult shall be ceased, what then shall your Noblemen do? Shall they not rifle you as fast, and of your goods make themselves rich, and then shall one of you betray another. These with such other words he stood preaching unto them, almost naked; but all this would not prevail with those Men, who, after all these gentle admonitions and fair words, departed out of his house, giving him foul language, and calling him old Dotard. Amongst all other, one more wicked than the residue said unto him in this manner: O Master Curate, we have been long deceived by your selling of Masses, by fearing us with Purgatory, by your Dirges and Trentals, and so have we been spoiled: wherefore we do nothing now, but require again the Money which you robbed us of. And so mocking and scorning him, they departed.

Cruelty and sedition never cometh to good end.

The Gospel teacheth no rebellion.

After that this Sedition of the Peasants was partly appeased, their Armor being laid away, and they taken unto grace; after that also divers of the principals of that Conspiracy were taken here and there in the Villages, and executed: this good Pastor, fearing no such thing, for the true and sincere preaching of the Gospel, whereat many took great indignation, was taken in the night by certain Souldiers, which bound him hand and foot with a great Rope, before his Wife and Children, and so set him upon a Horse, and led him away to Friburg. What grievous sighs, tears, sorrow and lamentation was there! It would have moved any heart, (were it as hard as Flint) to a doleful compassion, especially to see the barbarous and despiteful rebukes, taunts, and extreme cruelty shewed by these proud Popish Souldiers against the innocent Priest. Such beastly Tyrants the World is never without. Such godly Ministers we have had but a few.

Cruelty without cause.

The People, hearing this pitiful noise and lamentation in the night, came running out, not the Men, but only the Women, whom the Souldiers willed to go home again, and that their Men should come forth and keep the Town, but their Men durst not appear. Then from Friburg shortly after they conveyed him to Ensisheim.

After they had long kept this Man in Prison, and that he had endured most terrible Torments, as well by the Privy-members, as in other parts, they judged him to death. If you will know the cause what they had to lay to his charge, it was only this, That he had married a Wife secretly in his own House with a few Witnesses. Other Crimes they had none to object against him, neither that he was a seditious and wicked Man, nor that he had committed any other offence, albeit they had gathered divers wicked Persons out of sundry places, to pick out of his Sermons the order and manner of his behaviour. When he was led unto the place of Execution, he answered gently and quietly unto all Men that came to comfort him. But there were divers Monks and Priests which troubled him very sore with their foolish babling, as he was striving in his spirit against the horror of death, and making his prayer unto Almighty God, seeking nothing else but to turn him away from his hearty and earnest contemplation. But he desired them that they would hold their peace, saying, that he had already confessed his sins unto the Lord Jesus, nothing at all doubting but that he had received absolution and forgiveness of them all. And I, said he, shall be an acceptable Sacrifice unto my Saviour Jesus Christ, for I have done no such thing wherefore I am now condemned, which might displease my Lord God, who in this behalf hath given me a good and quiet Conscience. Now therefore let them which thirst for innocent Blood, and shed the same, diligently advise themselves what they do, and know that they offend even him unto whom it pertaineth truly to judg the hearts of Men; for it is said, Vengeance is mine, and I will punish. And forsomuch as he was a very lean Man, he added this moreover, saying, It is all one, for shortly I must have forsaken this Skin which already scarcely hangeth to my Bones; I know well that I am a mortal and a corruptible Worm, and have nothing in me but corruption. I have long time desired my latter day, and have made my request that I might be delivered out of this mortal Body, to be joined with my Saviour Jesus Christ.

Rom. 12.

I have deserved, through my manifold Sins committed against my Saviour Christ, my Cross; and my Saviour Christ hath born the Cross, and hath died upon the Cross; and for my part I will not glory in any other thing, but only in the Cross of Jesus Christ.

This I find martyr drowned.

There were present by certain naughty Persons which could not endure to hear this godly Exhortation, but made a sign vnto the Hangman to cast him down into the River. After he was thrown down, he moved by a certain space in the Water, in such sort that the River whereinto he was cast was red with blood. This was a certain sign and token that innocent Blood was that day shed. They which were there present, beholding that which had happened, were greatly amazed and astonied, considering with themselves what the staining of the water vvith the blood should signify. Every man returned home pensive and sad, marvelling at the cruel deed that was done that day: notwithstanding no Man durst open his mouth to speak one word, because that all things were exercised with such cruelty. This vvas done in the Town of Ensisheim, An. 1525.

The water miraculously coloured with blood where he was drowned.

These things I did understand by one which did behold them with his eyes. The Lord of his great grace be merciful unto us, and forgive us our sins. Ex Oecolamp.

Such vvas the vvickedness then of those days, and yet is still, that vvhosoever vvas perceived to favour the Gospel, or any thing to dislike the doctrine of the Pope's Church, he vvas hated and despited of the Rulers, Lavvyers, and all other Papists through the whole Country about, but especially of Priests, Monks, and Friars. And tho the life of the Gospellers were never so sound and upright, yet such was the hatred and malice of the Pope's Friends against them, that they never ceased to seek all occasions, and devise matters how to bring them to death.

It so happened a little before this present time, that there was a commotion of the rude and rustical People of the Country rising in armour inordinately against their Rulers, to the great disturbance of the whole Country of Germany, and no less to their own destruction, of whom were slain above twenty thousand. At length when this Rebellion was appeased, and all things quiet, such as were the Pope's friends, to work their malice against the Gospel, took occasion thereby not long after to accuse and entangle such as they knew to be Gospellers and Protestants. And altho the said Gospellers were never so inculpable and clear from all rebellion, yet that sufficed not, for causes were made, false witnes brought, corrupt Judges suborned to condemn the innocent, and many were put to death, their cause being neither heard nor known. By reason whereof a great number of good and innocent Christians were miserably brought to their end and martyrdom; in the number of whom was this poor Man also, whose Story by Oecolampad. is thus described.

Another History of a certain Man of the Country, wrongfully put to death, collected by the said John Oecolampadius.

Ex Jo. Oecol.

THere was, saith he, a certain Man of the Country, which in my judgment was a good Man, and a lover of Justice, and a mortal Enemy of all the cruel Exactions of the Gentlemen, which oppressed the poor People. This Man, after the Tumult and Commotion of the Country was appeased, was grievously vexed and tormented because he had cried an Alarm, when as a great number of Horsemen ranged about the Country to seek out those which had been the Authors of that Sedition. This poor Man was taken by Policy, and so upholden with fair Promises, that they made him confess whatsoever they required. He, thinking that they would not have put him to death, was cast into Prison, whereas he was long time detained, and well cherished; to take away all suspicion from him: but after he had tarried a long time in prison, they put him to the Pinbank, laying divers and many grievous Offences to his charge, where they kept him hanging in the Truss of the Cord the space of six hours, hanging a great Stone fastened at his feet.

The truss of the cord is a certain hanging up by the hands behind, having a weighty stone fastned at their feet.

The Sweat that dropped from his Body for very pain and anguish, was almost Blood. In this distress he cried out pitifully, but all that could not once move the Tormentors Hearts. When as all the power and strength in his body began to fail him, with great violence they let him fall down. There this poor Man lay even as a Stock, not moving any part or member of his Body, but a little drawing his breath, which was a token that there was some life in him. Here the Tormentors were in great doubt what to do with the Man, whom they sought by all means to destroy, in what place they might put him, that he should not die of that torment.

Amongst them there was one which brought Vinegar and Rose-water, and rubbing him therewithal, they did somewhat recover him. After that they had caused him to eat and drink such as they provided for him, they let him down into a deep Dungeon, where he could see neither Sun nor Moon. All this was done to the intent to put him to more torment, when he had somewhat recovered his strength again. There they let him continue eighteen days, after which time they brought him again to examination, propounding certain Articles unto him, which he constantly denied. They devised divers and sundry kinds of Torments, to the intent they might even of force extort something of this poor Man, which might seem worthy of death; yet for all that they were fain to depart without their purpose. The twentieth day after these Tyrants hired a Hangman, (a Man sure worthy of his Office) which left no kind of Cruelty unpractised. Yet did he miss of his purpose also, and was constrained to leave his Cruelty, and to pronounce even with his own mouth, that the Man was innocent, in that he had so constantly endured so many horrible and grievous Torments. But these Tyrants came again the fourth time, and suborned two Witnesses against him, this concluding, that he was worthy of death because he had cried Alarm after the Truce was taken, and would have moved a new Sedition. The day was appointed when he should suffer, and they brought unto him the Hangman and a Friar into the Prison.

The innocent Man again tormented.

False Witness

In the mean time this poor Man thought with himself, that they would have shewed him the like cruelty as they had done the night before. They called him out of the Dungeon where they had let him down, certifying him that they had things to tell him for his profit. This they did because he should not die in prison.

He had rather one in Prison than to come in the Papists hands.

Then they let down a Cord and a Staff, but they could not persuade him to sit thereupon, saying, that he would rather chuse to die there, than he would endure any more such cruel Torments; Notwithstanding, if they would promise not to put him any more to the Truss of the Cord, nor to put him to death, but to bring him before just Judges, on that condition he would come out, altho he had fully determined never to have removed from thence, but to have ended his Life in that Dungeon. There were present certain Councellors which promised to perform his Request; and thereupon he was taken out of the Dungeon. As soon as he saw the Friar, he cried out with a loud voice, saying,

The false promises of the Papists not to be trusted.

O miserable and wretched Man that I am! now am I betrayed and deceived, for my latter hour is at hand: I see well the Dream which I have dreamed this night will come to effect, for they do handle me tyrannously, and condemn me not being heard. The Friar brake him off from his purpose, and pulling a woodden Cross out of his Sleeve, presented it unto him, declaring that he must be quiet, because they had already given sentence against him, and that he should get nothing by so much talk. Poor Man (said the Friar) thou hast had good and gentle Judges, at the least thou shalt go to God, therefore confess thy Sins in my ear, and after thou hast received absolution at my hands, doubt not but this day thou shalt go strait to the Kingdom of Heaven. The poor Man answered, Thou wicked Friar, get thee away from me, for I have long since bewailed my Sins and Offences, and that before the face of my Lord Jesus, who hath already forgiven me all that which I have committed against his Majesty; wherefore I have no need of thy Absolution, which thou thy self dost not understand. This is most certain, that long time since thou shouldest have amended thine own wicked and hypocritical Life. I know well enough what thou art, thou playest the Ape with me, but thou hast a subtil and a crafty Heart, which hath deceived much simple People. If thou hast any Comfort or Consolation out of the Gospel to comfort me withal, let me have it; if not, get thee away from me with thy Portuis. The Friar was so confused and amazed with these words, that he knew not what to do or say. The Hangman, being wiser than the Friar, bad him read unto the poor Man something of the Passion, wherein the poor Man would take great pleasure. This foolish Friar had no other consolation to comfort him withal, but to hold the Crucifix of Wood before him, saying, Behold thy Saviour which died for thee, look upon him, and thou shalt be comforted. Then said the poor Man, I have another Saviour, this is none of my Saviour; get thou away from me, thou naughty Person, with thy Marmoset of Wood; My Saviour dwelleth in Heaven, in whom I trust that he will not deliver my Soul to eternal death. The Friar crossed himself, shewing the semblance of a Man that was very sorry and aggriev'd, thinking with himself that this poor Man was fallen into desperation. Then was he led forth into the Market-place, where according to the custom, openly before all the People, his Confession was read with a loud voice; which contained no other thing, but only that the Man had been a seditious Person, and that in the time of Truce he had cried Alarm, even in the night, when all Men were at rest.

The innocent Man condemned for ill will.

When he was come to the place where he should suffer, being compassed in with Gleves and Halberds hired for the purpose, after he had said the Lord's Prayer, the Hangman bid him kneel down, but he refused so to do, declaring that he had yet something more to say before the People, thinking that he should not be denied to speak in that place, as he was before the wicked Judges. Those (said he) which know me, shall be sufficient good Witnesses on my behalf, that from my youth upward I have always lived in good name, fame, and honesty, being never before accused for any offence, sedition, or perjury.

In an evil time have I happened into these cursed days, when as all ways both of God and Man are turned topsy turvy. I was adherent to the Tumult and Sedition of the Men of the Country, as many other were which dwell thereabout; but what then? Are not there also many Gentlemen which followed the Peasants Army, and many strong Towns which went also with them? I was not the Author of any sedition, which always I have mortally hated. I never gave counsel unto any Man to move any Broil or Tumult in any place. We asked counsel of our Gentlemen what we should do, when the Bands of the Peasants were assembled in the Fields; but they gave us neither counsel nor comfort. And to speak of my self, I did never understand or know what the Articles were that were published, neither was there ever any Man that told me wherefore they were published; neither did I know wherefore the Bands of the Countrymen were risen, neither wherefore every Man moved his Neighbour to put on Armour. Wherefore then have ye taken me as a seditious Man, and made me to endure so great Torments? He continued a long time in declaring his Innocency; but, notwithstanding all his excuses and defences, the Hangman drew his Sword,

Nihil peccavit agnus, sed lupus clamit.

Wolfgangus Schuch a German in Lotharing, Martyr.

The Story and Martyrdom of Wolfgangus Schuch.

Wolfgangus Schuchus, coming to a certain Town in Lotharing, bearing the name of St. Hyppolitus, and being recived in the ſaid Town to be their Paſtor, laboured by all means how to extirp out of the hearts of the People Idolatry and Superſtition. Which, through the grace of Chriſt working with him, he in ſhort time had brought proſperouſly to paſs according to his deſire: inſomuch that the obſervation of Lent, Images, and all Idols, with the abomination alſo of the Maſs, in the ſame Town was utterly aboliſhed: ſo reformable God made the Hearts of the People there, and ſuch affection had they to their Miniſter. It was not long but the rumor thereof came to the hearing of Duke Anthony, Prince of Lorain, (under whoſe dominion they were) through the ſwift report of the Adverſaries, falſly belying theſe Hippolitans to the Duke; as tho they, in relinquiſhing the Doctrine and Faction of the Pope, went about to reject and ſhake off all Authority and Power of Princes, and all ſuperior Governors. By the means of which ſiniſter report they incenſed the Prince to ſuch diſpleaſure and indignation, that he threatned to ſubvert and utterly to deſtroy the Town with Sword and Fire. Wolfgangus, having word of this, wrote unto the Duke his Uncle in moſt humble and obedient wiſe, in defence both of his Miniſtry, of his Doctrine which he taught, and of the whole cauſe of the Goſpel.

False and pernicious Tongues.

The Duke of Lorain threatneth the Town of St. Hippolitus.

In which Epiſtle firſt he excuſed the People to be innocent and blameleſs, and ſaid that thoſe ſlanderous reporters were rather worthy to be blamed and alſo puniſhed for their falſe rumors and forged ſlanders raiſed up againſt them. And that he opened and explained the cauſe and ſtate of the Goſpel, and of our Salvation, conſiſting only in the free Grace of God, through Faith in Chriſt his Son, comparing alſo the ſame Doctrine of the Goſpel with the confuſed Doctrine of the Church of Rome.

The Letter of Wolfgangus to the Duke.

That done, thirdly, he proceeded to our obedience, honour and worſhip, which firſt we owe to God and to Chriſt, next under him to Princes here and Poteſtates, whom God hath placed in his room, and endued with authority here in Earth; unto whom they offered themſelves now and at all times preſt and moſt ready to obey with all ſervice and duty, &c.

But with this Epiſtle Wolfgangus did nothing prevail, either for that it was intercepted by the way, or elſe for that the falſe accuſations and wicked tongues of the adverſary part took more effect to win credit with the Duke, than could the ſimple defence of verity. Whereupon Wolfgangus, when he ſaw no other remedy, rather than the Town ſhould come in any danger for his cauſe, the good Man, I ſay, of his own accord came to the City of Nancy, (which is the head-Town of Lorain) there to render a Confeſſion of his Doctrine, and alſo to deliver the Town of St. Hippolite out of peril, deriving all the danger upon himſelf.

As ſoon as he was come thither, incontinently hands were laid upon him, and he laid faſt in a ſtrait and ſtinking Priſon, where he was ſharply and bitterly handled under cuſtody of the churliſh and cruel Keepers. All this notwithſtanding, Wolfgangus, continuing in that Priſon the ſpace of a whole year, yet would not be moved from his conſtancy, neither with the ſtraitneſs of the Priſon, nor with the hardneſs of his Keepers, nor yet with the compaſſion of his Wife and Children, which he had about ſix or ſeven. Then was he had to the Houſe of the Gray-Friars, to profeſs there his Faith, where he both wittily and learnedly confuted all them that ſtood againſt him.

There was a Friar named Bonaventure, Provincial of that Order, of face, body, and belly monſtrous, but much more groſs in blind Ignorance, and a Man utterly rude, a contemner of all civility and honeſty; who being long Confeſſor to the Duke, and of great authority in Lorain, as he was an Enemy to Vertue and Learning, ſo was he ever perſuading the Duke to baniſh out of the Court and Country of Lorain all learned Men; neither could he abide any Perſon which ſeemed to know more than his Elders knew before. The ſum of all his Divinity was this, That it was ſufficient to Salvation only to know the Pater noſter and Ave Maria. And thus was the Duke brought up and trained, and in nothing elſe, as the Duke himſelf oft-times

This Bonaventure being chief Judg and Moderator where Wolfgangus disputed, or was examined, had nothing else in his mouth, but Thou Heretick, Judas, Beelzebub, &c. Wolfgangus bearing patiently those private Injuries which pertained to himself, proceeded mightily in his disputation by the Scriptures, confuting or rather confounding his Adversaries; who being not otherwise able to make their party good, yet for very shame, because they would not seem to do nothing, took his Bible with his notes in the Margin into their Monastery, and burned it. At the last disputation Duke Anthony himself was said to be there, altering his apparel because he would not be known, who, albeit he understood not the speech of Wolfgangus speaking in Latin, yet perceiving him to be bold and constant in his doctrine, departing from the disputation, gave sentence that he should be burned, because he denied the Church, and Sacrament of the Mass. Whereupon it followed shortly after that Wolfgangus was condemned to be burned, who, hearing the sentence of his condemnation, began to sing the 122 Psalm, Lætatus sum in his quæ dicta sunt mihi, in domum Domini ibimus, &c.

As he was led to the place of Execution, passing by the House of the Gray-Friars, Bonaventure the great Cyclops sitting at the door, cried out to him, Thou Heretick, do thy reverence here to God, and to our Lady, and to his holy Saints; shewing to him the Idols standing at the Friars Gate. To whom Wolfgangus answered again, Thou Hypocrite, thou painted Wall, the Lord shall destroy thee, and bring all thy false dissimulation unto light. When they were come to the place of his Martyrdom, first his Books before him were thrown into the fire. Then they asked him, whether he would have his pain minished and shortned? to whom he said, No, bidding them to do their will; for (said he) as God hath been with me hitherto, so I trust now he will not leave me when I should have most need of him, concluding his words thus, that they should put the sentence in execution: and so beginning to sing the one and fiftieth Psalm, he entred into the place heaped up with Faggots and Wood, continuing in his Psalm, and singing till the Smoak and the Flame took from him both voice and life.

Note the quiet and joyful death of this blessed Martyr.

The singular vertue, constancy and learning of this blessed Man, as it refreshed and greatly edified the hearts of many good Men, so it astonished as much the minds of his Adversaries, and wrought to their confusion. For shortly after his death, the Commendator of St. Anthony of Vienna, who sate as spiritual Judg over him, and gave sentence of his condemnation, fell suddenly down and died. Also his Fellow, which was Abbot of Clarilocus, and Suffragan to the Bishop of Mentz suddenly at the coming of the Dutchess of Denmark into the City of Nancy, strucken with sudden fear at the crack of Guns, fell down and died, as they which were present and saw it, have made faithful relation of the same. Anno 1525. *Ex Ludov. Moreover, besides other matters in this year occurrent, here is also a Memorandum to be made to all posterity, that in this present year 1526, unto John Frederick, Son and Heir to the Prince and Elector of Saxony, was promised the Lady Katherine, the Emperor's younger Sister in marriage, and Writings were made of the same. But when the alteration of Religion was sent by God's providence into Saxony, they swerved from their Covenants; and Hannart, which was then the Emperor's Embassador in Germany, said plainly that there was no promise to be kept with Hereticks; wherein they seemed to follow well the footsteps of the Council of Constance, as before you have partly heard in the story of John Hus, and of the Emperor Sigismund.

George Carpenter of Emering, Martyr, burned in the Town of Munchen in Bavaria.

K. Hen. 8

George Carpenter, Martyr.

THE 8*th* day of February in the year of our Salvation 1527, there happened a rare and marvellous example and spectacle in the Town of Munchen in Bavaria, which was this: A certain Man named George Carpenter of Emering was there burnt. When he was set out of the Prison called Falken-Tower, and led before the Council, diver Friars and Monks followed him, to instruct and teach him whom he willed to tarry at home, and not to follow him. When he came before the Council, his offences were read, contained in four Articles.

Articles laid against Geo. Carpenter.

First, That he did not believe that a Priest could forgive a Man's Sins.

Secondly, That he did not believe that a Man could call God out of Heaven.

Thirdly, That he did not believe that God was in the Bread which the Priest hangeth over the Altar, but that it was the Bread of the Lord.

Fourthly, That he did not believe that the very Element of the Water it self in Baptism doth give grace.

Which four Articles he utterly refused to recant. Then came unto him a certain Schoolmaster of St. Peter in the Town of Munchen in Bavaria, saying unto him, My Friend George, dost thou not fear the death and punishment which thou must suffer? If thou wert let go, wouldest thou return to thy Wife and Children? Whereunto he answered, If I were set at liberty, whither should I rather go, than to my Wife and well-beloved Children? Then said the Schoolmaster, Revoke your former sentence and opinion, and you shall be set at liberty. Whereunto George answered: My Wife and my Children are so dearly beloved unto me, that they cannot be bought from me for all the riches and possessions of the Duke of Bavaria; but for the love of my Lord God I will willingly forsake them. When he was led to the place of execution, the Schoolmaster spake unto him again in the midst of the Market-place, saying, Good George, believe in the Sacrament of the Altar; do not affirm it to be only a sign. Whereunto he answered, I believe this Sacrament to be a sign of the Body of Jesus Christ offered upon the Cross for us. Then said the Schoolmaster moreover, What dost thou mean, that thou dost so little esteem Baptism, knowing that Christ suffered himself to be baptized in Jordan? Whereunto he answered, and shewed what was the true use of Baptism, and what was the end why Christ was baptized in Jordan, and how necessary it was that Christ should die and suffer upon the Cross, wherein only standeth our Salvation. The same Christ (said he) will I confess this day before the whole World; for he is my Saviour, and in him do I believe.

George persuaded to recant.

The love of God preferred before wife, children, and liberty.

The Sacrament a sign of the Lord's Body.

Baptism.

After this came unto him one Master Conrade Scheter, the Vicar of the Cathedral Church of our Lady in Munchen, a Preacher, saying: George, if thou wilt not believe the Sacrament, yet put all thy trust in God, and say, I trust my cause to be good and true, * but if I should err, truly I would be sorry and repent. Whereunto George Carpenter answered, God suffer me not to err, I beseech him. Then said the Schoolmaster unto him, Do not put the matter in that hazard, but chuse unto you some good Christian Brother, Master Conrade, or some other, unto whom thou mayest reveal thy Heart; not to confess thy self, but to take some godly counsel of him. Whereunto he answered, Nay not so, for it would be too long. Then Master Conrade began the Lord's Prayer: Our Father which art in Heaven; whereunto Carpenter answered, Truly thou art our Father, and no other, this day I trust to be with thee. Then Master Conrade went forward with the Prayer, saying, Hallowed be thy Name. Carpenter answered, O my God, how little is thy Name hallowed in this World? Then said Conrade, Thy Kingdom come. Carpenter answered, Let thy Kingdom come this day unto me, that I also may come unto thy Kingdom. Then said Conrade, Thy Will be done in Earth as it is in Heaven. Carpenter answered, For this cause, O Father, am I now here that thy will might be fulfilled and not mine. Then said Conrade, Give us this day our daily Bread. Carpenter answered, the only living Bread Jesus Christ shall be my food. Then said Conrade, And forgive us our Trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us. Carpenter answered,

* Mark here these subtil Serpents, which when they cannot remove this good man from his faith, they go about to bring him in doubt thereof.

With a willing mind do I forgive all Men, both my Friends and Adversaries. Then said Master Conrade, And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from all evil. Whereunto Carpenter answered, O my Lord, without doubt thou shalt deliver me; for upon thee only have I laid all my Hope. Then he began to rehearse the Belief, saying, I believe in God the Father Almighty. Carpenter answered, O my God, in thee alone do I trust, in thee only is all my confidence, and upon no other Creature, albeit they have gone about to force me otherwise. In this manner he answered to every word: which his Answers, if they should be described at length, would be too long. This Prayer ended, the Schoolmaster said unto him, Dost thou believe so truly and constantly in thy Lord and God with thy heart, as thou dost cheerfully seem to confess him with thy Mouth? Hereunto he answered; It were a very hard matter for me, if that I which am ready here to suffer death, should not believe that with my Heart, which I openly profess with my Mouth? For I knew before that I must suffer Persecution, if I would cleave unto Christ; who saith, Where thy Heart is, there is also thy Treasure; and whatsoever thing a Man doth fix in his Heart to love above God, that he maketh his Idol. Then said Master Conrade unto him, George, dost thou think it necessary after thy death, that any Man should pray for thee, or say Mass for thee? He answered; So long as the Soul is joyned to the Body, pray God for me, that he will give me Grace and Patience, with all humility, to suffer the pains of death with a true Christian Faith: but when the Soul is separate from the Body, then have I no more need of your Prayers. When as the Hangman should bind him to the Ladder, he preached much unto the People. Then he was desired by certain Christian Brethren, that as soon as he was cast into the fire, he should give some Sign or Token what his Faith or Belief was. To whom he answered, This shall be my Sign and Token; that so long as I can open my Mouth, I will not cease to call upon the Name of Jesus.

The constant behaviour of G. Carpenter at his death.

Behold (good Reader) what an incredible constancy was in this godly Man, such as lightly hath not been seen in any Man before. His Face and Countenance never changed colour, but chearfully he went upon the fire. In the midst, saith he, of the Town this day will I confess my God before the whole World. When he was laid upon the Ladder, and the Hangman put a bag of Gunpowder about his Neck, he said, let it so be, in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. And whenas the two Hangmen lifted him up upon the Ladder, smiling, he bad a certain Christian farewel, requiring forgiveness of him. That done, the Hangman thrust him into the Fire. He with a loud voice cried out, Jesus, Jesus. Then the Hangman turned him over; and he again for a certain space cried, Jesus, Jesus, and so joyfully yielded up his Spirit.

Leonard Keyser.

The History of Leonard Keyser.

HHre also is not to be passed over the marvellous constancy of Mr. Leonard Keyser of the Country of Bavaria, who was burned for the Gospel. This Keyser was of the Town of Rawbe, four miles from Passaw, of a famous house. This Man, being at his study in VVittenberg, was sent for by his Brethren, which certified him, that if ever he would see his Father alive, he should come with speed; which thing he did. He was scarcely come thither, when as by the commandment of the Bishop of Passaw, he was taken by his Mother and his Brethren. The Articles which he was accused of, for the which also he was most cruelly put to death, and shed his Blood for the testimony of the Truth, were these:

That Faith only justifieth.

That Works are the Fruits of Faith.

That the Mass is no Sacrifice or Oblation.

Item, For Confession, Satisfaction, the Vow of Chastity, Purgatory, difference of Days, for affirming only two Sacraments, and Invocation of Saints.

He also maintained three kinds of Confession.

Articles against Leonard Keyser.

The first to be of Faith, which is always necessary.

The second of Charity, which serveth when any Man hath offended his Neighbour, to whom he ought to reconcile himself again, as a Man may see by that which is written in Mat. 18.

The third, which is not to be despised, is to ask counsel of the ancient Ministers of the Church.

And notwithstanding that all this was contrary to the Bull of Pope Leo, and the Emperor's Decree made at Worms, sentence was given against him, that he should be degraded, and put into the hands of the secular Power. The Persecutors which sat in Judgment upon him, were the Bishop of Passaw; the Suffragans of Ratisbon, and of Passaw; also Dr. Eckius, being garded about with armed Men. His Brethren and Kinsfolks made great intercession to have his Judgment deferred and put off, that the matter might be more exactly known. Also John Frederick, Duke of Saxony, and the Earls of Schauvenburg and of Shunartzen, wrote to the Bishop for him, but could not prevail. After the Sentence was given, he was carried by a company of harnessed Men out of the City again, to Schardingham, the thirteenth of August. Where Christopher Frenkinger the civil Judg receiving him, had Letters sent him from Duke William of Bavaria, that forthwith tarrying for no other judgment, he should be burned alive. Whereupon the good and blessed Martyr early in the morning, being rounded and shaven, and clothed in a short Gown, and a black Cap set upon his head, all cut and jagged, so was delivered unto the Officer. As he was led out of the Town to the place where he should suffer, he boldly and hardily spake in the Almain Tongue, turning his head first on the one side, and then on the other, saying, O Lord Jesus remain with me, sustain and help me, and give me force and power.

Persecutors.

Hasty judgment against Leon. Keyser.

Then the Wood was made ready to be set on fire, and he began to cry with a loud voice, O Jesus, I am thine, have mercy upon me, and save me; and therewithal he felt the fire begin sharply under his feet, his hands, and about his head: and because the fire was not great enough, the Hangman plucked the Body, half burnt, with a long hook from underdeath the Wood. Then he made a great hole in the Body, through the which he thrust a stake, and cast him again into the fire, and so made an end of burning. This was the blessed end of that good Man, which suffered for the testimony of the Truth, August 16, in the year of our Lord 1526. Ex 6. Tomo operum Lutheri.

The martyrdom of L. Keyser.

Wendelmuta Widow and Martyr.

IN Holland also the same year 1527, was martyred and burned a good and vertuous Widow, named Wendelmuta, a Daughter of Nicholas of Munchendam. This Widow receiving to her heart the brightness of God's Grace, by the appearing of the Gospel, was therefore apprehended and committed to custody in the Castle of Werden, and shortly after from thence was brought to the Hague the 15*th* day of November, there to appear at the general Sessions of that Country. Where was present Hochstratus, Lord President of the said Country, who also sate upon her the 17*th* day of the foresaid month. Divers Monks were appointed there to talk with her, to the end they might convince her, and win her to recant; but she, constantly persisting in that Truth wherein she was planted, would not be removed. Many also of her kindred and other honest Women, were suffered to perswade with her. Among whom there was a certain noble Matron, who loved and favoured dearly the said Widow being in Prison. This Matron coming, and communing with her, in her talk said; My Wendelmuta, why dost thou not keep silence, and think secretly in thine heart these things which thou believest, that thou mayest prolong here thy days and life? To whom she answered again: Ah (said she) you know not what you say. It is written, With the heart we believe to Righteousness, with the tongue we confess to Salvation, &c. And thus she remaining firm and stedfast in her Belief and Confession, the 20*th* day of November, was condemned by Sentence given as against an Heretick, to be burned to Ashes, and her goods to be confiscate; she taking the sentence of her Condemnation mildly and quietly.

After she came to the place where she should be executed, and a Monk there had brought out a blind Cross, willing her many times to kiss and worship her God; I worship, said she, no wooden God, but only that God which is in Heaven: and so with a merry and joyful countenance she went to the Stake, desiring the Executioner to see the Stake to be fast, that it fall not: then taking the Powder, and laying

When the time came that ſhe ſhould be ſtrangled, modeſtly ſhe cloſed her eyes, and bowed down her head as one that would take a ſleep: which done, the Fire then was put to the Wood, and ſhe being ſtrangled, was burned afterward to Aſhes, inſtead of this Life, to get the immortal Crown in Heaven, Anno 1527. Ex Pantal.

Petrus Fliſtedius, and Adolphus Clarebachus, put to death at Colen.

Petrus Fliſtedius, and Adolphus Clarebachus Martyrs.

IN the number of theſe German-Martyrs, are alſo to be comprehended Peter Fliſteden and Adolph Clarebach, two Men of ſingular learning, and having ripe knowledg of God's holy Word. Which two, in the year of our Lord 1529, for that they did diſſent from the Papiſts in divers Points, and eſpecially touching the Supper of the Lord, and other the Pope's Traditions and Ceremonies, after they had endured impriſonment a year and a half by the commandment of the Archbiſhop and Senate, were put to death and burned in Colen, not without the great grief and lamentation of many good Chriſtians, all the Fault being put upon certain Divines, which at that time preached, that the puniſhment and death of certain wicked Perſons ſhould pacify the Wrath of God, which then plagued Germany grievouſly with a new and ſtrange kind of Diſeaſe: for at that ſeaſon the ſweating Sickneſs did mortally rage and reign throughout all Germany. *Ex com. The Blood of Martyrs ſpilt to ſtop the ſweating Sickneſs at Colen.

A Preface to the Table following.

IF thou well remember in reading this Book of Stories, (loving Reader) it was before mentioned and declared, how in the year of Grace 1501, certain prodigious marks and prints of the Lord's Paſſion, as the Crown, Croſs, Nails, Scourges, and Spear, were ſeen in Germany upon the Garments of Men and Women. Which miraculous ſigns, paſſing the ordinary courſe of natural Cauſes, as it was ſent of God, no doubt, to foreſhew the great and terrible Perſecution, which afterward fell in the Country of Germany, and other Regions beſides, for the teſtimony of Chriſt; ſo if the number and names of all thoſe good Men and Women, which ſuffered in the ſame Perſecution, with their acts and doings ſhould be gathered and compiled together, it would ask a long time, and a large volume. Notwithſtanding, partly to ſatisfy the Hiſtory which we have in hand; partly alſo to avoid tedious prolixity, I thought briefly to contract the diſcourſe thereof, drawing, as in a compendious Table, the names of the Perſecutors, and of the Martyrs which ſuffered, and the cauſes wherefore, with as much ſhortneſs as I may; referring the full tractation of their lives and doings to thoſe Writers of their own Country, where they are to be read more at large. And to keep an Order in the ſame Table, as much as in ſuch a confuſed heap of matters I may, according to the order and diſtinction of the Countries in which theſe bleſſed Saints of Chriſt did ſuffer; I have ſo divided the order of the Table in ſuch ſort, as firſt to begin with them that ſuffered in Germany, then in France, alſo in Spain, with other foreign Countries more; ſhewing only the names, with the principal matters of them; referring the reſt to the further explication of their own Story-writers, from whence they be collected. The which Table being finiſhed, my purpoſe is, Chriſt willing, to return to the full Hiſtory of our own Matters and Martyrs which ſuffered here in England.

Ge. Scherter Martyr.

After that this George had inſtructed the People in knowledg of the Goſpel in Raſtat, ten miles diſtant from Saltsburg, he was accuſed of his Adverſaries and put in Priſon, where he wrote a confeſſion of his Faith, which Matthias Illiricus hath ſet out with his whole ſtory. He was condemned to be burned alive: but means was made, that firſt his head ſhould be cut off, and his body afterwards be caſt into the fire. Going towards his death, he ſaid, crying aloud, That you may know, ſaid he, that I die a true Chriſtian, I will give you a manifeſt ſign; and ſo he did by the power of the Lord: For when his head was taken off from his ſhoulders, the body, falling upon his belly, ſo continued the ſpace while one might eat an Egg. After that, ſoftly it turned it ſelf upon the back, and croſſed the right foot over the left. At the ſight whereof, they which ſaw it were in a great marvel. The Magiſtrates, which before had appointed to have burned the body after his beheading, ſeeing this Miracle, would not burn it, but buried it with other Chriſtian mens bodies; and many by that example were moved to believe the Goſpel. Thus God is able to manifeſt the truth of his Goſpel in the midſt of perſecution, who is to be bleſſed for ever. Amen.

A good Prieſt dwelling not far from Baſil, 1539.

A popiſh Prieſt, and a wicked Murderer.

There was a certain wicked Prieſt, a notorious Adulterer, a Dicer, and a vile Drunkard, given to all wickedneſs and ungraciouſneſs, without all fear, regarding nothing what miſchief he did: moreover, a Man fit and ready to ſerve the affection of the Papiſts at all turns. It chanced that this Prieſt was received and lodged in the houſe of another Prieſt dwelling not far from Baſil, which was a good Man, and a ſincere favourer of the Goſpel.

This drunken Prieſt, ſitting at ſupper, was ſo drunk, that he could not tell what he did, or elſe fained himſelf ſo drunk of purpoſe, the better to accompliſh his intended miſchief. So it followed, that this Wretch after his firſt ſleep roſe out of his Bed, and brake all the glaſs Windows in his Chamber, threw down the Stone, and rent all his Hoſt's Books that he found. The Hoſt, awaking with the noiſe thereof, came to him, asking him how he did? whether there were any Thieves or Enemies that he was in fear of? deſiring him to ſhew what he ailed. But as ſoon as the good Hoſt had opened his Chamber door, the wicked Cut-throat ran at him with his Sword, and ſlew him. The Hoſt, after the Wound received, fell down and died. Upon this a clamour was made through all the ſtreet, and the Neighbours came in, the Murderer was taken and bound: and yet all the Friends and Kinſfolks that the good Prieſt had, could not make that miſerable Caitif, that was the Murderer, to be executed; the ſuperior Powers did ſo take his part, ſaying, That he ſhould be ſent to his Biſhop. The Townſmen did grievouſly cry out and complain at the bolſtering out ſo manifeſt Villany: So did the Nobleman, that was the Lord of the Page, ſaying, That ſo many good Men and married Prieſts were drowned and beheaded for ſuch ſmall trifles, without any regard had by the Biſhop; but a Murderer might eſcape unpuniſhed. It was anſwered to them again, That what the ſuperior Powers would do, they had nothing to do withal: the time was otherwiſe now, than it was in the commotion of the ruſtical People. The ſuperior Powers had authority to govern as they would, ſay they; it was their parts only to obey. And ſo was he ſent bound to the Biſhop, and ſhortly after diſmiſſed, having alſo a greater Benefice given him for his worthy act; for he ſo avanted himſelf, that he had ſlain a Lutheran Prieſt. *Ex Tom. 2. Twenty eight Chriſtian Men and Women of Louvane. Paul a Prieſt. Two aged Women.

At Antonia.

Two Men at Louvane. 1543.

Charles, the Emperors Procurator. When certain of the City of Louvain were ſuſpected of Lutheraniſm, the Emperors Procurator came from Bruſſels thither to make Inquiſition. After which Inquiſition made, certain Bands of armed men came and beſet their houſes in the night, where many were taken in their Beds, pluckt from their Wives and Children, and divided into divers Priſons. Through the terror whereof, many Citizens revolted from the Doctrine of the Goſpel, and returned again to Idolatry. But twenty eight there were which remained conſtant in that Perſecution. Unto whom the Doctors of Louvane, Dr. Enchuſanus, Inquiſitor. Latomus eſpecially the Inquiſitor, and Latomus ſometimes, with other, came and diſputed, thinking no leſs, but either to confound them, or to convert them. But ſo ſtrongly the ſpirit of the Lord wrought with his Saints, that the other went rather confounded away themſelves.

When no Diſputation could ſerve, that which lacked in cunning, they ſupplied with Torments, by enforcing and afflicting them ſeverally every one by himſelf. Among the reſt there was one Paulus a Prieſt, upon the Age of ſixty years; whom the Rectors of the Univerſity, with their Collegues, accompanied with a great number of Bills and Gleves, brought out of Priſon to the Auſtin Friers, where, after many foul Words of the Rector, he was degraded. But at length for fear of death he began to ſtagger in ſome Points of his Confeſſion, and ſo was had out of Lovane, and condemned to perpetual Priſon, which was a dark and ſtinking Dungeon; where he was ſuffered neither to read nor write, nor any Man to come at him, commanded only to be fed with Bread and Water. Two Martyrs burned at Lovane. After that, other two were there, which becauſe they had revoked before, were put to the fire and burnt, conſtantly taking their Martyrdom.

An aged man, Martyr Antonia, Martyr, buried quick. An aged Woman, Martyr, buried quick. Then was there an old Man, and two aged Women brought forth: of whom the one was called Antonia, born of an an ancient ſtock in that City. Theſe alſo were condemned, the Man to be beheaded, the two Women to be buried quick, which death they received likewiſe very cheerfully. Certain of the other Priſoners, which were not condemned to death, were deprived of their Goods, commanded in a white ſheet to come to the Church, and there kneeling with a Taper in their hand, to aſk forgiveneſs; and they which refuſed ſo to do, and to abjure the Doctrine of Luther, were put to the fire. Ex Fran. Encenate.

Maſter Perſeval at Lovane, Anno 1544.

Mr. Perſeval, Martyr. Not long after this was one Maſter Perſeval in the ſame Univerſity of Lovane, ſingularly well learned, who for reprehending certain Popiſh ſuperſtitions, and ſomething ſpeaking in commendation of the Goſpel, was thrown into Priſon. Then being accuſed of Lutheraniſm, becauſe he ſtood to the ſame, and would not condeſcend to the Pope's erroneous Faction, he was adjudged to perpetual Priſon, there to be fed only with Bread and Water: which Puniſhment he took patiently for Chriſt's ſake. Nevertheleſs certain Citizens, taking compaſſion of him, ſent him Wine and Beer. But his Keepers being charged under a great Penalty, durſt let nothing come unto him. At laſt what became of him no Man could learn nor underſtand. Some judge that he was either famiſhed for hunger, or elſe that he was ſecretly drowned. Ex Fran. Encenate.

Juſtus Jusberg at Bruſſels, Anno 1544.

Juſtus of Lovane, Martyr. Juſtus Jusberg a Skinner of Lovane, being ſuſpected of Lutheraniſm, was found in his Houſe to have the New Teſtament, and certain Sermons of Luther; for the which he was committed, and the Jayler commanded that he ſhould ſpeak with none. There were the ſame time in the lower Priſon under him, Egidius, and Franciſcus Encenas a Spaniard; who ſecretly, having the Doors left open, came to him, and confirmed him in the Cauſe of Righteouſneſs. Thus is the Providence of the Lord never lacking to his Saints in time of neceſſity. Shortly after came the Doctors and Maſters of Lovane, to examine him of certain Articles touching Religion, as of the Pope's Supremacy, Sacrifice of the Maſs, Purgatory, and of the Sacrament. Whereunto when he had anſwered plainly and boldly, after the Scriptures, and would in no wiſe be removed, he was condemned to the fire: but through Interceſſion made to the Queen, his burning was pardoned, and he only beheaded. *Ex Fran. Giles Tilleman at Bruſſels, An. 1544.

Giles, Martyr. This Giles was born in Bruſſels of honeſt Parents. By his Occupation he was brought up from his youth to be a Cutler. In the which Occupation he was ſo expert and cunning, that he waxed thereby rich and wealthy. Coming to the years of thirty, he began to receive the light of the Goſpel, through the reading of the Holy Scripture, and increaſed therein exceedingly. And as in zeal he was fervent, ſo was he of Nature human, mild, and pitiful, paſſing all other in thoſe parts. Whatſoever he had, that neceſſity could ſpare, he gave it away to the Poor, and only lived by his Science. Some he refreſhed with his Meat; ſome with Cloathing; to ſome he gave his Shoes; ſome he helped with Houſhold-ſtuff; to other ſome he miniſtred wholeſom Exhortation of good Doctrine. One poor Woman there was brought to bed, and had no Bed to lie in, to whom he brought his own bed, himſelf contented to lie in the ſtraw.

Good works going with a lively Faith.

The Parſon of Bruſſels.

The ſaid Egidius being detected by a Prieſt or Parſon of Bruſſels, was taken at Lovane for that Religion which the Pope doth call Hereſie. Where his Adverſaries extended great care and diligence to reduce him to their Doctrine, and to make him abjure. But as he was a Man well reaſoned, and ſingularly witted, they went away many times with ſhame. Thus being detained eight Months in Priſon, he was ſent to Bruſſels to be judged: where he comforted divers which were there in Priſon (among whom was alſo Franciſcus Encenas) exhorting them to the conſtancy of the Truth unto the Crown which was prepared for them. At the Table he miniſtred unto them all, being contented himſelf with a few ſcraps which they left. In his Prayers he was ſo ardent, kneeling by himſelf in ſome ſecret place, that he ſeemed to forget himſelf. Being called many times to meat, he neither heard nor ſaw them that ſtood by him, till he was lift up by the Arms, and then gently he would ſpeak unto them as one waked out of a ſweet ſleep.

The humble heart of Giles.

Fervency of Prayer.

Certain of the Gray Friers ſometimes were ſent unto him by two and two, to reduce him; but he would always deſire them to depart from him, for he was at a point; and when the Friers at any time did call him, he he ever held his peace at ſuch private Injuries: inſomuch that thoſe Blaſphemers would ſay abroad, that he had a dumb Devil in him. But when they talked of any Religion, there he ſpared not, but anſwered them fully by Evidences of the Scripture, in ſuch ſort, that divers times they would depart marvelling. At ſundry times he might have eſcaped, the doors being let open, but he would not for bringing his Keeper in peril.

Blaſphemy of the Papiſts.

At length, about the Month of January, he was brought to another Priſon, to be conſtrained with Torments to confeſs Purgatory, and to utter moe of his Fellows. But no forcement would ſerve. Wherefore upon the two and twentieth of January he was condemned to the Fire, but privily, contrary to the uſe of the Country; for openly they durſt not condemn him for fear of the People, ſo well was he beloved. When tidings of the Sentence came unto him, he gave hearty thanks unto God, that the hour was come when he might glorifie the Lord.

Perſecut. | Martyrs, and the cauſes of their Mardom.

As he was brought to the place of Burning, where he ſaw a great heap of Wood piled, he required the greater part thereof to be taken away, and given to the Poor; a little, ſaid he, would ſuffice him. Alſo ſeeing a poor Man coming by, as he went, that lacked Shoes, he gave his Shoes unto him; better, ſaid he, ſo to do, than to have his Shoes burnt, and the Poor to periſh for cold. Standing at the ſtake the Hangman was ready to ſtrangle him before; but he would not, ſaying, That there was no ſuch need that his Pain ſhould be mitigated, for I fear not, ſaid he, the fire; do thou therefore as thou art commanded. And thus the bleſſed Martyr, lifting up his Eyes to Heaven in the middle of the flame, died, to the great Lamentation of all that ſtood by. After that time, when the Friers of that City would go about for their Alms, the People would ſay, It was not meet for them to receive Alms with bloody Hands. Great Perſecution in Gaunt, and other parts of Flanders.

Perſecution in Gaunt and Bruſſels.

As Charles the Emperor did lie in Gaunt, the Friers and Doctors there obtained, that the Edict made againſt the Lutherans, might be read openly twice a year. Which being obtained, great Perſecution followed; ſo that there was no City nor Town in all Flanders, wherein ſome either were not expulſed, or beheaded, or condemned to perpetual Priſon, or had not their Goods confiſcate: neither was there any reſpect of Age or Sex. At Gaunt eſpecially many there were of the head Men, which for Religion ſake were burned.

Afterward the Emperor coming to Bruſſels, there was terrible ſlaughter, and Perſecution of God's People, namely in Brabant, Hennegow, and Artois; the Horror and Cruelty whereof is almoſt incredible: inſomuch that at one time as good as two hundred Men and Women together were brought out of the Country about into the City, of whom ſome were drowned, ſome buried quick, ſome privily made away, others ſent to perpetual Priſon: whereby the Priſons and Towers thereabout were repleniſhed with Priſoners and Captives, and the Hands of the Hangman tired with ſlaying and killing, to the great ſorrow of all them which knew the Goſpel, being now compelled either to deny the ſame, or to confirm it with their Blood. The Story hereof is at large ſet forth by Franc. Encenas, a notable learned Man, who alſo himſelf was Priſoner the ſame time at Bruſſels: whoſe Book written in Latin I my ſelf have ſeen and read, remaining in the hands of John Oporine at Baſil.

three Months, ſeeking the Company of godly Chriſtians, ſuch as he heard to uſe the reading of the Scriptures: by whom he being more groundedly inſtructed returned again to the City of Gaunt, where all his Neighbours firſt began to marvel at the ſudden change of this Man. The Franciſcans which knew him before ſo beneficial unto them, now ſeeing him ſo altered from their ways and Superſtition, and ſeeing him to viſit the Captives in Priſon, to comfort them in Perſecution, and to confirm them in the Word of God, which went to the fire, conſpired againſt him: whereby he was detected and laid in Bands. After that with ſharp and greivous Torments they would have conſtrained him to utter other of the ſame Religion. To whom thus he anſwered; that if they could prove by the Scripture that his detecting and accuſing of his Brethren, whom they would afflict with the like Torments, were not againſt the ſecond Table of God's Law, then he would not refuſe to prefer the Honour of God before the ſafegard of his Brethren. Then the Friers examined him in the Sacrament, asking him why he was ſo earneſt to have it in both kinds, ſeeing (ſaid they) it is but a naked Sacrament, as you ſay? To whom he anſwered, That the Elements thereof were naked, but the Sacrament was not naked, forſomuch as the ſaid Elements of Bread and Wine being received after the Inſtitution of Chriſt, do now make a Sacrament and a myſtical Repreſentation of the Lord's Body, communicating himſelf with our Souls. And as touching the receiving in both kinds, becauſe it is the Inſtitution of the Lord, who is he (ſaid Martin) that dare alter the ſame? Then was he brought before the Council of Flanders. The Cauſes laid againſt him were the Sacrament, Purgatory, and praying for the Dead: and for which he was condemned and burned at Gaunt in Verle place, all his Goods being confiſcate. As he ſtood at the Stake, a Franciſcan Frier ſaid to him, Martin, unleſs thou doſt turn, thou ſhalt go from this fire to everlaſting fire. It is not in you, ſaid Martin again, to judge: For this the Friers after were ſo hated, that many Bills and Rhymes were ſet forth in divers places againſt them. Ex Pantal.

Delden is a Town in lower Germany, three miles from Daventry, where theſe two Virgins of Noble Parentage were burned. Who, after diligent frequenting of Churches and Sermons, being inſtructed in the Word of the Lord, defended, that ſeeing the Benefit of our Salvation cometh only by our Faith in Chriſt, all the other Merchandiſe of the Pope, which he uſeth to ſell to the People for Money, was needleſs. Firſt Mary, being the younger, was put to the fire; where ſhe prayed ardently for her Enemies, commending her Soul to God. At whoſe conſtancy the Judges did greatly marvel.

Then they exhorted Urſula to turn, or if ſhe would not; at leaſt that ſhe ſhould require to be beheaded. To whom ſhe ſaid, That ſhe was guilty of no Error, nor defended any thing, but what was conſonant to the Scripture, in which ſhe truſted to perſevere unto the end. And as touching the kind of puniſhment, ſhe ſaid, ſhe feared not the fire, but rather would follow the Example of her dear Siſter that went before. This was marvellous, that the Executioners could in no wiſe conſume their Bodies with fire, but left them whole lying upon the ground white: which certain good Chriſtians privily took up in the night and buried. Thus God many times ſheweth his power in the midſt of Tribulations. Ex Lud. Rab. Pantab. &c.

Andrew Thieſſen, Citizen of Mechlin, of his Wife Katharine had three Sons and a Daughter, whom he inſtructed diligently in the Doctrine of the Goſpel, and deſpiſed the doings of Popery. Wherefore being hated and perſecuted of the Friers and Prieſts there, he went into England and there died. Francis and Nicholas his two Sons went to Germany to ſtudy; and returning again to their Mother, and Siſter, and younger Brother, by diligent inſtruction brought them to the right Knowledge of God's Goſpel: which being not unknown to the Parſon there of St. Katharine, he called to them Dr. Rupardus, Topper, and other Maſters and Friers, who taking Counſel together with William de Clerk, the head Magiſtrate of the Town of Mechlin, agreed, That the Mother with her four Children ſhould be ſent to Priſon, ſeparate one from another: where great labour was imployed to reclaim them home unto their Church, that is, from light to darkneſs again. The two younger, to wit, the Daughter with the younger Brother, being yet not ſetled neither in years nor Doctrine, ſomething inclined to them, and were delivered. The The Mother which would not conſent, was condemned to perpetual Priſon. The other two, Francis and Nicholas, ſtanding firmly to their Confeſſion, defended, That the Catholick Church was not the Church of Rome; that the Sacrament was to be miniſtred in both Kinds; that Auricular Confeſſion was to no purpoſe; that Invocation of Saints was to be left; that there was no Purgatory. The Friers they called Hyppocrites, and contemned their threatnings. The Magiſtrates, after Diſputations, fell to Torments, to know of them who was their Maſter, and what fellows they had. Their Maſter, they ſaid, was Chriſt which bare his Croſs before. Fellows, they ſaid, they had innumerable, diſperſed in all places. At laſt they were brought to the Judges: their Articles were read, and they condemned to be burned. Comming to the place of Execution, as they began to exhort the People, Gags or Balls of Wood were thruſt into their Mouthes, which they through vehemency in ſpeaking thruſt out again, deſiring for the Lord's ſake that they might have leave to ſpeak. And ſo ſinging with a loud voice, Credo in unum Deum, &c. they went, and were faſtned to the ſtake, praying for their Perſecutors, and exhorting the one the other, they did abide the fire patiently. The one feeling the flame to come to his Beard, Ah! ſaid he, what a ſmall pain is this, to be compared to the Glory to come? Thus the patient Martyrs committing their Spirit to the hands of God, to the great admiration of the looker-on, through conſtancy atchieved the Crown of Martyrdom. Ex Phil. Melanth.

Adrian and Marion his Wife, martyrs.

In the ſame Perſecution againſt Brulius and his Company in Dornick, was apprehended alſo one Adrian and Marion his Wife. The cauſe of their trouble, as alſo of the others, was the Emperor's Decree made in the Council of Wormes againſt the Lutherans mentioned before. Adrian, not ſo ſtrong as a Man, for fear gave back from the Truth, and was but only beheaded. The Wife, ſtronger than a Woman, did withſtand their threats, and abide the uttermoſt; and being incloſed in an Iron Grate formed in ſhape of a Paſtie, was laid in the Earth and buried quick, after the uſual Puniſhment of that Countrey, for Women. When the Adverſaries firſt told her, that her Husband had relented, ſhe believed them not: and therefore, as ſhe went to her death, paſſing by the Tower where he was, ſhe called to him to take her leave; but he was gone before. Ex Pant. lib. 4.

Maſter Peter Bruley, Preacher at Dornick, Anno 1545.

Peter Bruly, martyr.

Maſter Peter Bruly was Preacher in the French Church at Strâsburgh. Who at the earneſt requeſt of faithful Brethren came down to viſit the lower Countries about Artois and Dornick in Flanders; where he moſt diligently preached the Word of God unto the People in houſes, the doors ſtanding open.

Whereupon when the Magiſtrates of Dornick had ſhut the Gates of the Town, and had made ſearch for him three days, he was privily let down the Wall in the night by a Basket: and as he was let down to the Ditch ready to take his way, one of them which let him down, leaning over the Wall to bid him farewel, cauſed unawares a ſtone to ſlip out of the Wall, which falling upon him brake his Leg by reaſon whereof he was heard of the Watchmen complaining of his Wound, and ſo was taken, giving thanks to God by whoſe Providence he was there ſtaid to ſerve the Lord in that place. So long as he remained in Priſon, he ceaſed not to ſupply the part of a diligent Preacher, teaching, and confirming all them that came to him in the word of Grace. Being in Priſon he wrote his own Confeſſion and Examination, and ſent it to the Brethren. He wrote alſo another Epiſtle unto them that were in Perſecution: another alſo to all the faithful: alſo another Letter to his Wife the ſame day that he was burned. He remained in Priſon four Months. His Sentence was given by the Emperor's Commiſſioners at Bruxels, That he ſhould be burned to Aſhes, and his Aſhes thrown into the River. Although the Prieſts and Friers made the fire but ſmall, to multiply his pain, yet he the more cheerfully and conſtantly took his Martyrdom, and ſuffered it. The Letters of Duke Frederick, and of the Lantgrave came to intreat for him; but he was burned a little before the Letters came. Ex Lud. Rab. lib. 6.

Peter Bruley? He ſaid he was, and that he had received much Fruit by his Doctrine. Wilt thou then defend his Doctrine, ſaid they? Yea, ſaid he, for that it is conſonant both to the Old Teſtament and to the New: and for this he was let down into a deep Dungeon under the Caſtle-ditch, full of Toads and filthy Vermine. Shortly after the Senate, with certain Friers, came again to examin him, to ſee whether they could convert him. To whom he anſwered and ſaid, That when he before had lived ſuch an ungodly life, they never ſpake a word againſt him: but now, for favouring and favouring the Word of God, they were ſo infeſt againſt him, that they ſought his Blood. Among whom was one Dr. Haſardus, which asked him if he did not ſeem to himſelf more wicked now than ever he was before? But he ſetting the Frier at light, bad him, Avaunt Frier; ſaying, that he had to talk with the Senate, and not with him. The Senate then began to examine him of certain Articles of Religion. To whom as he was about to anſwer boldly and expreſly to every point, they interrupting him, bad him ſay in two Words, either Yea or Nay. Then, ſaid he, if ye will not ſuffer me to anſwer for my ſelf in matters of ſuch Importance, then ſend me to my Priſon again among my Toads and Frogs, which will not interrupt me, while I talk with my Lord my God. The boldneſs of whoſe Spirit and Courage, as it made ſome to gnaſh their teeth, ſo ſome it made to wonder, and miniſtred to ſome great Confirmation.

There was alſo one Bergiban the ſame time in Priſon, who had been a forward Man, and a great doer in the Goſpel, before the coming down of Brulius. Who being alſo ſought for at the taking of Brulius, and being then not found at home, either by chance not knowing, or elſe he conveyed himſelf out of the way for fear, conceived thereof ſuch ſorrow in his mind, that afterward neither his Wife, nor Children, nor any Friends elſe could ſtay him, but he would needs offer himſelf to the Judges, ſaying unto the Ruler, being asked why he came, The Magiſtrates came to ſeek me, ſaid he, and now I am come to know what they would. Whereupon the Ruler, being ſorry of his coming, yet notwithſtanding committed him to Priſon, where he remained conſtant a certain while. But after the Commiſſioners had threatned him with cruel Torments, and horror of death, he began by little and little to waver and ſhrink from the Truth. At the fair words of the falſe Friers and Prieſts, to have his puniſhment changed, and to be beheaded, he was fain to grant unto their biddings and Requeſts: whereupon the Adverſaries taking their Advantage, came to Miocius, and told him of Bergiban's Retractation, willing him to do the like. But he ſtoutly perſiſting in the Truth, indured to the Fire, where he, having Powder put to his Breaſt, was ſo put to death and diſpatched. The Friers, hearing the crack of the Powder upon his Breaſt, told the People, that the Devil came out of him and carried away his Soul. Ex Rab. & aliis.

Then he was brought forth to be degraded, after a barbarous and tyrannous manner. The ſight whereof as it was lamentable to the godly, ſo it ſeemed ridiculous to the wicked. But within few days after, the impious Biſhop by the ſtroke of God's juſt hand, fell ſick and became horn-mad, and ſo raving without ſenſe or wit, miſerably died. *Ex Tom. 2. Among theſe godly and conſtant Saints of Chriſt, may well be recounted John Frederick, Duke of Saxony; who when he had recovered again all his Dominions (which Duke Maurice had taken from him before, being in Suevia with his Army) and at laſt was taken Priſoner of the Emperor of Albis, the four and twentieth of April, An. 1547, yet could never be induced to yield to the Emperor in revoking his Faith and Doctrine of the Goſpel wherein he ſtood: For the which he was detained from his Wife and Children, and bereaved of all his Goods, and carried about with the Emperor the ſpace of five years. This admirable conſtancy of the Duke, was a Wonder to all his Adverſaries. At laſt, in the year of our Lord, 1552, through the Benefit of Almighty God, he was ſet again at liberty, and returning home to his Wife and Children, continued in his Religion till the hour of his death. Ex Sleid. lib. 19.

Much like was the cauſe alſo of Philip Lantgrave of Heſſe, who likewiſe being taken and ſpoiled of the Emperor, continued the ſpace of five years in the cruel Cuſtody of the Spaniards; and albeit he had fined unto the Emperor, and was promiſed to be ſet free out of Priſon, the Emperor and his Council dallying with their Promiſe, expounded his Impriſonment not to be perpetual. And though great Labour and Interceſſion was made for him, yet all would not help. For when the Emperor ſent him away, then Mary the Emperor's Siſter took him by the way, finding Cavillations aginſt him: whereby he was again committed into the hands of the Spaniards, till at length, through the diſpoſing of God's Mercy, firſt the Duke of Saxony, and then ſix days after the Lantgrave alſo, were both freed out of long captivity and ſent home. *Ex Com. Maſter Nicholas Finchman. Marion, Wife of Auguſtinus, An. 1549.

Maſter Nicholas and Barbara his Wife; alſo Auguſtinus a Barber, and Marion his Wife, born about Hennegrow, after they had been at Geneva a ſpace, came into Germany, thinking that way to paſs over into England. By the way coming to Hennegrow, Auguſtine deſired Maſter Nicholas (becauſe he was learned) to come to Bergis to viſit and comfort certain Brethren there; which he willingly did. From thence paſſing by Dornick (or Tornay) they held on their Journey toward England. But in the way Auguſtine and his Wife, being known, were detected to the Lieutenant of Dornick, who, in all ſpeedy haſte following after them, overtook them four miles beyond Dornick. Auguſtine (how I cannot tell) eſcaped that time out of their hands, and could not be found The Soldiers then laying hands upon Nicholas and the two Women, brought them back again unto Dornick. In returning by the way, when Maſter Nicholas at the Table gave thanks (as the manner is of the faithful) the wicked Ruler ſcorning them, and ſwearing like a Tyrant, ſaid, Now let us ſee thou lewd Heretick, whether thy God can deliver thee out of my hand. To whom Nicholas anſwering again modeſtly, asked, what had Chriſt ever offended him, that he with his blaſphemous Swearing did ſo tear him in pieces? deſiring him, that if he had any thing againſt Chriſt, rather he would wreak his anger upon his poor Body, and let the Lord alone. Thus they being bound hands and feet, were brought to Bergis, and there laid in the Dungeon. Then Duke Ariſcote, accompanied with a great number of Prieſts, and Franciſcan Friers, and with a Doctor which was their Warden, came to talk with them. Nicholas ſtanding in the midſt of them, being asked what he was, and whether he would? anſwered them perfectly to all their Queſtions: and moreover ſo confounded the Friers, that they went away aſhamed, ſaying, That he had a Devil, and crying, To the fire with him, Lutheran.

As they continued ſtill looking for the day of their Execution, it came to the Rulers minds to ask of Nicholas in what houſe he was lodged when he came to Bergis? Nicholas ſaid, He had never been there before, and therefore being a ſtranger he could not tell the name of the houſe. When Nicholas would confeſs nothing, Duke Ariſcotus came to Barbara, Nicholas his Wife, to know where they were lodged at Bergis, promiſing many fair words of delivery, if ſhe would tell. She being a weak and timorous Woman, uttered all. By the occaſion whereof great Perſecution followed, and many were apprehended. Where this is to be noted, that ſhortly, even upon the ſame, the Son of the ſaid Duke Ariſcotus was ſlain, and buried the ſame day when Auguſtinus was burned. To be ſhort, Nicholas ſhortly after was brought before the Judges, and there condemned to be burned to aſhes. At which ſentence giving, Nicholas bleſſed the Lord, which had counted him worthy to be a Witneſs in the cauſe of his dear and well-beloved Son. Going to the place of Execution he was commanded to ſpeak nothing unto the people, or elſe he ſhould have a Ball of Wood thruſt into his mouth. Being at the ſtake, and ſeeing a great multitude about him, forgetting his ſilence promiſed, he cried with a loud voice; O Charles, Charles, how long ſhall thy heart be hardned? And with that one of the Soldiers gave him a blow. Then ſaid Nicholas again; Ah miſerable people! thou art not worthy to whom the Word of God ſhould be preached. And thus he ſpake as they were binding him to the ſtake. The Friers came out with their old Song, crying, That he had a Devil; to whom Nicholas ſpake the Verſe of the Pſalm: Depart from me, all ye wicked, for the Lord hath heard the voice of my weeping. And thus this holy Martyr, patiently taking his death, commended up his Spirit unto God in the midſt of the fire. *Ex Lud. The ſentence of her Condemnation was this, That ſhe ſhould be interred quick: When ſhe was let down to the Grave, kneeling upon her knees, ſhe deſired the Lord to help her; and before ſhe ſhould be thrown down, ſhe deſired her face might be covered with a Napkin or ſome linnen Cloth; who being ſo covered, and the earth thrown upon her face and body, the Hangman ſtamped upon her with his feet, till her breath was paſt. Ibidem.

Whereof he having ſome intelligence before, left his Ware and ran away. And ſeeing moreover the houſe beſet with harneſſed Men where he was hoſted, he began to be more afraid, and hid himſelf in a buſh: for he was very timerous, and a weak-ſpirited Man. But the hour being come which the Lord had appointed for him, it hapned that certain ſtanding upon the Town wall, which might well ſee him go into the Thicket or Buſh, gave knowledg thereof to the Souldiers, which followed him to the buſh, and took him. Being taken, he was had to Bergis, the head Town of Hennegow, where being examined, valiantly ſtanding to the defence of his Doctrine, he anſwered his Adverſaries with great boldneſs.

Wherein here is to be noted and marvelled to ſee the Work of the Lord, how this Man being before of nature ſo timerous, now was ſo ſtrengthned with God's Grace, that he nothing feared the force of all his Enemies. Among others came to him the Warden of the gray Friers, with a long Oration, perſwading him to relent, or elſe he ſhould be damned in Hell fire perpetually. To whom Auſten anſwering again, ſaid, Prove that which you ſaid by the Authority of God's Word, that a Man may believe you: you ſay much, but you prove nothing, rather like a Doctor of Lies, than of Truth, &c. At laſt, he being there condemned to be burned at Bellimont, was brought to the Inn where he ſhould take Horſe: where was a certain Gentleman, a ſtranger, who, drinking to him in a cup of Wine, deſired him to have pity upon himſelf; and if he would not favour his Life, yet that he would favour his own Soul. To whom ſaid Auſten, after he had thanked him for his good will, What care I have, ſaid he, of my Soul, you may ſee by this, that I had rather give my Body to be burned, than to do that thing that were againſt my Conſcience. When he was come to the Town of Bellimont, where he ſhould be burned, the ſame day there was a great burial of the Duke Ariſcotus his Son, which was ſlain a little before (as is before touched) by the occaſion whereof many Nobles and Gentlemen were there preſent, which hearing of this Auſtin, came to him and talked with him. Perſecut. | Martyrs, and the Cauſes of their Martyrdom.

James Heſſelius Chamberlain of Gaunt, and the Friers there.

he heard that there was a black Frier, which uſed to preach good Doctrine to the People. Wherefore he, being deſirous to hear, came to his Sermon; where the Frier. contrary to his expectation, preached in defence of Tranſubſtantiation. At the hearing whereof his heart was ſo full, that he had much ado to refrain, while the Sermon was finiſhed. As ſoon as the Frier was come down, he burſt out and charged him with falſe Doctrine, perſwading the People, as well as he could be heard, by the Scriptures, that the Bread was but a Sacrament only of the Lord's Body. The Frier, not willing to hear him, made ſigns unto him to depart. Alſo the throng of the People was ſuch, that it carried him out of the doors. He had not gone far, but Heſſelius the Chamberlain overtook him and carried him to Priſon. Then were Doctors and other Friers, as Piſtorius, and Bunderius, brought to reaſon with him, of the Sacrament, of Invocation of Saints, and Purgatory. He ever ſtood to the trial only of the Scripture: which they refuſed. Then was it agreed that he ſhould declare his mind in writing: which he did. He wrote alſo to his Wife at Emden; comforting her, and requiring her to take care for Samuel and Sarah his Children. When he was condemned, he was commanded not to ſpeak to the People. Heſſelius the Officer made great haſte to have him diſpatched. Wherefore he, mildly like a Lamb, praying for his Enemies, gave himſelf to be bound, patiently taking what they would do againſt him: whom firſt they ſtrangled, and then conſumed his Body being dead with fire.

And this was the Martyrdom of Hoſtius. Ex Lud. Rab. lib. 6.

The ſtory of Bertrand is lamentable, his Torments uncredible, the Tyranny ſhewed unto him horrible, the Conſtancy of the Martyr admirable. This Bertrand, being a ſilk Weaver, went to Weſell for the Cauſe of Religion. Who being deſirous to draw his Wife and Children from Dornick to Weſell, came thrice from thence to perſwade her to go with him thither. When ſhe in no wiſe could be intreated, he, remaining a few days at home, ſet his houſe in order, and deſired his Wife and Brother to pray that God would eſtabliſh him in his enterprize that he went about. That done, he went upon Chriſtmaſs-day to the high Church of Dornick, where he took the Cake out of the Prieſts hand, as he would have lifted it over his head at Maſs, and ſtamp'd it under his feet, ſaying, That he did it to ſhew the Glory of that God, and what little power he hath: with other words more to the people, to perſwade them that the Cake or Fragment of Bread was not Jeſus their Saviour.

At the ſight hereof the People, being ſtrucken with a marvellous damp, ſtood all amazed. At length ſuch a ſtirring thereupon followed, that Bertrand could hardly eſcape with life. It was not long but the noiſe of this was carried to the Bailiff of Hennegow, and Governor of the Caſtle of Dornick, which lay ſick the ſame time of the Gout at Bieſie. Who like a mad Man cried out, that ever God would or could be ſo patient, to ſuffer that Contumely, ſo to be troden under the foot by ſuch a Miſer: adding moreover, that he would revenge his Cauſe in ſuch ſort, as it ſhould be an example for ever to all Poſterity; and forthwith the furious Tyrant commanded himſelf to be carried to the Caſtle of Dornick. Bertrand being brought before him, was asked whether he repented of his Fact, or whether he would ſo do, if it were to be done again? Who anſwered, that if it were an hundred times to be done, he would do it; and if he had an hundred lives, he would give them in that quarrel. Then was he thrice put to the Pinbank, tormented moſt miſerably, to utter his ſetters on, which he would never do. Then proceeded they to the Sentence, more like Tyrants than Chriſtianmen. By the tenour of which Sentence, thiſs was his puniſhment:

Bertrand thrice tormented.

First, He was drawn from the Caſtle of Dornick to the Market-place, having a Ball of Iron put in his mouth. Then he was ſet upon a Stage, where his right hand wherewith he took the Hoſt, was cruſhed and preſſed between two hot Irons, with ſharp iron edges fiery red, till the form and faſhion of his hand was miſhapen. In like manner they brought other-like Irons for his right foot, made fire-hot, whereunto of his own accord he put his foot, to ſuffer as his hand had done before, with marvellous conſtancy and firmneſs of mind. That done, they took the ball of Iron out of his mouth, and cut off his tongue, who notwithſtanding, with continual crying, ceaſed not to call upon God; whereby the hearts of the People were greatly moved: Whereupon the tormentors thruſt the Iron ball into his mouth again. From thence they brought him down to the lower Stage, he going to the ſame no leſs chearfully and quietly, than if no part of his body had been hurt. There his legs and his hands were bound behind him with an Iron Chain going about his body, and ſo he was let down flat upon the fire: whom the foreſaid Governor, there ſtanding by and looking upon, cauſed to be let up again, and ſo down and up again, till at laſt the whole body was ſpent to aſhes, which he commanded to be caſt into the River: when this was done, the Chappel where this Maſs-god was ſo intreated, was lockt up, and the Board whereupon the Prieſt ſtood was burnt, the marble Stone whereupon the Hoſt did light, was broken in pieces. And finally, forſomuch as the ſaid Bertrand had received his Doctrine at VVeſell, commandment was given, That no Perſon out of that Country ſhould go to VVeſell, or there occupy, under incurring the danger of the Emperor's Placard, *Ex Criſp. After theſe two good Men, being born in the lower parts of Germany, had been converſant in divers reformed Churches in other Countries: at laſt, for Conſcience-ſake they returned home again to do good in their own Country of Dornick, and thereabout.

So upon a time, as the people there reſorted to a back-Field or Wood without the City, with a certain Preacher, to hear the Word of God, and to pray, the Adverſaries, having thereof ſome intelligence, ſo purſued them, that they took of them above thirty, of whom theſe two among the reſt were apprehended; and thinking no leſs but that they ſhould be burned, they began to ſing Pſalms. At length being brought forth, firſt one, then the other, they were both beheaded. And where the Judges had intended to quarter their Bodies, and to ſet them up by the high Ways, yet was it ſo provided, God working in the hearts of the People, that they were both committed to Sepulture. *Ex Lud. This Denis was one of them which was firſt burned at Melda, for ſaying, That the Maſs is a plain denial of the Death and Paſſion of Chriſt. He was always wont to have in his mouth, the words of Chriſt; He that denieth me before Men, him alſo will I deny before my Father; and to muſe upon the ſame earneſtly. At his Degradation, one of the Black Friers of Paris preached, taking for his Theam the words of St. Paul, 1 Tim. 4. The Spirit ſpeaketh, that in the later days, Men ſhall depart from the Faith, giving heed to lying Spirits, and Doctrine of Error, &c. And in handling that place, either he could not, or would not proceed further in the Text. Cadurcus cried out to him to proceed, and read further. The Frier ſtood dumb, and could not ſpeak a word. Then Cadurcus, taking the Text, did proſecute the ſame, as followeth: Teaching falſe Doctrine in hypocriſie, having their Conſcience marked with a hot Iron, forbidding to Marry, and to eat Meats, created of God to be eaten with thanksgiving, &c. *Ex Jo. Aymond de Lauoy, at Bourdeaux, 1543.

Aymondus de Lauoy Martyr.

The pariſh Prieſt of the Town of S. Faith in Angeow

This Aymond preached the Goſpel at Saint Faiths in Angeow, where he was accuſed by the Pariſh Prieſt there, and by other Prieſts more, to have taught falſe Doctrine, to the great decay of their Gains. Whereupon, when the Magiſtrates of Bourdeaux had given commandment, and had ſent out their Apparitours to apprehend him, he having intelligence thereof, was willed by his Friends to fly and ſhift for himſelf: but he would not, ſaying, He had rather never have been born, than ſo to do. It was the Office of a good Shepherd, he ſaid, not to fly in time of peril, but rather

Alſo other prieſts of the ſame County.	to abide the danger, leſt the Flock be ſcattered: or elſe leſt peradventure, in ſo doing, he ſhould leave ſome ſcruple in their minds, thus to think, that he fed them with Dreams and Fables, contrary to the Word of God. Wherefore beſeeching them to move him no more therein, he told them, that he feared not to yield up both Body and Soul in the quarrel of that Truth which he had taught; ſaying, with
Riveracus and his ſervant.	St. Paul, That he was ready, not only to be bound for the teſtimony of Chriſt, in the City of Bourdeaux, but alſo to die. Act. 21.

To contract the long ſtory hereof to a brief Narration, the Sumner came, and was in the City three days: during which time, Aymondus preached three Sermons. The People, in defence of their Preacher, flew upon the Sumner, to deliver him out of his hands. But Aymund deſired them not to ſtop his Martyrdom; ſeeing it was the Will of God that he ſhould ſuffer for him, he would not, ſaid he, reſiſt. Then the Conſuls ſuffered the Sumner, and ſo Aymund was carried to Bourdeaux. Where many Witneſſes, the moſt part being Prieſts, came in againſt him, with Mr. Riverack alſo, and his Servant: which Riverack had ſaid oftentimes before, that it ſhould coſt him a thouſand Crowns, but he would burn him. Many exceptions he made againſt his falſe Witneſſes, but that would not be taken. All their Accuſation was only for denying Purgatory.

About nine months he remained in Priſon with great miſery, bewailing exceedingly his former life, albeit there was no Man that could charge him outwardly with any Crime. Then came down Letters, whereupon the Judges began to proceed to his condemnation, and he had greater Fetters put upon him; which he took for a token of his death ſhortly to follow. After that, he was examined with Torments. One of the head Preſidents came to him, and ſhaking him by the Beard, bad him tell what Fellows he had of his Religion. To whom he anſwered, ſaying, That he had no other Fellows, but ſuch as knew and did the Will of God his Father, whether they were Nobles, Merchants, or Husbandmen, or of what degree ſoever they were. In theſe Torments he endured two or three hours, being but of a weak body, with theſe words comforting himſelf; This Body, ſaid he, once muſt die, but the Spirit ſhall live: the Kingdom of God abideth for ever. In the time of his tormenting, he ſwounded. Afterward, coming to himſelf again, he ſaid, O Lord, Lord, why haſt thou forſaken me? To whom the Preſident, Nay, wicked Lutheran, ſaid he, thou haſt forſaken God. Then ſaid Amundus, Alas, good Maſters, why do you thus miſerably torment me? O Lord, I beſeech thee forgive them, they know not what they do. See (ſaid the Preſident) this Caitif, how he prayeth for us: nevertheleſs ſo conſtant was he in his pains, that they could not force him to utter one Man's Name: ſaying unto them, that he thought to have found more mercy with Men; wherefore he prayed God that he might find mercy with him.

On the next Saturday following, ſentence of Condemnation was given againſt him. Then certain Friers were appointed to hear his Confeſſion, whom he refuſed, chuſing to him one of his own Order, the Pariſh-Prieſt of St. Chriſtophers, bidding the Friers depart from him, for he would confeſs his ſins to the Lord. Do you not ſee, ſaid he, how I am troubled enough with Men, will ye yet trouble me more? Others have had my Body, will ye alſo take from me my Soul? Away from me I pray you. At laſt, when he could not be ſuffered to have the Pariſh Prieſt, he then took a certain Carmelite, bidding the reſt to depart; with whom he having long talk, at laſt did convert him to the Truth. Shortly after that came unto him the Judges, Caſſanges, and Longa, with other Counſellors more; unto whom the ſaid Aymundus began to preach and declare his mind touching the Lord's Supper: But Longa, interrupting him, demanded of him thus.

By this it ſhould follow, that there be many Churches: and whereas any ruſtical Clowns do aſſemble together, there muſt be a Church.

The Martyr.

It is no abſurd thing to ſay that there be many Churches or Congregations amongſt the Chriſtians: and ſo ſpeaketh St. Paul, To all the Churches which are in Galatia, &c. And yet all theſe Congregations make but one Church.

If he be like to Peter, and be grounded with Peter upon the true Rock of Chriſt Jeſus, ſo I believe his Works and Ordinances to be good.

Then the Judges leaving him with the Friers, departed from him, counting him as a damned Creature. Notwithſtanding, Aymundus putting his truſt in God, was full of comfort, ſaying with St. Paul, Who ſhall ſeparate me from the Love of God? Shall the Sword, Hunger, or Nakedneſs? No, nothing ſhall pluck me from him. But rather I have pity of you, ſaid he, and ſo they departed. Not long after he was brought to the place of execution, ſinging by the way the Pſalms, In exitu Iſrael de Ægypto, &c. And as he paſſed by the place where he had before been impriſoned, he called to his Priſon-fellows, exhorting them to put their confidence in the Lord, and told them that he had ſpoken for them, and declared their miſeries unto the Preſident. He thanked moreover the Keeper, and deſired him to be good to his poor Priſoners. And ſo taking his leave of them, and deſiring them to pray for him; alſo giving thanks to the Miſtreſs-keeper for her gentleneſs ſhewed to him, he proceeded forward toward his Execution. As he came againſt the Church of St. Andrew, they willed him to ask mercy of God, and of bleſſed St. Mary, and of St. Juſtice. I ask mercy, ſaid he, of God, and his Juſtice, but the Virgin, bleſſed St. Mary, I never offended, nor did that thing for the which I ſhould ask her mercy. From thence he paſſed forward to the Church of St. Legia, preaching ſtill as he went. Then ſpake one of the Souldiers to the Driver or Carter, willing him to drive apace, for here is preaching, ſaid he, enough. To whom ſaid Aymund, He that is of God, heareth the Word of God, &c. In paſſing by a certain Image of our Lady, great offence was taken againſt him, becauſe he always called upon Chriſt Jeſus only, and made no mention of her. Whereupon he lifted up his Voice to God, praying that he would never ſuffer him to invocate any other, ſaving him alone. Coming to the place where he ſhould ſuffer, he was tumbled out of the Cart upon the ground, teſtifying to the Magiſtrates and to the People ſtanding by, that he died for the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, and for his Word. More he would have ſpoken, but he could not be ſuffered, by the tumultuous vexing of the Officers, crying, Diſpatch him, diſpatch him, let him not ſpeak. Then he ſpeaking a few words ſoftly in the ear of a little Carmelite whom he had converted, was bid to ſtep up to the Stage. Where the People beginning to give a little audience, thus he ſaid; O Lord, make haſte to help me, tarry not, do not deſpiſe the Works of thy Hands: And you, my Brethren, that be Students and Scholars, I exhort you to ſtudy and learn the Goſpel: for the Word of God abideth for ever: labour to know the Will of God, and fear not them that kill the Body, but have no power upon your Souls: And after that, my Fleſh, ſaid he, repugneth marvellouſly againſt the Spirit, but ſhortly I ſhall caſt it away. My good Maſters, I beſeech ye pray for me. O Lord my God, into thy hands I commend my Soul. As he was oft repeating the ſame, the Hangman took and haled him upon the ſteps in ſuch ſort, that he ſtrangled him. And thus that bleſſed Saint gave up his life; whoſe Body afterward was with fire conſumed.

William Huſſon an Apothecary at Roan, Anno 1544.

William Huſſon Apothecary coming from Blois to Roan, was lodged with a certain Widow in the Suburbs of the City, who asking of her, at what time the Council or Parliament did riſe; ſhe ſaid at ten of the Clock. About which time and hour he went to the Palace, and there ſcattered certain Books concerning Chriſtian Doctrine, and the abuſe of Mens Traditions.

The high Court of Roan.

Whereat the Council was ſo moved, that they commanded all the Gates of the City to be locked, and diligent ſearch to made in all Inns and Hoſtles, to find out the Author. Then the Widow told of the party which was there, and asked of the riſing of the Council, and ſhortly upon the ſame took his horſe and rod away. Then were Poſts ſet out through all quarters, ſo that the ſaid William was taken by the way riding to Diepe, and brought again to Roan. Who being there examined, declared his Faith boldly, and how he came of purpoſe to diſperſe thoſe Books in Roan, and went to do the like at Diepe.

The boldneſs of a conſtant Martyr.

The Week enſuing he was condemned to be burnt alive. After the Sentence given, he was brought in a Cart, accompanied with a Doctor, a Carmelite Frier, before the great Church, who putting a Torch into his hand required him to do homage to the Image of our Lady, which becauſe he refuſed to do, his Tongue was cut out. The Frier then making a Sermon, when he ſpake any thing of the Mercies of God, the ſaid William hearkned to him, but when he ſpake of the merits of Saints, and other Dreams, he turned away his head. The Frier looking upon the countenance of Huſſon, lift up his hand to Heaven, ſaying with great Exclamation, That he was damned, and was poſſeſſed with a Devil. When the Frier had ceaſed his Sermon, this godly Huſſon had his hands and feet bound behind his back, and with a pully was lifted up into the Air, and when the fire was kindled, he was let down into the flame, where the bleſſed Martyr with a ſmiling and chearful countenance looked up to Heaven, never moving nor ſtirring till he let down his head, and gave up his Spirit. All the people there preſent were not a little aſtonied thereat, and were in divers opinions, ſome ſaying that he had a Devil; others maintained the contrary, ſaying, if he had a Devil, he ſhould have fallen into deſpair.

These fourteen dwelt at Melda a City in France, ten miles from Paris, where William Briconatus being their Biſhop, did much good, brought to them the light of the Goſpel, and reformed the Church. Who being ſtraitly examined for the ſame, relented: but yet theſe with many other remained conſtant; who after the burning of James Pavane before-mentioned, and ſeeing Superſtition to grow more and more, began to congregate in Mangin's houſe, and to ſet up a Church to themſelves, after the Example of the French Church in Strausburgh. For their Miniſter they choſe Peter Clerk: Firſt, they beginning with twenty or thirty, did grow in ſhort time to three or four hundred. Whereupon the matter being known to the Senate of Paris, the Chamber was beſet where they were, and they taken. Of whom ſixty two Men and Women were bound and brought to Paris, ſinging Pſalms, eſpecially the Pſalm ſeventy and nine. To theſe it was chiefly objected, that they being Lay-men would miniſter the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of the Lord.

Fourteen bleſſed Martyrs at Meaux.

A French Church ſet up at Meaux

Of theſe ſixty two, fourteen chiefly did ſtand faſt, which were condemned, and racked to confeſs moe of their Fellows: but they uttered none: the reſt were ſcourged and baniſhed the Country. Theſe fourteen were ſent to ſundry Monaſteries to be converted: but that would not be. Then they being ſent in a Cart to Melda, or Meaux to be burned; by the way, three miles from Paris, a certain Weaver of Couberon by chance meeting them, cried to them aloud, bidding them to be of good cheer, and to cleave faſt unto the Lord: who alſo was taken, and bound with them in the Cart. Coming to the place of Execution, which was before Mangin's houſe, it was told them, That they which would be confeſſed, ſhould not have their tongues cut out, the other ſhould. Of whom ſeven there were, which to ſave their tongues, confeſſed; other ſeven would not. Of the firſt was Steven Mangin, who having his tongue firſt cut, notwithſtanding ſpake ſo that he might be underſtood, ſaying thrice, The Lord's Name be bleſſed. As they were in burning, the people ſung Pſalms. The Prieſts ſeeing that, would alſo ſing their Songs; O ſalutaris hoſtia, and Salve Regina, while the Sacrifice of theſe holy Martyrs was finiſhed. Their Wives being compelled to ſee their Husbands in torments, were after put in Priſon; from whence they being promiſed to be let go, if they would ſay that their Husbands were damned, refuſed ſo to ſay.

Peter Chapot at Paris, An. 1546.

John Andre Bookſeller, promoter.

Peter Chapot firſt was a Corrector to a Printer in Paris. After he had been at Geneva, to do good to the Church of Chriſt, like a good Man he came with Books of the holy Scripture into France, and diſperſed them abroad unto the faithful. Which great Zeal of his cauſed him to be apprehended of John Andre, which was the common Promoter to Liſet the Preſident, and to the Sorboniſts.

Doctors Sorboniſts, M. Nicolas Clerici, Doctor of Divinity.

This good Chapot being taken and brought before the Commiſſaries, rendred promptly an account of his Faith: unto whom he exhibited a Supplication, or Writing, wherein he learnedly informed the Judges to do their Office uprightly. Then were three Doctors of Sorbone aſſigned, Nicholas Clerici, John Picard, and Nicholas Maillard, to diſpute with him, who when when they could find no advantage, but rather ſhame at his hands, they were angry with the Judges for letting them diſpute with Hereticks.

Perſecut. | Martyrs, and the cauſes of their martyrdom.

Dr. John Picard.

This done, the Judges conſulting together upon his Condemnation could not agree: ſo that Chapot (as it ſeemed) might have eſcaped, had not a wicked perſon, the Reporter of the Proceſs ſought and wrought his Condemnation, which Condemnation was at length concluded thus, That he ſhould be burned quick, only the cutting off of his tongue was pardoned. The Doctor appointed to be at his Execution was Maillard, with whom he was greatly incumbred. For this Frier called upon him ſtill not to ſpeak to the People, but he deſired him that he might pray. Then he bad him pray to our Lady, and confeſs her to be his Advocate. He confeſſed that ſhe was a bleſſed Virgin, and recited the Lord's Prayer and the Creed, and was about to ſpeak of the Maſs, but Maillard would not let him, making haſte to his Execution, and ſaid, unleſs he would ſay Ave Maria, he ſhould be burnt quick. Then Chapot prayed, O Jeſus Son of David, have mercy upon me. Maillard then bad him ſay, Jeſus Maria, and ſo he ſhould be ſtrangled. Chapot again excuſed, that he was ſo weak that he could not ſpeak. Say, ſaid Maillard, Jeſus Maria, or elſe thou ſhalt be burned quick. As Chapot was thus ſtriving with the Frier, ſuddenly as it hapned, Jeſus Maria eſcaped out of his mouth, but he by and by repreſſing himſelf, O God, ſaid he, what have I done! pardon me, O Lord, to thee only have I ſinned. Then Maillard commanded the Cord to be pluckt about his Neck to ſtrangle him: notwithſtanding yet he felt ſomething the fire. After all things done, Maillard all full of anger, went to the Council-houſe, called La Chamber Ardante, declaring what an Uproar had there almoſt hapned amongſt the People; ſaying that he would complain upon the Judges, for ſuffering thoſe Hereticks to have their tongues. Whereupon immediately a Decree was made, that all which were to be burned, unleſs they recanted at the fire, ſhould have their tongues cut off. Which Law diligently afterward was obſerved. Ex Johanne Criſpino lib. 6.

Saintinus Nivet at Paris, Anno 1546.

After the burning of thoſe fourteen, whoſe Names be deſcribed before, this Saintinus (which was a lame Cripple) with his Wife removed out of Meaux to Montheliard, where when he had continued a while in ſafe liberty of Religion, and ſaw himſelf there to do no good, but to be a burden to the Church, caſt in his mind to return home to Meaux again, and ſo did: where at laſt as he was ſelling certain ſmall Wares in the Fair, he was there known and apprehended. Whereof when Information was given, he being examined, at the firſt confeſſed all, and more than they were willing to hear. In the time of this Inquiſition, as they were examining him of certain Points of Religion, and asked him whether he would ſtand to that he ſaid, or not? He gave this Anſwer again, worthy to be regiſtred in all Men's hearts, ſaying, And I ask you again, Lord Judges, dare you be ſo bold to deny that is ſo plain and manifeſt by the open words of the Scripture? So little regard had he to ſave his own Life, that he deſired the Judges both at Meaux, and at Paris, for God's ſake, that they would rather take care of their own Lives and Souls, and to conſider how much innocent Blood they ſpilled daily in fighting againſt Chriſt Jeſus and his Goſpel.

In which Priſon he was kept in Bands and Fetters a long ſpace, where he ſaw almoſt no light. At length being called for before the Senate, and his Sentence given to have his Tongue cut out, and to be burned alive, his Sachel of Books hanging about his Neck; O Lord, ſaid he, is the World in blindneſs and darkneſs ſtill? for he thought, being in Priſon ſo long, that the World had been altered from its old darkneſs to better Knowledge. This Octovien as he was a great Occupier in all Faires and Countries of France, and well known both in Court and elſewhere; ſo was he a ſingular honeſt Man of great integrity, and alſo a favourer of God's Word. Who being at his Hoſts houſe at Lyons, rebuked the filthy Talk, and ſuperſtitious Behaviour, which there he heard and ſaw. Wherefore the Hoſt bearing to him a grudge, chanced to have certain Talk with Gabriel of Sacconnex Preſenteur, concerning the Riches, and a ſumptuous Coller ſet with rich Jewels of this Octovien.

Gabriel of Sacconex preſenteur.

Thus theſe two conſulting together, did ſuborn a certain perſon to borrow of him a certain Sum of Crowns; which becauſe Octovien refuſed to lend, the other cauſed him to be apprehended for Hereſie, thinking thereby to make Attachment of his Goods. But ſuch order was taken by Blondel's Friends, that they were fruſtrate of their purpoſe. Then Blondell being examined of his Faith, gave a plain and full Confeſſion of that Doctrine, which he had learned: for the which he was committed to Priſon, where he did much good to the Priſoners there.

For ſome that were in debt, he paid their Creditors and looſed them out. To ſome he gave Meat, to other Raiment. At length, through the importune Perſwaſions of his Parents and Friends, he gave over and changed his Confeſſion. Notwithſtanding the Preſenteur, not leaving ſo, appealed him up to the High Court of Paris. There Octovien being asked again touching his Faith, which of his two Confeſſions he would ſtick to? he being before admoniſhed of his Fall, and of the Offence given thereby to the Faithful, ſaid he would live and die in his firſt Confeſſion, which he defended to be conſonant to the Verity of God's Word. A poor Tailor of Paris, dwelling in the ſtreet of St. Anthony at Paris, An. 1549.

Henry the ſecond French King.

A godly Tailor in Paris, Martyr.

Amongſt many other godly Martyrs that ſuffered in France, the Story of this poor Tailor is not the leaſt nor worſt to be remembred. His Name is not yet ſought out in the French Stories for lack of diligence in thoſe Writers, more is the pity. The Story is this: Not long after the Coronation of Henry the ſecond, the French King, at whoſe coming into Paris divers good Martyrs were there brought out, and burned for a ſpectacle, as is aboveſaid: A certain poor Taylor, who then dwelt not far from the King's Palace, in the Street bearing the Name of St. Anthony, was apprehended of a certain Officer in the King's houſe, for that upon a certain holy day he followed his Occupation, and did work for his living: Before he was had to Priſon, the Officer asked him, why he did labour and work, giving no Obſervation to the Holy-day?

An Officer of the Kings houſe.

Petrus Caſtellanus, Biſhop of Machonenſis.

To whom he anſwered, That he was a poor Man, living only upon his labour: and as for the day, he knew no other but only the Sunday, wherein he might not lawfully work for the neceſſity of his living. Then the Officer began to ask of him many Queſtions: whereunto the poor Tailor did ſo anſwer, that eftſoons he was clapt in Priſon. After that, the Officer coming into the Court to ſhew what good Service he had done for the holy Church, declared to certain Eſtates, how he had taken a Lutheran working upon a Holy-day; ſhewing that he had ſuch anſwers of him, that he commanded him to Priſon. When the Rumor hereof was noiſed in the Kings Chamber, through the motion of them which were about the King, the poor Man was ſent for to appear, that the King might have the hearing of him.

The Tailor impriſoned for breaking a piece of an Holy-day.

Whereupon the King's Chamber being voided, ſave only a few of the chiefeſt Peers remaining about the King, the ſimple Tailor was brought. The King ſitting in his Chair, commanded Petrus Caſtellanus, Biſhop of Maſcon, (a Man very fit for ſuch Inquiſitions) to queſtion with him. The Tailor being entred, and nothing appalled at the King's Majeſty, after his Reverence done unto the Prince, gave thanks to God, that he had ſo greatly dignified him being ſuch a wretch, as to bring him where he might teſtifie his Truth before ſuch a mighty Prince. Then Caſtellanus entring talk, began to reaſon with him touching the greateſt and chiefeſt matter of Religion. Whereunto the Tailor without fear, or any halting in his ſpeech, with preſent Audacity, Wit, and Memory, ſo anſwerd for the ſincere Doctrine and ſimple truth of God's Goſpel, as was both convenient to the purpoſe, and alſo to his Queſtions aptly and fitly correſpondent.

The Tailor brought before the King.

The preſent boldneſs of the Tailor anſwering for his Religion before the King.

Notwithſtanding, the Nobles there preſent, with cruel Taunts and Rebukes, did what they could to daſh him out of Countenance. Yet all this terrified not him, but with Boldneſs of heart, and free liberty of Speech, he defended his Cauſe, or rather the Cauſe of Chriſt the Lord, neither flattering with their Perſons, nor fearing their threats; which was to them all a ſingular Admiration, to behold that ſimple poor Artificer to ſtand ſo firm and bold, anſwering before a King, to thoſe Queſtions propounded againſt him. Whereat when the King ſeemed to muſe with himſelf, as one ſomewhat amazed, and which might ſoon have been induced at that preſent to further Knowledge, the egregious Biſhop and other Courtiers ſeeing the King in ſuch a muſe, ſaid, he was an obſtinate and ſtubborn perſon, obſtirmed in his own opinion, and therefore was not to be marvelled at, but to be ſent to the Judges, and to be puniſhed: and therefore leſt he ſhould trouble the Ears of the ſaid Henry the King, he was commanded again to the hands of the Officer, that his Cauſe might be informed: and ſo, within few days after, he was condemned by the high Steward of the King's Houſe, to be burned alive. And leſt any deep conſideration of that excellent Fortitude of that poor Man might further peradventure pierce the King's mind, the Cardinals and Biſhops were ever in the King's Ear, telling him, That theſe Lutherans were nothing elſe, but ſuch as carry vain ſmoke in their Mouths, which being put to the fire, would ſoon vaniſh. Wherefore the King was appointed himſelf to be preſent at his Execution, which was ſharp and cruel, before the Church of Mary the Virgin; where it pleaſed God to give ſuch ſtrength and courage to his Servant, in ſuffering his Martyrdom, that the beholding thereof did more aſtoniſh the King, than all the other did before. *Ex Johan. John Godeau, Gabriel Beraundine, Martyrs.

Theſe two were of the Church of Geneva. Afterward for their friendly admoniſhing a certain Prieſt, which in his Sermon had abuſed the Name of God, they were taken at Chamberiace. Godeau ſtanding to his Confeſſion, was burned. Gabriel, though he began a litle to ſhrink for fear of the Torments, yet being confirmed by the conſtant death of Godeau, recovered again, and ſtanding likewiſe to his Confeſſion, firſt had his Tongue cut out. Who notwithſtanding, through God's might, did ſpeak ſo as he might be underſtood: whereupon the Hangman being accuſed for not cutting off his Tongue, rightly, ſaid that he could not ſtop him of his ſpeech. And ſo theſe two, after they had confirmed many in God's Truth, gave their Life for Chriſt's Goſpel. Ibid.

Aubertus Conciliarius.

This Thomas a young Man of the age of eighteen years, coming from Geneva to Paris, rebuked there a Man for ſwearing. For the which cauſe he being ſuſpected for a Lutheran, was followed and watched whither he went, and was taken and brought before the Council of Paris, and put in Priſon, where he was racked, and miſerably tormented, to the intent he ſhould either change his opinion, or confeſs others of his Profeſſion. His Torments and Rackings were ſo ſore through the ſetting on of Maillard and other Sorboniſts, that the ſight thereof made Aubertus one of the Council, a cruel and vehement Enemy againſt the Goſpel, to turn his back and weep. The young Man, when he had made the Tormentors weary with racking, and yet would utter none, at laſt was had to Maulbert place in Paris, to be burned; where he being in the fire, was pluckt up again upon the Gibbet, and asked whether he would turn? To whom he ſaid, that he was in his way towards God, and therefore deſired them to let him go. Thus this glorious Martyr remaining inexpugnable, glorified the Lord with conſtant Confeſſion of his Truth. Ibid.

Claud. Monerius, martyr.

The Governour of Lions.

The Official of the Arch-deacon of Lions.

This Man being well inſtructed in the Knowledg of God's Word, for the which he was alſo driven from Avernia, came to Lions, and there taught Children. He hearing of the Lord Preſidents coming to the City, went to give warning to a certain familiar Friend of his, and ſo conducted him out of the Town. In returning again to comfort the Man's Wife and Children, he was taken in his houſe: and ſo he confeſſing that which he knew to be true, and ſtanding to that which he confeſſed, after much Afflictions in Priſons and Dungeons, was condemned and burned at Lions. He was noted to be ſo gentle and mild of Conditions, and conſtant withal, and alſo learned, that certain of the Judges could not forbear weeping at his death.

The ſaid Monerius being in Priſon wrote certain Letters, but one eſpecially very comfortable to all the faithful, which, the Lord willing, in the end of theſe Hiſtories ſhall be inſerted. He wrote alſo the Queſtions and Interrogatories of the Official, with his Anſwers likewiſe to the ſame; which ſummarily we have here contracted, as followeth.

The

The Official.

The Sacrament. What believe you of the Sacrament? is the Body of Chriſt in the Bread, or no?

The Martyr.

I worſhip Jeſus Chriſt in Heaven, ſitting at the right hand of God the Father.

The Official.

What ſay you by Purgatory?

The Martyr.

Forſomuch as there is no place of Mercy after this life, therefore no need there is of any Purgation; but neceſſary it is that we be purged before we paſs hence.

The Official.

Supremacy. Of the Pope what think you?

The Martyr.

I ſay, he is a Biſhop as other Biſhops are, if he be a true Follower of St. Peter.

The Official.

Vows. What ſay you of Vows?

The Martyr.

No Man can vow to God ſo much, but the Law requireth much more than he can vow.

The Official.

Praying to Saints. Are not Saints to be invocated?

The Martyr.

They cannot pray without Faith, and therefore it is in vain to call upon them. And again, God hath appointed his Angels about us, to miniſter in our neceſſities.

The Official.

Is it not good to ſalute the bleſſed Virgin with Ave Maria?

The Martyr.

When ſhe was on this Earth ſhe had need of the Angels greeting; for then ſhe had need of Salvation, as well as other: but now ſhe is ſo bleſſed, that no more bleſſing can be wiſhed unto her.

The Official.

Are not Images to be had?

The Martyr.

For that the Nature of Man is ſo prone to Idolatry, ever occupied and fixed in thoſe things which lie before his Eyes, rather than upon thoſe which are not ſeen; Images therefore are not to be ſet before Chriſtians. You know nothing is to be adored, but that which is not ſeen with Eyes, that is, God alone, which is a Spirit, and him we muſt worſhip only in Spirit and Truth.

The Official.

What ſay you by the canonical or ordinary hours for prayer?

The Martyr.

To hours and times of Prayer we ought not to be tied. But whenſoever God's Spirit doth move us, or when any neceſſity driveth us, then ought we to pray.

Then the Official asked, What he thought of holy Oyl, Salt, with ſuch other like? To whom the Martyr anſwered, That all theſe things were a meer * Maranatiſmus, that is, ſavoured of the Law of Maranorum, and of the Superſtition of the Jews.

* Maranatha is an Hebrew word mentioned, 1. Cor. 16. and ſignifieth Curſe and Malediction to the loſs of all that a Man hath, and thereof cometh Maraniſmus: vid. Nic. Lyr. Renat. Poy[illegible] Martyr.

they were brought to the Stake, the young Man firſt going up, began to weep. The Maſter fearing leſt he would give over, ran to him, and he was comforted, and they began to ſing. As they were in the fire, the Maſter ſtanding upright to the Stake, ſhifted the fire from him to his Servant, being more careful for him than for himſelf: and when he ſaw him dead, he bowed down into the flame, and ſo expired. Ex Criſp. & aliis.

But firſt he going to ſee his Wives Friends at Maſcon, there, as he was coming away out of the Town, was taken upon the Bridge, with all his Company: and in the end he willing the VVomen and the reſt of the Company to lay the fault in him, for bringing them out, was ſentenced to be burned; notwithſtanding the Lords of Bern ſent their Heraulds to ſave his Life, and alſo that the Official declared him to be an honeſt Man, and to hold nothing, but agreeing to the Scriptures. *Ex Johan. Five Students, Martyrs. Martial Alba. Petrus Scriba. Bernard Seguine. Peter Navihere. Charles Faber.

These five Students, after they had remained in the Univerſity of Lauſanna a certain time, conſulted amongſt themſelves being all Frenchmen, to return home every one to his Country, to the intent they might inſtruct their Parents and other their Friends in ſuch Knowledge as the Lord had given them. So taking their Journey from Lauſanna, firſt they came to Geneva, where they remained a while. From thence they went to Lions, where they, ſitting at the Table of one that met them by the way, and deſired them home to his houſe, were apprehended and led to Priſon; where they continued a whole year, that is, from the firſt day of May to the ſixteenth of the ſame Month again. As they were learned and well exerciſed in the Scriptures, ſo every one of them exhibited ſeverally a learned Confeſſion of his Faith; and with great dexterity, through the power of the Lord's Spirit, they confounded the Friers, with whom they diſputed; eſpecially Peter Scribe or Scrivener, and Seguine.

They were examined ſunderly of the Sacrament of the Lord's Body, of Purgatory, of Confeſſion and Invocation, of Free-will, and of the Supremacy, &c. Although they proved their cauſe by good Scripture, and refuted their Adverſaries in reaſoning, yet right being overcome by might, Sentence was given, and they burned in the ſaid Town of Lions. Being ſet upon the Cart, they began to ſing Pſalms. As they paſſed by the Market-place, one of them with a loud voice ſaluted the People with the words of the laſt Chapter to the Hebrews; The God of Peace which brought again from death the great Paſtor of the Sheep in the Blood of the eternal Teſtament, &c. Coming to the place, firſt the two youngeſt one after another went up upon the heap of Wood to the ſtake, and there were faſtned, and ſo after them the reſt. the eldeſt was the laſt; who likwiſe being ſtripped of his Clothes, and brought to the Stake, deſired this Petition of the Governour, which was, That he might go about his Fellows tied at the Stake, and kiſs them. Which being granted, he went and kiſſed every one, ſaying, Farewel my Brother. Likewiſe the other four, following the like Example, bad each one, Farewel my Brother. With that, fire was commanded to be put unto them. The Hangman had tied a Rope about all their Necks, thinking firſt to ſtrangle them; but their Faces being ſmeared with Fat and Brimſtone, the Rope was burnt before they were ſtrangled. So the bleſſed Martyrs, in the midſt of the fire, ſpake one to another to be of good cheer, and ſo departed. Ex Criſp. Pant. &c.

Their Examinations briefly touched.

The Frier.

Supremacy. Thou ſaieſt, Friend, in thy Confeſſion, that the Pope is not Supreme head of the Church: I will prove the contrary.

The Pope is Succeſſor of St. Peter:

Ergo, he is Supreme Head of the Church.

The Martyr.

I deny firſt your Antecedent.

The Frier.

The Pope ſitteth in the place of St. Peter:

Ergo, he is the Succeſſor of St. Peter.

The Martyr.

The head of the Church. I will grant neither of both: firſt, becauſe that he, which ſucceedeth in the room of Peter ought to preach and teach as Peter did; which thing the Pope doth not. Secondly, altho he did ſo preach as Peter did, he might well follow the Example of Peter, yet ſhould he not therefore be the Head of the Church, but a member only of the ſame. The Head of Men and Angels, whom God hath appointed, is Chriſt alone, ſaith St. Paul. Epheſ. 1.

The Frier.

Although Chriſt be the Head of the whole Church Militant and Triumphant, yet his Vicar here in Earth is left to ſupply his room.

The Martyr.

Not ſo, for the power of his Divinity being ſo great, to fill all things, he needeth no Vicar or Deputy to ſupply his abſence.

The Frier.

I will prove, that although Chriſt be King both of Heaven and Earth, yet he hath here in Earth many Vicars under him, to govern his People.

The Martyr.

Regiment civil. It is one thing to rule in the Civil State, another thing to rule ſpiritually. For in civil Regiment we have Kings and Princes ordained of God by the Scriptures, for the Obſervation of publick Society: In the Spiritual Regiment and Kingdom of the Church it is not ſo. Regiment Spiritual.

Then another Frier.

Thou ſaieſt St. Peter is not the Head of the Church, I will prove he is.

Our Lord ſaid to Peter, Thou ſhalt be called Cephas: which Cephas is as much to ſay in Latin, as Head:

Ergo, Peter is Head of the Church.

The Martyr.

John 1. Cephas. Where find you that Interpretation? St. John in his firſt Chapter doth expound it otherwiſe: Thou ſhalt be called Cephas, that is as much (ſaith he) as Petrus, or Stone.

Then the Judg Vilardus, calling for a New Teſtament, turned to the place, and found it to be ſo. Whereupon the Frier was utterly daſhed and ſtood mute.

The Frier.

Luke 10. Thou ſaieſt in thy Confeſſion, that a Man hath no Free-will, I will prove it. It is written in the Goſpel, how a Man going from Jeruſalem to Jericho fell among Thieves, and was ſpoiled, maimed, and left half dead, &c. Thomas of Aquine expoundeth this Parable to mean Free-will, which he ſaith, is maimed; yet not ſo, but that ſome power remaineth in Man to work.

The Martyr.

This Interpretation I do refuſe, and deny.

The Frier.

What, thinkeſt thou thy ſelf better learned than St. Thomas?

Perſecut. | Martyrs, and the cauſes of their Martyrdom.

The Martyr.

I do arrogate no ſuch Learning unto my ſelf. But this I ſay, this Parable is not ſo to be expounded, but is ſet forth for example of the Lord, to commend to us Charity towards our Neighbour, how one ſhould help another.

The Frier.

Thou ſaieſt in thy Confeſſion, that we are juſtified only by Faith, I will prove that we are juſtified by Works.

By our Works we do merit: Juſtification.

Ergo, by Works we are juſtified.

The Martyr.

I deny the Antecedent.

The Frier.

St. Paul, Hebrews the laſt, ſaith, Forget not to do good, and to diſtribute unto others: Talibus enim victimis promeretur Deus: That is, For by ſuch Oblations God is merited.

We merit God by our Works:

Ergo, we are juſtified by our Works.

The Martyr.

The words of St. Paul in that place be otherwiſe, and are thus to be tranſlated: Talibus enim victimis delectatur Deus: That is, With ſuch Sacrifices God is delighted, or is well pleaſed.

The Judge Vilard.

Vilard the Judg turned the Book, and found the place even to be ſo as the Priſoner ſaid: Here the Friers were marvellouſly appalled and troubled in their minds: of whom one asked then, What he thought of Confeſſion?

The Martyr.

Confeſſion. To whom the Martyr anſwered, That Confeſſion only is to be made to God, and that thoſe places which they alledg for Auricular Confeſſion, out of St. James and other, are to be expounded of brotherly Reconciliation between one another, and not of Confeſſion in the Prieſt's Ear. And here again the Friers ſtood, having nothing to ſay againſt it.

A black Frier.

Tranſubſtantiation. Doſt thou not believe the Body of Chriſt to be locally and corporally in the Sacrament? I will prove the ſame: Jeſus Chriſt taking Bread, ſaid, This is my Body.

Ergo, it is truly his Body.

The Martyr.

The Verb (eſt) is not to be taken here Subſtantively in his own proper ſignification, as ſhewing the Nature of a thing in Subſtance, as in Philoſophy it is wont to be taken; but as noting the property of a thing ſignifying, after the manner and Phraſe of the Scripture; where one thing is wont to be called by the name of another, ſo as the Sign is called by the Name of the thing ſignified, &c. So is Circumciſion called by the Name of the Covenant, and yet is not the Covenant. So the Lamb hath the Name of the Paſſover, yet is not the ſame. In which two Sacraments of the old Law, ye ſee the Verb (eſt) to be taken, not as ſhewing the ſubſtance of being, but the property of being in the thing that is ſpoken of: And ſo likewiſe in the Sacrament of the new Law.

The Frier.

Sacraments give no Grace. The Sacraments of the old Law, and of the new do differ greatly; for theſe give Grace, ſo did not the other.

The Martyr.

Neither the Sacraments of the old, nor of the new Law, do give Grace, but ſhew him unto us which giveth Grace indeed. The Miniſter giveth the Sacraments, but Jeſus Chriſt giveth Grace by the operation of the Holy Ghoſt: of whom it is ſaid, This is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghoſt, &c.

The Frier.

The Fathers of the Old Teſtament, were they not Partakers of the ſame Grace and Promiſes with us?

The Martyr.

Yes, for St. Paul ſaith, that the Fathers of the Old Teſtament did eat the ſame ſpiritual Meat, and did drink of the ſame ſpiritual Drink with us.

The Frier.

Jeſus Chriſt ſaith, John the ſixth, Your Fathers did eat Manna in the Deſert, and are dead.

Ergo, they were not Partakers of the ſame Grace with us in the New Teſtament.

The

K. Hen. 8. | Perſecut. | Martyrs, and the Cauſes of their Martyrdom.

The Martyr.

The true eating of Manna.

Chriſt here ſpeaketh of them, which did not eat that Manna with Faith, which was a type and figure of that Bread of Life that came from Heaven: and not of them which did eat the ſame with Faith, as Moſes, Aaron, Joſhua, Caleb, and ſuch others, who under the ſhadows of the Old Teſtament, did look for Chriſt to come. For ſo it is written of Abraham, That he ſaw the day of Chriſt, and rejoiced; not ſeeing it with his bodily eyes, but with the eyes of his Faith.

Here the doltiſh Doctor was at a ſtay, having nothing to ſay, but, Hear Friend, be not ſo hot, nor ſo haſty, tarry a while, tarry a while. At length, after his tarrying, this came out.

The Frier.

The Fathers of the Old Teſtament, how they were under the Law, and how they were under Grace.

I will prove that they of the Old Teſtament were not partakers of the ſame Grace with us. The Law (ſaith St. Paul) worketh anger; And they that are under the Law, are under Malediction: Ergo, they of the Old Law and Teſtament, were not partakers of the ſame Grace with us.

The Martyr.

St. Paul here proveth, That no Man by the Law can be juſtified, but that all Men are under the Anger and Curſe of God thereby, forſomuch as no Man performeth that which in the Law is comprehended; and therefore, we have need every Man to run to Chriſt, to be ſaved by Faith, ſeeing no Man can be ſaved by the Law. For whoſoever truſteth to the Law, hoping to find juſtification thereby, and not by Chriſt only, the ſame remaineth ſtill under malediction: not becauſe the Law is curſed, or the times thereof under the Curſe; but becauſe of the weakneſs of our natures, which are not able to perform the Law.

The Frier.

St. Paul, Rom. 7. declareth in the Old Teſtament to be nothing but Anger and Threatnings, and in the New Teſtament to be Grace and Mercy, in theſe words where he ſaith, Wretched Man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death? The Grace of God by Jeſus Chriſt.

The Martyr.

St. Paul in this place neither meaneth nor ſpeaketh of the difference of times between the Old and the New Teſtament, but of the conflict between the fleſh and the ſpirit; ſo that, whereas the fleſh is ever rebelling againſt the ſpirit, yet the ſpiritual Man notwithſtanding, through the Faith of Chriſt, hath the Victory. Furthermore, the true tranſlation of that place hath not Gratia Dei, but Gratias ago Deo, per Jeſum Chriſtum, &c.

Primacius the Official.

The Sacrament.

The Official, ſeeing the Frier almoſt here at a point, ſet in, and ſaid, Thou lewd Heretick, doſt thou deny the bleſſed Sacrament?

The Martyr.

No Sir, but I embrace and reverence the Sacrament, ſo as it was inſtituted of the Lord, and left by his Apoſtles.

The Official.

Thou denieſt the Body of Chriſt to be in the Sacrament, and thou calleſt the Sacrament Bread.

The Martyr.

The Scripture teacheth us to ſeek the Body of Chriſt in Heaven, and not in Earth; where we read, Coloſſ. 3. If ye be riſen with Chriſt, ſeek not for the things which are upon the Earth: But for the things which are in Heaven, where Chriſt is ſitting at the right Hand of God, &c.

And whereas I affirm the Sacrament not to be the Body, but Bread, ſpeaking of Bread remaining in its own Subſtance, herein I do no other but as St. Paul doth, who, 1 Cor. 11. doth call it Bread likewiſe four or five times together.

The Frier.

Jeſus Chriſt ſaid, that he was the Bread of Life.

The Official.

Thou naughty Heretick, Jeſus Chriſt ſaid that he was a Vine, and a Door, &c. Where he is to be expounded to ſpeak figuratively. But the words of the Sacrament are not ſo to be expounded.

The Martyr.

Thoſe Teſtimonies which you alledg, make more for me than for you.

Perſecut. | Martyrs, and the Cauſes of their Martyrdom.

The Official.

What ſayeſt thou, lewd Heretick, is the Bread of the Lord's Supper, and the Bread that we eat at home, all one, and is there no difference between them?

The Martyr.

In Nature and Subſtance there is no difference, in quality and in uſe there is much difference. For the Bread of the Lord's Table, tho it be of the ſame nature and ſubſtance with the Bread that we eat at home, yet when it is applied to be a Sacrament, it taketh another quality, and is ſet before us to ſeal the Promiſe of our Spiritual and Eternal Life. And thus was the effect of their Examinations. Ex Criſp.

Petrus Bergerius, at Lions, Anno 1553.

Petrus Bergerius Martyr.

About the ſame time, when theſe five Students above ſpecified were apprehended, this Bergerius alſo was taken at Lions, and with them examined, and made alſo the like Confeſſion with them together, and ſhortly after them ſuffered the ſame Martyrdom. He had been before an Occupier or Merchant of Wines. He had Wife and Children at Geneva, to whom he wrote ſweet and comfortable Letters. In the Dungeon with him was a certain Thief and Malefactor, which had lain there the ſpace of 7 or 8 months. This Thief, for pain and torment, cried out of God, and curſed his Parents that begat him, being almoſt eaten up with Lice, miſerably handled, and fed with ſuch Bread as Dogs and Horſes had refuſed to eat. So it pleaſed the goodneſs of Almighty God, that through the teaching and prayer of this Bergerius, he was brought to repentance of himſelf, and knowledg of God, learning much comfort and patience by the Word of the Goſpel preached to him. Touching his Converſation, he wrote a ſweet Letter to thoſe five Students above mentioned, wherin he praiſeth God for them, and eſpecially for this Bergerius, declaring alſo in the ſame Letter, that the next day after that he had taken hold of the Goſpel, and framed himſelf to patience; according to the ſame, his Lice (which he could pluck out before no leſs than twenty at once betwixt his fingers) now were ſo gone from him, that he had not one. Furthermore, ſo the Alms of good Men was extended towards him; that he was fed with White-bread, and that which was very good: Such is the goodneſs of the Lord toward them that love and ſeek his Truth. The name of this Convert was John Chambone. Ex Epiſt. Joan. Chambone: Ex Criſp. Pantal. &c.

After whom followed Dyoniſe Peloquine, in the ſame ſteps of martyrdom, which was his Brother. This Dyoniſe had been ſometime a Monk, and changing his Weed, took a Wife, with whom he lived a certain ſpace at Geneva in godly Order and modeſty of Life. Coming afterward to Ville Franche, ſix miles from Lions, from thence he was had to Lions, where he remained in Priſon ten months. From thence he was reverſed to Ville Franche, where he was condemned, degraded, and burned. The Articles whereupon he was condemned, were, for the Maſs, the Sacrament, Auricular Confeſſion, Purgatory, the Virgin Mary, and the Pope's Supremacy. He ſuffered in the year of our Lord 1553, Septemb. 11. In his Martyrdom, ſuch patience and fortitude God gave, that when he was half burned, yet he never ceaſed holding up his hands to Heaven, and calling upon the Lord, to the great admiration of them that looked on. *Ex Jo. Upon divers Articles he was examined, as invocation of Saints, and of the Virgin Mary, Free-will, Merits, and good Works, Auricular Confeſſion, Faſting, the Lord's Supper. In his ſecond examination, they enquired of him, and alſo of the other two, touching Vows, the Sacraments the Maſs, and the Vicar of Chriſt. The blaſphemies of the Papiſts.

The Lieutenant, among other blaſphemies, had theſe words; Of the four Evangeliſts, but two were pure, Matthew and John; the other two, Mark and Luke, were but gatherers out of the other. The Epiſtles of St. Paul, but that the Doctors of the Church had authorized them, he would otherwiſe eſteem them no better than the Fables of Æſop.

Note, what Opinion the Papiſts have of the Law of God, when it ſtandeth not with their Law.

Item, The ſaid Lieutenant ſaid to Mr. Cope's Maid, ſpeaking ſomewhat of the Law, Curſed be the God of that Law.

When the Sentence of Condemnation was given againſt theſe three, they were ſo glad thereof, that they went out praiſing God, and ſinging Pſalms. Which troubled the Judges ſore, to ſee them ſo little to eſteem their death: inſomuch that the Lieutenant cauſed them to be made to hold their peace, ſaying, Shall theſe vile Abjects ſo vaunt themſelves againſt the whole State of the Realm? Then as Marſac was going in a Corner by to pray, one of the Souldiers would not ſuffer him. To whom he ſaid, That little time which we have will you not give us to pray? With that the Souldier being aſtoniſhed went his way.

As they ſhould be brought out of Priſon to the Stake, the Hangman tied a Rope about the Necks of the other two. Marſac ſeeing himſelf to be ſpared becauſe of his Order and Degree, called by the way to the Lieutenant, that he might alſo have one of the precious Chains about his Neck, in honour of his Lord; the which being granted, ſo were theſe three bleſſed Martyrs committed to the fire, where they with meek patience yielded up their lives to the hands of the Lord, in teſtimony of his Goſpel. *Ex Criſp. Mattheus Dimonetus, Merchant, at Lions. Anno 1553.

M. Dimonetus, martyr.

This Merchant firſt lived a viſcious and deteſtable life, full of much corruption and filthineſs. He was alſo a ſecret Enemy, and ſearcher out of good Men, when and where they convented together. Who being called notwithſtanding, by the grace of God, to the knowledg and ſavour of his Word, ſhortly after was taken by the Lieutenant, and Buatherius the Official, in his own houſe at Lions, and ſo after a little examination was ſent to Priſon. Being examined by the Inquiſitor and the Officials, he refuſed to yield any anſwer to them, knowing no authority they had upon him, but only to the Lieutenant.

The Lieutenant of Lions.

Trimacius Official.

His Anſwers were, that he believed all that the holy univerſal Church of Chriſt did truly believe, and all the Articles of the Creed. To the Article of the Holy Catholick Church, being bid to add alſo Romanum, that is, the Church of Rome, that he refuſed. Advocates he knew none, but Chriſt alone. Purgatory he knew none, but the Croſs and Paſſion of the Lamb, which purgeth the ſins of all the World. True Confeſſion, he ſaid, ought to be made not to the Prieſt once a year, but every day to God, and to ſuch whom we have offended. The eating of the Fleſh and Blood of Chriſt he took to be ſpiritual: and the Sacrament of the Fleſh and Blood of Chriſt to be eaten with the mouth, and that Sacrament to be Bread and Wine under the name and ſignification of the Body and Blood of Chriſt; the Maſs not to be inſtituted of Chriſt, being a thing contrary to his Word and Will. For the Head of the Church he knew none but only Chriſt. Being in Priſon, he had great conflicts with the infirmity of his Fleſh, but eſpecially with the temptation of his Parents, Brethren, and Kinſfols, and the ſorrow of his Mother: nevertheleſs, the Lord ſo aſſiſted him, that he endured to the end. At his burning he ſpake much to the People, and was heard with great attention. He ſuffered July 15. 1553. Ex Criſp.

For the which the Dean cauſed him to be ſent to Eureux to the Priſon of the Biſhop. The ſtory of this *Will. Sim. Laloe, martyr.

Simon Laloe a Spectaclemaker, coming from Geneva into France for certain buſineſs, was laid hand of by the Bailiff of Dyion. Three things were demanded of him. Firſt, Where he dwelt. Secondly, What was his Faith. Thirdly, What Fellows he knew of his Religion. His dwelling, he ſaid, was at Geneva. His Religion was ſuch as was then uſed at Geneva. As for his Fellows, he ſaid, he knew none, but only them of the ſame City of Geneva, where his dwelling was. When they could get of him no other anſwer but this, with all their racking and torments, they proceeded to his Sentence, and purſued the execution of the ſame, which was Nov. 21. 1553.

The Bailiff or Steward of the City Dyion.

The Executioner, who was named James Silveſter, ſeeing the great faith and conſtancy of that heavenly Martyr, was ſo compuncted with repentance, and fell in ſuch deſpair of himſelf, that they had much ado, with all the promiſes of the Goſpel, to recover any comfort in him. At laſt, through the Mercy of Chriſt, he was comforted, and converted; and ſo he with all his Family removed to the Church at Geneva. Ex Jo. Criſp.

As they brought him to the Stake, firſt they put a gag or piece of wood in his mouth, which they bound-bound with cords to the hinder part of his head, ſo hard, that his mouth on both ſides guſhed out with blood, and disfigured his face monſtrouſly. By the way they paſſed by an Hoſpital, where they willed him to worſhip the Picture of St. Mary ſtanding at the Gate: but he turned his back as well as he could, and would not. For the which the blind People were ſo grieved, that they would have fallen upon him. After he was brought to the fire, they ſo ſmeared his body with fat and brimſtone, that at the firſt taking of the fire, all his skin was parched, and the inward parts not touched. With that the cords burſt which were about his mouth, whereby his voice was heard in the midſt of the flame, praiſing the Lord, and ſo the bleſſed Martyr departed. Ex Jo. Criſp.

Peter Serre, about Tolouſe, Anno 1553.

Peter Serre firſt was a Prieſt, then changing his Religion, he went to Geneva, and learned the Shoomakers Craft, and ſo lived. Afterward upon a ſingular love he came to his Brother at Tolouſe, to the intent to do him good. His Brother had a Wife, which was not well pleaſed with his Religion and coming. She in ſecret counſel told another Woman, one of her Neighbours, of this. What doth ſhe, but goeth to the Official, and maketh him privy of all. The Official thinking to foreſlack no time, taking counſel with his Fellows, laid hands upon this Peter, and brought him before the Inquiſitor. To whom he made ſuch declaration of his Faith, that he ſeemed to reduce the Inquiſitor to ſome feeling of Conſcience, and began to inſtruct him in the Principles of true Religion. Notwithſtanding, all this helped not, but that he was condemned by the ſaid Chancellor, to be degraded, and committed to the ſecular Judg. The Judg enquiring of what Occupation he was, he ſaid, that of late he was a Shoomaker. Whereby the Judg, underſtanding that he had been of ſome other faculty before, required what it was. He ſaid he had been of another faculty before, but he was aſhamed to utter it, or to remember it, being the worſt and vileſt ſcience of all orher in the whole World beſides. The Judg and the People, ſuppoſing that he had been ſome Thief or Cutpurſe, enquired to know what it was; but he for ſhame and ſorrow ſtopped his mouth, and would not declare it. At laſt, through their importunate clamour, he was conſtrained to declare the Truth, and ſaid, That he had been a Prieſt. The Judg thereupon was ſo moved, that he condemned him; firſt, enjoining him in his condemnation, to ask the King forgiveneſs, then judged him to have his tongue cut out, and ſo to be burned. From this Sentence, he appealed to the Parliament of Tolouſe: Not for that he thought thereby to ſave his life, but becauſe he was enjoined to ask the King forgiveneſs, whom he had never offended. Alſo becauſe he was judged to have his tongue cut off, wherewith he would praiſe his God. Notwithſtanding, by the Sentence of that Parliament, he was likewiſe condemned to be burned; only he was pardoned for asking forgiveneſs of the King, and the cutting off of his tongue, ſo that he would ſay nothing againſt their Religion.

Stephen King, after he had been at Straſburgh a while, returned again into his Country, dwelling in a Town bearing the name of St. George, not far from Chauffours; where he ſerved in the place of a Notary, and had under him a Clerk named Peter Denoche, who alſo had been at Geneva, and was there zealous in inſtructing the ignorant, and rebuking blaſphemous Swearers, and other Offenders. Theſe two were not long together but they were ſuſpected both of Lutheraniſm, and ſo were apprehended by the Governor of the Marches, or Marſhal, and ſo were carried to Chartres: where after their conſtant confeſſion, upon their examination made, they were encloſed in Priſon, and there ſuſtained long and tedious indurance. During the which mean time, Stephen King made many worthy Songs and Sonets in the praiſe of the Lord, whereby to recreate his Spirit in that doleful captivity. At length, when after long perſwaſions and fair promiſes of the Biſhop, and of other, they could not be revoked from the Doctrine of their Confeſſion, they were condemned. From that condemnation, they appealed to the Court of Paris. But the Council there, confirming their former Sentence, returned them again to Chartres, from whence they came, where they were both executed with cruel puniſhment of fire. *Ex Hiſtor. This Alencon did much good in the Provinces of France by carrying Books. Coming to Montpelliers, he was there circumvented by falſe Brethren, detected, and laid in Priſon. In his Faith he was firm and conſtant, to the end of his martyrdom, being burned the 7*th* of January, 1554.

There was the ſame time at Motpelliers a certain Shereman or Clothworker, who had been long in duranee for Religion, but at length for fear and infirmity he revolted. To whom it was injoined by the Judges to make publick recantation, and to be preſent alſo at the burning of Alencon aforeſaid. At the beholding of whoſe death and conſtancy, it pleaſed God to ſtrike into this Man ſuch boldneſs, that he deſired the Judges, that either he might burn with this Alencon, or elſe be brought again into Priſon, ſaying, That he would make no other recantation, but ſo. John Borgeronius, another Inquiſitor or Counſellor.

Theſe two bleſſed and conſtant Martyrs, as they were going toward Geneva, with one of their Sons and a Daughter, were apprehended by Giles le Pers; who in the way overtaking them, and moſt wickedly and judaſly pretending great favour to them, and to their Religion, which he (as he ſaid) ſuppoſed them to be of, with theſe and many other fair words circumvented and allured them, to confeſs what was their Faith; whither they went with their Children; and alſo that their Wives were at Geneva. When they had declared this, the wretched Traitor gave a ſign to the Horſemen, and ſo were theſe ſimple Saints of Chriſt entrapped and brought to the Caſtle of Nivern. Being in Priſon, they were examined of many things: Whereunto they anſwered uprightly, according to their Faith.

Tranſubſtantiation.

Firſt, Touching the Sacrament, they affirmed the Tranſubſtantiation of the Biſhop of Rome to be againſt the Article of the Creed, which ſaith that Chriſt is gone up to Heaven, and there ſitteth at the right Hand of God: and therefore the Bread and Wine muſt needs remain in their Properties, being notwithſtanding a Sacrament, or a holy ſign of the Body and Blood of the Lord. For like as by Bread and Wine the heart of Man is comforted, ſo the Body of Chriſt crucified, and his Blood ſhed ſpiritually, hath the like operation in the Souls of the Believers.

A ſimilitude between the Bread and the Body of Chriſt.

The Maſs.

For the Maſs, they ſaid it was a thing moſt ſuperſtitious, and meer Idolatry. And if we put any part of Salvation therein, they ſaid, it was utterly a robbing the Paſſion of Chriſt the Son of God, and that it was not once to be named out of a Chriſtian mouth. Alſo, that they which ſay that Peter either was Pope, or Author of the ſaid Maſs, are far deceived. And as for turning Bread into the Body of Chriſt by the words of Conſecration, it was an error, they ſaid, more of mad-men than any ſad-men: foraſmuch as God is neither ſubject to Men, nor to the tongues or exorciſms of Men. Purgatory they denied to be any, ſave only the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt.

Honour to God, not to Saints.

Furthermore, as they would not bereave the Saints of God of their due honour, ſo neither the Saints themſelves, ſaid they, will be contented to rob God of his honour only due to him.

As touching Confeſſion, their opinion was, that the wounds and caſes of Conſcience belong to no Man, but only to God.

After theſe anſwers given and written, they were ſent to the Monaſtery of Sanpeter, there to be diſputed with. That done, the matter came to be debated among the Judges, what was to be done with them. Some would their goods to be taken by Inventory, and them to be baniſhed. But Bergeronius at laſt cauſed to be determined, that they ſhould be burned, and firſt to hear Maſs. From that Court they appealed to the Court of Paris: but the matter there was nothing amended. Where behold the Judgment of God: In the mean time, while they were at Paris, the wretched perſecutor, Giles le Pers, was ſuddenly ſtrucken mad and died in a Frenzy; which made many Men to wonder, and eſpecially the Martyrs to be more conſtant.

Perſecut. | Martyrs, and the cauſes of their Martyrdom.

Note the juſt vengeance of God upon a wicked Perſecutor.

At laſt, the Decree of the Sentence was read againſt them.

1. For ſpeaking againſt the Sacraments, which they denied.

2. For ſpeaking againſt Baptiſm; which alſo they denied.

3. For ſpeaking contumely againſt the Saints; which they in like manner denied.

Torments.

After this, the Officer, to cauſe them to recant, threatned them with torments, which they ſuſtained very extream, the ſpace from after dinner till three of the clock. When all that would not turn them, he ſent to them a Frier Dominick, a Man captious and ſophiſtical, to preſs them in diſputation. But as he could do no hurt unto them, ſo could they do no good upon him. When the time of their execution did approach, the Officer aforeſaid put into their hands, being tied, a wooden Croſs, which they took with their teeth, and flung it away: for the which, the Officer commanded both their tongues to be cut off. Wherein appeared another marvellous Work of the Lord: For nevertheleſs that their tongues were taken from them, to the intent they ſhould not ſpeak, yet God gave them utterance, their tongues being cut out, to ſpeak at their death, ſaying, We bid Sin, the Fleſh, the World, and the Devil, farewel for ever, with whom we ſhall never have to do hereafter. Divers other words they ſpake beſides, which the People did hear and note. At laſt when the Tormenter came to ſmear them with Brimſtone and Gunpowder: Go to, ſaid Filiolus, ſalt on, ſalt on the ſtinking and rotten fleſh. Finally, as the flame came burſting up to their faces, they, perſiſting conſtant in the fire, gave up their lives, and finiſhed their martyrdoms. Ex Jo. Criſp. & Hen. Pant. & aliis.

After the death of King Edward, the time not ſerving him to tarry, thinking to return again to Geneva, he came into Normandy with his Books, into a Town called Fueille: Whereas he going out to hire a Cart, William Langlois, with John Langlois his Brother, came in and ſtayed his Books, and him alſo which had the cuſtody of them. Denis, albeit he might have eſcaped, yet hearing the keeper of his Books to be in trouble, came, and preſenting himſelf, was committed, the other was delivered. Firſt, after two months and a half impriſonment, he was charged to be a Spy, becauſe he came out of England. Then from that Priſon he was removed to the Biſhop's Priſon, and then to Roan; where Sentence was given, that he ſhould be burned alive, and thrice lifted up, and let down again into the fire. After the Sentence given, they threatned him with many terrible torments, unleſs he would diſcloſe ſuch as he knew of that ſide. To whom he anſwered, That the ſounder part of all France, and of the Senate, was of that Religion: Notwithſtanding, he would utter no Man's Name unto them. And as for their torments, he ſaid, he paſſed not; for if he were killed with racking, then he ſhould not feel the burning of the fire. When they ſaw him ſo little to paſs for their torments, they left that, and proceeded to his burning: and firſt, they put a Croſs in his hands, which he would not hold. Then becauſe he coming by the Image of the Virgin Mary, would not adore the ſame, they cried, Cut out his tongue: and ſo they caſt him into the fire, where he ſhould be thrice taken up, but the flame went ſo high, that the Hangman, being not able to come near him, cried to the people ſtanding by to help, and ſo did the Officers with their ſtaves lay upon the People, to help their Tormentors, but never a Man would ſtir. A Merchant hanged for jesting against the Friars.

There was a rich Merchant of Paris, who said in jest to the Friars of St. Francis, You wear a rope about your bodies, because St. Francis once should have been hanged, and the Pope redeemed him upon this condition, that all his life after he should wear a rope. Upon this the Franciscan Friars of Paris caused him to be apprehended, and laid in prison, and so judgment passed upon him that he should be hanged: but he, to save his life, was contented to recant, and so did. The Friars hearing of his recantation, commended him, saying, if he continued so, he should be saved; and so calling upon the Officers, caused them to make haste to the Gallows, to hang him up while he was yet in a good way, said they, lest he fall again. And so was this Merchant, notwithstanding his recantation, hanged for jesting against the Friars. Ex Pantal. lib.7.

Then he was had to the Castle, and after nineteen days was brought to the Town-house, and there adjudged to the fire; whereunto he went chearfully, singing Psalms. As he was in the flame, the Warden of the Friars stood crying, Turn, Thomas, Thomas, yet it is time, remember him that came at the last hour. To whom he cried out of the flame with a loud voice, And I trust to be one of that sort; and so calling upon the name of the Lord, gave up his spirit. Ex Cris. lib. 4.

Inquisitor.

This Inquisitor was the Advocate which the Lieutenant sent with the Notary.

Dost thou believe the Church of Rome?

The Martyr.

No, I do believe the Catholick and Universal Church.

Inquisitor.

What Catholick Church is that?

The Martyr.

The Congregation or Communion of Christians.

Inquisitor.

What Congregation is that, or of whom doth it consist?

The Martyr.

The Church.

It consisteth in the number of God's Elect, whom God hath chosen to be the members of his Son Jesus Christ, of whom he is also the head.

Inquisitor.

Where is the Congregation, or how is it known?

The Martyr.

It is dispersed through the universal World, in divers Regions, and is known by the spiritual direction wherewith it is governed, that is to say, both by the Word of God, and by the right institution of Christ's Sacraments.

Inquisitor.

Do you think the Church that is at Geneva, Lausanna, Berne, and such other places, to be a more true Church than the holy Church of Rome?

The Martyr.

Yea, verily, for these have the Notes of the true Church.

Inquisitor.

What difference then make you between those Churches and the Church of Rome?

The Martyr.

Difference between the Church of Rome, and the Church of Christ.

Much; for the Church of Rome is governed only with Traditions of Men, but those are ruled only by the Word of God.

Inquisitor.

Where learned you this Doctrine first?

The Martyr.

In England, at London.

Inquisitor.

How long have you been at Geneva?

The Martyr.

About nine or ten years.

Inquisitor.

The Virgin Mary no Advocate.

Dost thou not believe the Virgin Mary to be a Mediatrix and Advocate to God for Sinners?

The Martyr.

I believe, as in the Word of God is testified, Jesus Christ to be the only Mediator and Advocate for all Sinners; albeit the Virgin Mary be a blessed Woman, yet the Office of an Advocate belongeth not unto her.

Inquisitor.

Whether Saints do pray.

The Saints that be in Paradise, have they no power to pray for us?

The Martyr.

No, but I judg them to be blessed, and to be contented with that grace and glory which they have, that is, that they be counted the members of the Son of God?

Inquisitor.

And what then judg you of them which follow the Religion of the Church of Rome? think you them to be Christians?

The Martyr.

The Church of Rome is not the Church of Christ.

No, for that Church is not governed with the Spirit of God, but rather fighteth against the same.

Inquisitor.

Do you then esteem all them which separate themselves from the Church of Rome to be Christians?

The Martyr.

I have not to answer for others, but only for my self. Every Man (saith St. Paul) shall bear his own Burden. Gal. 6.

And thus the Advocate, when he had asked him whether he would put his hand to that he had said, and had obtained the same, he went to dinner.

At the next examination was brought unto him a Franciscan Friar, who, first entring with him touching the words that he spake in his Inn, asked him, why that Grace might not not be ſaid in Latine? Becauſe, ſaid he, by the Word of God Chriſtians are commanded to pray with heart and with ſpirit, and with that tongue which is moſt underſtood, and ſerveth beſt to the edification of the hearers. Then the Friar bringing forth his Benedicite, Agimus tibi gratias, &c. Laus Deo, Pax vivis, Requies defunctis, &c. began thus to reaſon.

The Friar.

Praying in a ſtrange tongue.

God underſtandeth all tongues, and the Church of Rome hath preſcribed this form of praying, receiving the ſame from the ancient Church and the Fathers, which uſed then to pray in Latin. And if any tongue be to be obſerved in prayer, one more than another, why is it not as good to pray in the Latin tongue, as to pray in the French?

The Martyr.

My meaning is not to exclude any kind of language from prayer, whether it be Latin, Greek, Hebrew, or any other, ſo that the ſame be underſtood, and may edify the hearers.

The Friar.

When Chriſt entred the City of Jeruſalem, the People cried, lauding him with Hoſanna filio David, and yet underſtood they not what they ſaid, as Jerome writeth.

The Martyr.

It may be that Jerom ſo writeth, that they underſtood not the prophetical meaning, or the accompliſhment of theſe words upon Chriſt his coming: but that they underſtood the phraſe of that Speech or Language which they ſpake, ſpeaking in their own Language, Jerom doth not deny.

Then the Friar, declaring that he was no fit perſon to expound the Scriptures being in the Latin Tongue, inferred the authorities of Councils and Doctors, and teſtimonies of Men, which ſeemed to move the Officer not a little; who then charging him with many things, as with words ſpoken in contempt of the virgin Mary, and of the Saints, alſo with rebellion againſt Princes and Kings, came at laſt to the matter of the Sacrament, and demanded thus:

Inquiſitor.

Doſt thou believe the Holy Hoſt which the Prieſt doth conſecrate at the Maſs or no?

The Martyr.

I believe neither the Hoſt, nor any ſuch Conſecration.

Inquiſitor.

Why? doſt thou not believe the holy Sacrament of the Altar, ordained of Chriſt Jeſus himſelf?

The Martyr.

The Sacrament. John 6.

Touching the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, I believe that whenſoever we uſe the ſame according to the preſcription of St. Paul, we are refreſhed ſpiritually with the Body and Blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is the true ſpiritual meat and drink of our Souls.

The Friar.

The Friar then inferred the words of St. John's Goſpel, ſaying, My fleſh is meat indeed, &c. and ſaid, that the Doctors of the Church had decided that matter already, and had approved the Maſs to be an holy memory of the death and paſſion of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

The Martyr.

The Sacrament of the Supper I believe to be ordained of the Lord for a memorial of his death, and for a ſtirring up of our thanksgiving to him. In which Sacrament we have nothing to offer up to him, but do receive with all thankſgiving the benefits offered of God to us moſt abundantly in Chriſt Jeſus his Son.

And thus the Advocate with the Friar, bidding the Notary to write the words that he had ſpoken, departed. Who after eight days, being accompanied with the ſaid Franciſcan, and other Friars more of the Dominicks, ſent for the ſaid Richard Feurus again to his houſe, and thus began to enquire:

Inquiſitor.

Purgatory.

Doſt thou believe any Purgatory?

The Martyr.

I believe that Chriſt with his precious Blood hath made an end of all Purgatory, and purgation of our Sins.

Perſecut. | Martyrs, and the cauſes of their Martyrdom.

Inquiſitor.

And doſt thou think then there is no place after this life, where Souls of Men departed remain ſo long till they have made ſatisfaction for their ſins?

The Martyr.

No; but I acknowledg one ſatisfaction once made for the Sins of all Men, by the Blood and Sacrifice of Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, which is the propitiation and purgation for the ſins of the whole World.

The Friar.

In the eighteenth chapter of Matthew, Chriſt ſpeaking by way of a parable or ſimilitude, of a certain cruel Servant, who, becauſe he would not forgive his fellow-ſervant, was caſt into priſon, ſaith, That he ſhall not come out from thence till he hath paid the uttermoſt farthing. By the which ſimilitude is ſignified unto us a certain middle place, which is left for ſatisfaction to be made after this life for ſins. Mat. 18.

The Martyr.

Satisfaction for Sins.

Firſt, the ſatisfaction for our Sins by the death of Chriſt is plain and evident in the Scriptures; as in theſe places: Come to me, all you that labour and be burthened, and I will refreſh you. Mat. 11. I am the Door, he that entreth by me, ſhall be ſaved. John 10. I am the way, verity and life. John 13. Bleſſed be they that die in the Lord, for they reſt from their labours. Apoc. 13. Alſo to the Thief which hanged with the Lord, it was ſaid, This day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe, &c, Secondly; As touching this ſimilitude, it hath no other demonſtration but to admoniſh us of our duty, in ſhewing charity, and forgiving one another, which unleſs we do, there is no mercy to be looked for at the hands of God. Mat. 11. John 10. John 13. Apoc. 13. Luke 23.

The Friar.

Limbus.

If this be true that you ſay, then it ſhould follow that there is neither Purgatory nor any Limbus, which were againſt our Chriſtian Faith and our Creed, which ſaith, He deſcended into Hell, &c.

The Deputy.

Doſt thou believe there is a Limbus?

The Martyr.

Neither do I believe to be any ſuch place, neither doth the Scripture thereof make any mention.

The Friar.

Where were the old Fathers then before the death of Chriſt?

The Martyr.

In life (I ſay) eternal, which they looked for, being promiſed before to Adam, Abraham, and the Patriarchs in the ſeed to come.

The Deputy.

Then the Deputy; What (ſaith he) doſt thou believe that the Pope hath any power?

The Martyr.

Yea verily.

The Deputy.

The power of the Pope.

Doſt thou believe that the Pope, as the Vicar of Jeſus Chriſt, can here bind and looſe?

The Martyr.

That I do not believe.

The Deputy.

How then doeſt thou underſtand the power of the Pope?

The Martyr.

I underſtand the Power of the Pope ſo as St. Paul declareth, 2 Theſſ. ſaying, That becauſe the World refuſed to receive the love of the truth unto ſalvation, therefore God hath given to Satan, and to his Miniſters, power of illuſions and errors, that Men ſhould believe lies, and ſet up to themſelves Paſtors and Teachers ſuch as they deſerve.

The Friar.

Chriſt's Vicar in Earth.

Chriſt gave to Saint Peter power to bind and looſe, whoſe Succeſſor, and Vicar of Chriſt, is the Pope, for the government of the Church, that it might have one head in the World, as it hath in Heaven. And tho the Paſtors do not live according to the Word which they preach, yet their Doctrine is not therefore to be refuſed, as Chriſt teacheth, Mat. 23. Mat. 23.

The Martyr.

If the Pope and his adherents would preach the Word purely and ſincerely, admixing no other inventions of their own, own, nor obtruding Laws of their own deviſing, I would then embrace their doctrine, howſoever their life were to the contrary: according as Chriſt doth tell us of the Scribes and Phariſees, admoniſhing us to follow their doctrine, and not their lives, Mat. 23. But there is great difference, whether they that take the Governance of the Church do ſit in Moſes's chair, which is the ſeat of truth, or elſe do ſit in the chair of abomination, ſpoken of by Daniel, and alſo by St. Paul, where he ſaith, That the man of perdition ſhall ſit in the Temple of God, vaunting himſelf inſolently above all that is called God. 2 Theſſ. 2.

K. Hen. 8.

Mat. 23.

2 Theſſ. 2.

The keys of binding and looſing.

And as touching the keys of binding and looſing, given to Peter, Chriſt therein aſſigned to Peter and other Apoſtles, the office of preaching the Word of the Goſpel, which they did alſo well obſerve, in preaching nothing elſe but only the Word, in the which Word is all the power contained of binding and looſing. Neither is it to be granted, the Church to have two Heads, one in Heaven, another in Earth; the Head whereof is but one, which is Jeſus Chriſt, whom the Father hath appointed to be Head alone both in Heaven and Earth, as St. Paul in many places of his Epiſtles doth teach. Epheſ. 1. Coloſſ. 1. &c.

Epheſ. 1. Coloſſ. 1.

The Frier.

You have no underſtanding how to expound the Scriptures, but the old Doctors have expounded the Scriptures, and holy Councils, whoſe judgments are to be followed. But what ſay you to auricular Confeſſion?

Auricular Confeſſion.

The Martyr.

I know no other Confeſſion but that which is to be made to God, and reconciliation towards our Neighbour, which Chriſt and his Apoſtles have commended to us.

The Frier.

Have you not read in the Goſpel, how Chriſt doth bid us to confeſs to the Prieſt, where he commanded the Leper, being made whole, to ſhew himſelf to the Prieſt?

The Martyr.

The true Church of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt never obſerved this ſtrange kind of confeſſion, to carry our Sins to the Prieſt's ear. And tho the Church of Rome hath intruded this manner of confeſſing, it followeth not thereby that it is to be received. And as touching the Leper whom the Lord ſent to the Prieſt, he was not ſent therefore to whiſper his ſins in the Prieſt's ear, but only for a teſtimony of his health received according to the Law.

Of the other confeſſion which is to be made to God, we have both the examples and teſtimonies of the Prophet David full in the Pſalms 32, 51, 106. where he ſaith, That he confeſſed his ſins unto the Lord, and received forgiveneſs of the ſame.

Pſal. 32. 51, 106.

The Frier.

The Church of Rome and of Geneva compared.

After this, the Friar proceeding further to make compariſon between the Church of Rome and the Church of Geneva, would prove that the Pope hath power to ſet Laws in the Church without any expreſs word of God; for ſo it is written (ſaid he) That there were many other things beſide, which are not written in this Book. John 21. Alſo, where Chriſt promiſeth to his Diſciples, to ſend unto them the Holy-Ghoſt, which ſhould induce them into all truth. Moreover, ſuch Decrees and Ordinances as are in the Church were decided (ſaid he) and appointed by the Doctors of the Church, and by all the Councils, directed (no doubt) by the Holy-Ghoſt. Furthermore he inferred, that the Church alſo of Geneva had their Ordinances and Conſtitutions made without any Word of God. And for example, he brought forth the Order of the Pſalms and Service publickly obſerved and appointed upon Wedneſday in the Church of Geneva, as tho that day were holier than another.

The Martyr.

To this the Martyr anſwered again, declaring that the Ordinance of thoſe publick Prayers and Pſalms on Wedneſday in the Church of Geneva, was not to bind Conſcience, or for any ſuperſtitious obſervation, or for any neceſſity, which either ſhould bind the Conſcience, or could not be altered at their arbitrement; but only for an order or commodity for publick reſort to hear the Word of God, according as ancient Kings and temporal Magiſtrates have uſed in old time to do, in congregating the People together; not to put any holineſs in the day, or to bind the conſcience to any obſervation, (as the Pope maketh his Laws) but only for orders ſake, ſerving unto commodity.

And as touching that any thing ſhould be left for Doctors and Councils to be decided, without the expreſs Word of God, that is not ſo; for that all things be expreſſed and preſcribed by the Word, whatſoever is neceſſary either for government of the Church, or for the ſalvation of Men; ſo that there is no need for Doctors of the Church, or Councils, to decide any thing more than is decided already.

Paul ſaith, That he durſt utter nothing but what the Lord had wrought by him. Rom. 15. St. John ſpeaking of the Doctrine of Chriſt Jeſus, willeth us to receive no man, unleſs he bring with him the ſame Doctrine. 2 John. St. Paul warneth the Galatians, not to believe an Angel from Heaven, bringing another Doctrine than that which they had already received. Gal. 2. Chriſt, calling himſelf the good Shepherd, noteth them to be his Sheep which hear his voice, and not the voice of others. John 10. And St. Peter admoniſhing the Paſtors of the Church, forewarns them to teach only the Word of God, without any ſeeking of Lordſhip or Dominion over the Flock. From the which moderation how far the form of the Pope's Church doth differ, the tyranny which they uſe, doth well declare.

Rom. 15. 2 John.

The Church ought to be governed only by the voice of the Lord's word.

1 Pet. 5.

The Frier.

In the old Church Prieſts and Miniſters of the Church were wont to aſſemble together for deciding of ſuch things as pertained to the government and direction of the Church, whereas in Geneva no ſuch thing is uſed, as I can prove by this your own Teſtament here in my hands, that you the better may underſtand what was then the true uſe and manner of the Church.

The Martyr.

Churches may be inſtituted without the Pope.

What was the true order and manner that the Apoſtles did inſtitute in the Church of Chriſt, I would gladly hear, and alſo would deſire you to conſider the ſame; and when you have well conſidered it, yet ſhall you find the inſtitution and regiment of the Church of Geneva not to be without the publick counſel and adviſement of the Magiſtrates, Elders, and Miniſters of that Church, with ſuch care and diligence as Paul and Silas took in ordering the Church of Theſſalonica, Berea, &c. wherein nothing was done without the authority of God's Word, as appeareth, Acts 17. As likewiſe alſo in eſtabliſhing the Church of Antioch, when the Apoſtles were together in counſel for the ſame, there was no other Law nor Doctrine followed, but only the Word of God, as may appear by the words of the Council, Quid tentatis Deum, jugum imponere? &c. And albeit the Miniſters of the Church of Rome, and the Pope were not called to the inſtitution of the foreſaid Church of Geneva; yet it followeth not therefore, that there was no lawful order obſerved, either in eſtabliſhing that Church or any other.

The Frier.

Baptiſm in the Pope's Church, no neceſſary cauſe to follow all the Popes errors.

You were firſt baptized in the Church of the Pope, were ye not?

The Martyr.

I grant I was, but yet that nothing hindreth the grace of God; he may renovate and call to further knowledg whom he pleaſeth.

A Counſellor.

I would wiſh you not to ſtick to your own wiſdom and opinion. You ſee the Churches in Germany, how they diſſent one from another. So that if you ſhould not ſubmit your judgment to the authority of the General Councils, every day you ſhall have a new Chriſtianity.

The Martyr.

To mine own wiſdom I do not ſtick, nor ever will, but only to that wiſdom which is in Chriſt Jeſus, altho the World doth count it fooliſhneſs. And where ye ſay, that the Churches of Germany diſſent among themſelves one from another; that is not ſo, for they accord in one agreement altogether, touching the foundation and principal grounds of Chriſtian Faith. Neither is there any ſuch fear that every day ſhould riſe up a new Chriſtianity, unleſs the Church be ballanced with authority of the Councils, as you pretend. For ſo we read in the Prophet David, Pſal. 33. and in other places of Scripture more: That the Conncils of the Nations and People ſhall be overthrown and ſubverted of the Lord, &c. Wherefore the beſt is, that we follow the counſel of God and his Word, and prefer the authority thereof thereof before all other counſels and judgments of Men; and thus doing, I for my part had rather dwell and ſettle my ſelf in this little Chriſtianity, be it never ſo ſmall, than in that populous Papality, be it never ſo great in multitude.

And thus was this godly Feurus commanded again by the Deputy to the Biſhop's Priſon, and from thence ſhortly after removed to Lions, not by the open and beaten way, but by ſecret and privy Journeys, leſt perhaps he ſhould be taken from them again, as he was before.

After he was come to Lions, he was brought before Tignatius the Judg, and a Doctor of Sorbon, called Fumoſus, who queſtioned with him touching ſundry Articles of Religion. But in concluſion, when they neither with arguments could convict him, nor with promiſes allure him, nor with threatning terrors ſtir him, either to betray the truth which he knew, or to bewray them whom he knew not, which took him away before from his Keepers, they proceeded at laſt to the ſentence, condemning him firſt to have his tongue cut out, and then to be burned. Nicholas Cheſne, Martyr.

Nicholas du Cheſne, at Gry by Bezanſon. Anno 1554.

The cauſe and occaſion why this Nicholas came in trouble was, for that he going from Lauſanna, (where he abode for his conſcience) to fetch his Siſter, and her Husband, and certain other of his friends, as he went from Bezanſon, toward the Town of Gry, did not homage to a certain Croſs in the way, where a certain Monk, which was an Inquiſitor, overtook him, and thereby ſuſpected him, He was guided by the ſame Monk, craftily diſſembling his Religion, to a Lodging in Gry: where the Juſtice of the place coming in incontinent took him. Nicholas ſeeing how he was by the Monk his Conductor betrayed; O falſe Traitor, ſaid he, haſt thou betrayed me? Then after examination he was condemned. Being carried to the place of Martyrdom, by the way he was promiſed, that if he would kneel down and hear a Maſs, he ſhould be let go as a Paſſenger, But Nicholas, armed with perſeverance, ſaid, he would rather die than commit ſuch an act. Whereto he ſaid, No. Item, Whether at any time he had called the Maſs abominable? Which he granted, for that he finding no Maſs in all the Scripture, was commanded by St. Paul, That if an Angel from Heaven would bring any other Goſpel beſides that which was already received, he ſhould account it accurſed. After his condemnation they would have him to be confeſſed, and preſented to him a Croſs to kiſs. But he bad the Friars with their Croſs depart; that is not the Croſs (ſaid he) that I muſt carry. Entring into the Cart before the multitude, he gave thanks to God, that he was not there for murther, theft, or blaſphemy, but only for the quarrel of our Saviour. Being tied to the poſt, he ſung the five and twentieth Pſalm. Of age he was young, his countenance was exceeding chearful and amiable, his eyes looked up to Heaven. O the happy Journey, (ſaid he, ſeeing the place where he ſhould ſuffer,) and the fair place that is prepared for me! When the fire was kindled about him; O Lord, (cried he) give thy hand to thy ſervant; I recommend my ſoul unto thee; and ſo meekly yielded up his ſpirit. Peter Rousseau, Martyr.

Peter Rousseau, Anno 1556.

Peter Rousseau, coming from Geneva and Lausanna to his Country, partly to communicate with certain of his acquaintance in the Word of God, partly for other certain affairs, because he required his inheritance of his Brother-in-law, was by him betrayed. Then being constant in his Confession which he offered up, he was put to the Rack three times, which he suffered constantly with great torments. Afterward he had his tongue cut off, and a Ball of Iron put in his mouth. He was drawn upon a hurdle, all broken and maimed, to the fire, where he was lifted up into the air, and let down three times: and when he was half-burned, the ball fell from his mouth, and he with a loud voice called on the name of God, saying, Jesus Christ assist me. And so this blessed Martyr gave up his life to God. Ex Joan. Crisp.

John de Cazes.

At Bourdeaux, Anno 1556.

After that Arnold Moniere was taken and examined of the Justice, and so was laid in prison, John de Cazes resorting to the same Town of Bourdeaux, and hearing of him, and being admonished moreover, that if he went to him he should be appeached of Heresy, notwithstanding went to comfort him, and so was also imprisoned, After many examinations, sentence was given upon them to be burned. When the time came of their Martyrdom, they were drawn through the dirt upon an hurdle to the place, accompanied with a number of Bills, Glaves, Gunners, and Trumpeters. Moreover, albeit there was no such cause (they being two simple poor Men) yet the Magistrates commanded (upon what occasion I know not) all the Gates of the City to be shut, and guarded with keepers. When the blessed Martyrs were brought and bound to the Post, which was before the Palace, they much rejoycing that they were made worthy to suffer for Christ, made confession of their faith, and many exhortations unto the People. But to stop the hearing of these Saints, the Trumpeters were commanded to sound, which during all the time of their suffering never ceased. The Hangman, preparing himself first to strangle Cazez, chanced to fall down from the top of the Post to the Pavement, and brake his head in such sort, as the blood followed in great quantity. Notwithstanding he recovering himself, went to Moniere, and him he strangled, who patiently rendred up his life. Cazes, who was the stronger of them both, being set on fire before the Hangman came, suffered the extremity of the fire with great pains, but greater patience; for as his Legs were almost half burnt, yet he endured, crying, My God, my Father, and so gave up his life.

Fear sent among God's enemies.

And further, to note the work of God that followed, when these two mild and martyred Saints were almost consumed in the fire to ashes, suddenly without matter or cause such a fear fell upon them at the execution, that the Justices and the People, notwithstanding that they had the Gates locked to them, and were defensed with all manner of weapons about them, not knowing wherefore, took them to their legs, in such haste flying away, that they over-ran one another. My Friends, hide my Mule, that no man see her nor know her.* Briefly, such was the fear which came upon them, that every Man shut up their Houses. After the fear was past, every Man asked what the matter was, but none could tell, neither could the Enemies of God's truth perceive who was he that put them so to flight and fear, without any semblance of any Adversary about them. This Philip Cene was an Apothecary at Geneva. He was taken at Dyion, and there imprisoned, and in the same Town of Dyion he with one James his companion was burned. As this Philip went to his death singing Psalms, the Friar standing by stopped his mouth with his hand. The most part of the People wept bitterly, saying, Be of good courage, Brethren, be not afraid of this death. As he was in Prison on a Sunday a Priest came in with all his furniture, to say Mass in the Prison; whom Philbert seeing to be revested, came and pluck'd his garments from his back with such zeal and vehemency, that the Mass-garments, with the Chalice and Candlesticks, fell down and were broken; saying, Is it not enough for you to blaspheme God in Churches, but you must also pollute the Priſon with your Idolatry? The Jaylor hearing of this, in his fury laid upon him with his ſtaff, and alſo complained of him: whereby he was removed to the common Priſon, and laid in a low Pit, laden with great Irons, ſo that his Legs were ſwoln withal, and there continued eight days. A little before he, perceiving the Prieſt his Hoſt to decline from the Truth, did what he could to confirm him in the ſame: but when he knew he had flatly renounced Chriſt and his Word, he ſaid unto him, O unhappy and more than miſerable! is it poſſible for you to be ſo fooliſh, as for ſaving of a few days which you have to live by the courſe of Nature, ſo to ſtart away, and to deny the Truth? Know you therefore, that altho you have by your fooliſhneſs avoided the corporal fire, yet your life ſhall be never the longer; for you ſhall die before me, and God ſhall not give you the grace that it ſhall be for his cauſe, and you ſhall be an example to all Apoſtates. He had no ſooner ended his talk, but the Prieſt going out of priſon, was ſlain by two Gentlemen which had a quarrel to him. Whereof when Maſter Philbert had heard, he affirmed that he knew of no ſuch thing before, but ſpake as it pleaſed God to guide his tongue. Nicolaus Sartorius, of the age of ſix and twenty years, born in Piedmont, came to the parts of Chamberie in Lent, where a certain Warden of the Friars in the Town of Oſt had preached on Good-Friday upon the paſſion. The report of which Sermon being recited to this Sartorius, by one that heard him, Sartorius reprehended the error and blaſphemies thereof, which were againſt the holy Scriptures. Shortly after the Party that told him went to a Secretary, named Ripet, who covertly came to entrap Nicolas, demanding him of the Friar's Sermon: And did not our Preacher, ſaid he, preach well? No, ſaid Nicolas, but he lied falſely. Ripet entring further with him, demanded; And do you not believe the Body of the Lord to be in the Hoſt? To whom Nicolas then anſwered again, That would be againſt our Creed, which ſaith, That he aſcended up, and ſitteth, &c. Incontinent Ripet went to the Friar and his companions, to cauſe him to be apprehended. The friends of Nicholas perceiving the danger, willed him to avoid and ſave himſelf, and alſo accompanied him out of the Town about the ſpace of three leagues. Then was great purſuit made after him to all quarters, who at length was taken at the Town of Saint Remy, at the foot of the mountain of great St. Bernard, where he was examined before Anthony Eſchaux, Bayliff of the Town, and other Juſtices, before whom he anſwered with great boldneſs for his Faith. When he was condemned and ſet in the Cart, his Father, coming with a ſtaff, would have beaten him, but the Officers not ſuffering it, would have ſtrucken the old Man. The Son crying to the Officers, deſired them to let his Father alone, ſaying, that his Father had power over him, to do with him what he would. A terrible Perſecution at Paris againſt the Congregation

Anno 1558, September the fourth, a company of the Faithful, to the number of three or four hundred, were together convented at Paris in a certain Houſe, having before it the College of Pleſſis in the Street of St. James, and behind it the College of Sorbon, who there aſſembled in the beginning of the night, to the intent to communicate together the Lord's Supper: But incontinent that was diſcovered by certain Prieſts of Pleſſis, who gathering together ſuch as were of that Faction, came to beſet the Houſe, and made an outcry, that the Watch might come to take them; ſo that in ſhort time almoſt all the City Paris was up in Armour, thinking ſome Conſpiracy to have been

been in the City. Who then following the noiſe, and perceiving that they were Lutherans, a great part of them were in extreme rage, furiouſly ſeeking to have their blood, and therefore ſtopped the Streets and Lanes with Carts, and made fires to ſee that none ſhould eſcape. The Faithful, albeit God had given them leiſure to finiſh their adminiſtration and prayers with ſuch quietneſs as they never had better, ſeeing the ſuddenneſs of the thing, were ſtrucken in great fear; who then being exhorted by the governours of the Congregation, fell to prayer. That done, through the counſel of ſome which knew the cowardly hearts of the multitude, this order was taken, that the Men which had weapons ſhould adventure through the Preaſs: Only the Women and Children remained in the houſe, and a few Men with them, which were leſs bold than the other, to the number of ſix or ſeven Score. Where appeared the admirable power of God in them that went out with weapons, which notwithſtanding that the Lanes and Paſſages were ſtopp'd, and the Fires made, did yet all eſcape ſave only one, who was beaten down with ſtones, and ſo deſtroyed. Certain that remained in the houſe with the Women, afterward leaped into Gardens, where they were ſtayed till the Magiſtrates came. The Women (which were all Gentlewomen, or of great wealth, only ſix or ſeven excepted) ſeeing no other hope, and perceiving the fury of the People, went up to the windows, crying *Mercy, and ſhewing their innocent intent, required Juſtice ordinary. Thus as they were incloſed about ſix or ſeven hours, at laſt came Martin the King's Atturney, with force of Commiſſaries and Sergeants, who with much ado appeaſing the outrage of the people, entred into the houſe; where he viewing the Women and Children, and the other furniture there being prepared for that Congregation, perceived teſtimonies ſufficient of their innocency, inſomuch that in conſidering thereof, for pity of heart his eyes could not refrain from tears. Notwithſtanding, proceeding in his office, he had them all to priſon within the little Caſtle. I omit here the furious uſage of the People by the way, how deſpitefully they plucked and haled the Women, tore their Garments, thruſt off their Hoods from their heads, and diſfigured their faces with duſt and dirt. Neither were they better entreated in the Priſon, than they were in the Streets; for all the Villains and Thieves there were let out of their Holes and ſtinking Caves, and the poor Chriſtians placed in their rooms.

A falſe and malicious ſlander raiſed againſt the congregation.

Beſides theſe manifold wrongs and oppreſſions done to theſe poor Innocents, followed then (which was worſt of all) the cruel and ſlanderous reports of the Friars and Prieſts, who in their railing Sermons, and other talk, cried out of the Lutherans, perſuading the people moſt falſly, That they aſſembled together to make a Banquet in the night, and there putting out the candles, they went together Jack with Jill (as they ſaid) after a filthy and beaſtly manner. Adding moreover (to make the Lie more likely) that certain Nuns alſo and Monks were with them. Alſo that they ſhould conſpire againſt the King, and other like hainous crimes, whatſoever their malice could invent, for defacing of the Goſpel. With ſuch like malicious miſreports and ſlanders Satan went about to extinguiſh the ancient Church of Chriſt in the primitive time, accuſing the innocent Chriſtians then of Inceſt, Conſpiracy, killing of Infants, putting out of Candles, and filthy Whoredoms, &c. Theſe ſiniſter rumors and curſed defamations were no ſoner given out, but they were as ſoon received, and ſpread far, not only to them of the vulgar ſort, but alſo among the States of the Court, and even to the King's ears. The Cardinal of Lorain the ſame time bare a great ſway in the Court, who then procured a certain Judg of the Caſtle to come in, declaring to the King, that he found there lying in the floor of the foreſaid Houſe, divers Couches and Pallets, upon which they intended to commit their Whoredom; alſo much other furniture and preparation appointed for a ſumptuous Banquet. Wherewith the King was mightily inflamed againſt them, neither was there any one perſon that durſt contrary it.

Henry the ſecond, French King.

Here the Enemies began highly to triumph, thinking verily that the Goſpel, with all the friends thereof, were overthrown for ever. On the other ſide, no leſs perplexity and lamentation was among the Brethren, ſorrowing not ſo much for themſelves, as for the impriſonment of their Fellows. Albeit they loſt not their courage ſo altogether, but as well as they could they exhorted one another, conſidering the great favour and providence of God, in delivering them ſo wonderfully out of the danger. Some comfort they took unto them, conſulting together in this order, that firſt they ſhould humble themſelves to God in their own private Families: Secondly, to ſtop the running bruits of their holy Aſſemblies, they ſhould write Apologies, one to the King, another to the People. Thirdly, that Letters of Conſolation ſhould be written and ſent to their Brethren in priſon.

The Apology of the Congregation againſt falſe reports.

The firſt Apology was written to the King, and conveyed ſo ſecretly into his Chamber, that it was found and read openly in the hearing of the King and all his Nobles. Wherein the Chriſtians learnedly and diſcreetly both cleared themſelves of thoſe reports, and ſhewed the malice of their Enemies, eſpecially of Satan, which ever from the beginning of the Church hath, and ſtill doth go about to overturn the right ways of the Lord. Declaring further by manifold examples and continual experience, even from the primitive time, how the nature of the Church hath ever been to ſuffer vexations, and ſlanderous reports and infamation by the malignant Adverſaries, &c. And laſtly, coming to the King, they craved that their Cauſe might not be condemned before it had an indifferent hearing, &c. Nevertheleſs, this Apology to the King ſerved to little purpoſe; forſomuch as the Adverſaries incontinent denied all that was written to the King, making him to believe, that all were but excuſes pretenſed, neither was there any perſon that durſt reply again.

The true Church of Chriſt ever from the beginning oppreſſed with ſlanderous tongues.

But the other Apology to the People did ineſtimable good, in ſatisfying the rumors, and defending the true cauſe of the Goſpel. Whereupon certain Doctors of Sorbon began to write both againſt the Apology and the Perſons, of whom one was called Demochares, who taking for his foundation, without any proof, that they were all Hereticks, cried out for Juſtice, with bills, glaves, fire and ſword.

Dr. Demochares perſecutor.

Another Sorboniſt, more bloody than the firſt, not only exclaimed againſt them for putting out the Candles in their deteſtable Concourſes and Aſſemblies, but alſo accuſed them as Men which maintained that there was no God, and denied the divinity and humanity of Chriſt, the immortality of the Soul, the reſurrection of the Fleſh, and briefly all the Articles of true Religion. And thus he charged them, without any proof, moving both the King and People, without any form of Law, to deſtroy and cut them in pieces, &c.

Lying lips.

The third that wrote againſt them was Cenalis, Biſhop of Auranches, which debated the ſame matter, but with leſs vehemency than the other, defending impudently, that their Aſſemblies were to maintain whoredom; complaining of the Judges becauſe they were no ſharper with them, ſaying, that their ſoftneſs was the cauſe that the number of them ſo much increaſed. Among other points of his Book this one thing he diſputeth marvellous pleaſantly, touching the ſigns and marks of the true Church; firſt preſuppoſing this one thing, which is true, that the true Church hath its ſigns by which it may be known from the falſe Church:

Cenalis Biſhop of Auranches perſecutor.

Perſecut. | Martyrs, and the Cauſes of their Martyrdom.

and thereupon (making no mention at all either of Preaching, or Miniſtration of Sacraments) thus he inferreth: That their Church, which was the Catholick Church, had Bells by the which their Aſſemblies be ordinarily called together; and the other Church, which is of the Lutherans, hath Claps of Harquebuſſes and Piſtolets for ſigns, whereby they (as it is commonly bruited) are wont to congregate together. Upon this ſuppoſal, as upon a ſure foundation, he grounding his matter, vaunted and triumphed as one having gotten a great Conqueſt, and made a long Antitheſis or Compariſon, by the which he would prove that Bells were the marks of the true Church. The Bells, ſaid he, do ſound; the Harquebuſſes do crack or thunder. The Bells do give a ſweet tune and melodious; the ſigns of the Lutherans do make a foul noiſe and terrible. The Bells do open Heaven, the other do open Hell. Bells chaſe away Clouds and Thunder; the other engender Clouds and counterfeit Thunder: With many other properties more, which he brought out to prove that the Church of Rome is the true Church becauſe it hath thoſe Bells. Mark, good Reader, the profound reaſons and arguments which theſe great Doctors had, either to defend their own Church, or to impugn the Apologies of the Chriſtians.

Note well the true notes of the Pope's holy Church.

Bells made the mark of the true Church.

The conveniency of Bells to the Pope's Church.

Briefly, to finiſh the reſidue of this Story: As the faithful Chriſtians were thus occupied in writing their Apologies, and in comforting their Brethren in priſon with their Letters, the Adverſaries again with their Faction were not idle, but ſought all means poſſible to haſten forward the execution, giving diligent attendance about the Priſon and other open places, to ſatisfy their uncharitable deſire with the death of them whoſe Religion they hated.

Finally, the ſeventeenth day of September Commiſſion was directed out by the King, and certain Preſidents and Counſellors appointed to overſee the expedition of the matter. Whereupon divers of the poor afflicted Goſpellers were brought forth to their Judgment and Martyrdom, as anon (Chriſt willing) you ſhall hear.

Henricus Pantal. lib. 11. partly touching this Perſecution of the Pariſians, referreth the time thereof to the year of our Saviour 1557, which the French Chronicles do aſſign to the year 1558. and addeth moreover, That the Germans being the ſame time in a certain Colloquy at Wormes, divers learned Men reſorted thither from Geneva and other quarters, deſiring of the Princes and Proteſtants there, that they by their Embaſſadors ſent to the French King, would become Suiters unto him for the innocent Priſoners, which for the cauſe aboveſaid were detained in bands at Paris. By the means of whoſe Interceſſion, ſaith he, and eſpecially for that the French King was then in War (as God provided) with Philip King of Spain, a great part of the Captives were reſcued and delivered; albeit certain of the ſaid number were executed before the coming of the German Embaſſadors, the Names and Martyrdom of whom hereunder do enſue. Ex Criſp. & Pant. lib. 11.

Of this godly Company thus brought to judgment and to martyrdom, the firſt was Nicholas Clinet, of the age of ſixty years, who firſt being a Schoolmaſter to Youth at Saintonge (where he was born) was there purſued, and had his Image burned. From thence he came to Paris, where for his godly converſation he was made one of the Elders or Governors of the Church. For his age he was ſuſpected of the Judges to be a Miniſter, and therefore was ſet to diſpute againſt the chiefeſt of the Sorboniſts, and namely Maillard, whom he did ſo confute both by the Scriptures, and alſo their own Sorbonical Divinity, (wherein he had been well exerciſed and expert) in the preſence of the Lieutenant Civil, that the ſaid Lieutenant confeſſed that he never heard a Man better learned, and of more intelligence.

Taurin Gravelle firſt was a Student of the Law at Tolouſe; after that he was made an Advocate in the Court of Paris: Laſtly, for his godlineſs he was ordained an Elder to the ſaid Congregation, with Clinet above-mentioned. This Taurin having in his hands the keeping of a certain Houſe of one Maſter Barthomier his Kinſman, and ſeeing the Congregation deſtitute of room, received them into the ſaid Houſe. And when he perceived the Houſe to be compaſſed with enemies, albeit he might have eſcaped with the reſt, yet he would not, but did abide the adventure, to the intent he would anſwer for the fact, in receiving the ſaid Aſſembly into the Houſe. The conſtancy of this Man was invincible, in ſuſtaining his conflicts with the Sorboniſts. With Dr. Maillard eſpecially he was of old acquaintance, whom he did know ſo well even from his youth upward, that whenſoever the ſaid Doctor would open his mouth to ſpeak againſt the Saints for their nightly Aſſemblies, he again did reproach him with ſuch filthy acts of Buggery and infamous Sodomitry, that neither they which heard could abide it, neither yet could he deny it, being ſo notorious that almoſt all the Children in the Streets did know it; and yet that Sorbonical Doctor ſhamed not to impeach good Men of Whoredom for their godly Aſſemblies in the night, whoſe Life was ſo far from all chaſtity, as were their holy Aſſemblies clear from all impurity. In fine, theſe two godly Elders in cruel pains of the fire finiſhed their martyrdom.

First, this Hector was a traveller about the Country, and a ſeller of books, having his Wife and Children at Geneva. As he came into the Vale of Angroign in Piedmont, to get his living with ſelling of books, he was taken by a certain Gentleman, and there arreſted and ſent to Thurin, then examined, at laſt condemned. Being condemned, he was threatned, that if he ſpake any thing to the People, his tongue ſhould be cut off; nevertheleſs he ceaſed nothing to ſpeak. After his prayers made, wherein he prayed for the Judges, that God would forgive them, and open their eyes, he was offered his pardon at the ſtake, if he would convert, which he refuſed. Then he prepared himſelf to his death, which he took patiently. Whereat many of the People wept, ſaying, Why doth this Man die, which ſpeaketh of nothing but of God? *Ex Hiſt. Next unto Clinet and Gravelle above-ſaid, was brought out Mrs. Philip, Gentlewoman, of the age of twenty three years. She came firſt from the parts of Gaſcoigne with her Husband (who was Lord of Graveron) unto Paris, there to join her ſelf to the Church of God, where her Husband alſo had been a Senior or Elder, who in the month of May before was taken with an Ague, and deceaſed, leaving this Philip a Widow, which nevertheleſs ceaſed not to ſerve the Lord in his Church, and alſo in the houſe was taken with the ſaid company. Many conflicts ſhe had with the Judges and the Sorboniſts, namely, Maillard; but ſhe always ſent him away with the ſame reproach as the other did before, and bad him, Avaunt Sodomite, ſaying, ſhe would not anſwer one word to ſuch a Villain. To the Judges her anſwer was this, That ſhe had learned the Faith which ſhe confeſſed in the Word of God, and in the ſame would live and die.

Her Petition to them was, that ſeeing they had taken her Siſter from her, yet they would let her have a Bible or Teſtament to comfort himſelf. Her wicked Neighbours, altho they could touch her converſation with no part of diſhoneſty, yet many things they laid to her charge, as that there was much ſinging of Pſalms in her houſe, and twice or thrice an infinite number of Perſons were ſeen to come out of her houſe. Alſo when her Husband was in dying, no Prieſt was called for; neither was it known where he was buried; neither did they ever hear any word of their Infant to be baptized; for it was baptized in the Church of the Lord. Among other her Neighbours that came againſt her, two there were dwelling at St. Germain in the Suburbs; between whom incontinent roſe a ſtrife, wherein one of them ſticked the other with a Knife. The martyrdom of Clinet, Gravel, and Philip de Lans.

These three holy Martyrs above-recited, were condemned Septemb. 27. by the Proceſs of the Commiſſioners, and the Lieutenant Civil: and then being put in a Chappel together, certain Doctors were ſent to them, but their valiant conſtancy remained unmoveable. After that they were had out of their Priſon, and ſent every one in a Dung-cart to the place of Puniſhment. Clinet ever cried by the way, proteſting, that he ſaid or maintained nothing but the Verity of God. And being asked of a Doctor, Whether he would believe St. Auſtin, touching certain matters? he ſaid, Yea; and that he had ſaid nothing but which he would prove by this Authority.

The Gentlewoman, ſeeing a Prieſt come to confeſs her, ſaid, That ſhe had confeſſed unto God, and had received of him remiſſion: other abſolution ſhe found none in Scripture. And when certain Counſellors did urge her to take in her hands the wooden Croſs, according to the cuſtom of them that go to their death; alledging how Chriſt commanded every one to bear his Croſs: ſhe anſwered, My Lords, ſaid ſhe, you make me in very deed to bear my Croſs, condemning me unjuſtly, and putting me to death in the quarrel of my Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Who willeth us to bear our Croſs, but no ſuch Croſs as you ſpeak of.

The Croſs.

Gravelle looked with a ſmiling countenance, and ſhewed a chearful colour, declaring how little he paſſed for his condemnation: and being asked of his Friends to what death he was condemned; I ſee well (ſaid he) that I am condemned to death, but to what death or torment I regard not. And coming from the Chapel, when he perceived they went about to cut out his tongue, unleſs he would return, he ſaid, that was not ſo contained in the Arreſt, and therefore he was unwilling to grant unto it: but afterward perceiving the ſame ſo to be agreed by the Court, he offered his tongue willingly to be cut, and incontinent ſpake plainly theſe words; I pray you pray to God for me.

The Gentlewoman alſo, being required to give her tongue, did likewiſe, with theſe words: Seeing I do not ſtick to give my Body, ſhall I ſtick to give my Tongue? No, no. And ſo theſe three, having their Tongues cut out, were brought to Malbert-place. The conſtancy of Gravelle was admirable, caſting up his ſighs and groans to Heaven, declaring thereby his ardent affection in praying to God. Clinet was ſomewhat more ſad than the other, by reaſon of the feebleneſs of Nature and his Age. But the Gentlewoman yet ſurmounted all the reſt in conſtancy, which neither changed countenance, nor colour, being of an excellent beauty.

And thus the three, with ſingular conſtancy, were burned; Gravelle and Clinet were burned alive. Philip the Gentlewoman was ſtrangled, after ſhe had a little taſted the flame with her feet and viſage; and ſo ſhe ended her martyrdom. *Ex Joan. Of the ſame Company was alſo Nicholas Cene a Phyſician, Brother to Philip Cene above mentioned, and martyred at Dyion, and Peter Gabart: which two, about five or ſix days after the other three before, were brought forth to their death, Octob. 2.

Doctor Maillard.

Nicholas Cene was but new come to Paris the ſame day, when he was advertiſed of the Aſſembly which then was congregate in the ſtreet of St. James, and (as he deſired nothing more than to hear the Word of God) came thither even as he was, booted, and was alſo with them apprehended, ſuſtaining the cauſe of God's holy Goſpel unto death.

Counſellors.

The other was Peter Gabart, a Solicitor of Proceſſes, about the Age of thirty years, whoſe conſtancy did much comfort the Priſoners. He was put among a great number of Scholars in the little Caſtle. Who when he heard to paſs the time in talking of Philoſophy; No, no, ſaid he, let us forget theſe worldly matters, and learn how to ſuſtain the heavenly Cauſe of our God, which lie here in defence of the Kingdom of Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour: And ſo he began to inſtruct them how to anſwer to every point of Chriſtian Doctrine ſo well, as if he had done no other thing in all his life, but only ſtudied Divinity; and yet was he but very ſimply learned. Then was he ſent from them apart to another Priſon, full of filthy ſtinch and vermin; where notwithſtanding he ceaſed not to ſing Pſalms that the other might well hear him. He had a Nephew in a Priſon by, being but a Child, of whom he asked what he had ſaid to the Judges? He ſaid, that he was conſtrained to do reverence to a Crucifix painted. O thou naughty Boy, ſaid he, have not I taught thee the Commandments of God? Knoweſt thou not how it is written; Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelf any graven Image, &c. And ſo began to expound to him the Commandments; whereunto he gave good attention.

Images forbidden.

In their Examinations, many Queſtions were propounded by the Doctors and Friers, touching matters both of Religion, and alſo to know of them what Gentlemen and Gentlewomen were there preſent at the miniſtration of the Sacrament. Whereunto they anſwered in ſuch ſort, as was both ſufficient for defence of their own cauſe, and alſo to ſave their other Brethren from blame, ſaying, that they would live and die in that they had ſaid and maintained.

When the time of their Execution was come, they perceived that the Judges had intended, that if they would relent, they ſhould be ſtrangled, if not, they ſhould burn alive, and their Tongues be cut from them. Which torments they being content to ſuffer for our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, offered their Tongues willingly to the Hangman to be cut. Gabart began a little to figh, for that he might no more praiſe the Lord with his Tongue. Whom then Cene did comfort. Then were they drawn out of Priſon in the Dung-cart to the Suburbs of St. Germane. Whom the People in rage and madneſs, followed with cruel injuries and blaſphemies, as tho they would have done the execution themſelves upon them, maugre the Hangman. been ſeen: for they were holden long in the Air over a ſmall fire, and their lower parts burnt off, before that the higher parts were much harmed with the fire. Nevertheleſs theſe bleſſed Saints ceaſed not in all theſe Torments to turn up their eyes to Heaven, and to ſhew forth infinite teſtimonies of their Faith and conſtancy.

In the ſame fire many Teſtaments and Bibles the ſame time alſo were burnt.

See here, how the whole power of the World was confederate together againſt the poor Saints of God, according to the prophecy of the ſecond Pſalm.

Upon the ſight of this cruelty, the Friends of the other Priſoners which remained behind, fearing the tyranny of theſe Judges, preſented certain cauſes of refuſal againſt the ſaid Judges, requiring other Commiſſioners to be placed. But the King, being hereof advertiſed by his Sollicitor, ſent out his Letters Patents, commanding the ſaid Cauſes of refuſal to be fruſtrate, and willed the former Judges to proceed all other Lets and Obſtacles to the contrary notwithſtanding; and that the Preſidents ſhould have power to [illegible] to them other Counſellors, according to their own arbitrements, to ſupply the place of ſuch as were abſent: amongſt whom alſo the ſaid Solicitor was received, inſtead of the King's Procurator, to purſue the Proceſs. By the which Letters Patents it was decreed, that theſe ſtubborn Sacramentaries (as they were called) ſhould be judged accordingly, ſave only that they ſhould not proceed to the execution before the King were advertiſed. Theſe Letters aforeſaid, ſtirred up the fire of this Perſecution not a little, for that the Judges at this refuſal took great Indignation, and were mightily offended for that reproach. Notwithſtanding ſo it pleaſed God, that a young man, a German, called Albert Hartung, born in the Country of Brandeburg, and Godſon to Albert Marqueſs of Brandeburgh, by the King's Commandment was delivered, through the importunate ſuit of the ſaid Marqueſs. *Ex Jo. Mention was made above of certain young Scholars and Students which were in the little Caſtle with Peter Gabert. Of which number of Scholars were theſe two, Frederick Danvile, and Francis Rebezies, neither of them being paſt twenty years of age. How valiantly they behaved themſelves in thoſe tender years, ſuſtaining the quarrel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, what confeſſion they made, what conflicts they had, diſputing with the Doctors of Sorbon, their own Letters left in writing do make record: the effect whereof briefly to touch is this; and firſt, touching Frederick Danvil.

The Lieutenant Criminal, who before was half ſuſpected, but now thinking to prove himſelf a right Catholick, and to recover his eſtimation again, came to him, beginning with theſe words of Scripture; Whoſoever denieth me before Men, him will I deny before my Father, &c. That done, he asked him what he thought of the Sacrament. To whom Frederick anſwered, That if he ſhould think Chriſt Jeſus to be between the Prieſt's Hands after the Sacramental words (as they call them) then ſhould he believe a thing contrary to the Holy Scripture, and to the Creed, which ſaith, That he ſitteth on the right hand of the Father. Alſo to the Teſtimony of the Angels, which ſpake both of the aſcending of Chriſt, and of his coming down again, Acts 1. After this he queſtioned with him touching invocation of Saints, Purgatory, &c. Whereunto he anſwered ſo, that he rather did aſtoniſh the Enemies, than ſatisfy them.

Furthermore, the 12th of September the ſaid Frederick again was brought before Benedictus Jacobin, and his Companion, a Sorboniſt, called Noſter Magiſter; who thus began to argue with him.

And what if I do prove the contrary, will you believe me?

The Martyr.

Yea, if you ſhall prove it by the Scripture?

The Doctor.

Or will you believe St. Auſtin and other holy Doctors innumerable?

The Martyr.

Yea, ſo they diſſent not from the Scripture and the Word of God.

The Doctor.

By the Authority of St. Auguſtine, the Church is there where is the Succeſſion of Biſhops. Whereunto I frame this Argument: The Church.

There is the Church, where is the perpetual ſucceſſion of Biſhops.

In the Church of Paris is ſuch Succeſſion of Biſhops:

Ergo the Church of Paris is the true Church.

The Martyr.

To your Major I anſwer, That if St. Auſtin mean the ſucceſſion of ſuch as are true Biſhops indeed, which truly preach the Goſpel, and rightly adminiſter the Sacraments; ſuch Biſhops I ſuppoſe to be at Geneva, where the Goſpel is truly preached, and the Sacraments duly miniſtred, and not in the Church of Paris. But otherwiſe, if St. Auſtin mean the ſucceſſion of falſe Biſhops, ſuch as neither preach nor miniſter according to God's Word, ſo is the ſame in no wiſe to be granted.

The Doctor.

Calvin is there by his own thruſting in only, and by the chuſing of the People.

The Martyr.

And that ſoundeth more for him to be of God's Divine Election, for ſo much as by him the Goſpel of God is preached truly, and from this no Man ſhall bring me.

After this diſceptation, the ninth of the ſame month came againſt him another Doctor with two Sorboniſts; who, bringing forth a ſcroll out of his Boſom, pretended that a certain Scholar coming from Geneva, made his confeſſion, wherein was contained, that, in receiving of the Bread and Wine, the Body and Blood of Chriſt is received really. Whereupon they demanded of him, whether he would receive the ſame Confeſſion.

The Martyr.

Whatſoever I have ſaid unto you, that will I hold. And as touching this word [really] I know right well that they of Geneva do not take it for any carnal preſence, as you do; but their meaning is, to exclude thereby only a vain imagination. Really

The Doctor.

I marvel much that you ſo refuſe the Word really, and uſe only ſpiritually, ſeeing that Calvin himſelf doth uſe the ſame word really.

The Martyr.

Calvin meaneth thereby no other thing but as we do.

The Doctor.

What ſay you by Confeſſion Auricular? Confeſſion Auricular

The Martyr.

The ſame that I ſaid before to Monſieur Lieutenant, that is, That I take it for a Plantation, not planted by God in his Word.

The

Perſecut. K. Hen. 8 | Martyrs, and the Cauſes of their Martyrdom.

The Doctor.

The Almanes, in their Confeſſion which they ſent to our King to be approved, have theſe words; Confeſſionem auricularem non improbamus; eſt enim Evangelium ſecretum: That is, We do not reject Auricular Confeſſion; for it is a Goſpel ſecret and privy. And alſo Melanchon in his Book of Common Places, doth call it Evangelium ſecretum.

Melanthon in his common Place, ſpeaking of the popiſh Confeſſion which conſiſteth in the enumeration of ſin, ſaith, that it is a ſnare of conſcience, and againſt the Goſpel, and otherwiſe maketh there no mention of Evangelium ſecretum no more doth the confeſſion of the Almanes.

Another time the ſaid Frederick was called again before the Lords, the twentieth of the ſaid month, where they did nothing but demand of him certain Queſtions; where he was born, and whether he had heard in his Country at Oleron, that Mr. Gerard the Biſhop there did ſing Maſs. Yea, ſaid he, And why do not you alſo, ſaid they, receive the ſame. He anſwered, Becauſe he did it to retain and keep his Biſhoprick. The Marter, for lack of Paper, could proceed herein no further.

The Examination of Francis Rebezies.

The examination of Rebezies.

Rebezies had three ſundry Examinations: The firſt with the Lieutenant Civil: the ſecond with the Preſidents and the Counſellors: the third with the Friers. Firſt, The Lieutenant enquiring of his Name, Country, and Parents, asked whether he was at the Communion, whether he received with them the Bread and Wine, and whether he was a Servitour to Mr. Nicholas Cene, Senior of the Congregation? Whereunto he ſaid, Yea. Alſo whether he was a diſtributer of the Tokens, whereby they were let in that came? That he denied. Then he was brought into the Council Chamber, before two Preſidents, and 25 Counſellors; who, after other Queſtions about his Country and Parents, demanded whether he was taken with them in the houſe? He anſwered, Yea. What he had to do there? To hear the Word of God, and to receive with them. Who brought him thither? Himſelf. Whom there he knew? No Man. How he durſt, or would enter, knowing no Perſon there? Truth it was, ſaid he, that he knew there two or three. Who were they? Mr. Gravell, Clinet, and John Sanſot, faining that name of himſelf. Whether he knew the Preacher? That he denied. Whether he allowed the Act there done to be good? Yea. Whether he did not better like to reſort unto their beautified Temples, to hear Maſs, or whether he did not take the Maſs to be an holy thing, and ordained of God? He anſwered again contrary, believing that it was a great blaſphemy againſt God, and a ſervice ſet up of the Devil. Whether he did not acknowledg Purgatory? Yea, that Purgatory, which is the death and paſſion of Chriſt, which taketh away the ſins of the World. The death of Chriſt is the principal, ſaid they, but thou muſt alſo believe another. Alas, ſaid he, can we never content our ſelves with the ſimplicity of the Goſpel, but Man always will be putting to ſomething of his own brain: in ſo many places of the Scripture we ſee the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt to be ſufficient, as John 1. Apocalyps 5. Heb. 9. Iſa. 43. Where the Lord himſelf ſaith; That it is he, who for his own ſake putteth away our Iniquities, &c. As St. Paul alſo ſaith, That God was in Chriſt, reconciling the World unto himſelf, &c. And contrary, when they objected the words of the Parable, Mat. 5. Thou ſhalt not come out, till thou haſt paid the laſt farthing. To this he anſwered, That the words of that Parable had no ſuch relation, but to matters civil: and this word [until] meaneth there, as much as never. After that, he was charged there by one, for reading the Books of Calvin, Bucer, and Bullinger. The Preſident asked, if he were not afraid to be burned, as were the other before, and to bring his Parents into ſuch diſhonour? He anſwered, that he knew well, That all which would live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, ſhould ſuffer perſecution. And that to him either to live or to die, were advantage in the Lord. And as touching his Parents, Chriſt, ſaid he, doth premoniſh himſelf, That whoſoever loveth Father or Mother more than him, is not worthy to be his, &c. Jeſus Maria! ſaid the Preſident, What youth is this now-adays, which caſt themſelves ſo headlong into the fire! and ſo was he commanded away.

The third examination

Thirdly, He was brought before Benet, Maſter of the Doctors of Sorbon, and another called Jacobine, the fourteenth of October; whereas he, chancing to ſpeak of the Lord, the Doctor began thus to object as followeth.

Perſecut. | Martyrs, and the Cauſes of their Martyrdom.

The Doctor.

See how you, and all ſuch as are of your company, ſimply name the Lord, without putting to the Pronoun, our. So may the Devils well call the Lord, and tremble before his face.

The difference between the Lord, and our Lord.

The Martyr.

The Devils call the Lord in ſuch ſort as the Phariſees did, when they brought the Adultreſs before him, and called him Maſter: yet neither attended they to his Doctrine, nor intended to be his Diſciples: whoſe cauſe I truſt is nothing like to ours, which know, and confeſs (as we ſpeak) him to be the true Lord with all our heart, ſo as true Chriſtians ought to do.

The Doctor.

I know well you hold the Church to be, where the Word is truly preached, and the Sacraments ſincerely miniſtred, according as they are left of Chriſt and his Apoſtles.

The Church.

The Martyr.

That do I believe, and in that will I live and die.

The Doctor.

Do you not believe, that whoſoever is without that Church, cannot obtain remiſſion of his ſins?

The Martyr.

Whoſoever doth ſeparate himſelf from that Church, to make either Sect, Part, or Diviſion, cannot obtain as you ſay.

The Doctor.

Now let us conſider two Churches, the one wherein the Word is rightly preached, and the Sacraments adminiſtred accordingly as they be left unto us: the other, wherein the Word and Sacraments be uſed contrarily. Which of theſe two ought we to believe?

Churches.

The Martyr.

The firſt.

The Doctor.

Well ſaid. Next is now to ſpeak of the Gifts given to the ſaid Church: as the power of the Keys, Confeſſion for remiſſion of ſins, after we be confeſſed to a Prieſt. Alſo we muſt believe the ſeven Sacraments in the ſame Church truly adminiſtred, as they be here in the Churches of Paris, where the Sacrament of the Altar is miniſtred, and the Goſpel truly preached.

The Martyr.

Sir, now you begin to halt. As for my part, I do not receive in the Church more than two Sacraments, which be inſtituted in the ſame for the whole communalty of Chriſtians. And as concerning the power of the Keys, and your Confeſſion, I believe, that for remiſſion of our ſins, we ought to go to none other but only to God, as we read 1 Joh. 1. If we confeſs our ſins, God is faithfull and juſt to pardon our Offences, and he will purge us from all our Iniquities, &c. Alſo in the Prophet David, Pſal. 19. & 32. I have opened my ſin unto thee, &c.

Power of the Keys. Confeſſion.

The Doctor.

Should I not believe that Chriſt, in the time of his Apoſtles, gave to them power to remit ſins?

The Martyr.

The power that Chriſt gave to his Apoſtles, if it be well conſidered, is nothing diſagreeing to my ſaying: and therefore I began to ſay (which here I confeſs) that the Lord gave to his Apoſtles to preach the Word, and ſo to remit ſins by the ſame Word.

The Doctor.

Do you then deny Auricular Confeſſion?

The Martyr.

Yea verily I do.

The Doctor.

Ought we pray to Saints?

The Martyr.

I believe no.

The Doctor.

Tell me that I ſhall ask; Jeſus Chriſt being here upon the Earth, was he not then as well ſufficient to hear the whole World, and to be interceſſor for all, as he is now?

The Martyr. Yes.

The

Perſecut. | Martyrs, and the Cauſes of their Martyrdom.

Interceſſion of Saints.

The Doctor.

But we find, that when he was here on Earth, his Apoſtles made interceſſion for the People; and why may they not do the ſame as well now alſo?

The Martyr.

So long as they were in the World, they exerciſed their Miniſtry, and prayed one for another, as needing humane ſuccours together: but now they being in Paradiſe, all their Prayer that they make, is this, That they wiſh that they which be yet on Earth may attain to their felicity: but to obtain any thing at the Father's hand, we muſt have recourſe only to his Son.

The Doctor.

If one Man have ſuch charge to pray for another, may not he then be called an Interceſſor?

The Martyr.

I grant.

The Doctor.

Well then, you ſay there is but one Interceſſor. Whereupon I infer, that I, being bound to pray for another, need not now to go to Jeſus Chriſt to have him an Interceſſor, but to God alone, ſetting Jeſus Chriſt apart; and ſo ought we verily to believe.

The Martyr.

You underſtand not, Sir, that if God do not behold us in the face of his own well-beloved Son, then ſhall we never be able to ſtand in his ſight. For if he ſhall look upon us, he can ſee nothing but ſin. And if the Heavens be not pure in his Eyes, what ſhall be thought then of Man, ſo abominable and unprofitable, which drinketh Iniquity like water, as Job doth ſay?

Then the other Frier, ſeeing his Fellow to have nothing to anſwer to this, inferred as followeth.

The Doctor.

Note this blaſphemous Doctrine, which maketh Saints equal Interceſſors with Chriſt.

Nay (my Friend) as touching the great mercy of God, let that ſtand, and now to ſpeak of our ſelves, this we know, that God is not diſpleaſed with them which have recourſe unto his Saints.

The Martyr.

Sir, we muſt not do after our own wills, but according to that which God willeth and commandeth. For this is the truſt that we have in him, that if we demand any thing after his Will, he will hear us, 1 John 5.

The Doctor.

As no Man cometh to the preſence of an earthly King or Prince, without means made by ſome about him; ſo, or rather much more, to the heavenly King above, &c.

The Martyr.

To this earthly Example, I will anſwer with another Heavenly Example of the prodigal Son, who ſought no other means to obtain his Father's Grace, but came to the Father himſelf.

Worſhipping of Saints.

Then they came to ſpeak of Adoration, which the ſaid Rebezies diſproved by the Scripture, Acts 10. 13, 14. Apoc. 19. 22. Heb. 10. 14. 12. Where is to be noted, that where the Martyr alledged the 12th to the Hebrews; the Doctors anſwered, that it was in the 11th Chapter, when the place indeed is neither in the 11th, nor in the 12th, but in the 14th Chapter of the Acts. So well ſeen were theſe Doctors in their Divinity.

The Doctor.

The preſence of Chriſt in the Hoſt.

Touching the Maſs, what ſay you? believe you not that when the Prieſt hath conſecrated the Hoſt, our Lord is there as well, and in as ample ſort, as he was hanging upon the Croſs?

The Martyr.

Maſs.

No verily; but I believe that Jeſus Chriſt is ſitting at the right hand of his Father; as appeareth Heb. 10. 1 Cor. 15. Col. 3. and therefore (to make ſhort with you) I hold your Maſs for none other, but for a falſe and counterfeited Service, ſet up by Satan, and retained by his Miniſters, by the which you do annihilate the precious Blood of Chriſt, and his oblation once made of his own Body; and you know right-well that the ſame is ſufficient, and ought not to be reiterated.

The Doctor.

You deceive your ſelves in the word reiteration, for we do not reiterate it ſo as you think: as by Example I will ſhew you. You ſee me now in this religious Garment;

Perſecut. | Martyrs, and the Cauſes of their Martyrdom.

K. Hen. 8.

but if I ſhould put upon me a Souldiers Weed, then ſhould I be diſguiſed, and yet for all that I ſhould remain the ſame ſtill within my Doublet, that I was before in my Friers Weed. So is it with the Sacrifice: We confeſs and grant, that Naturaliter, that is, naturally, he was once offered in Sacrifice; and alſo in ſitting, Naturaliter, that is, naturally, at the right hand of his Father; but Supernaturaliter, & ſubſcriptivè, that is, ſupernaturally, we ſacrifice the ſame without reiteration. Supernaturaliter we ſacrifice him; but that Sacrifice is only diſguiſed, to underſtand that he is contained under that curtain and whiteneſs which you ſee.

Naturaliter.

Supernaturaliter, or ſubſcriptivè.

The Martyr.

The diſguiſed Sacrifice of the Papiſts.

Sir, this I ſay, that ſuch a diſguiſed Sacrifice, is a diabolical Sacrifice; and this you may take for a reſolution.

The Doctor.

And how is your Belief touching the holy Supper?

The Martyr.

The body of Chriſt ſpiritually received in the Sacrament. Spiritually. Corporally.

That if it be miniſtred unto me by the Miniſter, in ſuch uſage, as it hath been left of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, preaching alſo the Word purely withal, I believe that, in receiving the material Bread and Wine, I receive with lively Faith the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt ſpiritually.

The Doctor.

Say corporally.

The Martyr.

No Sir, for his words be Spirit and Life; and let this content you.

The Doctor.

What ſay you, Is it lawful for a Prieſt to marry?

The Martyr.

Matrimony of Miniſters.

I believe it to be lawful for him, in ſuch ſort as the Apoſtle ſaith, Whoſoever hath not the gift of Continence, let him marry; for it is better to marry than to burn. And if this do not content you, further you may read what he writeth of Biſhops and Elders, 1 Tim. 3. and Tit. 1.

And thus theſe Doctors, affirming that he denied Prieſthood, gave him leave to depart, ſaying, God have mercy on you. So be it, ſaid he.

After this, about Octob. 22. the ſaid Rebezies and Frederick Danvile, were brought up to a Chamber in the Caſtle to be racked, to the intent they ſhould utter the reſt of the Congregation. In the which Chamber they found three Counſellors, who thus began with them: Lift up thy hand. Thou ſhalt ſwear by the paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe Image here thou ſeeſt, ſhewing him a great Marmouſet there painted in a paper, &c. Whereunto Rebezies anſwered, Monſieur, I ſwear to you by the paſſion of Chriſt, which is written in my heart. Why doſt not thou ſwear to us, ſaid the Counſellors, as we ſay unto thee: Becauſe, ſaid he, it is a great blaſphemy againſt the Lord. Then the Counſellors read their Depoſitions, and firſt beginning with Rebezies, ſaid; Wilt thou not tell us the truth, what Companions thou knoweſt to be of this Aſſembly? Rebezies named, as he did before, Gravel, Clinet, (which were already burnt) and John Sanſot. To whom they ſaid, that the Court had ordained, that if he would give no other anſwer but ſo, he ſhould be put to the Torture or Rack, and ſo he was commanded to be ſtripped to his ſhirt, having a Croſs put in his hand, being bid to commend himſelf to God & the Virgin Mary; but he neither would receive the Croſs, nor commend himſelf to the Virgin Mary, ſaying, That God was able enough to guard him, and to ſave him out of the Lion's mouth; and ſo, being drawn and ſtretched in the Air, began to cry, Come Lord and ſhew thy ſtrength, that Man do not prevail, &c. But they cried, Tell truth Francis, and thou ſhalt be let down. Nevertheleſs he continued ſtill in his invocation and prayer to the Lord, ſo that they could have no other word but that. And after they had thus long tormented him, the Counſellors ſaid, Wilt thou ſay nothing elſe? I have nothing elſe, ſaid he, to ſay. And ſo they commanded him to be looſed, and be put by the fire ſide. Who, being looſed, ſaid to them; Do you handle thus the poor Servants of God? And the like was done to Frederick Danvile alſo, his Companion, of whom they could have no other anſwer (who at the ſame time was alſo very ſick) but as of the other. So mightily did God aſſiſt and ſtrengthen his Servants, as ever he did any elſe, as by their own Letters and Confeſſion it doth appear. Ex literis Franc. Rebez. in Criſp. l. 6.

Perſecut. | Martyrs, and the cauſes of their Martyrdom.

These constant and true Martyrs of Christ, after they had returned from the Torture unto their fellow Prisoners, ceased not to thank and praise the Lord for his assistance. Frederick did sigh oftentimes, and being asked of his fellows, Why he so did? he said it was not for the evil that he had suffered, but for the Evils that he knew they should suffer afterward. Notwithstanding, said he, be strong, Brethren, and be not afraid, assuring your selves of the aid of God, which hath succoured us, and also will comfort you. Rebezies with the Rack was so drawn and stretched, that one of his shoulders was higher than the other, and his Neck drawn on the one side, so that he could not move himself: and therefore desiring his Brethren to lay him upon his Bed, there he wrote his Confession, which hitherto we have followed. When the night came they rejoyced together, and comforted themselves with Meditation of the Life to come, and contempt of this World, singing Psalms together till it was day. Rebezies cried twice or thrice together, Away from me Satan. Frederick being in Bed with him, asked why he cried, and whether Satan would stop him of his Course? Rebezies said, that Satan set before him his Parents; but by the Grace of God, said he, he shall do nothing against me.

Brotherly compassion.

The comfort of Gods Saint.

The day next following they were brought once or twice before the Counsellors, and required to shew what Fellows they had moe of the said Assembly. Which when they would not declare, the Sentence was read against them, that they should be brought in a Dung-cart to Maulbert place, and there, having a Ball in their Mouths, be tied each one to his Post, and afterward be strangled, and so be turned into Ashes.

Afterward came the Friers and Doctors, Democares, Maillard, and others, to confess them, and offering to them a Cross to kiss, which they refused: then Democares by force made Rebezies to kiss it whether he would or no, crying to them moreover, that they should believe in the Sacrament. What, said Frederick, will ye have us to pluck Christ Jesus out from the right hand of his Father? Dimocares said, that so many of their opinion had suffered death before, and yet none of them all ever did any Miracles as the Apostles, and other holy Martyrs did. Frederick asked them, if they required any Miracle? No, said they, and so stood mute, save only that Democares prayed them to consider well what they had said unto them. Maillard also added, that he would gage his Soul to be damned, but it was true. Frederick answered, That he knew it was contrary.

Dr. Maillard gageth his Soul.

At last, being brought to the place of Execution, a Cross again was offered them, which they refused. Then a Priest standing by, bad them believe in the Virgin Mary. Let God, saith they, reign alone. The People standing by, O mischievous Lutheran! said they: Nay, a true Christian I am, said he. When they were tied to their Stakes, after their Prayers made, when they were bid to be dispatched, one of them comforting the other, said; Be strong, my Brother, be strong: Satan away from us. As they were thus exhorting, one standing by, said, These Lutherans do call upon Satan. One John Morel (which afterward died a Martyr) then standing by at liberty, answered; I pray you let us hear (said he) what they say, and we shall hear them invocate the Name of God. Whereupon the People listned better unto them, to hearken, as well as they could, what they said: they crying still as much as their Mouths being stopped could utter; Assist us, O Lord. And so they, rendring up their Spirits to the hands of the Lord, did consummate their valiant Martyrdom. Ex Crispino lib. 6.

John Morel was afterward burned.

The death Martyrdom of Rebezies and Danvile.

After the Martyrdom of these two above-said, the intention of the Judges was to dispatch the rest one after another in like sort, and had procured already process against twelve or thirteen ready to be judged. But a certain Gentlewoman, then Prisoner amongst them, had presented causes of Exceptions or Refusals against them, whereby the cruel rage of the Enemies was staied to the Month of July following. In the which mean time, as this Persecution was spread into other Countries, first the faithful Cantons of the Switzers perceiving these good Men to be afflicted for the same Doctrine which they preached in their Churches, sent their Ambassadors to the King to make supplication for them.

The same time also came Letters from the County Palatine Elector, tending to the same End, to solicit the King for them. The King standing the same time in great need of the Germans for his Wars, was contented at least, that they should proceed more gently with them; and so the fire for that time ceased. Most of them were sent to Abbies, where they were kept at the charge of the Priors, to be constrained to be present at the Service of Idolatry, especially the young Scholars; of whom some shrunk back, other, being more loosely kept, escaped away. The most part were brought before the Official to make their Confession, and to receive Absolution ordinary. Divers made their Confession ambignous and doubtful, &c. Ex *Johan. These two young Men were also of the Company above specified, and were in Prison, where they sustained such Cruelty, being almost racked to death, that Almerick could not go when he was called to the Court to be judged. And being upon the Rack, he rebuked their Cruelty, and spake so freely, as though he had felt no grief; and as they said, which came to visit him, he testified unto them, that he felt no dolour so long as he was upon it. Both these died in Prison, continuing still firm and constant in the pure Confession of Christ's Church. Ibidem.

Mention is made in the French Story of one Villegaignon, Lieutenant for the French King, who made a Voyage into the Land of Bresil with certain French Ships, and took an Island near to the same adjoyning, and made therein a Fortress. After they had been there a while, Villegaignon (for lack of Victuals, as he pretended) sent certain of them away in a Ship to the River of Plate, toward the Pole Antarctick, a thousand miles off: In the which Ship were these four here mentioned: who forsaking their Ship by occasion of Tempest, were carried back again, and so came to the Land of Bresil, and afterward to their own Countrymen. Villegaignon being much grieved thereat, first charged them with departing without his Letter. Moreover, being terrified in his mind with false Suspicion and vain Dreams, fearing and dreaming lest they had been sent as privy Spies by the Bresilians, because they came from them, and had been friendly entertained of them; he began to devise how he might put them to death under some colour of Treason: but the Cause was Religion: for albeit sometime he had been a Professor of the Gospel, yet afterward growing to some dignity, he fell to be an Apostata, and cruel Persecutor of his Fellows. But when no Proof or Conjecture probable could be found to serve his cruel purpose, he knowing them to be earnest Protestants, drew out certain Articles of Religion for them to answer, and so intrapping them upon their Confession, he laid them in Irons and in Prison, and secretly, with one Executioner and his Page, he took one after another, beginning with John Bordel, and first brought him to the top of a Rock, and there being half strangled, without any judgment threw him into the Sea, and after the like manner, ordered also the rest. Of whom three were thus cruelly murthered and drowned; to wit, John Bordel, Matthew Ver-

He sent them far then enough, because they should never return, pretending that he lacked Victual, but the cause was Religion.

In the ſame year, 1558, ſuffered alſo Geffery Varagle, Preacher in the Vally of Angroigne, at the Town of Thurin in Piedmont, who firſt was a Monk, and ſaid Maſs the ſpace of ſeven and twenty years. Afterward returning from Buske toward Angroigne to preach, as he had uſed before to do, ſent by the Miniſters of Geneva, and other faithful Brethren, was apprehended in the Town of Burges, and brought before the King's Lieutenant; where he was queſtioned with touching divers Articles of Religion: as of Juſtification, Works of Supererogation, Free-will, Predeſtination, Confeſſion, Satisfaction, Indulgences, Images, Purgatory, the Pope, &c. Whereunto he anſwered again in Writing, with ſuch Learning and Reaſon, alledging againſt the Pope's own Diſtinctions, namely, Diſt. 19 cap. Dominus. Diſtinct. 21. cap. In nono. Diſtinct. 21. cap. omnes, & cap. Sacro ſancto: that as the Story reporteth, the Court of Thurin marvelling at his Learning, condemned more for reproach of ſhame, than upon true opinion grounded on Judgment. When he was brought to the place of Execution, the People which ſtood by and heard him ſpeak, declared openly, that they ſaw no cauſe why he ſhould die. A certain old Companion of his, a Prieſt, calling him by his name, Maſter Geffery, deſired him to convert from his opinions. To whom he patiently anſwered again, deſiring him, that he would convert from his Condition. And thus after he had made his Prayer unto God, and had forgiven his Executioner, and all his Enemies, he was firſt ſtrangled, and then burned. In the foreſaid Story relation is made moreover, concerning the ſaid Geffery, that at the time of his burning a Dove was ſeen (as was credibly reported of many) flying and fluttering divers times about the fire; teſtifying (as was thought) the Innocency of this holy Martyr of the Lord. But the Story addeth, that upon ſuch things we muſt not ſtay, and ſo concludeth he the Martyrdom of this bleſſed Man. Ex Criſp. lib. 6. pag. 897.

The lamentable Story of Benet Romain is deſcribed at large among other French Martyrs, by John Criſpine, Printer: the brief recital whereof here followeth. This Benet having Wife and Children at Geneva, to get his living uſed to go about the Country with certain Mercery Ware, having cunning alſo amongſt other things, how to dreſs Corals. As he was coming toward Marſile, and paſſed by the Town Draguignan, he hapned upon one of the like faculty, named Lanteaume Blanc.

Who being deſirous to have of his Corals, and could not agree for the price, alſo knowing that he was one of Geneva, went to a Counſellor of the Court of Aix, being then at Draguignan, whoſe name was Delauris, Son-in-law to Miners, Lord of Opede, the great Perſecutor againſt Merindol, &c.

This Lauris conſulting together with the foreſaid Blanc, and pretending to buy certain of his Coral which he ſaw to be very fair, and knowing alſo that he had to the worth of three hundred Crowns, incontinent after his departing from him, he ſent to the Officer of the Town to attach the ſaid Benet, as one being the greateſt Lutheran in the World. Thus when he was arreſted for the Kings Priſoner, Blanc and his Fellows, which ſought nothing, but only the prey, were ready to ſeize on's Goods, and likewiſe of the other two Men whom he hired to bear his Merchandiſe. Then were theſe three poor Men ſeparated aſunder, and Romain examined before the Conſuls, and the King's Advocate, and other Counſellors; Where he kept his Eaſter; Whether he received at the ſame Eaſter? Whether he was confeſſed before, and faſted the Lent? alſo he was bid to ſay his Pater Noſter, the Creed, and Ave Maria, which two firſt he did, but denied to ſay Ave Maria. Then was he asked for worſhipping of Saints, Women Saints and Men Saints, and when he heard Maſs? He ſaid he would worſhip none but God alone. Maſs he heard none theſe four years, nor ever would: Whereupon he was committed to a ſtinking houſe of Eaſement, with Iron Chains upon his Legs. Lauris thus having his Will upon the poor Man, ſent for the Lieutenant, named Anthony Reveſt, told him what he had done, and willed him to ſee the Priſoner. The Lieutenant being angry that he did ſo uſurp upon his Office, denied to go with him to the Priſoner, excuſing the filthy favour of the place. Notwithſtanding the ſame day, the Lieutenant with another went to the Priſon, and cauſed the ſaid Romain to come before him, of whom he enquired many things, of his dwelling, of his Name and Age, his Wife and Children, of his Faculty, and cauſe of his coming, alſo of his Religion, and all ſuch Points thereto belonging. Unto whom he anſwered again ſimply and truly in all reſpects, as lay in his Conſcience, and thereunto being required (becauſe he could not write) he put to his Mark. After this Confeſſion being thrice made, and his Anſwers taken, certain faithful Brethren of that place found means to come to him, and counſelled him, that ſeeing he had ſufficiently already made Confeſſion of his Faith, he would ſeek means to eſcape out from his Enemies, which ſought nothing but his death, and ſhewed unto him what he ſhould ſay unto the Lieutenant: but he refuſed ſo to do, being willing there to render account of his Faith, and contented to die for the ſame.

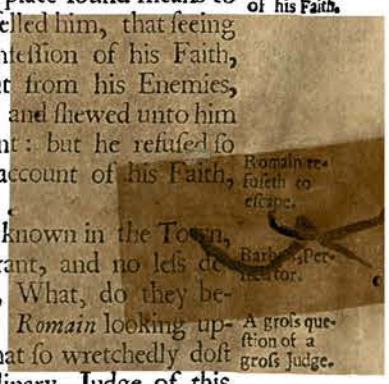
Romain ſealeth the Confeſſion of his Faith.



The fame of his Conſtancy being known in the Town, Judge Barboſi, a Man blind and ignorant, and no leſs deformed, came to ſee him, and asked, What, do they believe, ſaid he, in any God in Geneva? Romain looking upon him, What art thou, ſaid he, that ſo wretchedly doſt blaſpheme? I am, ſaid he, the ordinary Judge of this place. And who hath put thee, ſaid Romain, ſuch a groſs and deformed perſon, in ſuch an Office? Thinkeſt thou that we be Infidels, and no Chriſtians? And if the Devils themſelves do confeſs a God, ſuppoſe you that they of Geneva do deny their God? No, no, We believe in God, we invocate his Name, and repoſe all our truſt in him, &c. Barboſi took ſuch Grief with this, departing from Romain, that he ceaſed not to purſue him to death.

The Lieutenant then being much urged, and much called upon, and alſo threatned by this Barboſi and others, prepared to proceed in Judgment againſt him, taking to him ſuch Judges and Advocates as the Order there required. There was the ſame time an obſervant Frier, which had there preached all the Lent. He being very eager and diligent to have the poor Chriſtian burned, and ſeeing the Judges intentive about the buſineſs, to ſet the matter forward, ſaid, That he would go and ſay Maſs of the Holy Ghoſt, to illuminate their Intents to have the ſaid Romain condemned and burned alive at a little fire. Moreover, he procured Caval and Cavalieri, the Conſuls, to threaten the Lieutenant, that they would complain of him to the High Court of Parliament, if he would not after that ſort condemn him to be burnt. Chriſtians of the ſaid Town, fearing leſt by this racking, danger might happen to the Brethren, ſent to Romain again ſeveral Inſtructions and means how he might be aided, ſuch as ſhould not be againſt God. But when the Lieutenant came, the poor Man forgot his Inſtructions: ſo ſimple he was, and ignorant of the ſubtilties of this World.

When the time came that the Judges were ſet, and the Proceſs ſhould be read, Barboſi with others, whom the Frier had procured, had agreed before, that he ſhould be fired alive, and put to the Rack, to diſcloſe his Fellows, and alſo gagged that he might not ſpeak and infect the reſidue. On the other part, one there was of the Advocates (albeit a Man wholly ſuperſtitious) who, ſeeing the the rage of the other, gave contrary advice; ſaying, That he ſhould be ſent home again, for that he was a Town-dweller of Geneva, neither had taught there any kind of Doctrine, nor brought any Books, neither had they any Informations againſt him: and that which he had ſpoken, was a thing conſtrained by his Oath, forced by the Juſtice. And as touching his Opinion, it was no other, but as other young Men did follow, which were either of the one part, or of the other: and therefore that there remained no more, but only the Lieutenant to give his Verdict, &c. Thus much being ſpoken, and alſo becauſe the Lieutenant was before ſuſpected, and the time of dinner drew near, they aroſe for that time, deferring the matter to another ſeaſon. The Frier obſervant in this mean while was not idle, inciting ſtill the Conſuls and the People, who at the ringing of a Bell being aſſembled together, with the Official and the Prieſts in a great rout, came crying to the Lieutenant to burn the Heretick, or elſe they would fire him, and all his Family: and in ſemblable wiſe did the ſame to the other Judges and Advocates: the Official moreover added, that if it were not better ſeen into than ſo, the Lutherans would take ſuch courage, and ſo ſhut up their Church doors, that no Man ſhould enter in. Then, becauſe the Lieutenant would not take to him other Judges after their minds, in all poſt-haſte the People contributed together, that at their own Charge the matter ſhould be purſued at the Parliament of Aix, and ſo compelled the Lieutenant to bring the Proceſs unto Judgment, every Man crying, To the fire, to the fire, that he may be burned.

Good Counſel of an Advocate.

The Frier ſtill bloweth the Cole of Perſecution.

The Lieutenant being not able any otherwiſe to appeaſe the People, promiſed to bring the matter to the High Court of Aix, and ſo he did. They hearing the Information of the Cauſe, commanded the Lieutenant and the other Judges to deal no further therein, but to ſend up the Proceſs and Priſoner unto them. This went greatly againſt the minds of them of Draguignan, which would fain have had him condemned there. Whereupon Barboſi was ſent out to the Parliament of Aix, where he ſo practiſed and laboured the matter, that the Cauſe was ſent down again to the Lieutenant, and he enjoyned to take unto him ſuch ancient Advocates, as their old Order required; and to certifie them again within eight days. And ſo Romain, by the Sentence of thoſe old Judges, was condemned to be burned alive, if he turned not; if he did, then to be ſtrangled, and before the Execution to be put upon the Rack, to the intent he ſhould diſcloſe the reſt of his Company. From the which Sentence Romain then appealed, ſaying, That he was no Heretick. Whereupon he was carried unto Aix, ſinging the Commandments as he paſſed by the Town of Draguignan. Which when the King's Advocate did ſee, looking out of his Window, he ſaid unto him, That he was one of them that concluded his death, but deſired God to forgive him. Romain anſwered again, God will judge us all in the laſt day of Judgment. After he was come to Aix, he was brought before the Counſellors before whom he remained no leſs conſtant and firm, than afore. Then was a fumiſh Frier ſent, who being three hours with him, could not remove him, came out to the Lords, and ſaid that he was damned: by reaſon whereof, the Sentence given before of his Condemnation was confirmed, and he ſent back again from whence he came.

good Chriſtians ſhould bring Wood to the great Market-place to burn the Lutheran. The day being come, which was Saturday, the ſixteenth of May, the poor Servant of God firſt was brought to the Rack or Torture; where, at his firſt entry, were brought before him the Cords, Irons, and Weights to terrifie him. Then, ſaid they, he muſt utter his Complices, and renounce his Religion, or elſe he ſhould be burned alive. He anſwered with a conſtant heart, That he had no other Complices nor Companions, neither would he hold any other Faith, but that which Jeſus Chriſt did preach by his Apoſtles. Then was he demanded of his Fellows taken with him, whether they did hold the Faith of Rome, or whether he did ever communicate with them, or did know them in the Town, or in the Province to be of his Faith? He ſaid, No. Item, what he had to do in that Town? He ſaid, to ſell his Coral. Item, who gave him counſel to appeal? God, he ſaid, by his Spirit.

Upon this he was put upon the Gin or Rack, where he being torn moſt outragiouſly, ceaſed not ſtill to cry unto God, that he would have pity on him for the love of Jeſus Chriſt his Son. Then was he commanded to call to the Virgin Mary, but he would not. Whereupon his Torture was renewed afreſh, in ſuch cruel ſort, that they thought they had left him for dead. For the which they ſent him to the Barbers, and finding that he could endure no longer, they were afraid leſt he had been paſt, and haſtned to bring him to the fire. So after they had aſſayed him by Prieſts and Friers as much as they could, to make him revolt, they helped the Hangman to bear him, all broken and diſmembred as he was, unto the heap of Wood, where they tied him to a Chain of Iron which was let down upon the Fagots. Romain ſeeing himſelf to be alone lying upon the Wood, began to pray to God: whereat the Friers being moved, ran to him again to cauſe him to ſay Ave Maria. Which when he would not do, they were ſo furious, that they pluckt and tore his Beard. In all theſe Anguiſhes the meek Saint of God had recourſe ſtill to God in his Prayers, beſeeching him to give him patience. Then left they him lying as dead: but ſo ſoon as they deſcended down from the Wood, he began to pray to God again, in ſuch ſort, as one would would have thought that he had felt no hurt. Then another great Frier, ſuppoſing to do more with him than the reſt, came up to the Wood unto him to admoniſh him. Romain thought at firſt, that he had been a faithful Chriſtian by his gentle ſpeech, but afterward when he urged him to pray to the Virgin Mary, he deſired him to depart, and let him alone in peace. As ſoon as he was departed, Romain lifted up his Head and his Eyes on high, praying God to aſſiſt him in his great Tentation. Then a certain Father, a Warden, to bring the people in more hatred, cryed out and ſaid, He blaſpheméth, he blaſpheméth, he ſpeaketh againſt the bleſſed Virgin Mary. Whereat Barboſi cried, Stop his Mouth, let him be gagged. The People cried, To the fire, let him be burned. Then the Hangman ſet fire to the Straw and little Sticks that were about, which incontinent were ſet on fire. Romain ſtill remained hanging in the Air till he died; and was burned all his neither parts well near, when he was ſeen to lift up his Head to Heaven, moving his Lips, without any cry: and ſo this bleſſed Saint rendred his Spirit to God.

The cruel death and Martyrdom of bleſſed Romane.

Of this Aſſembly there were divers Judgments and ſundry Bruits. Some ſaid, that if good Men had been about him, it had gone better with him, and that thoſe Prieſts and Monks, which were about him, were Whoremaſters and infamous. Others ſaid, that he had wrong, and that an hundred of that Company there were, which more deſerved death than he, eſpecially among them which condemned him. Other went away marvelling, and diſputing of his Death and Doctrine. And thus was the Courſe finiſhed to this valiant and thrice bleſſed Martyr and Servant of the Lord Jeſus the Son of God. Ex Criſp. lib. 6. pag. 902.

The Covent of the Jacobin Friers at Dyion.

There was the ſame time a Prieſt that Preached at Dyion ſuch Doctrine, whereat the ſaid Francis being worthily offended, came friendly unto the Prieſt, and reaſoned with him touching his Doctrine, ſhewing by the Scriptures, how and where he had erred. The Prieſt excuſed himſelf, that he was not ſo well inſtructed to diſpute, but he would bring him the next day to a certain learned Man, whom he knew there in the Town, and deſired the ſaid Francis to go with him to Breakfaſt, where he would be glad to hear them two in Conference together. Whereunto when Francis had conſented, the Prieſt incontinent went to the Jacobin Friers, where the matter was thus contrived, that at the Breakfaſt-time Francis there unawares ſhould be apprehended.

When the next day came, the Prieſt brought Francis, according to his appointment, to a Jacobin Frier, who pretending much fair Friendſhip unto him, as one glad and deſirous of his company, beſought him to take a Breakfaſt with him the next morrow, and there they would enter conference together. With this alſo Francis was content, and to prepare himſelf the better to that Conflict, ſate up almoſt all the night writing with his Fellow. The next morrow, as Francis with his Fellow were preparing themſelves toward the Breakfaſt, the Jacobin in the mean time went to the Juſtice of the Town, to admoniſh him to be ready at the time and place appointed. Thus, as the Jacobin was ſtanding at the Juſtices door, The Companion of Francis ſeeing the Frier there ſtand, began to miſtruſt with himſelf, and told Francis, willing him to beware of the Frier. Moreover, the ſame night Francis had in his Dream, That the ſaid Frier ſhould commit him to the Juſtice. But he, either not caring for his Dreams, or elſe not much paſſing for the danger, commited himſelf to the Hands of God, and went. As they were together diſputing in the Covent of the Jacobins, Francis, thus betrayed of the Prieſt, was apprehended by the Officers, carried to Priſon, and within ſeven days after, being Saturday before the Nativity of our Lord, was brought to the place of Execution, where firſt he was ſtrangled, and then burned. Ex ſcripto teſtimonio Genevenſis.

And as touching the Fellow and Companion of this Francis above-mentioned, he was alſo apprehended with him, and put in Priſon; but becauſe he was but a young Novice, and yet not fully confirmed, he recanted, and was delivered.

Prieſts of Rochel.

The Town of Rochel, as it is a place of great commodity becauſe of the Sea, ſo was it not inferiour to other good Towns in France, for nouriſhing and ſupporting the holy Aſſemblies of the Lord. Unto the which Town about the year of our Lord, 1559, reſorted one Peter Arondeau, a Man of baſe Condition, with a little Packet of Mercery Ware there to ſell. Who there being known to adjoyn himſelf to the Church and Congregation of the faithful, was demanded of certain Miniſters of Antichriſt, Whether he would go to hear Maſs or no? He ſaid, that he had been there too oft to his great grief: and that ſince the time that the Lord had taken the Veil from his Eyes, he knew the Maſs to be abominable, forged in the Shop of the Enemy of all Mankind. They to whom he thus anſwered were Prieſts; amongſt whom was one named Monroy, who, taking the other there preſent for Witneſſes, brought him ſtraight to the Lieutenant. The Depoſition being taken, and Information made, it was decreed incontinent, that his Body ſhould be attached. And although by one of his Friends he was admoniſhed to ſave himſelf, and to avoid the Danger, yet he ceaſed not to put himſelf into his Enemies hands; and ſo was led Priſoner. As he was in Priſon many of the faithful came to comfort him, but rather he was able to comfort not only them which came to comfort him, but alſo the other which were there Priſoners with him. The Prieſts left no diligence unſought to ſtir up the Lieutenant, which was of himſelf too much inflamed in ſuch matters.

Arondeau, after many Interrogations, and threatning words, and alſo fair Promiſes of his Pardon, ſtill continued one Man. Then the Lieutenant ſeeing his Conſtancy, condemned him to death. Arondeau praiſing God for his Grace given, did not a little rejoyce that he might ſuffer in that Quarrel, and in token of rejoycing did ſing a Pſalm, being fully reſolved to accept the ſaid Condemnation, without any Appeal. But his Friends not pleaſed with his Reſolution, came to him, and ſo perſwaded with him, not to give his Life ſo good cheap over to his Enemies hands, that he was turned from that, and made his Appeal. The Appeal being entred, the Lieutenant ſeeking to gratifie the Adverſaries of the Goſpel, and eſpecially the Cardinal of Lorain, ſecretly by the backſide of the Town, and out of the High-way conveyed the poor Priſoner unto Paris; who being brought unto Paris by privy Journeys, as is ſaid, was put into Priſon, committed to the Cuſtody of two Preſidents, to wit, Magiſtri, and S(Andre. By the means of whom the Sentence of the Lieutenant was confirmed, and alſo put in Execution the fifteenth day of November, in the year above ſaid: on the which day the ſaid Arondeau was burned quick at the place called St. John in Greve at Paris. The conſtancy heroical which God gave him, and wherein he endured victorious unto death, was a Mirror or Glaſs of Patience unto M. Anne du Bourge, Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris, and to divers others then Priſoners; and was to them a Preparation toward the like death, which ſhortly after they ſuffered.

Not long after the happy end of this bleſſed Martyr, the forenamed Monroy, which was the principal Accuſer and party againſt him, was ſtrucken with a Diſeaſe called * Apoplexia, and thereupon ſuddenly died.

* Apoplexia is a ſickneſs ingendred in the Brain by abundance of groſs humors which deprive them that have it of Speech, Feeling and Moving.

By this, and many other ſuch like Examples, the mighty Judgment of God moſt evidently may appear; who, albeit commonly he doth uſe to begin his Judgment with his own Houſhold in this World, yet neither do his Adverſaries themſelves always eſcape the terrible hand of his Juſtice.

Alſo the Lieutenant which was Condemner tarried not long after the Prieſt, but he was arreſted perſonally to appear before the Kings's Council, through the procurement of a certain Gentleman of Polonie, called Anthony de Legliſe, againſt whom the ſaid Lieutenant had given falſe and wrong Judgment before. By reaſon whereof the foreſaid Gentleman ſo inſtantly did purſue him before the Lords of the Council, that all the Extortions and Pollings of the Lieutenant were there openly diſcovered, and ſo he condemned to pay to the Gentleman a thouſand French Crowns of the Sun, within fourteen days, upon pain of double as much. Alſo he was depoſed of his Office, and there declared unworthy to exerciſe any Royal Office hereafter for ever, with Infamy and Shame perpetual. Ex Criſp. lib. 6. pag. 907.

to us a Spectacle of God's great gracious Mercy towards his elected Chriſtians. This Moutard was attached for certain Words ſpoken to a Prieſt, ſaying thus, That his God of the Hoſt was nothing but an abomination, which abuſed the People of God. Theſe words were taken firſt as ſpoken in his Drunkenneſs. But the next day after, when the ſame words were repeated to him again, to know whether he would abide by the words there uttered, or no? He ſaid, Yea: For it is an abuſe, ſaid he, to ſeek Jeſus Chriſt any other where than in Heaven, ſitting at the Glory and right hand of God his Father: And in this he was ready to live and die. His Proceſs being made, he was condemned to be burned quick. But as he was carried from the Town-houſe to the place of Puniſhment; it was never ſeen a Man with ſuch conſtancy to be ſo aſſured in heart, and ſo to rejoice at that great Honour which God hath called him unto. The Hangman haſted as much as was poſſible, to bind him, and diſpatch him. The Martyr in the midſt of the flaming fire, lifting up his Eyes unto Heaven, cryed to the Lord, that he would have mercy on his Soul, and ſo in great integrity of Faith and Perſeverance, he gave up his life to God. *Ex Jo. Franciſcus ſan Romanus, at Burges in Spain.

Francis ſan Roman, Martyr.

Anno 1540 this Francis was ſent by certain Spaniſh Merchants of Antwerp, to Breme, to take up Money due to be paid of certain Mercants there. Where he being at a Sermon, hearing Maſter Jacobus, Prior ſometimes of the Auſtin Friers of Antwerp, preach, was ſo touched and drawn (through the marvellous working of God's Spirit, at the hearing thereof; albeit having no perfect underſtanding of the Dutch Tongue, that not only he underſtood all that was there ſaid, but alſo coming to the Preacher, and accompanying him home (all his other worldly Buſineſs ſet apart) there recited the whole Contents of his Sermon every word (as they ſaid, which heard the ſaid Miniſter of Breme preach) in perfect form and order as he had preached. After this little taſte, and happy beginning, he proceeded further, ſearching and conferring with learned Men, that in ſhort ſpace he was grown to great towardneſs and ripe Knowledge in the Word of Life. The Miniſter marvelling at the ſudden mutation of the Man, and alſo ſeeing the vehemency of his Zeal joyned withal, began to exhort him how to temper himſelf with Circumſpection and Diſcretion, ſtill more and more inſtructed him in the Word and Knowledge of the Goſpel, which he ſo greedily did receive, as one that could never be ſatisfied: and ſo remained he with the Miniſter three days together, committing his worldly Buſineſs, and Meſſage that he was ſent for, unto his fellow which came with him. Thus being inflamed with another deſire, he ceaſed to ſeek for temporal trifles, ſeeking rather for ſuch French or Dutch Books which he could get to read; and again, read the ſame ſo diligently, that partly by the reading thereof, partly by Maſter Jacobus, and alſo by Maſter Macchabeus (which was there the ſame time) he was able in ſhort time to judg in the chief Articles of our Religion. Inſomuch that he took upon him to write Letters unto his Country-men the Merchants of Antwerp: in the which Letters firſt he gave thanks to God for the Knowledg of his holy Word which he had received. Secondly, he bewailed the great Cruelty and groſs Blindneſs of his Countrymen; deſiring God to open their Eyes and Ears, to ſee and underſtand the Word of their Salvation. Thirdly, he promiſed ſhortly to come to them at Antwerp, to confer with them touching the Grace of God, which he had received. Fourthly, declareth to them his purpoſe in going alſo to Spain, intending there likewiſe to impart to his Parents and other Friends at Bruges, the wholeſom Doctrine which the Lord had beſtowed upon him.

Over and beſides all this, he wrote there a Catechiſm, and divers other Treatiſes in the Spaniſh Tongue. And all this he did in one Month's ſpace.

Francis betrayed by Spaniſh Merchants.

For at the day appointed of his coming, certain Friers were ſet ready to receive him, which took him coming down from his Horſe, rifled his Books, had him into a Merchant's Houſe near hand, where they examined him; with whom he again diſputed mightily: and when they found him not agreeing to their Faith, they bound him hand and foot, crying out upon him, and calling him Lutheran, and burnt his Books before his face, threatning to burn himſelf alſo. At this Diſputation within the houſe divers Spaniards were preſent, which made the Friers more bold. Being demanded to ſhew of what Faith and Religion he was; My Faith (ſaid he) is to confeſs and preach Chriſt Jeſus only, and him crucified, which is the true Faith of the Univerſal Church of Chriſt through the whole World; but this Faith and Doctrine you have corrupted, taking another abominable kind of Life, and by your Impiety have brought the moſt part of the World into blindneſs moſt miſerable. And to explain his Faith to them more expreſly, he recited all the Articles of the Creed.

The Faith and Confeſſion of San Roman.

Which done, then the Friers asked, Whether he believed the Biſhop of Rome to be Chriſt's Vicar, and Head of the Church, having all the Treaſures of the Church in his own power, being able to bind and looſe? alſo to make new Articles, and aboliſh the old, at his own Will and Arbitriment? Hereunto Francis anſwered again, That he believed none of all this, but contrary did affirm, that the Pope was Antichriſt, born of the Devil, being the Enemy of Jeſus Chriſt, transferring to himſelf God's Honour, and which moreover, being incited by the Devil, turned all things upſide down, and corrupted the ſincerity of Chriſt's Religion, partly by his falſe pretenſes beguiling, partly by his extreme cruelty deſtroying the poor flock of Chriſt, &c. With the like boldneſs he uttered his mind likewiſe againſt the Maſs and Purgatory. The Friers could ſuffer him meanly well to ſpeak, till he came to the Pope, and began to ſpeak againſt his Dignity, and their profit; then could they abide no longer, but thundred againſt him words full of Cruelty and Terror. As they were burning of his Books, and began alſo to caſt the New Teſtament into the fire, Francis ſeeing that, began to thunder out againſt them again. The Spaniards then ſuppoſing him not to be in his right Senſes, conveyed him into a Tower ſix miles diſtant from Antwerp, where he was detained in a deep Cave or Dungeon, with much miſery, the ſpace of eight months. In which time of his Impriſonment many grave and diſcreet perſons came to viſit him, exhorting him that he would change his opinion, and ſpeak more modeſtly. Francis anſwered again, That he maintained no Opinion erroneous or heretical; and if he ſeemed to be ſomewhat vehement with the Friers, that was not to be aſcribed to him ſo much as to their own Importunity; hereafter he would frame himſelf more temperately. Whereupon the Spaniards thinking him better come to himſelf, diſcharged him out of Priſon, which was about the time when the Emperor was in his Council of Ratisbone. An. 1541.

The Popes Crown and the Friers bellies are not to be touched.

Francis brought into Priſon.

San Roman delivered out of Priſon.

San Romane being thus freed out of Priſon, came to Antwerp, where he remained about twenty days. From thence he went to Lovan unto a certain Friend of his, named Franciſcus Dryander (who alſo afterward died a Martyr) with whom he had much conference about divers matters of Religion: who gave him counſel not to alter the ſtate of his Vocation, being called to be a Merchant, which ſtate he might exerciſe with a good Conſcience, and do much good. And as touching Religion his Counſel was, That he ſhould ſay or do nothing for favour of Men, whereby the Glory of God ſhould be diminiſhed; but ſo, that he required notwithſtanding in the ſame, a ſound and right judgment conformed to the rule of God's Word, leſt it might chance to him, as it doth to many, who, being carried with an inconſiderate zeal, leave their Vocations, and while they think to do good, and to edifie, they deſtroy and do harm, and caſt themſelves needleſs into danger. It is God, ſaid he, that hath the care of his Church, and will ſtir up faithful Miniſters for the ſame; neither doth he care for ſuch, which raſhly intrude themſelves into that Function without any calling.

Francis Dryander.

Perſecut. | Martyrs, and the cauſes of their Martyrdom.

This Advertiſement of Dryander, Francis did willingly accept, promiſing hereafter to moderate himſelf more conſiderately: But this Promiſe was ſhortly broken, as you ſhall hear. For, paſſing from Dryander he went to Ratisbone, and there having time and opportunity convenient to ſpeak to the Emperor, he ſtepped boldly unto him, beſeeching him to deliver his Country and Subjects of Spain from falſe Religion, and to reſtore again the ſincerity of Chriſt's Doctrine, declaring and proteſting, that the Princes and Proteſtants of Germany were in the truer part, and that the Religion of Spain being drowned in ignorance and blindneſs, was greatly diſſonant from the true and perfect Word of God, with many other words pertaining to the ſame effect. The Emperor all this while gave him gentle hearing, ſignifying that he would conſider upon the matter, and ſo do therein, as he truſted ſhould be for the beſt. This quiet anſwer of the Emperor miniſtred to him no little encouragement of better hope; and albeit he might perceive there in the City many Examples to the contrary, yet all that diſcouraged not him, but he went the ſecond, and alſo the third time, unto the Emperor, who quietly again ſo anſwered him as before. And yet this our Francis not ſatisfied in his mind, ſought with greater ardency the fourth time to ſpeak to the Emperor, but he was repulſed by certain of the Spaniards about the Emperor, who incontinent, without all further hearing or adviſing the Cauſe, would have thrown him headlong into the River of Danubius, had not the Emperor ſtaid them, and willed him to be judged by the Laws of the Empire. By which Commandment of the Emperor he was reſerved and detained with other Malefactors in bands, till the Emperor took his Voyage into Africk. Then Francis, with other Captives following the Court, after that the Emperor was come into Spain, was there delivered to the Inquiſitors; by whom he was laid in a dark Priſon under the ground. Oft and many times he was called for to Examination, where he ſuffered great Injuries and Contumelies, but ever remained in his Conſcience firm and unmovable. The Articles whereupon he ſtood, and for which he was condemned, were theſe:

The boldneſs of San Roman to the Emperor.

The Emperors gentle Anſwer.

Francis San Roman brought into Spain.

The Articles of San Roman.

That Life and Salvation in the ſight of God, cometh to no Man in his own Strength, Works, or Merits, but only by the free Mercy of God, in the Blood and Sacrifice of his Son our Mediator.

That the Sacrifice of the Maſs, which the Papiſts do recount available, ex opere operato, for the Remiſſion of ſin, both to the quick and the dead, is horrible Blaſphemy.

That Auricular Confeſſion with numbring up of ſins, that Satisfaction, Purgatory, Pardons, Invocation of Saints, worſhipping of Images, be meer Blaſphemy againſt the living God.

Item, That the Blood of Chriſt is prophaned and injured in the ſame aforeſaid.

After the Inquiſitors perceived, that by no means he could be reclaimed from his Aſſertions, they proceeded at laſt to the Sentence, condemning him to be burned for an Heretick. Many other Malefactors were brought alſo with him to the place of Execution, but all they were pardoned and diſmiſſed; he only for the Goſpel, being odious to the whole World, was taken and burned. As he was led to the place of ſuffering, they put upon him a Miter of Paper, painted full of Devils, after the Spaniſh guiſe.

Barabbas delivered, and Chriſt taken.

Furthermore, as he was brought out of the City-gate to be burned, there ſtood a wooden Croſs by the way, whereunto Francis was required to do homage; which he refuſed, anſwering, That the manner of Chriſtians is not to worſhip Wood, and he was, ſaid he, a Chriſtian. Hereupon aroſe great Clamour among the vulgar People, for that he denied to worſhip the wooden Croſs. But this was turned incontinent into a miracle. Such was the blind rudeneſs of that People, that they did impute this to the Divine Vertue, as given to the Croſs from Heaven, for that it would not ſuffer it ſelf to be worſhipped of an Heretick: and immediately, for the opinion of that great Miracle, the Multitude with their Swords did hew it in pieces, every Man thinking himſelf happy that might carry away ſome Chip or Fragment of the ſaid Croſs.

The manner of Chriſtians is not to worſhip Wood.

A great Spaniſh Miracle.

Francis conſtant to the death.

When he was come to the place where he ſhould ſuffer, the Friers were buſie about him to have him recant, but he continued ever firm. As he was laid upon the heap of Wood, and the fire kindled about him, he began a little at the feeling of the fire, to lift up his head toward Heaven; which when the Inquiſitors peeceived, hoping that he would recant his Doctrine, they cauſed him to be taken from the fire. But when they perceived nothing leſs in him, the Adverſaries being fruſtrate of their Expectation, willed him to be thrown in again, and ſo was he immediately diſpatched.

The death and Martyrdom of Fran San Roman.

After that the Martyrdom of this bleſſed Man was thus conſummate, the Inquiſitors proclaimed openly, that he was damned in Hell, and that none ſhould pray for him; yea, and that all were Hereticks whoſoever doubted of his Damnation. Nevertheleſs certain of the Emperors Souldiers gathered of his Aſhes. Alſo the Engliſh Ambaſſador procured a portion his Bones to be brought unto him, knowing right well that he died a Martyr. Yet this could not be ſo ſecretly done, but it came to the Ears of the Inquiſitors, and of the Emperor. Wherefore the Soldiers going in great danger of life, were committed to Priſon. Neither did the Ambaſſadour himſelf eſcape clear from the danger of the Pope's Scourge; for he was upon the ſame ſequeſtred from the Court, and commanded to be abſent for a ſpace. And thus much concerning the notable Martyrdom of this bleſſed San Roman. Ex Franc. Encena. Hiſpano, teſte oculato.

Rochus, at San Lucar in Spain, Anno 1545.

Rochus, Martyr.

Rochus was born in Brabant, his Father dwelling in Antwerp. By his Science he was a Carver or Graver of Images; who, as ſoon as he began firſt to taſte the Goſpel, he fell from making ſuch Images as uſe to ſerve for Idolatry in Temples, and occupied himſelf in making Seals, ſave only that he kept ſtanding on his Stall an Image of the Virgin Mary artificially graven, for a Sign of his Occupation. It happened unhappily, that a certain Inquiſitor paſſing by in the ſtreet, and beholding the carved Image, asked of Rochus what was the price thereof? which when Rochus had ſet (not willing belike to ſell it) the Inquiſitor bad him ſcarce half the Money. The other anſwered again, That he could not ſo live of that Bargain. But ſtill the Inquiſitor urged him to take his offer. To whom Rochus again, It ſhall be yours (ſaid he) if you will give me that which my Labour and Charges ſtand me in, but of that price I cannot afford it: yet had I rather break it in pieces. Yea, ſaith the Inquiſitor, break it? let me ſee thee; Rochus with that took up a Chiſel, and daſhed it upon the Face of the Image, wherewith the Noſe, or ſome other part of the Face was blemiſhed. The Inquiſitor ſeeing that, cried out as he were mad, and commanded Rochus forthwith to Priſon. To whom Rochus cried again, that he might do in his own Works what he liſted. And if the Workmanſhip of the Image were not after his fancy, what was that to them? But all this could not help Rochus, but within three days after Sentence was given upon him, that he ſhould be burned, and ſo was he committed to the Executioners. As Rochus was entring the place there to be burned, he cried with a loud voice, asking among the multitude which there ſtood by, if any Man of Flanders were there? It was anſwered, yea; and alſo that there were two Ships already fraught, and appointed to ſail to Flanders. Then, ſaid he, I would deſire ſome of them to ſignifie to my Father dwelling in Antwerp, that I was burned here in this City, and for this Cauſe which you all have heard. And thus after his Prayers made to God, this good Man being wrongfully condemned, after his godly life made this bleſſed end. An. 1545.

The death and Martyrdom of Rochus.

And leſt this ſo rare and ſtrange Example of Cruelty ſhould ſeem to lack credit, in the fifth Book of the Hiſtory of Pantaleon there is recorded, That a certain Spaniard coming to Antwerp, made diligent Inquiſition there amongſt the Image-makers, to find out the Parents of this Rochus, and ſignified to them what had hapned to their Son, as hath been by his ſaid Parents and Friends declared: inſomuch that it is alſo teſtified, that his Father at the hearing of the ſaid Meſſage, for ſorrow thereof died ſhortly after. Ex Pantal. lib. 5.

Furthermore, beſides theſe above-recited, and alſo before their time, I hear and underſtand by faithful Relation, that divers other have been in the ſaid Country of Spain, whoſe Hearts God had marvelouſly illuminate and ſtirred up, both before, and alſo ſince the coming in of the Inquiſition, to ſtand in defence of his Goſpel, and which were alſo perſecuted for the ſame, and are ſaid to have died in Priſon: Albeit their Names as yet are unknown, for the Stories of that Country be not yet come to light, but, I truſt, ſhortly ſhall, as partly ſome Intelligence I have thereof. In the mean time we will come now to the Inquiſition of Spain, ſpeaking ſomething of the ceremonial Pomp, and alſo of the barbarous Abuſe and Cruelty of the ſame.

Divers good men and Martyrs of Spain died in Priſon.

The execrable Inquiſition of Spain.

THE cruel and barbarous Inquiſition of Spain firſt began by King Ferdinandus and Elizabeth his Wife, and was inſtituted againſt the Jews, which after their Baptiſm maintained again their own Ceremonies. But now it is practiſed againſt them that be never ſo little ſuſpected to favour the Verity of the Lord. The Spaniards, and eſpecially the great Divines there, do hold, That this holy and ſacred Inquiſition cannot err, and that the holy Fathers the Inquiſitors cannot be deceived.

The form and manner of the Inquiſition of Spain.

The Spaniſh Inquiſition cannot err.

Three ſorts of Men moſt principally be in danger of theſe Inquiſitors. They that be greatly rich, for the ſpoil of their Goods. They that be learned, becauſe they will not have their Miſdealings and ſecret Abuſes to be eſpied and detected. They that begin to increaſe in Honour and Dignity, leſt they being in Authority, ſhould work them ſome ſhame or diſhonour.

Three ſorts of men chiefly in danger of the Inquiſition.

The Abuſe of this Inquiſition is moſt execrable. If any Word ſhall paſs out of the mouth of any, which may be taken in evil part; yea, tho no Word be ſpoken, yet if they bear any grudg or evil Will againſt the Party, incontinent they command him to be taken, and put in an horrible Priſon, and then find out Crimes againſt him at leiſure, and in the mean time no Man living is ſo hardy once to open his Mouth for him. If the Father ſpeak one word for his Child, he is alſo taken and caſt into Priſon as a Favourer of Hereticks. Neither is it permitted to any perſon to go in to the Priſoner; but there he is alone in ſuch a place where he cannot ſee ſo much as the ground where he is; and is not ſuffered either to read or write, but there indureth in darkneſs palpable, in horrors infinite, in fear miſerable, wreſtling with the Aſſaults of death.

Example of the ſame well appeareth in Rochus abovementioned.

By this it may be eſteemed, what trouble and ſorrow, what penſive ſighs and cogitations they ſuſtain, which are not throughly inſtructed in holy Doctrine. Add moreover to theſe Diſtreſſes and Horrors of the Priſon, the Injuries, Threats, Whippings, and Scourgings, Irons, Tortures, and Racks which they indure. Sometimes alſo they are brought out, and ſhewed in ſome higher place to the People, as a Spectacle of rebuke and infamy. And thus are they detained there ſome many years, and murthered by long Torments, and whole days together intreated much more cruelly (out of all compariſon) than if they were in the Hangman's Hands to be ſlain at once. During all this time, what is done in the proceſs, no perſon knoweth, but only the holy Fathers and the Tormentors, which are ſworn to execute the Torments. All is done in ſecret, and (as great Myſteries) paſs not the hands of theſe holy ones. And after all theſe Torments ſo many years indured in the Priſon, if any Man ſhall be ſaved, it muſt be by gueſſing. For all the Proceedings of the Court of that execrable Inquiſition are open to no Man, but all is done in hugger-mugger, and in cloſe corners, by Ambages, by Covert-ways, and ſecret Counſels: The Accuſer is ſecret, the Crime ſecret, the Witneſs ſecret, whatſoever is done is ſecret, neither is the poor Priſoner ever advertiſed of any thing. If he can gueſs who accuſed him whereof, and wherefore, he may be pardoned peradventure of his Life: but this is very ſeldom, and yet he ſhall not incontinent be ſet at liberty before he hath endured long time infinite Torments, and this is called their Penitence, and ſo is he let go; and yet not ſo, but that he is enjoyned, before he paſs the Inquiſitor's hands, that he ſhall wear a Garment of yellow Colours, for a note of publick infamy to him and his whole race: and if he cannot gueſs right, ſhewing to the Inquiſitors by whom he was accuſed, whereof, and wherefore, (as is before touched) incontinent the horrible Sentence of Condemnation is pronounced againſt him, that he ſhall be burned for an obſtinate Heretick. And ſo yet the Sentence is not executed by and by, but after that he hath indured Impriſonment in ſome heinous Priſon.

And thus have ye heard the form of the Spaniſh Inquiſition. By the Vigour and Rigour of this Inquiſition, many good true Servants of Jeſus Chriſt have been brought to death, eſpecially in theſe later years, ſince the Royal and peaceable Reign of this our Queen Elizabeth. The Names and Stories of whom partly we will here recite, according as we have faithful Records of ſuch as have come to our hands by writing. The other which be not yet come to our knowledg, we will defer till further intelligence and opportunity, by the Lord's aid and leave, ſhall ſerve hereafter.

Divers Martyrs in Spain ſince the time of Q. Elizabeth.

Anno 1556 Maii 21, in the Town of Valledolid, where commonly the Council of the Inquiſition is wont to be kept, the Inquiſitors had brought together many Priſoners, both of high and low eſtate, to the number of thirty; alſo the Coffin of a certain Noble Woman, with her Picture lying upon it, which had been dead long before, there to receive Judgment and Sentence. To the hearing of which Sentence, they had ordained in the ſaid Town three mighty Theaters or Stages: Upon the firſt was placed Dame Jane, Siſter to K. Philip, and chief Regent of his Realms; alſo Prince Charles, King Philip's Son, with other Princes and States of Spain. Upon the other Scaffold mounted the Archbiſhop of Sevil, Prince of the Synagogue of the Inquiſitors, with the Council of the Inquiſition; alſo other Biſhops of the Land, and the King's Council with them.

Thirty Chriſtian Priſoners brought before the Council of the Inquiſition.

Three Stages.

After that the Princes and other ſpiritual Judges and Counſellors were thus ſet in their places, with a great guard of Archers and Halberdiers, and harneſſed Souldiers, with four Heraulds alſo of Arms giving their attendence to the ſame, and the Earl of Buendia bearing the naked Sword, all the Market-place where the Stages were, being invironed with an infinite multitude of all ſorts of the World there ſtanding, and gazing out of Windows and Houſes to hear and ſee the Sentences and Judgments of this Inquiſition: Then after all were brought forth, as a Spectacle and Triumph, the poor Servants and Witneſſes of Jeſus Chriſt, to the number (as is aboveſaid) of thirty, clothed with their Sanbenito, (as the Spaniards do call it) which is a manner of Veſture of yellow Cloth, coming both before them and behind them, ſpangled with red Croſſes, and having burning Cierges in their hands: alſo before them was born a Crucifix covered with black linen Cloth, in token of Mourning. Moreover, they which were to receive the Sentence of death, had Miters of Paper upon their heads, which the Spaniards call Coracas. Thus they being produced, were placed in their order, one under another, according as they were eſteemed culpable; ſo that firſt of all ſtood up Doctor Cacalla, an Auſten Frier, a Man notable and ſingular in knowledg of Divinity, Preacher ſometime to Charles the fifth Emperor, both in higher and lower Germany.

The Popes great Collector, or Procurator fiſcal.

The Archbiſhop of Sevil.

The Biſhop of Valence.

Theſe things thus diſpoſed, then followed a Sermon made by a Dominick Frier, which indured about an hour. After the Sermon finiſhed, the Procurator General, with the Archbiſhop went to the Stage where the Princes and Nobles ſtood, to miniſter a Solemn Oath unto them upon the Crucifix painted in the Taſs-Book; the Tenor of which Oath was this: Your Majeſties ſhall ſwear, that you will favour the holy Inquiſition, and alſo give your conſent unto the ſame; and not only that you ſhall by no manner of way hinder and impeach the ſame; but alſo you ſhall imploy the uttermoſt of your help and endeavour hereafter to ſee all them to be executed, which ſhall ſwerve from the Church of Rome, and adjoyn themſelves to the Sect of the Lutheran Hereticks, without all reſpect of any Perſon or Perſons of what Eſtate, Degree, Quality, or Condition ſoever they be.

And thus much for the firſt Article of the Oath; the ſecond was this as followeth:

Item, Your Majeſties ſhall ſwear, that you ſhall conſtrain all your Subjects to ſubmit themſelves to the Church of Rome, and to have in reverence all the Laws and Commandments of the ſame; and alſo to give your aid againſt all them whoſoever ſhall hold of the Hereſie of the Lutherans, or take any part with them.

In this ſort and manner, when all the Princes and States every one in their degree had received their Oath, then the Archbiſhop, lifting up his hand, gave them his Benediction, ſaying, God bleſs your Highneſſes, and give you long life. This ſolemn Pageant thus finiſhed, at laſt the poor Captives and Priſoners were called out, the Procurator fiſcal, or the Pope's great Collector, firſt beginning with Dr. Cacalla, and ſo proceeding to the other in order, as hereafter in the Table which followeth, with their Names and their Judgments, is deſcribed.

1. Dr. Cacalla a Frier Auguſtine.

Dr. Cacalla, a Frier Auguſtine, Preacher ſometime to Charles 5th. Martyr.

Before the Pope's great Proctor, or Collector fiſcal, firſt was called forth Doctor Auſtin Cacalla. This Doctor was a Frier of Auſtin's Order, and Prieſt of the Town of Valledolid, and Preacher ſometimes to the Emperor Charles the fifth, a Man well accounted of for his Learning. Who for that he was thought to be as the Standard-bearer to the Goſpellers (whom they called Lutherans) and Preacher and Doctor unto them; therefore he being firſt called for, was brought from his Stage nearer to the Proctor fiſcal, there to hear the Sentence of his Condemnation, which was, That he ſhould be degraded, and preſently burned, and all his Goods confiſcate to the Profit and Advancement of Juſtice.

The Inquiſitors of Spain.

2. Francis de Bivero Prieſt of Valledolid, and Brother to the foreſaid Cacalla.

Francis de Bivero, Prieſt and Brother to Cacalla, Mar-

The ſecond Priſoner, and next to Doctor Cacalla that was called, was Francis de Bivero his Brother, Prieſt alſo of Valledolid, who received likewiſe the ſame Sentence of Condemnation. And to the intent he ſhould not ſpeak any thing to the prejudice, or againſt the Abuſe of the ſacred Inquiſition, as he before had done, both within and without the Priſon, with much boldneſs; and alſo becauſe he was much favoured of the People; to the end therefore that no Commotion ſhould come by his ſpeaking, his Mouth was ſo ſtopped and ſhut up, that he could not ſpeak one Word.

3. Dame Blanch de Bivero.

Dame Blanch ſiſter to them, Martyr.

The third was Dame Blanch, Siſter to the other two aforeſaid, againſt whom alſo was pronounced the like Sentence, as upon her Brethren before.

4. John de Bivero.

John de Bivero, Brother to the ſame, Martyr.

The fourth was John de Bivero, Brother to the ſame Kindred, who was alſo judged an Heretick, and condemned to perpetual Priſon, and to bear his Sanbenito all his Life long; which is an habiliment of diſhonour.

5. Dame

5. Dame Conſtance de Bivero, Sister to the ſame aforeſaid.

D. Conſtance de Bivero, another ſister, martyr.

Dame Conſtance de Bivero, was the fifth Siſter to the other before ſpecified, and Widow of Ferdinando Ortis, dwelling ſometime at Valled lid, who was alſo condemned, with the like Sentence with her Brethren, to be burned.

6. The Coffin with the dead Corps of Dame Leonore de Bivero, the Mother of theſe aforeſaid.

The Biſhop of Orenſe.

D. Leonore de Bivero, Mother to theſe Martyrs above, burnt after her death.

The ſixth Thunderbolt of Condemnation was thundred out againſt a poor Coffin, with the dead Corps of Dame Leonore de Bivero, Mother to theſe above-named, being her ſelf the ſixth, and being already dead long before at Valledolid. Above her Coffin was her Picture laid, which was alſo condemned with her dead Corps to be burned for an Heretick: and yet I never heard of any Opinion that this Picture did hold, either with or againſt the Church of Rome. This good Mother, while ſhe lived, was a worthy maintainer of Chriſt's Goſpel, with great integrity of life; and retained divers aſſemblies of the Saints in her houſe for the preaching of the Word of God. In fine, her Corps and Image alſo, being brought before the Fiſcal, was condemned likewiſe (as the Mother with her ſeven Children in the Book of Machabees) to be burned for a Lutheran Heretick, and all her goods to be ſeized to the behoof of the ſuperior Powers, and alſo her houſe utterly to be razed and caſt down to the ground: and for a memorial of the ſame, a Marble Stone was appointed to be ſet up in the houſe, wherein the ſaid cauſe of her burning ſhould be engraved.

This good mother, with her children, burned by Antichriſt, reſembled to the mother with her 7 children burned in the Book of Machabees.

The Inquiſitors of Spain.

7. Mr. Aſſonſe Perez, Prieſt of Valence.

M. Aſſonſe Perez, martyr.

In the ſeventh place was condemned Maſter Aſſonſe Perez, Prieſt of Valence, firſt to be degraded, and after to be burned as an Heretick, and all his goods confiſcate and likewiſe ſeized to the behoof of the Superiority.

The degradation of Mr. Cacalla, Francis his Brother, and Aſſonſe.

When theſe ſeven aforeſaid had received their Sentence, then the Biſhop of Valence, in his Pontificalibus, cauſed Dr. Cacalla, Francis his Brother, and Aſſonſe Perez, to be apparelled and reveſted in Prieſtly Veſture. Which done, he took from them firſt the Chalice out of their hands, and ſo all their other Trinkets in order, according to their accuſtomed ſolemnity. And thus they being degraded, and all their Prieſtly Unctions taken from their fingers, alſo their Lips and their crowns razed, ſo were their yellow Habits of Sanbenito put over their Shoulders again, with their Miters alſo of Paper upon their Heads. This done, Dr. Cacalla began to ſpeak, praying the Princes and Lords to give him audience: but that being not granted unto him, he was rudely repulſed, and returned again to his ſtanding. Only thus much he proteſted clearly and openly, That his Faith, for which he was ſo handled, was not heretical, but conſonant to the pure Word of God. For the which alſo he was preſt and ready to ſuffer death as a true Chriſtian, and not as an Heretick: Beſides many other worthy Sentences of great conſolation, which he there uttered in the mean ſpace, whiles the Judges were buſie in their Sentences againſt the reſidue of the Martyrs.

Dr. Catalla not ſuffered to ſpeak.

8. Don Peter Sarmiento, Knight of the Order of Alcantara.

Don Peter Sarmiento, re-condemned for a perpetual Priſoner.

The eighth that was brought before the foreſaid Fiſcal was Don Peter Sarmiento, Knight of the Order of Alcantara, dwelling at Valence, and Son of Marqueſs de Poza, who was pronounced an Heretick, and judged to bear the mark and habit of diſhonour all his life, and condemned to perpetual Priſon, with the loſs of his Order, and of all his Goods. To whom moreover it was enjoined, never to wear any more Gold, Silver, Pearls, or any precious Stone about him.

The Inquiſitors of Spain.

9. Dame Mencia, Wife of the ſaid Don Peter.

D. Mencia, Wife of D. Peter condemned for a perpetual Priſoner.

Ninthly, after him was called Dame Mencia de Figueroa, Wife of the foreſaid Don Peter Sarmiento. Who likewiſe, being proclaimed for an Heretick, was condemned to the ſame puniſhment as her Husband was.

10. Don Lovis de Roxas, Son and Heir of the Marqueſs de Poza.

Don Lovis de Roxas condemned to bear a Sanbenito.

Next after her was called and brought forth Don Lovis de Roxas, Son and Heir of the Marqueſs de Poza: who alſo being declared an Heretick, for the great ſuit and labour that was made for him, was condemned only to bear his Sanbenito unto the Town-houſe, and his Goods to be confiſcate.

11. Dame Anne Henriques.

Dame Ann Henriques judged as an Heretick to bear a Sanbenito.

After theſe Sentences being thus pronounced, they which were condemned to be burned, with the Coffin of the dead Lady and her Picture upon the ſame, were committed to the ſecular Magiſtrate, and their Executioners, which were commanded to do their endeavour. Then were they all incontinent taken, and every one ſet upon an Aſs, their Faces turned backward, and led with a great Garriſon of armed Souldiers unto the place of puniſhment, which was without the Gate of the Town, called Del Campo.

14 Martyrs in Spain burned.

When they were come to the place, there were fourteen Stakes ſet up of equal diſtance one from another, whereunto every one ſeverally being faſtned according to the faſhion of Spain, they were all firſt ſtrangled, and then burned and turned to Aſhes, ſave only Antony Huezuello, who forſomuch as he had, both within and without the Priſon, vehemently deteſted the Pope's Spirituality, therefore he was burned alive, and his mouth ſtopped from ſpeaking. And thus theſe faithful Chriſtians, for the verity and pure Word of God, were led to death as Sheep to the Shambles: who not only moſt Chriſtianly did comfort one another, but alſo did ſo exhort all them there preſent, that all Men marvelled greatly, both to hear their ſingular conſtancy, and to ſee their quiet and peaceable end.

It is reported that, beſides theſe aforeſaid, there remained yet behind thirty ſeven other Priſoners, at the ſaid Town of Valledolid, reſerved to another Tragedy and Spectacle of that bloody Inquiſition. Ex quin. parte Mart. Gall. Impreſſ. pag. 474.

Furthermore, whereas the ſtory of the ſaid Inquiſition being ſet out in the French Tongue, doth reckon the number of the Martyrs above-mentioned, to be thirty, and yet, in particular declaration of them, doth name no more but eight and twenty; here is therefore to be noted, That either this number lacked two of thirty, or elſe that two of the ſaid Company were returned back without judgment into the Priſon again.

And thus much for this preſent, touching the proceeding of the Church of Spain, in their Inquiſition againſt the Lutherans, that is, againſt the true and faithful Servants of Jeſus Chriſt. Albeit there be other Countries alſo, beſides Spain, ſubject unto the ſame Inquiſition, as Naples and Sicily: in which Kingdom of Sicily, I hear it credibly reported, That every third year are brought forth to Judgment and Execution a certain number, after the like ſort of Chriſtian Martyrs, ſometimes twelve, ſometimes ſix, ſometimes more, ſometimes leſs. Among whom there was one, much about the ſame year abovementioned, Anno 1559; who coming from Geneva to Sicily, upon zeal to do good, was at laſt laid hand on; and being condemned the ſame time to the fire, as he ſhould take his death, was offered there of the Hangmen to be ſtrangled, having the Cord ready about his Neck; but he, notwithſtanding, refuſed the ſame, and ſaid, That he would feel the fire; and ſo endured he, ſinging with all his might unto the Lord, till he was bereaved both of Speech and Life, in the midſt of the flame: ſuch was the admirable conſtancy and fortitude of that valiant Souldier.

The Italian Martyrs.

N. Encenas, otherwise called Dryander, at Rome, Anno 1546.

Encenas, or Dryander, martyr.

THis Encenas, or Dryander, a Spaniard, born at Bruges, was Brother to Franciscus Encenas the learned Man, so oft before mentioned: and was also the teacher or instructer in knowledg of Religion to Diazius the godly Martyr above recorded. He was sent of his superstitious Parents, being young, unto Rome; Who there, after long continuance, growing up in Age and Knowledg, but especially being instructed by the Lord in the truth of his Word, after he was known to mislike the Pope's Doctrine, and the impure doings at Rome, was apprehended and taken of certain of his own Country-men, and some of his own houshold Friends at Rome, at the same time when he was preparing to take his journey to his Brother Franeis Encenas in Germany. Thus he, being betrayed and taken by his own Country-men, was brought before the Cardinals, and there committed to strait Prison. Afterward he was brought forth to give testimony of his Doctrine, which he in the presence of the Cardinals, and in the face of all the Pope's Retinue, boldly and constantly defended. So that not only the Cardinals, but especially the Spaniards being therewith offended, cried out upon him that he should be burned. The Cardinals, first before the Sentence of Death should be given, came to him, offering, if he would take it (after ter the manner of the Spaniards) the Badg of Reconciliation; which hath the name of Sanbenit's Cloth, made in form of a Mantle, going both before him and behind him, with signs of the red Cross. But Encenas, still constant in the profession of Truth, denied to receive any other Condition or Badg, but only the Badg of the Lord, which was to seal the Doctrine of his Religion with the testimony of his Blood. At last the matter was brought to that issue, that the faithful Servant and Witness of Christ was judged and condmned to the Fire; where he, in the sight of the Cardinals, and in the face of the Apostolick See pretensed, gave up his life for the testimony of the Gospel. Ex Pantal. lib. 6. Ex Crisp. & aliis.

Certain Popish Spaniards at Rome.

And for so much as mention hath been made both in this story, and many other before, of Franciscus Encenas his Brother, here is not to be permitted, how the said Francis being a Man of notable learning as ever was any in Spain, being in the Emperor's Court at Bruxels, offered unto the Emperor, Charles the 5th, the New Testament of Christ translated into Spanish. For the which he was cast into Prison, where he remained in sorrowful captivity and calamity the space of fifteen months, looking for nothing more than present death. At last, through the marvellous providence of Almighty God, the first day of February, Anno 1545. at eight of the Clock after Supper, he found the doors of the Prison standing open, and he secretly was moved in his mind to take the occasion offered, and to shift for himself; and so he issuing out of the Prison, without any hasty pace, but going as leisurely as he could, escaped from thence, and went straight to Germany.

The imprisonment and escape of Fr. Encenas.

Faninus, at Ferraria, Anno 1550.

Faninus martyr.

Faninus, born in Faventia, a Town in Italy, through the reading of godly Books translated into the Italian Tongue, (having no perfect skill in the Latin) was converted from great blindness, to the wholsome knowledg of Christ and of his Word. Wherein he took such a sweetness, and so grew up in the meditation of the same, that he was able in short time to instruct other. Neither was there any diligence lacking in him to communicate that abroad which he had received of the Lord: being so in his mind perswaded, that a Man, receiving by the Spirit of God the knowledg and illumination of his Verity, ought in no case to hide the same in silence, as a Candle under a Bushel. And therefore being occupied diligently in that behalf, albeit he used not publickly to preach, but by private conference to teach, he was at length by the Pope's Clients espied, apprehended, and committed to Prison. Albeit he remained not long in Prison, for by the earnest perswasions and prayers of his Wife, his Children, and other Friends, he was so overcome, that he gave over, and so was dismissed shortly out of Prison. After this, it was not long but he fell into horrible perturbation of mind; insomuch that unless the great Mercy of God had kept him up, he had fallen into utter desperation, for slipping from the Truth, and preferring the love of his Friends and Kindred before the Service of Jesus Christ, whom he so earnestly before had professed. This Wound went so deep into his heart, that he could in no case be quieted, before he had fully fixed and determined in his mind, to adventure his life more faithfully in the Service of the Lord.

P. Julius the third.

Faninus overcome by his Wife and Brethren.

Whereupon he, being thus inflamed with zeal of Spirit, went about all the Country of Romaigna, publickly preaching the pure Doctrine of the Gospel, not without great fruit and effect in places as he went. As he was thus labouring, it so fell out that he was apprehended again, Anno 1547, in a place called Bagnacavallo, where also he was condemned to be burned. But he said his hour was not yet come, and the same to be but the beginning of his Doctrine: and so it was; for shortly after he was removed unto Ferraria, where he was detained two years. At last the Inquisitors of the Pope's Heresies condemned him to death, Anno 1549; and yet his time being not come, he remained after that to the month of September, An. 1550. In the mean time many faithful and good Men came to visit him; for the which the Pope commanded him to be inclosed in straiter custody; wherein he suffered great torments the space of eighteen months, and yet had suffered greater, if the Dominick Friers might have got him in their houſe, as they went about. Thus Faninus removed from Priſon to Priſon, many times changed his place, but never altered his conſtancy.

At length he was brought into a Priſon, where were divers great Lords, Captains, and noble Perſonages there committed, for ſtirring up Commotions and Factions (as the Country of Italy is full of ſuch) who at firſt, hearing him ſpeak, began to ſet him at nought, and to deride him: ſuppoſing that it was but a melancholy humour that troubled his brain. Whereupon, ſuch as ſeemed more ſage amongſt them, began to exhort him to leave his Opinion, and to live with Men as other Men do, and not to vex his mind, but to ſuſpend his Judgment till the matter were decided in the General Council. To whom Faninus again, firſt giving them thanks for their friendly good wills wherewith they ſeemed to reſpect his well-doing, modeſtly and quietly declared unto them, how the Doctrine which he profeſſed, was no Humour nor Opinion of Man's brain, but the pure Verity of God, founded in his Word, and revealed to Men in the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, and eſpecially now in theſe days reſtored: which Verity he had fully determined in his mind never to deny, to believe the lying Fantaſies of Men. And as in his Soul, which was redeemed by the Blood of the Son of God, he was free from all bondage: ſo likewiſe as touching Councils, he looked for no other Sentence nor Authority, he ſaid, but that only which he knew to be declared to us by Chriſt Jeſus in his Goſpel, which both he preached with his Word, and confirmed with his Blood, &c. With theſe and ſuch other words, he ſo moved their minds, that they were clean altered unto a new kind of Life, having him now in admiration, whom they had before in deriſion, and recounted him for an holy Perſon. To whom he proceeded ſtill to preach the Word of Grace, declaring and confeſſing himſelf to be a miſerable Sinner; but by the Faith of the Lord Jeſus, and through the Grace only of him, he was fully perſwaded and well aſſured his ſins to be forgiven: like as all their ſins alſo ſhall be remitted to them through their Faith only in Chriſt, they believing his Goſpel.

The modeſt anſwer of Faninus to his fellow Priſoners.

There were others alſo beſides theſe, who, having uſed before a more delicate kind of life, could not well away with the ſharpneſs and the hardneſs of the Priſon. Theſe alſo received ſuch comfort by the ſaid Faninus, that not only they were quietly contented, but alſo rejoiced in this their captivity, by the occaſion whereof they had received and learned a better liberty than ever they knew before.

Priſoners converted by Faninus.

When the priſonment of this Faninus was known to his Parents and Kinſfolk, his Wife and Siſter came to him with weeping perſwaſions, to move him to conſider and care for his poor Family. To whom he anſwered again, That his Lord and Maſter had commanded him, not to deny him for looking to his Family; and that it was enough for them that he had once for their ſakes fallen into that cowardlineſs which they knew. Wherefore he deſired them to depart in peace, and ſollicite him no more therein, for his end, he ſaid, he knew to draw near, and ſo he commended them unto the Lord.

Pope Julius the third.

About the ſame time died Pope Paulus the 3*d*, and after him ſucceeded Julius the 3*d*, which then ſent Letters and Commandment that Faninus ſhould be executed. Whereof when one of the Magiſtrates Officers brought him word the next day, he rejoiced thereat, and gave the Meſſenger thanks, and began to preach a long Sermon to them that were about him, of the felicity and beatitude of the Life to come. Then the Meſſenger exhorted him, that, in caſe he would change his Opinion, he ſhould ſave both his Life, and enjoy that to come. Another asked him in what caſe he ſhould leave his little Children and his Wife, or what ſtay ſhould they be at, he ſo leaving them: wherefore he deſired him to have reſpect both to himſelf and to them. Faninus anſwered, that he had left them with an Overſeer, which would ſee unto them ſufficiently: and being asked who he was? The Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ſaid he, a faithful Keeper and Conſerver of all that is committed to him. After that the Meſſenger was thus departed from Faninus, all full of tears and ſorrow, the next day following he was removed into the common Priſon, and delivered to the ſecular Magiſtrate. Who in all his ways, his words, his geſtures, and countenance, declared ſuch conſtancy of Faith, ſuch modeſty of manners and tranquility of mind, that they which before were extream againſt him, thinking him rather to have a Devil, began now favourably to hearken to him, and to commend him. With ſuch grace and ſweetneſs he talked, ever ſpeaking of the Word of God, that divers of the Magiſtrates Wives, in hearing him, could not abſtain from weeping. The Executioner alſo wept himſelf. One of the Publick Scribes then came to him, and ſaid, That if he would relent from his Opinion, the Pope's pleaſure was, that he ſhould be ſaved: but that he refuſed. This was marvellous, that he having but ſmall skill in the Latine, yet recited ſo many and ſundry places of the Scripture without Book, and that ſo truly and promptly, as tho he had ſtudied nothing elſe. One, ſeeing him ſo jocond and merry going to his death, asked, why he was ſo merry at his death, ſeeing Chriſt himſelf ſweat Blood and Water before his Paſſion? Chriſt, ſaid he, ſuſtained in his Body all the ſorrows and conflicts with Hell and Death due to us: by whoſe ſuffering we are delivered from ſorrow and fear of them all. Finally, early in the morning he was brought forth where he ſhould ſuffer. Who, after his Prayers moſt earneſtly made unto the Lord, meekly and patiently gave himſelf to the Stake, where with a Cord drawn about his Neck, he was ſecretly ſtrangled of the Hangman, in the City of Ferraria, three hours before day, to the intent the People ſhould not ſee him, nor hear him ſpeak: and after, about dinner-time, his Body in the ſame place was burned. At the burning whereof ſuch a fragrant and odoriferous ſcent came to all them there preſent, and ſo ſtruck their ſenſes, that the ſweetneſs thereof ſeemed to refreſh them no leſs, than his words would have done, if they had heard him ſpeak.

Life refuſed.

How Chriſt feared death himſelf, and yet hath he taken away the fear of death from others.

A miracle as it is reported

The Cuſtom is of that City, that the Bones and Aſhes which be left, ſhould be carried out of the City; but neither the Magiſtrate, nor the Biſhop, nor his great Vicar or Chancellor, nor any Divine elſe, would take any charge thereof, every Man transferring that burthen from themſelves to him which was the cauſe of his death. Whereby it may appear, what ſecret judgment and eſtimation all they had of that good and bleſſed Man. At the laſt, People took his burned Bones, with the Cinders, and carried them out of the ſtreet of the City. Ex Hen. Pantal. lib. 7. Ex Jo. Criſp. pag. 363.

The death & martyrdom of Faninus.

Dominicus de Baſana, at Placentia, Anno 1550.

The name of the Perſecutor in the Story appeareth not.

The ſame year that the aforeſaid Faninus ſuffered in Ferraria, Dominicus alſo ſuffered in the City of Placentia. This Dominicus was Citizen in Baſana, and followed the Wars of Charles the Emperor in Germany: where he received the firſt taſte of Chriſt's Goſpel. Wherein he encreaſed more and more, by conferring and reaſoning with learned Men, ſo that in ſhort time he was able to inſtruct many, and ſo he did working and travelling in the Church, till at length, in the year 1550, he, coming to the City of Naples, there preached the Word, and from thence proceeding to Placentia, preached there likewiſe unto the People, of true Confeſſion, of Purgatory, and of Pardons. Furthermore, the next day he entreated of true Faith and good Works, how far they are neceſſary to Salvation, promiſing moreover the next day to ſpeak of Antichriſt, and to paint him out in his colours. When the hour came that he ſhould begin his Sermon, the Magiſtrate of the City commanded him to come down from the Chair in the Market-place, and delivered him to the Officers. Dominicus was willing and ready to obey the Commandment, ſaying, That he did much marvel that the Devil could ſuffer him ſo long in that kind of Exerciſe. From thence he was led to the Biſhop's Chancellor, and asked whether he was a Prieſt, and and how he was placed in that Function. He answered, That he was no Priest of the Pope, but of Jesus Christ, by whom he was lawfully called to that Office. Then was he demanded, whether he would renounce his Doctrine? He answered, That he maintained no Doctrine of his own, but only the Doctrine of Christ, which also he was ready to seal with his Blood, and also gave hearty thanks to God, which so accepted him as worthy to glorify his Name with his martyrdom. Upon this he was committed to a filthy and stinking Prison, where after he had remained a few months, he was exhorted divers times to revoke, otherwise he should suffer: but still he remained constant in his Doctrine. Whereupon when the time came assigned for his punishment, he was brought to the Market-place, where he preached, and there was hanged; who most heartily praying for his Enemies, so finished his days in this miserable wretched World. Ex Pantal. lib. 7.

The martyrdom of Dominicus de Bassana.

Galeazius Trecius, at the City called Laus Pompeia in Italy, Anno 1551.

Geleazius Trecius martyr.

Santangelo, is a certain Fortress or Castle in Italy, within Lombardy, not far from the City called Laus Pompeia, belonging also to the same Diocess. In this Fort of Santangelo was an House of Augustine Friers, unto whom used much to resort a certain Frier of the same Order, dwelling at Pania, named Maianardus, a Man well expert in the study of Scripture, and of a godly conversation. By this Maianardus, divers not only of the Friers, but also of other Townsmen, were reduced to the love and knowledg of God's Word, and to the detestation of the Pope's abuses. Among whom was also this Galeazius, a Gentleman of a good calling, and wealthy in worldly substance, and very beneficial to the Poor. Who first by conference with the Friers, and also with his Brother-in-Law, began to conceive some light in God's Truth, and afterward was confirmed more thorowly by Celius Secundus Curio, who, then being driven by Persecution, came from Pavia to the said place of Santangelo. In process of time, as this Galeazius increased in Judgment and Zeal, in setting forward the wholsome Word of God's Grace: as a Light shining in darkness he could not so lie hid, but at last, in the year of our Lord 1551, certain were sent from the forenamed City of Laus Pompeia, to lay hands upon him, and brought him to the Bishop's Palace; where he was kept in bands, having under him but only a pad of straw. Altho his Wife sent unto him a good Featherbed, with sheets to lie in, yet the Bishop's Chaplains and Officers kept it from him, dividing the Prey among themselves.

The Bishop of Santangelo and his Priests.

The injurious and fraudulent dealing of the Papists.

When the time came that he should be examined, he was thrice brought before the Commissioners, where he rendered Reasons and Causes of his Faith, answering to their interrogatories with such evidence of Scriptures, and constancy of mind, that he was an admiration to them that heard him. Albeit not long after, through the importunate perswasions of his Kinsfolk and Friends, and other cold Gospellers, laying many considerations before his eyes, he was brought at length to assent to certain points of the Pope's Doctrine. But yet the Mercy of God, which began with him, so left him not, but brought him again to such repentance, and bewailing of his Fact, that he became afterward (according to the example of Peter, and S. Cyprian, and others) double-wise more valiant in defence of Christ's Quarrel: neither did he ever desire any thing more, than occasion to be offered to recover again by confession, that which he had lost before by denial: affirming, that he never felt more joy of heart, than at the time of his examinations, where he stood thrice to the constant confession of the Truth: and contrary, that he never tasted more sorrow in all his life, than when he slip'd afterward from the same by dissimulation. Declaring moreover to his Brethren, that death was much more sweet unto him, with testimony of the Verity, than life with the least denial of Truth, and loss of a good Conscience. Thus Galeazius, mourning for his fall into Prison, after he heard of his Friends, that nothing was yet so far past, but that he might recover himself again, and that his infirmity was not prejudicial, but rather a furtherance to God's Glory, and an admonition to himself to stand more strongly hereafter, took thereby exceeding comfort: and when they would have left with him a Book of the New Testament for his comfort, he refused it, saying, that he had in his heart whatsoever Christ there spake to his Disciples: also what hapned both to Christ himself, and to his Disciples, for confessing the Word of Truth.

Furthermore, so comfortable was he after that, that they which talked with him, continued all the day without Meat or Drink, and would also have tarried all the night following, if they might have been suffered.

As Galeazius thus continued in the Prison, looking for some occasion to recover himself again from his fall, it followed in short time that the Inquisitors and Priests repaired to him again in the Prison, supposing that he would confirm now that which before he had granted to them, and required him so to do. Galeazius, denying all that he had granted to them before, returned again to the defence of his former Doctrine, with much more boldness of Spirit confessing Christ, as he did before, and detested Images, affirming and proving that God only is to be worshipped, and that in Spirit and Verity: Also that there be no more Mediators but Christ alone, and that he only and sufficiently by his suffering hath taken away the sins of the whole World; and that all they which depart hence in this Faith, are ascertained of everlasting Life; they which do not, are under everlasting damnation, with such other-like matter, which was repugnant utterly to the Pope's Proceedings. With this confession made, as his mind was greatly refreshed, so the Adversaries went away as much appaled; who, at last perceiving that he in no case could be revoked, caused him to be committed to the secular Judge to be burned.

Geleazius returneth to his former confession of truth.

Geleazius committed to the secular power.

Thus Galeazius early in the morning, being brought out of Prison to the Market-place, there was left standing bound to the Stake till noon, as a gazing-stock for all Men to look upon. In the which mean time many came about him, exhorting him to recant, and not so to cast away his life, whereas with ten words speaking he might save it: If he passed not for his Life, nor for his Country where he should live, nor for his Goods and Possessions, which should be confiscate, yet he should somewhat respect his Wife whom he loved so well, and his young Children; at least he should consider his own Soul. This counsel gave they, which more esteemed the Commodities of this present life, than any true Soul's health in the life to come. But to conclude, nothing could stir the setled mind of this valiant Martyr. Wherefore fire was commanded at last to be put to the dry Wood about him, wherewith he was shortly consumed, without any noise or crying, save only these words heard in the middle of the flame, Lord Jesus. This was Anno 1551, Novemb. 24.

The Death and decease of Geleazius.

Touching the story of this blessed Martyr, this by the way is to be given for a Memorandum, That a little before this Galeazius should be burned, there was a Controversy between the Major of the City, and the Bishop's Clergy, for the expences of the Wood that should go to his burning. He hearing thereof, sent word to both the Parties to agree, for he himself, of his own Goods, would see the cost of that matter discharged.

Another note moreover here is to be added, that while Galeazius was in captivity, certain of the Papists, perceiving that Galeazius had great Goods and Possessions, practised with his Wife, under colour to release her Husband, that she should lay out a sum of Mony to be sent to the Wife of the chief Lord of Millain (called Ferrarius Gonzaga) to the end that she should entreat both with her Husband, and with the Senate, for Galeazius's Life. Which Mony when they had thus jugled into their hands, Galeazius notwithstanding was burned, and so was the silly Woman robbed and defeated, both of her Husband, and also of her Mony. Ex Celio.

A certain Weaver of Peruſium.
At Rome, Anno 1553.

D. Jo. Mollius, martyr.

Joan. Mollius Montilcinus, being but twelve years old, with his Brother Auguſtinus, was ſet of his Parents in the houſe of the Gray Friers, where he in ſhort time, having a freſh Wit, far excelled his Fellows in all Tongues and Liberal Sciences. So growing up to the Age of eighteen, he was ordained Prieſt, and ſang his firſt Maſs. After that he was ſent to Ferraria to ſtudy, where he ſo profited in the ſpace of ſix years, that he was aſſigned, by Vigerius General of that Order, to be Doctor, and then Reader in Divinity: who then, with his Sophiſtry, oppoſed himſelf as an utter Enemy againſt the Goſpel. From thence he went to Brixia, and the next year following to Millaine, where he read or profeſſed openly. Again, from hence he was taken by Franciſcus Sfortia, and brought to the Univerſity of Papia, there openly to propheſs Philoſophy. Where he remained four years. After that he was called to the Univerſity of Bononie, by Laurentius Spatha, General of the Order, where he was occupied in reading the Books of Ariſtotle de Anima. In the mean time God wrought in his Soul ſuch light of his Word, and of true Religion, that he, waxing weary of profeſſing Philoſophy, began ſecretly to expound the Epiſtle of St. Paul to the Romans to a few; which being known, his Auditors increaſed ſo faſt, that he was compelled to read openly in the Temple. Whereas the number of his Audience daily augmented, ſo the eager fervency of their minds ſo mightily increaſed withal, that every Man almoſt came with his Pen and Ink to write, and great diligence was beſtowed how to come betime to take up the firſt places, where they might beſt hear, which was about the year of our Lord 1538. There was the ſame time, at Bononie, one Cornelius an arrogant Babler, who, envying the doings of Joannes, took upon him, at the requeſt of Cardinal Campejus, to expound the ſaid Epiſtle of Saint Paul, confuting and diſproving the explanation of the ſaid John, and extolling the Pope with all his traditions. Contrary, John extolled and commended only Chriſt and his Merits to the People. But the purpoſe of Cornelius came to ſmall effect. For the Auditors which firſt came unto him, began by little to fall from him, and the concourſe of the other Man's Auditors more and more increaſed.

Which when Cornelius perceived, he perſwaded Campejus, that unleſs he provided that Man to be diſpatched, the eſtimation of the Church of Rome would thereby greatly decay. But when they could not openly bring their purpoſe about, ſecretly this way was deviſed, that Cornelius and Joannes ſhould come to open diſputation: which Diſputation indured till three of the Clock after midnight. At length when neither part could agree, Joannes was bid to return home to his houſe. Who as he was come down to the lower ſteps, where the place was moſt ſtraiteſt, ſo that his Friends could not come to reſcue him, (altho by drawing their Swords they declared their good wills) was there taken and laid faſt in Priſon. When the day came, ſuch tumult and ſtir was in the whole City, that Cornelius was driven to hide himſelf. Alſo Campejus the Cardinal, with the Biſhop there, were both contemned of the Students. The next day the Biſhop of Bononie ſent his Chancellor to John in the Priſon, to ſignify unto him, that either he muſt recant, or elſe burn. But he, being of a bold and chearful Spirit, would in no wiſe be brought to recant. This one thing grieved him, that he ſhould be condemned, his cauſe being not heard.

Mollius taken and impriſoned by Cardinal Campejus.

In the mean ſeaſon, Laurentius Spatha above-mentioned, being General of that Order, in moſt ſpeedy wiſe poſted up to Rome, and there ſo practiſed with the Cardinal St. Crucis, the Proctor in the Court of Rome for the Gray Friers, that the Pope wrote down his Letters to Campejus, that he ſhould deliver the ſaid John out of Priſon; ſo that he notwithſtanding, within three months after, ſhould perſonally appear at Rome. Thus the thirtieth day of his Impriſonment he was delivered, who, but for the coming of the Pope's Letters, had been burned within three days after. Moreover, with the ſaid Mollius, Cornelius was alſo cited to make his appearance likewiſe at Rome, and there was detained in Priſon by the Cardinal St. Crucis, till his cauſe ſhould be decided. The Friends of Mollius gave him couuſel not to go to Rome, and offered him mony to go to Germany: but he would not, ſaying, that the Goſpel muſt alſo be preached at Rome. After he was come to Rome, and appeared before Pope Paul the third, humbly he deſired, that the Cauſe being ſo weighty, might come in publick hearing, but that could not be obtained. Then was he commanded to write his mind in Articles, and to bring his Proofs: which he diligently performed, intreating of Original Sin, Juſtification by Faith, Free-Will, Purgatory, and other ſuch like: proving the ſaid Articles by the Authority of the Scripture, and of ancient Fathers, and ſo exhibited the ſame to the Biſhop of Rome. Upon this, certain Cardinals and Biſhops were aſſigned to have the Cauſe in hearing: who diſputed with him three days, and could not feel that which he had proved. At laſt anſwer was made unto him thus; that it was truth which he affirmed, nevertheleſs the ſame was not meet for this preſent time; for that it could not be taught or publiſhed without the detriment of the Apoſtolick See: wherefore he ſhould abſtain hereafter from the Epiſtles * of St. Paul, and ſo return again ſafe to Bononie, and there profeſs Philoſophy. Thus as he was returned to Bononie, and all Men there were deſirous to know of his caſe, how he ſped at Rome, openly in the Pulpit he declared all things in order as they were done, and gave God thanks.

Mollius delivered out of Priſon by means of Spatha the General.

Mollius appeareth before the Pope.

* The Popes Church cannot abide S. Pauls Epiſtles. Pauls Epiſtles muſt give place to Philoſophy.

Herewith Campejus, being more offended than before, obtained of the Pope, that the General of the Order ſhould remove the ſaid John Mollius from Bononie, and place him ſome other where. So Mollius from thence was ſent to Naples, and there was appointed Reader and Preacher in the Monaſtry of St. Laurence. But Petrus the Vice-roy there, not abiding his Doctrine, ſo nearly ſought his death, that he had much ado to eſcape with life; and ſo departing from thence, he went wandring in Italy from place to place, preaching Chriſt whereſoever he came. Not long after this, when Cardinal Campejus was dead, he was called again unto Bononie by a good Abbat named de Graſſis, Anno 1543, where he renewed again the reading of St. Paul's Epiſtles after a ſecret ſort, as he did before; but that could not be long undiſcovered. Whereupon by the means of Cardinal de Capo, and by Bonaventura the General, he was apprehended the ſecond time, and brought to Faventia, and laid there in a filthy and ſtinking Priſon, where he continued four years, no Man having leave once to come to him. During which time of his indurance, he wrote a Commentary upon the Books of Moſes: but that labour, by the malignity of the Adverſaries was ſuppreſſed. At length, through the interceſſion of the Earl Petilianus, and of the aforeſaid good Abbat de Graſſis, he was again delivered, and ſent to Ravenna, where he made his abode a few months with the Abbat ad S. Vitalem, and there again taught the Goſpel of Chriſt as before: and whenſoever he ſpake of the Name of Jeſus, his eyes dropped tears, for he was fraught with a mighty fervency of God's Holy Spirit.

The fervent zeal of Mollius.

In proceſs of time, when this Abbat was dead, his Sureties began to be weary of their Bond, and ſo was he again now the third time reduced into Priſon by the Pope's Legats. There were then four Men of great Authority, who, being ſtirred up of God, had pitty upon him, and bailed him out of Priſon. Of whom, one of the ſaid Sureties took the ſaid Mollius home, to inſtruct his Children in the Doctrine of Religion and good Letters. Furthermore, at the fame of this Man ſuch a concourſe of People came to ſee him, that the Adverſaries began to conſult conſult with themſelves to kill him, leſt his Doctrine ſhould diſperſe further abroad, to the detriment of the Church of Rome. Whereupon commandment was ſent to the Pope's Legat to lay hands upon him, and to ſend him up faſt bound to Rome. Where again, now the fourth time, he was impriſoned in the Caſtle of Rome, and there continued eighteen months, being greatly aſſaulted, ſometimes with flattering Promiſes, ſomtimes with terrible Threats, to give over his Opinion: but his Building could not be ſhaken, for it was grounded upon a ſure Rock. Thus Dr. Mollius, being conſtant in the defence of Chriſt's Goſpel, was brought, with certain other Men (which were alſo apprehended for Religion) into the Temple of St. Mary (called De Minerva) the fifth day of September, Anno 1553; either there to revoke, or to be burned. There ſat upon them ſix Cardinals in high Seats, beſides the Judg: before whom preached a Dominick Frier, with cruelty inveighing againſt the poor Priſoners, incenſed the Cardinals, with all the vehemency he might, to their condemnation. The poor Men ſtood holding a burning Taper in their hands: of whom ſome for fear of death revolted. But this Doctor Mollius, with a Weaver of Peruſium, remained conſtant. Then Mollius began an earneſt Sermon in the Italian Tongue, wherein he confirmed the Articles of the Faith by the Sacred Scriptures, declaring alſo that the Pope was not the Succeſſor of Peter, but Antichriſt, and that his Sectaries do figure the Whore of Babylon. Moreover, he cited them up to the Tribunal Seat of Chriſt, and threw away the burning Taper from him. Whereupon they, being repleniſhed with anger, condemned him with the Weaver to the Fire, and commanded them to be had away. So were they carried incontinent to the Camp or Field, called Florianum, where they remained chearful and conſtant. Firſt, the Weaver was hanged: Mollius then, willing the Hangman to execute his Office likewiſe upon him, began to exhort the People to beware of Idolatry, and to have no other Saviours but Chriſt alone: for he only is the Mediator between God and Man. And ſo was he alſo hanged, commending his Soul to God, and afterward laid in the fire and burned. The People having divers Judgments upon him; ſome ſaid he died an Heretick, ſome ſaid he was a good Man. Ex Henrico Pantal. Lib. 19. Anno 1543.

Furthermore in the ſame City of Rome, and about the ſame time, in the Monaſtry of Saint Auſtin, were found two Monks in their Cells, with their tongues and their heads cut off, only for rebuking the immoderate and outragious exceſs of the Cardinals, as witneſſeth Manlius. Fr. Gamba, martyr.

Francis Gamba born in the City of Brixia, in Lombardy, after he had received the knowledg of the Goſpel, went to Geneva, to confer about certain neceſſary Affairs with them that were wiſe and learned in that Church, which was about the time when the Lord's Supper there was adminiſtred at Pentecoſt: Who there alſo at the ſame time did communicate with them. Afterward in his returning home, as he was paſſing over the Lake of Come, he was taken and brought to Come, and there committed to Ward. During the time of which impriſonment, divers and ſundry, as well Nobles as others, with Doctors alſo, eſpecially Prieſts and Monks, reſorted unto him, labouring by all manner of means, and moſt fair promiſes, to reduce him from his Opinions: which ſeemed to ſome but Phantaſies coming of ſome Humor: to ſome they ſeemed uncatholick or Heretical. But he, conſtantly diſputing with them by the manifeſt Scriptures, declared the Opinions which he defended, not to be any vain Speculations or imaginary Phantaſies of Man's doting Brain, but the pure Verity of God, and the evident Doctrine of Jeſus Chriſt, expreſſed in his Word, neceſſary for all Men to believe, and alſo to maintain unto death: and therefore for his part, rather than he would be found falſe to Chriſt and his Word, he was there ready, not to deny, but to ſtand to Chriſt's Goſpel, to the effuſion of his Blood.

Patience in perſecution.

Thus when he could in no wiſe be reclaimed from the Doctrine of Truth, Letters came from the Senate of Millain, that he ſhould be executed with death. Which execution, as they of Comun were about to prepare, in the mean while came other Letters from Geneva, written by the Emperor's Embaſſador, and other Nobles of Millain, by the which Letters his death was delay'd for a time, till at length other Letters were ſent from the Senate again of Millain, requiring execution of the Sentance. Nevertheleſs, through interceſſion of his Friends, one weeks reſpite more was granted him, to prove whether he might be won again to the Pope's Church, that is to ſay, loſt from God. Thus he being mightily and long, both aſſailed by Friends, and by Enemies terrified, yet by no perſwaſions would be expunged, but gave thanks to God, that he was made worthy to ſuffer the rebukes of this World, and cruel death, for the teſtimony of his Son; and ſo went he chearfully unto his death. Then came certain Franciſcan Friers to him to hear his Confeſſion, which he refuſed. Alſo they brought in their hands a Croſs for him to behold, to keep him from deſperation at the feeling of the fire. But his mind, he ſaid, was ſo repleniſhed with joy and comfort in Chriſt, that he needed neither their Croſs, nor them. After this, as he was declaring many comfortable things to the People, of the fruition of thoſe heavenly Joys above which God hath prepared for his, becauſe he ſhould ſpeak no more to the People, his Tongue was bored through; and ſo immediately being tied to the Stake, there he was ſtrangled till he was dead; every Man there, which ſaw his conſtancy, giving teſtimony, that he died a good Man. *Ex Epiſt. cujuſd. The Magiſtrates of Venice.

Pomponius Algerius born in Capua, a young Man of great learning, was Student in the Univerſity of Padua, where he not able to conceal and keep cloſe the Verity of Chriſt's Goſpel, which he learned by the heavenly teaching of God's Grace, ceaſed not both by Doctrine and Example of Life, to inform as many as he could in the ſame Doctrine, and to bring them to Chriſt. For the which he was accuſed of Hereſy to Pope Paulus the fourth. Who, ſending immediatly to the Magiſtrates of Venice, cauſed him to be apprehended at Padua, and carried to Venice, where he was long detained in Priſon and Bands, till at laſt the Pope commanded the Magiſtrates there to ſend him up bound unto Rome, which the Venetians eft-ſoons accompliſhed. After he was brought to Rome, manifold perſwaſions and allurements were aſſayed to remove this vertuous and bleſſed young Man from his Sentence. But when no worldly perſwaſions could prevail againſt the operation of God's Spirit in him, then was he adjudged to be burned alive; which death moſt conſtantly he ſuſtained, to the great admiration of all that beheld him.

Being in Priſon at Venice, he wrote an Epiſtle to the afflicted Saints; which for the notable ſweetneſs and moſt wonderful conſolation contained in the ſame, in ſhewing forth the mighty operation of God's Holy Power working in his afflicted Saints that ſuffer for his ſake, I have thought good and expedient to communicate, as a

A comfortable Letter of Pomponius Algerius an Italian Martyr.

To his dearly beloved Brethren and fellow Servants of Chriſt, which are departed out of Babylon into Mount Sion; Grace, peace, and health, from God our Father, by Jeſus Chriſt our Lord and Saviour.

'TO mitigate your ſorrow which you take for me, I cannot but impart unto you ſome portion of my delectation and joys, which I feel and find, to the intent you with me may rejoice and ſing before the Lord, giving thanks unto him, I ſhall utter that which no Man will believe when I ſhall declare it. I have found a neſt of Hony and Hony-comb in the intrails of a Lion. Who will ever believe that I ſhall ſay? or what Man will ever think in the deep dark Dungeon to find a Paradiſe of Pleaſure? in the place of ſorrow and death, to dwell in tranquility and hope of life? in a Cave infernal to be found joy of Soul? and where other Men do weep, there to be rejoicing? where other do ſhake and tremble, there ſtrength and boldneſs to be plenty? Who will ever think, or who will believe this? in ſuch a woful ſtate ſuch delectation? in a place ſo deſolate, ſuch ſociety of good Men? in ſtrait bands and cold irons, ſuch reſt to be had? All theſe things the ſweet hand of the Lord (my ſweet Brethren) doth miniſter unto me. Behold, he that was once far from me, now is preſent with me. Whom once ſcarce I could feel, now I ſee more apparently; whom once I ſaw afar off, now I behold near at hand; whom once I hungred for, the ſame now approacheth and reacheth his hand unto me. He doth comfort me, and heapeth me up with gladneſs; he driveth away all bitterneſs, he miniſtreth ſtrength and courage, he healeth me, refreſheth, advanceth, and comforteth me. O how good is the Lord, which ſuffereth not his Servants to be tempted above their ſtrength! O how eaſy and ſweet is his Yoke! Is there any like unto the Higheſt, who receiveth the afflicted, healeth the wounded, and nouriſheth them? Is there any like unto him? Learn ye, Welbeloved, how amiable the Lord is, how meek and merciful he is, which viſiteth his Servants in temptations, neither diſdaineth he to keep company with us in ſuch vile and ſtinking Caves. Will the blind and incredulous World (think you) believe this? Or rather will it not ſay thus? No, thou wilt never be able to abide long the burning heat, the cold ſnow, and the pinching hardneſs of that place, the manifold miſeries, and other grievances innumerable; the rebukes and frowning faces of Men how wilt thou ſuffer? Doſt thou not conſider and revolve in thy mind thy pleaſant Country, the riches of the World, thy Kinſfolk, the delicate pleaſures and honours of this Life? Doſt thou forget the ſolace of thy Sciences, and fruit of all thy Labours? Wilt thou thus loſe all thy labours which thou haſt hitherto ſuſtained? ſo many nights watched? thy painful travels, and all thy laudable enterpriſes, wherein thou haſt been exerciſed continually even from thy childhood? Finally, feareſt thou not death, which hangeth over thee, and that for no crime committed? O what a fool art thou, which for one word ſpeaking mayeſt ſalve all this, and wilt not? What a rude and unmannerly thing is this, not to be intreated at the inſtant petitions and deſires of ſuch, ſo many and ſo mighty, ſo juſt, ſo vertuous, ſo prudent and gracious Senators, and ſuch noble Perſonages, &c.

'But now to anſwer; Let this blind World hearken to this again, What heat can there be more burning, than that fire which is prepared for thee hereafter? And likewiſe what ſnow can be more cold than thy heart which is in darkneſs, and hath no light? What thing is more hard, and ſharp, or crooked, than this preſent life which here we lead? What thing more odious and hateful than this World here preſent? and let theſe worldly Men here anſwer me; What Country can we have more ſweet than the Heavenly Country above? What Treaſures more rich or precious than everlaſting life? And who be our Kinſmen, but they which hear the Word of God? where be greater Riches, or Dignities more honourable, than in Heaven? And as touching the Sciences, let this fooliſh World conſider, be they not ordained to learn to know God? whom unleſs we do know, all our Labours, our night Watchings, our Studies, and all our Enterpriſes ſerve to no uſe or purpoſe, all is but labour loſt. Furthermore, let the miſerable worldly Man anſwer me; What remedy or ſafe refuge can there be unto him, if he lack God, who is the Life and Medicine of all Men? And how can he be ſaid to fly from death, when he himſelf is already dead in ſin? If Chriſt be the Way, Verity, and Life, how can there be any life then without Chriſt: The fooly heat of the Priſon to me is coldneſs; the cold Winter to me is a freſh ſpring-time in the Lord. He that feareth not to be burned in the fire, how will he fear the heat of the weather? or what careth he for the pinching froſt, which burneth with the Love of the Lord? The place is ſharp and tedious to them that be guilty, but to the innocent and guiltleſs it is mellifluous. Here dropeth the delectable Dew, here floweth the pleaſant Nectar, here runneth the ſweet Milk, here is plenty of all good things. And altho the place it ſelf be deſert and barren, yet to me it ſeemeth a large walk, and a valley of pleaſure; here to me is the better and more noble part of the World. Let the miſerable worldling ſay and confeſs, if there be any Plot, Paſture, or Medow, ſo delightful to the mind of Man, as here. Here I ſee Kings, Princes, Cities, and People; here I ſee Wars, where ſome be overthrown, ſome be Victors, ſome thruſt down, ſome lifted up. Here is the Mount Sion, here I am already in Heaven it ſelf. Here ſtandeth firſt Chriſt Jeſus in the Front. About him ſtand the old Fathers, Prophets, and Evangeliſts, Apoſtles, and all the Servants of God. Of whom ſome do embrace and cheriſh me, ſome exhort, ſome open the Sacraments unto me, ſome comfort me, other-ſome are ſinging about me. And how then ſhall I be thought to be alone, among ſo many and ſuch as theſe be? the beholding of whom to me is both ſolace and example. Fore here I ſee ſome crucified, ſome ſlain, ſome ſtoned, ſome cut aſunder, and ſome quartered, ſome roaſted, ſome broiled, ſome put in hot Cauldrons, ſome having their Eyes bored through, ſome their Tongues cut out, ſome their Skin plucked over their Heads, ſome their Hands and Feet chop'd off, ſome put in Kilns and Furnaces, ſome caſt down headlong and given to the Beaſts and Fowls of the Air to feed upon; it would ask a long time if I ſhould recite all.

'To be ſhort, divers I ſee with divers and ſundry torments excruciate: yet notwithſtanding, all living, and all ſafe. One Plaiſter, one Salve cureth all their Wounds: which alſo gives to me ſtrength and life, ſo that I ſuſtain all theſe tranſitory anguiſhes and ſmall afflictions, with a quiet mind, having a greater Hope laid up in Heaven. Neither do I fear mine Adverſaries which here perſecute me and oppreſs me: for he that dwelleth in Heaven ſhall laugh them to ſcorn, and the Lord ſhall deride them. I fear not

'not thousands of People which compass me about. The 'Lord my God shall deliver me, my Hope, my Supporter, 'my Comforter, who exalteth up my head. He shall smite 'all them that stand up against me without cause, and shall 'dash the teeth and jaws of Sinners asunder: for he only is 'all blessedness and majesty. The rebukes for Christ's Cause 'makes us jocund; for so it is written, if ye be rebuked and 'scorned for the Name of Christ, happy be you; for the 'Glory and Spirit of God resteth upon you, 1 Pet. 4. Be 'you therefore certified, that our Rebukes which are laid 'upon us, redound to the shame and harm of the Rebukers. 'In this World there is no Mansion firm to me; and there- 'fore I will travel up to the New Jerusalem which is in 'Heaven, and which offereth it self unto me without pay- 'ing any fine or income. Behold, I have entred already 'in my Journey, where my House standeth for me prepa- 'red, and where I shall have Riches, Kinsfolks, Delights, 'Honours never failing. As for these earthly things here 'present, they are transitory Shadows, vanishing Vapours, 'and ruinous Walls. Briefly, all is but very Vanity of Va- 'nities, whereas Hope and the substance of Eternity to 'come are wanting; which the merciful goodness of the 'Lord hath given as Companions to accompany me, and 'to comfort me, and now do the same begin to work and 'to bring forth Fruits in me. I have travelled hitherto, 'laboured and sweat early and late, watching day and night, 'and now my travels begin to come to effect. Days and 'hours have I bestowed upon my studies. Behold, the 'true Countenance of God is sealed upon me, the Lord 'hath given mirth in my heart. And therefore in the same 'will I lay me down in peace and rest, Psal. 4. And who 'then shall dare to blame this our Age consumed, or say 'that our years be cut off? What Man can now cavil that 'these our Labours are lost, which have followed and 'found out the Lord and Maker of the World, and which 'have changed death with Life? My Portion is the Lord '(saith my Soul) and therefore I will seek and wait for him. 'Now then, if to die in the Lord be not to die, but to live 'most joyfully, where is this wretched worldly Rebel, which 'blameth us of folly, for giving away our lives to death? 'O how delectable is this death to me, to taste the Lord's 'Cup, which is an assured pledg of true Salvation! for 'so hath the Lord himself forewarned us, saying; The 'same that they have done to me, they will also do unto you. 'Wherefore let the doltish World with his blind World- 'lings (who in the bright Sunshine yet go stumbling in 'darkness, being as blind as Beetles) cease thus unwisely 'to carp against us for our rash suffering, as they count it. 'To whom thus we answer again with the Holy Apostle, 'That neither tribulation, nor anguish, nor hunger, nor 'nakedness, nor jeopardy, nor persecution, nor sword, 'shall be able ever to separate us from the love of Christ: 'we are slain all the day long, we are made like Sheep or- 'dained to the Shambles, Rom. 8. Thus do we resemble 'Christ our Head, which said, That the Disciple cannot be 'above his Master, nor the Servant above his Lord. The 'same Lord hath also commanded, that every one shall 'take up his Cross and follow him, Luke 9. Rejoice, re- 'joice (my dear Brethren, and fellow Servants) and be 'of good comfort, when ye fall into sundry temptations. 'Let your Patience be perfect on all parts. For so is it 'foreshewed us before, and is written, That they which 'shall kill you, shall think to do God good service. There- 'fore Afflictions and Death be as Tokens and Sacraments 'of our Election and Life to come. Let us then be glad 'and sing unto the Lord, when as we, being clear from 'all just accusation, are persecuted and given to death. 'For better it is, that we in doing well do suffer, if it so 'be the Will of the Lord, than doing evil, 1 Pet. 3. We 'have for our example Christ and the Prophets, which 'spake in the Name of the Lord, whom the Children of 'Iniquity did quell and murther. And now we bless and 'magnify them that then suffered; Let us be glad and 'joyous in our innocency and uprightness. The Lord shall 'reward them that persecute us; let us refer all revenge- 'ment to him.

'I am accused of foolishness, for that I do not shrink 'from the true Doctrine and Knowledg of God, and do 'not rid my self out of these troubles, when with one 'word I may. O the blindness of Man, which seeth not 'the Sun-shining, neither remembreth the Lord's words. 'Consider therefore what he saith, You are the Light of 'the World. A City built on a Hill cannot be hid; nei- 'ther do Men light a Candle, and put it under a Bushel, 'but upon a Candlestick, that it may shine and give light 'to them in the house. And in another place he saith, 'You shall be led before Kings and Rulers; fear ye not 'them which kill the Body, but him which killeth both 'Body and Soul: whosoever shall confess me before Men, 'him will I also confess before my Father which is in Hea- 'ven. And he that denieth me before Men, him will I 'also deny before my Heavenly Father. Wherefore seeing 'the Words of the Lord be so plain, how, or by what 'authority will this wise Counsellor then approve this his 'counsel which he doth give? God forbid that I should re- 'linquish the Commandments of God, and follow the 'Counsels of Men: for it is written; Blessed is the Man 'that hath not gone in the way of sinners, and hath not 'stood in the counsels of the ungodly, and hath not sit in 'the chair of Pestilence, Psal. 1. God forbid that I should 'deny Christ, where I ought to confess him. I will not set 'more by my Life than by my Soul: neither will I exchange 'the Life to come, for this World here present. O how 'foolishly speaketh he which argueth me of foolishness?

'Neither do I take it to be a thing so uncomely, or un- 'seeming for me, not to obey in this matter the requests of 'those so honourable, just, prudent, vertuous, and noble 'Senators, whose desire (he saith) were enough to com- 'mand me: for so are we taught of the Apostles; That we 'ought to obey God before Men. After that we have served 'and done our duty first unto God, then are we bound next 'to obey the Protestates of this World; whom I wish to be 'perfect before the Lord. They are honourable; but yet are 'they to be made more perfect in the Lord. They are just; 'but yet Christ, the Seat of Justice, is lacking in them. They 'are wise; but where is in them the beginning of Wis- 'dom, that is, the fear of the Lord? They are called Ver- 'tuous, but yet I wish them more absolute in Christian 'Charity: they are good and gracious, but yet I miss in them 'the foundation of Goodness, which is the Lord God, in 'whom dwelleth all Goodness and Grace. They are ho- 'nourable; yet have they not received the Lord of Glory, 'which is our Saviour, most honourable and glorious. Un- 'derstand you Kings, and learn you that judg the Earth. 'Serve the Lord in fear, and rejoice in him with trembling. 'Hearken to Doctrine, and get knowledg, lest you fall in- 'to God's displeasure, and so perish out of the way of 'Righteousness. What fret you, what fume you, O Gen- 'tiles? O you People, what cast you in your brains the co- 'gitations of vanity? you Kings of the Earth, and you 'Princes, why conspire you so together against Christ and 'against his Holy One? Psal. 2. How long will you seek 'after lies, and hate the truth? Turn you to the Lord, and 'harden not your hearts. For this you must needs con- 'fess, that they which persecute the Lord's Servants, do 'persecute the Lord himself. For so he saith himself; 'Whatsoever Men shall do to you, I will count it to be 'done not as unto you, but to my self.

'And now let this carnal politick Counsellor and Dispu- 'ter of this World tell, wherein have they to blame me; 'if in my Examinations I have not answered so after their 'mind and affection as they required of me? seeing it is 'not our selves that speak, but the Lord that speaketh in us; 'as he himself doth forewitness, saying; When you shall 'be brought before Rulers and Magistrates, it is not you 'your selves that speak, but the Spirit of my Father that 'shall be in you, Mat. 10. Wherefore if the Lord be 'true and faithful of his Word, as it is most certain, then 'there is no blame in me: for he gave the words that I did 'speak; and who was I that could resist his Will? If any 'Man shall reprehend the things that I said, let him then 'quarrel with the Lord, whom it pleased to work so in me. 'And if the Lord be not to be blamed, neither am I herein 'to be accused, which did that I purposed not, and that I 'forethought not of. The things which there I did utter 'and express, if they were otherwise than well, let them 'shew it, and then will I say, that they were my words, and 'not the Lords. But if they were good and approved, and 'such as cannot justly be accused, then must it needs be 'granted, spite of their teeth, that they proceeded of the 'Lord, and then who be they that shall accuse me? A Peo- 'ple of Prudence? or who shall condemn me? Just Judges?

'And tho they ſo do, yet nevertheleſs the Word ſhall not 'be fruſtrate, neither ſhall the Goſpel be fooliſh, or there-'fore decay; but rather the Kingdom of God ſhall the 'more proſper and flouriſh unto the Iſraelites, and ſhall 'paſs the ſooner unto the Elect of Chriſt Jeſus: And they 'which ſhall ſo do, ſhall prove the grievous Judgment of 'God; neither ſhall they ſcape without puniſhment that 'be Perſecutors and Murderers of the Juſt. My welbelo-'ved, lift up your Eyes, and conſider the Counſels of 'God. He ſhewed unto us alate an Image of his Plague, 'which was to our correction: and if we ſhall not receive 'him, he will draw out his Sword, and ſtrike with Sword, 'Peſtilence, and Famine, the Nation that ſhall riſe againſt 'Chriſt.

'Theſe have I written to your comfort, dear Brethren. 'Pray for me. I kiſs in my heart, with an holy kiſs, my 'good Maſters, Sylvius, Pergula, Juſtus, alſo Fidel Rocke, 'and him that beareth the name of Lelia, whom I know, 'altho being abſent. Item, The Governor of the Univer-'ſity, Syndicus, and all other, whoſe Names be written 'in the Book of Life. Farewel all my fellow Servants of 'God; fare you well in the Lord, and pray for me conti-'nually.

From the delectable Orchard of Leonine Priſon, 12 Calend. Auguſt. Anno 1555.

It is written of one Thebrotus, That when he had read the Book of Plato, De Immortalitate Animæ, he was ſo moved and perſwaded therewith, that he caſt himſelf headlong down from an high Wall, to be rid out of this preſent life. If thoſe Heathen Philophers, having no Word of God, nor promiſe of any Reſurrection and Life to come, could ſo ſoon be perſwaded, by reading the Works of Plato, to condemn this World and Life here preſent; how much more is it to be required in Chriſtians, inſtructed with ſo many Evidences and Promiſes of God's moſt perfect Word, that they ſhould learn to caſt off the carnal deſires and affections of this miſerable peregrination? and that for a double reſpect, not only in ſeeing, reading, and underſtanding ſo many Examples of the miſeries of this wretched World; but alſo much more in conſidering and pondering the heavenly Joys and Conſolations of the other World remaining for us hereafter in the Life to come. For a more full evidence whereof, I thought good to give out this preſent Letter of Algerius above-prefixed, for a taſte of the ſame, and a lively Teſtimony for all true Chriſtians to read and conſider. Now let us proceed further (the Lord willing) in our Table of Italian Martyrs.

Joannes Aloyſius, at Rome.
Anno 1559.

Of Joannes Aloyſius, we find mention made in a Letter of Simon Florillus: which Aloyſius was ſent down from Geneva to the parts of Calabria, there to be their Miniſter; who afterward was ſent for up to Rome, and there ſuffered. Ex Epiſt. D. Simoniis Florilli.

Jacobus Bovellus, at Meſſina.
Anno 1559.

Jacobus Bovellus was likewiſe ſent from Geneva to the ſaid parts of Calabria, with Aloiſius; who alſo, being ſent for up to Rome, was ſent down to the City Meſſina, and there was martyred. Ibidem.

Divers that ſuffered in the Kingdom of Naples.
At Naples, Anno 1560.

After Pope Julius the third, came Marcellus the ſecond. After him ſucceeded Pope Paul the fourth. This Paul being dead, followed Pope Pius the fourth; who, being advanced to that room, began hot perſecution in all the Territories of the Church of Rome, againſt them which were ſuſpected for Lutherans.

Whereupon enſued great trouble and perſecution in the Kingdom of Naples, in ſuch cruel ſort, that many Noblemen, with their Wives and others, are reported there to be ſlain. Vid. Pantal. lib. 11.

Eighty eight Martyrs in one day, with one butcherly Knife, ſlain like Sheep.

A hundred and ſixty other alſo condemned.
At Calabria, Anno 1560.

Pope Pius the fourth.

In Calabria likewiſe the ſame time ſuffered a bleſſed number of Chriſt's welbeloved Saints, both old and young, put together in one houſe, even 88 Perſons; all which, one after another, were taken out of the Houſe, and ſo being laid upon the Butchers Stall, like the Sheep in the Shambles, with one bloody Knife were all killed in order. A Spectacle moſt tragical for all Poſterity to remember, and almoſt incredible to believe. Wherefore for the more credit of the matter, leſt we ſhould ſeem either light of credit, to believe that is not true, or raſhly to commit to Pen things without due proof and authority; we have here annexed a piece of an Epiſtle written by Mr. Simon Florius, preacher of God's Word at the City Clavenna, among the Rhetians, unto a certain Friend of his named Guliclmus Gratalorus, an Italian, and Doctor of Phyſick in the Univerſity of Baſil. Which Gratalorus tranſlated the ſame into the Latin Tongue, and it is to be found in the 11*th* Book of Pantal. pag. 337. the Engliſh whereof is this as followeth.

The end of a certain Letter of Mr. Simon Florelius, writin Italian, concerning a lamentable ſlaughter of eighty eight Chriſtian Saints in the parts of Calabria.

News out of Italy, Anno 1560.

AS concerning News I have nothing to write, but only that I ſend you a Copy of certain Letters, imprinted either at Rome or at Venice, concerning the martyrdom or perſecution in two ſeveral Towns of Calabria, eight Italian miles from the borders of Conſentia, the one called St. Sixtus, within two miles of Montalte, under the Seigniory of the Duke of Montalte; the other called Guardia, ſcituate upon the Sea-Coaſt, and twelve miles from St. Sixtus: the which two Towns are utterly deſtroyed, and eight hundred of the Inhabitants there, or (as ſome write from the City of Rome) no leſs than a full thouſand. He that wrote the Letter, was Servant to Aſcanius Carracciolus. The Country and People there I well knew to take the firſt original of their good Doctrine and honeſt Life from the Waldenſes. For before my departure from Geneva, at their requeſt, I ſent them two Schoolmaſters, and two Preachers. The laſt year the two Preachers were martyred, the one at Rome, named Joannes Aloiſius Paſcalis, a Citizen of Cunium; the other at Meſſina, named James Bovell, both of Piedmont: This year the reſidue of that godly Fellowſhip were martyred in the ſame place. I truſt this good Seed ſown in Italy, will bring forth good and plentiful Fruit.

Jo. Aloyſius Paſcalis. Jam. Bovell, Preachers and Martyrs.

Now followeth the Copy of the Letters ſent from Montalte, a Town in Calabria, eight miles diſtant from Conſentia, bearing date the 11*th* of June, 1560. The Writer of which Letters, as ye may perceive, was one of them which call themſelves Catholicks, and followers of the Pope. The words of the Letter be theſe, as hereunder followeth.

K. Hen. 8

Here followeth the Copy of a Letter ſent from Montalte in Calabria, by a Romaniſt, to a certain Friend of his in Rome, containing news of the perſecution of Chriſt's People in Calabria, by the new Pope Pius the Fourth.

Horrible perſecution in Calabria, An. 1560.

HItherto, moſt noble Lord, I have certified you, what here daily hath been done about theſe Heretick: Now cometh next to ſignify unto your Lordſhip the horrible judgment begun this preſent day, being the eleventh of June, to be executed very early in the morning againſt the Lutherans: Which when I think upon, I verily quake and tremble. And truly the manner of their putting to death, was to be compared to the ſlaughter of Calves and Sheep. For they being all thruſt up in one houſe together, as in a Sheepfold, the Executioner cometh in, and amongſt them taketh one and blindfoldeth him with a Muffler about his eyes, and ſo leadeth him forth to a larger place near adjoining, where he commandeth him to kneel down; which being ſo done, he cutteth his Throat, and leaving him half dead, and taking his Butchers Knife and Muffler all of goar Blood, (which the Italians call Benda) cometh again to the reſt, and ſo leading one after another, he diſpatched them all, which were to the number of eighty eight. This Spectacle to behold how doleful and horrible it was, I leave to your Lordſhips Judgment: for to write of it, I my ſelf cannot chuſe but weep. Neither was there any of the beholders there preſent, which ſeeing one to die, could abide to behold the death of another. But certes ſo humbly and patiently they went to death, as is almoſt incredible to believe. Some of them, as they were in dying, affirmed, that they believed even as we do. Notwithſtanding, the moſt part of them died in the ſame their obſtinate Opinions. All the aged Perſons went to death more chearfully; the younger were more timerous. I tremble and ſhake, even to remember how the Executioner held his bloody Knife between his teeth, with the bloody Muffler in his hand, and his arms all in goar blood up to the elbowes, going to the Fold, and taking every one of them, one after another, by the hand, and ſo diſpatching them all, no otherwiſe than doth a Butcher kill his Calves and Sheep.

The Chriſtians killed like Calves. 88 Martyrs.

It is moreover appointed (and the Carts be come already) that all thoſe ſo put to death ſhould be quartered, and ſo be conveyed in the Carts to the hithermoſt parts of Calabria, where they ſhall be hanged upon Poles in the high ways and other places, even to the confines of the ſame Country. Unleſs the Pope's Holineſs and the Lord Viceroy of Naples ſhall give in commandment to the Lord Marqueſs of Buccianus, Governor of the ſaid Province, to ſtay his hand, and go no further, he will proceed with the Rack and Torture, examining all other, and ſo increaſe the number in ſuch ſort, that he will nigh diſpatch them all.

This day it is alſo determined, that an hundred of the more ancient Women ſhould appear to be examined and racked, and after to be put to death, that the mixture may be perfect, for ſo many Men ſo many Women. And thus have you that I can ſay of this Juſtice. Now is it about two of the clock in the afternoon: ſhortly, we ſhall hear what ſome of them ſaid when they went to execution. There be certain of them ſo obſtinate, that they will not look upon the Crucifix, nor be confeſſed to the Prieſt, and they ſhall be burned alive.

The Hereticks that be apprehended and condemned, are to the number of 1600, but as yet no more but theſe aforeſaid 88, are already executed. This People have their original of the Valley named Angrognia, near to Subaudia, and in Calabria are called Ultramontani. In the Kingdom of Naples, there are four other places of the ſame people, of whom whether they live well or no, as yet we know not; for they are but ſimple people, ignorant without learning, Wood-gatherers, and Husbandmen: but as I hear, much devout and religious, giving themſelves to die for Religion's ſake. From Montalto the 11th of June. And thus much writeth this Romaniſt.

Here moreover is to be noted, that the foreſaid Marqueſs Buccianus above ſpecified, had a Son or Brother, unto whom the ſaid new Pope (Pius the fourth belike) is reported to have promiſed a Cardinalſhip at Rome, if all the Lutherans were extirpated and rooted out in that Province. And like enough that the ſame was the cauſe of his butcherly perſecution and effuſion of Chriſtian Blood, in the ſaid Country of Calabria, beyond Naples, in Italy.

Beſides thoſe godly Italian Martyrs in this Table above contained, many other alſo have ſuffered in the ſame Country of Italy, of whom ſome before have been ſpecified, ſome peradventure omitted. But many more there be, whoſe names we know not; whereof as ſoon as knowledg may be given unto us, we purpoſe God willing, to impart the ſame, loving Reader, unto thee.

Now in the mean time it followeth (according to my promiſe made before) next after this lamentable ſlaughter of Calabria, here to inſert alſo the tragical Perſecution, and horrible Murder of the faithful Flock of Chriſt, inhabiting in Mirindol in France, and in the Towns adjacent near unto the ſame, in the time of Franciſcus 1. the French King. The furious cruelty of which miſerable Perſecution, altho it cannot be ſet forth too much at large, yet becauſe we will not weary too much the Reader with the full length thereof, we have ſo contracted the ſame, eſpecially the principal effect thereof we have comprehended in ſuch ſort, that as we on the one part have avoided prolixity, ſo on the other, we have omitted nothing which might ſeem unworthy to be forgot. The ſtory here followeth.

A notable Hiſtory of the Perſecution and Deſtruction of the People of Merindol and Cabriers in the Country of Provence: where not a few Perſons, but whole Villages and Townſhips, with the moſt part of all the foreſaid Country, both Men, Women, and Children, were put to all kind of Cruelty, and ſuffered Martyrdom for the Profeſſion of the Goſpel.

The lamentable ſtory of Merindol.

THey that write of the beginning of this People, ſay, That about two hundred years ago, they came out of the Country of Piedmont to inhabit in Province, in certain Villages deſtroyed by Wars, and other deſert places: wherein they uſed ſuch labour and diligence, that they had abundance of Corn, Wine, Oils, Hony, Almonds, with other Fruits and Commodities of the Earth, and much Cattel. Before they came thither, Merindol was a barren Deſert, and not inhabited. But theſe good People (in whom God always had reſerved ſome little Seed of Piety) being diſperſed and ſeparated from the ſociety of Men, were compelled to dwell with Beaſts, in that waſte and wild Deſert, which notwithſtanding, through the Bleſſing of God, and their great labour and travel, became exceeding fruitful. Notwithſtanding, the World in the mean time ſo deteſted and abhorred them, and with all ſhameful rebukes and contumelies, railed againſt them in ſuch deſpiteful manner, that it ſeemed they were not worthy that the Earth ſhould bear them. For they of a long continuance and cuſtom had refuſed the Biſhop of Rome's Authority, and obſerved ever a more perfect kind of Doctrine than others, delivered unto them from the Father to the Son, ever ſince the year of our Lord 1200.

For the original of this people, ſee before.

For this cauſe they were often accuſed and complained of to the King, as contemners and deſpiſers of the Magiſtrates, and Rebels. Wherefore they were called by divers names, according to the Countries and Places where they dwelt. For in the Country about Lions, they were called the poor People of Lions; in the borders of Sarmatia, and Livonia, and other Countries toward the North, they were called Lollards; in Flanders and Artois, Turrelupins, of a Deſert where Wolves did haunt. In Dolphine, with great deſpight, they were called Chagnards, becauſe they lived in places open to the Sun, and without houſe or harbour. But moſt commonly they were called Waldoys, of Waldo, who firſt inſtructed them in the Word of God; which name continued until the name of Lutherans came up, which above all other was moſt hated and abhorred.

Pauperes de Lugduno; Waldenſes, Turrelupini, Chagnardi. Of Waldo, read before.

Notwithſtanding in all theſe moſt ſpiteful contumelies and ſlanders, the People dwelling at the foot of the Alps, and alſo in Merindol and Cabriers, and the quarters thereabout, always lived ſo godly, ſo uprightly, and juſtly, that in all their Life and Converſation, there appeared to be in them a great fear of God. That little light of true knowledg which God had given them, they laboured by all mens to kindle and encreaſe daily more and more, ſparing no charges, whether it were to procure Books of the holy Scriptures, or to inſtruct ſuch as were of the beſt and moſt towardly wits in learning and godlineſs, or elſe to ſend them into other Countries, yea even to the farthest parts of the Earth, where they had heard that any light of the Goſpel began to ſhine.

For in the year 1530, underſtanding that the Goſpel was preached in certain Towns of Germany and Switzerland, they ſent thither two learned Men, that is, Georgius Maurellus born in Delphine, a godly Preacher of their own, and whom they had of their own charges brought up in learning, and Pet. Latomus a Burgundian, to confer with the wiſe and learned Miniſters of the Churches there, in the Doctrine of the Goſpel, and to know the whole form and manner which thoſe Churches uſed in the ſervice and worſhipping of God: and particularly to have their advice alſo upon certain Points which they were not reſolved in. Theſe two, after great conference had with the chiefeſt in the Church of God, namely with Oecolampadius at Baſil; at Strasburg, with Bucer and Capito; and at Bern, with Bartholdus Hallerus, as they were returning thorow Burgundy homeward, Petrus Latomus was taken at Dyon, and caſt into Priſon; Maurellus eſcaped, and returned alone to Merindol, with the Books and Letters which he brought with him from the Churches of Germany; and declared to his Brethren all the Points of his Commiſſion, and opened unto them, how many and great Errors they were in, into the which their old Miniſters, whom they called * Barbes (that is to ſay, Uncles) had brought them, leading them from the right way of true Religion.

*Theſe were their Miniſters for lack of better, until they came to more knowledg: which inſtructed them moſt commonly by night abroad in Caves and Quarries, for fear of Perſecution.

When the People heard this, they were moved with ſuch a zeal to have their Churches reformed, that they ſent for the moſt ancient Brethren, and the chiefeſt in knowledg and experience of all Calabria and Apulia, to conſult with them touching the Reformation of the Church. This matter was ſo handled, that it ſtirred up the Biſhops, Prieſts, and Monks in all Province, with great rage againſt them. Amongſt other, there was one cruel Wretch called Jo. de Roma a Monk, who obtaining a Commiſſion to examine thoſe that were ſuſpected to be of the Waldoys or Lutheran Profeſſion, forthwith ceaſed not to afflict the Faithful with all kind of Cruelty that he could deviſe or imagine. Amongſt other moſt horrible torments, this was one which he moſt delighted in and moſt commonly practiſed; he filled Boots with boiling Greaſe, and put them upon their Legs, tying them backward to a Form, with their Legs hanging down over a ſmall fire, and ſo he examined them. Thus he tormented very many, and in the end moſt cruelly put them to death.

Of theſe Calabrians. Vide infra.

Joannes de Roma, a wretched Perſecutor.

The cruelty of a Papiſt.

The firſt whom he thus tormented, were Michelottus Serra and W. Melius, and a number more.

Michelottus Serra, W. Melius, Martyrs.

Wherefore Francis the French King, being informed of the ſtrange and outragious cruelty of this Helliſh Monk, ſent Letters to the High Court of Parliament of Province, that forthwith he ſhould be apprehended, and by form of Proceſs, and order of Law, he ſhould be condemned, and advertiſement ſent unto him with all ſpeed of his Condemnation. The Monk being advertiſed hereof by his Friends, conveyed himſelf to Avinion, where he thought to enjoy the Spoilings, which he, like a notorious Thief, had gotten by fraud and extortion from the poor Chriſtians. But ſhortly after, he which had ſo ſhamefully ſpoiled others, was ſpoiled of all together by his own houſhold Servants. Whereupon ſhortly after he fell ſick of a moſt horrible Diſeaſe, ſtrange and unknown to any Phyſician. So extream were the pains and torments wherewith he was continually vexed in all his Body, that no Ointment, no Fomentation, nor any thing elſe could eaſe him one minute of an hour. Neither was there any Man that could tarry near about him, nor yet would any one of his own Friends come near to him, ſo great was the ſtench that came from him. For the which cauſe he was carried from the Jacobines to an Hoſpital, there to be kept. But the ſtench and infection ſo increaſed, that no Man there durſt come near him: no, nor he himſelf was able to abide the horrible ſtench that iſſued from his Body, full of Ulcers and Sores, and ſwarming with Vermine, and ſo rotten, that the fleſh fell away from the bones by peacemeal.

The laſt judſtment of God againſt a cruel Perſecutor.

Whiles he was in theſe torments and anguiſh, he cried out oftentimes in great rage; Oh who will deliver me? who will kill and rid me out of theſe intollerable pains, which I know I ſuffer for the Evils & Oppreſſions that I have done to the poor Men? And he himſelf went about divers times to deſtroy himſelf, but he had not the power. In theſe horrible torments and anguiſh, and fearful deſpair, this Blaſphemer and moſt cruel Homicide moſt miſerably ended his unhappy days and curſed life, as a ſpectacle to all Perſecutors, receiving a juſt reward of his cruelty by the juſt judgment of God. When he was dead, there was no Man that would come near him to bury him: but a young Novice newly come to his Order, inſtead of a more honourable Sepulture, caught hold with a Hook upon his ſtinking Carrion, and drew him into a hole hard by which was made for him.

A Preſident to all Perſecutors.

After the death of this cruel Monſter the Biſhop of Aix, by his Official Perionet, continued the Perſecution, and put a great multitude of them in Priſon: of whom ſome by force of torments revolted from the Truth; the others which continued conſtant, after he had condemned them of Hereſy, were put into the hands of the ordinary Judg, which at that time was one Meiranus, a notable cruel Perſecutor, who without any form of Proceſs, or order of Law, ſuch as the Official had pronounced to be Hereticks, he put to death with moſt cruel torments; but ſhortly after he received a juſt reward of his cruelty in like manner.

The Biſhop of Aix, Perionet his Official, Meiranus, cruel Perſecutors.

Another example of God's terrible judgment upon a Perſecutor.

After the death of the good Preſident Cuſinetus, the Lord of Reveſt, being chief Preſident of the Parliament of Aix, put many of the Faithful to death. Who afterward, being put out of his Office, returned to his Houſe of Reveſt, where he was ſtricken with ſuch an horrible ſickneſs, that, for the fury and madneſs which he was in, his Wife, or any that were about him, durſt not come near him; and ſo he, dying in his fury and rage, was juſtly plagued for his unmerciful and cruel dealing.

Another example of God's judgment upon Caſſaneus a bloody perſecutor. A bloody Decree againſt the Merindoliane.

After him ſucceeded Barthol. Caſſaneus, likewiſe a peſtilent Perſecutor, whom God at length ſtruck with a fearful and ſudden Death. In the time of this Tyrant, thoſe of Merindol, in the perſon of ten, were cited perſonally to appear before the King's Attorney. But they, hearing that the Court had determined to burn them without any further Proceſs or order of Law, durſt not appear at the day appointed. For which cauſe the Court awarded a cruel Sentence againſt Merindol, and condemned all the Inhabitants to be burned, both Men and Women, ſparing none, no not the little Children and Infants; the Town to be raſed, and their Houſes beaten to the ground; alſo the Trees to be cut down, as well Olive-trees as all other, and nothing to be left, to the intent it ſhould never be inhabited again, but remain as a Deſert or Wilderneſs.

This bloody Arreſt or Decree ſeemed ſo ſtrange and wonderful, that in every place throughout all Province there was great reaſoning and diſputation concerning the ſame, eſpecially among the Advocates and Men of learning and underſtanding: inſomuch that many durſt boldly and openly ſay, that they greatly marvelled how that Court of Parliament could be ſo mad, or ſo bewitched, to give out ſuch an Arreſt, ſo manifeſtly injurious and unjuſt, and contrary to all right and reaſon, yea to all ſenſe of humanity; alſo contrary to the ſolemn Oath which all ſuch as are received to Office in Courts of Parliament, are accuſtomed to make, that is to ſay, to judg juſtly and uprightly, according to the Law of God, and the juſt Ordinances and Laws of the Realm, ſo that God thereby might be honoured, and every Man's right regarded, without reſpect of Perſons.

Some of the Advocates or Lawyers, defending the ſaid Arreſt to be juſt and right, ſaid, That in caſe of Lutheraniſm, the Judges are not bound to obſerve either Right or Reaſon, Law or Ordinance; and that the Judges cannot fail or do amiſs, whatſoever judgment they do give, ſo that it tend to the ruin and extirpation of all ſuch as are ſuſpected to be Lutherans.

To this the other Lawyers and learned Men anſwered, That upon their ſayings it would enſue, that the Judges ſhould now altogether follow the ſame manner and form in proceeding againſt the Chriſtians accuſed to be Lutherans, which the Goſpel witneſſeth that the Prieſts, Scribes, and Phariſees followed in purſuing and perſecuting, and finally condemning our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Even ſo the Phariſees proceeded againſt Chriſt the Son of God.

By theſe and ſuch other-like talks, the ſaid Arreſt was publiſhed throughout the Country, and there was no Aſſembly or Banquet where it was not diſputed or talked of: and namely, within twelve days after the Arreſt was given out, there was a great Banquet in the Town of Aix; at which Banquet was preſent M. Bartholomew Chaſſance, Preſident,

The Biſhops Banquet.

K. Hen. 8

Preſident, and many other Counſellors and other noble Perſonages and Men of Authority. There was alſo the Archbiſhop of Arles, and the Biſhop of Aix, with divers Ladies and Gentlewomen, amongſt whom was one which was commonly reported to be the Biſhop of Aix his Concubine. They were ſcarce well ſate at the Table, but ſhe began thus to talk; My L. Preſident, will you not execute the Arreſt which is given out of late againſt the Lutherans of Merindol? The Preſident anſwered nothing, feigning that he heard her not. Then a certain Gentleman asked of her What Arreſt that was? She recited it in manner and form as it was given out, forgetting nothing, as if ſhe had a long time ſtudied to commit the ſame to memory. Whereunto they which were at the Banquet gave diligent eare, without any word ſpeaking until ſhe had ended her Tale.

There is no Cruelty to Cruelty of an Harlot.

Then the Lord Alenc, a Man fearing God, and of great underſtanding, ſaid unto her; Gentlewoman, you have learned this Tale either of ſome who would have it ſo, or elſe it is given out by ſome Parliament of Women. Then the Lord of Senas, an ancient Counſellor, ſaid unto him; No, no, my Lord of Alanc, it is no Tale which you have heard this Gentlewoman tell; for it is an Arreſt given out by a whole Senate; and you ought not thus to ſpeak, except you would call the Court of Province a Parliament of Women. Then the Lord of Alanc began to excuſe himſelf with Proteſtation, that he would not ſpeak any thing to blemiſh the Authority of that Soveraign Court; notwithſtanding he could not believe all that which the ſaid Gentlewoman had told, that is to ſay, that all the Inhabitants of Merindol were condemned to die by the Arreſt of the ſaid Court of Parliament of Province, and eſpecially the Women, and little Children, and Infants; and the Town to be raſed for the fault of ten or twelve Perſons which did not appear before the ſaid Court at the day appointed. And the Lord Beavieu alſo anſwered, that he believed not the ſaid Court to have given out any ſuch Arreſt; for that (ſaid he) were a thing moſt unreaſonable, and ſuch as the very Turks, and the greateſt Tyrants in the World would judg to be a thing moſt deteſtable; and ſaid further, that he had known a long time many of Merindol, which ſeemed unto him to be Men of great honeſty: and my Lord Preſident (ſaid he) can certifie us well what is done in this matter, for we ought not to give credit unto Womens Tales. Then the Gentlewoman which had rehearſed the Arreſt, ſtayed not to hear the Preſident's Anſwer, but ſuddenly looking upon the Biſhop of Aix, ſaid, I ſhould greatly have marvelled, if there had been none in all this Company which would defend theſe wicked Men. And lifting up her Eyes to Heaven, in a great womanly chaſe and fume, ſaid, Would to God that all the Lutherans which are in Province, yea, and in all France, had Horns growing on their Foreheads, then we ſhould ſee a goodly many of Horns. To whom the Lord Beavieu ſuddenly anſwered, ſaying, Would to God all Prieſt's Harlots ſhould chatter like Pies. Then ſaid the Gentlewoman, Ah, my Lord Beavieu, you ought not ſo to ſpeak againſt our holy Mother the Chruch, for that there was never Dog that barked againſt the Crucifix, but he waxed mad. Whereat the Biſhop of Aix laughed, and clapping the Gentlewoman on the ſhoulder, ſaid, By my holy Orders, my Minion, well ſaid, I con you thank. She hath talked well unto you, my L. Beavieu, remember well the Leſſon which ſhe hath given you. Here the L. Beavieu being wholly moved with anger, ſaid, I care neither for her School nor yours, for it would be long before a Man ſhould learn of either of you both, any Honeſty or Honour. For if I ſhould ſay, that the moſt part of the Biſhops and Prieſts are abominable Adulterers, blind Idolaters, Deceivers, Thieves, Seducers, I ſhould not ſpeak againſt the holy Church, but againſt an heap and flock of Wolves, Dogs, and filthy Swine: In ſpeaking theſe things I ſhould think a Man not to be mad at all, except he be mad for ſpeaking of the truth.

The Lord of Alenc a good man.

The Lord of Beavieu.

A Catholick wiſh of a Prieſts Harlot.

Then the Archbiſhop in a great fury anſwered, My L. Beavieu, you ſpeak very evil, and you muſt give account, when time and place ſerveth, of this your talk which you have here uttered againſt the Church-men. I would, ſaid the L. Beavieu, that it were to do even this preſent day, and I would bind my ſelf to prove more Abuſes and Naughtineſs in Prieſts than I have yet ſpoken. Then ſaid the Preſident Chaſſanee, My L. Beavieu, let us leave off this talk, and live as our Fathers have done, and maintain their Honour. Then ſaid he in great anger, I am no Prieſt's Son to maintain their Wickedneſs and Abuſe. And afterward he ſaid, I am well content to honour all true Paſtors of the Church, and will not blame them which ſhew good Example in their Doctrine and living: but I demand of you, my Lord, of Arles, and you my L. of Aix, when as our Lord Chriſt Jeſus called the Prieſts, deceiving Hypocrites, blind Seducers, Robbers and Thieves, did he them any outrage or wrong? and they anſwered, no; for the moſt part of them were ſuch Men. Then ſaid the Lord Beavieu, even ſo it is with the Biſhops and Prieſts which I have ſpoken of, for they are ſuch kind of Men, or rather worſe: and I ſo abhor their filthy and abominable life, that I dare not ſpeak the one half of that which I know, and therefore in ſpeaking the truth, to cool the babbling of an Harlot, I do them no Injury.

The Popes Churchmen worſe than the old Phariſees.

Then Mounſieur de Senas, an ancient Councellor, ſaid, Let us leave off this contentious talk, for we are here aſſembled and come together to make good Chear. And afterward he ſaid, Mounſieur de Beavieu, for the Love and Amity which I do bear unto you, I will advertiſe you of three things, which, if you will do, you ſhall find great eaſe therein.

Churchmen, be they never ſo evil, muſt not be ſpoken againſt. 1 Par. 16.

The firſt is, That you neither by Word nor Deed aid or aſſiſt thoſe which you hear to be Lutherans.

Secondly, That you do not intermeddle openly to reprove Ladies and Gentlewomen for their paſtime and pleaſure.

Thirdly, That you do never ſpeak againſt the life and living of Prieſts, how wicked ſoever it be, according to this ſaying, Do not touch mine Anointed.

To whom Mounſieur de Beavieu anſwered, As touching the firſt Point, I know no Lutherans, neither what is meant by this Word Lutheraniſm, except you do call them Lutherans, which profeſs the Doctrine of the Goſpel. Neither yet will I ever allow any Arreſt which ſhall be given out to death againſt Men, whoſe cauſe hath not been heard, eſpecially againſt Women and young Infants: and I am aſſured, that there is no Court of Parliament in all France, which will approve or allow any ſuch Arreſt. And whereas you ſay, that I ſhould not meddle to reprove Ladies and Gentlewomen, if I knew any Kinſwoman of mine, which would abandon her ſelf unto a Prieſt or Clark, yea, albeit he were a Cardinal or Biſhop, I would not do her ſo much honour as to rebuke her therefore, but at the leaſt I would cut off her Noſe. And as touching Prieſts, as I am contented not to meddle with their Buſineſs, ſo likewiſe I will not that they meddle with mine hereafter, or come frome henceforth within mine houſe. For as many as I ſhall find or take there, I will ſet their Crowns ſo near their their Shoulders, that they ſhall need no more to wear any Hoods about their Necks; the like alſo ſaid the Preſident Caſſanee.

How Prieſts Harlots ſhould be handled.

Then the Biſhop of Aix his Sweet-heart, which had begun the Quarrel, ſaid, I ſhall not be in quiet, except I ſpeak yet one word more unto Mounſieur de Beavieu: Do you think, ſaid ſhe unto him, that all the Cardinals, Biſhops, Abbats, Prieſts, and all thoſe holy religious Men, which go oftentimes to Gentlemen's houſes, and haunt the Caſtles and Palaces of Princes and Noble Men, go thither to commit Wickedneſs? Alſo you muſt not think evil of all thoſe Ladies and Gentlewomen that go to Biſhops houſes of Devotion, and to reveal thoſe whom they know to be Lutherans, as it was commanded in the Pulpit upon pain of Excommunication: if ſo be you will maintain theſe words, I will not ceaſe to accuſe you of crime, and alſo of Treaſon both to God and Man: for here be thoſe in this Company, which ſhall make you give an account thereof. She had not ſo ſoon ended her talk, but Mounſieur Beavieu ſaid unto her, Avaunt, O Herodias, thou filthy and impudent Harlot! is it thy part to open thy Mouth to talk in this Company? Doſt thou well underſtand and know what Treaſon to God and Man meaneth? Is it not ſufficient for thee to be as thou art, but thou muſt ſollicite other to ſhed innocent Blood? With theſe Words the Gentlewoman was ſomewhat amazed. All Men had thought that this talk had been at at end, and every Man began to invent ſome merry Communication, that the former matter ſhould be no more talked of.

Well ſpoken and like an Harlot.

As Herodias wrought the death of John Baptiſt, ſo this Strumpet ſeeks the death of the Merindolians. Two Strumpets well compared together.

At the laſt, the Gentlewoman adviſing her ſelf, and thinking that ſhe was too much injured, in that it was ſaid, that ſhe went about to ſhed innocent Blood, ſhe brake off all their talk, and with a loud voice ſaid, Mounſieur Beavieu, if I were a Man as I am a Woman, I would offer you the Combate, to prove that I am no ſuch manner of Woman as you ſay I am, that I deſire to ſhed innocent Blood. Do you call the Blood of theſe wicked Men of Merindol, innocent Blood? True it is, that I deſire and offer with my whole power, that theſe naughty packs of Merindol, and ſuch like as they are, ſhould be ſlain and deſtroyed, from the greateſt even unto the leaſt. And to ſee the beginning of this work, I have imployed all my credit, and all my Friends, and do ſpare neither Body nor Goods to work the Ruin and Deſtruction of theſe People, and to raſe out and to deface their memory from amongſt Men. Do you then, Mounſieur Beavieu, call the ſlaughter of theſe Lutherans, the effuſion of innocent Blood? And ſay you what you will, I will not refrain for any man living, to go either by day or by night unto the Houſes of Biſhops, in all (a) honeſty and honour, for the Devotion which I bear unto our holy (b) Mother the Church, and alſo I will receive into my houſe all religious Men, to conſult and deviſe the means how to put theſe Lutherans to death. But as Mounſieur Beavieu took no more regard unto her talk, ſo likewiſe all that were at the Table diſpraiſed her, and were weary of her prating.

God ſendeth a ſhrewd Cow ſhort Horns. The cruel heart of an Harlot.

(a) The Vizor of honeſty on a Harlots face.

(b) Like Mother, like Daughter.

Then there was a certain young Gentleman, which merrily jeſting, ſaid unto her, Gentlewoman, it muſt needs be that theſe poor People, unto whom you do wiſh this cruel death, have done you ſome great diſpleaſure. Then ſaid ſhe, I may well take an Oath, that I never knew one of theſe wretched People, neither (that I wot of) ever ſaw any of them. And I had rather to meet ten Devils than one of thoſe naughty Knaves: for their Opinions are ſo deteſtable, that happy and bleſſed are they that never heard tell of them. And I was not then well adviſed at what time by Curioſity, I ſeeing the Biſhop of Aix ſo much troubled and angry, that he could not eat nor drink, did deſire him and conſtrain him to tell me the cauſe thereof. Then he perceiving that I would not be well contented if he ſhould not tell me, declared unto me ſome part of the Cauſe, that is to ſay, that there were certain Hereticks, which ſpake againſt our holy Mother the Church, and among other errors, they maintained even to death, that all Biſhops, Prieſts and Paſtors ought to be married, or elſe they ſhould be gelded: and hearing this I was marvellouſly offended, and ever ſince I did hate them to the death. And alſo it was injoyined unto me by Penance, that I ſhould endeavour with all my power to put theſe Hereticks to death. After theſe frivolous talks, there was great trouble and debate amongſt them, and many threatnings, which were too long here to deſcribe.

Oderunt me gratis. John 15.

The Popes Clergy cannot abide honeſt Marriage to die for it.

Then the Preſident Caſſanee, and the Councellors parted aſide, and the Gentlemen went on the other part. The Archbiſhop of Arles, the Biſhop of Aix, and divers Abbats, Priors, and others, aſſembled themſelves together, to conſult how this Arreſt might be executed with all ſpeed, intending to raiſe a new Perſecution, greater than that of John the Jacobin Monk of Rome; for otherwiſe (ſaid they) our State and Honour is like to decay: We ſhall be reproved, contemned, and derided of all Men. And if none ſhould thus vaunt and ſet themſelves againſt us, but theſe Peaſants, and ſuch like, it were but a ſmall matter; but many Doctors of Divinity, and Men of the religious Order, divers Senators and Advocates, many wiſe and well learned Men, alſo a great part of the Nobility (if we may ſo ſay) and that of great Renown, yea, even of the chiefeſt Peers in all Europe, begin to contemn and deſpiſe us, counting us to be no true Paſtors of the Church; ſo that except we ſee to this Miſchief, and provide for Remedy betime, it is greatly to be feared, leſt not only we ſhall be compelled to forſake our Dignities, Poſſeſſions, and Livings, which we now wealthily enjoy, but alſo the Church being ſpoiled of her Paſtors and Guides, ſhall hereafter come to miſerable Ruin, and utter Deſolation. This matter therefore now requireth great Diligence and Circumſpection, and that with all celerity.

Quærebant Principes Sacerdotum & Scribæ, quomodo interficerent Jeſum, Luke 22.

Note how the Popes Church is led not with any Conſcience of truth, but only with love of Livings.

Then the Archbiſhop of Arles, not forgetting his Spaniſh Subtilties and Policies, gave his Advice as followeth. Againſt the Nobility (ſaid he) we muſt take heed that we attempt nothing raſhly, but rather we muſt ſeek all the means we can how to pleaſe them; for they are our ſhield, our fortreſs and defence. And albeit we know that many of them do both ſpeak and think evil of us, and that they are of theſe new Goſpellers, yet may we not reprove them, or exaſperate them in any caſe: but ſeeing they are too much bent againſt us already, we muſt rather ſeek how to win them, and to make them our Friends again by gifts and Preſents: and by this Policy we ſhall live in ſafety under their Protection. But if we enterpriſe any thing againſt them, ſure we are to gain nothing thereby, as we are by experience already ſufficiently taught.

It is well ſaid (ſaid the Biſhop of Aix) but I can ſhew you a good Remedy for this Diſeaſe: we muſt go about with all our endeavour and power, and policy, and all the Friends we can make, ſparing no Charges, but ſpending Goods, Wealth and Treaſure, to make ſuch a ſlaughter of the Merindolians and ruſtical Peaſants, that none ſhall be ſo bold hereafter, whatſoever they be, yea, altho they be of the Blood Royal, once to open their Mouths againſt us, or the Eccleſiaſtical State. And to bring this matter to paſs, we have no better way than to withdraw our ſelves to Avinion, in the which City we ſhall find many Biſhops, Abbots, and other famous Men, which will with us imploy their whole endeavour to maintain and uphold the Majeſty of our holy Mother the Church. This Counſel was well liked of them all. Whereupon the ſaid Archbiſhop of Arles and the Biſhop of Aix went with all ſpeed to Avinion, there to aſſemble out of hand the Biſhops, and other Men of Authority and Credit, to intreat of this matter. In this peſtilent Conſpiracy, the Biſhop of Aix, a ſtout Champion, and a great Defender of the Traditions of Men, taking upon him to be the chief Orator, began in a manner as followeth:

A butcherly Religion which worketh all by Blood.

Cathedræ peſtilentiæ.

'O Ye Fathers and Brethren, ye are not ignorant, that a great Tempeſt is raiſed up againſt the little Bark 'of Chriſt Jeſus, now in great danger, and ready to peri'ſh. The Storm cometh from the North, whereof all 'theſe troubles proceed. The Seas rage, the Waters ruſh 'in on every ſide, the Winds blow and beat upon our 'Houſe, and we without ſpeedy Remedy are like to ſu'ſtain Shipwrack and loſs of all together. For Oblations 'ceaſe, Pilgrimage and Devotion waxeth cold, Charity is 'clean gone, our Eſtimation and Authority is debaſed, our 'Juriſdiction decayed, and the Ordinances of the Church 'deſpiſed. And wherefore are we ſet and ordained over Na'tions and Kingdoms, but to root out and deſtroy, to ſub'vert and overthrow whatſoever is againſt our holy Mother 'the Church? Wherefore let us now awake, let us ſtand 'ſtoutly in the right of our own Poſſeſſion, that we may 'root out from the memory of men for ever, the whole 'Rout of the wicked Lutherans: Thoſe Foxes (I ſay) which 'deſtroy the Vineyard of the Lord; thoſe great Whales 'which go about to drown the little Bark of the Son of 'God. We have already well begun, and have procured a 'terrible Arreſt againſt theſe curſed Hereticks of Merindol; 'now then reſteth no more, but only the ſame to be put in 'Execution. Let us therefore employ our whole endea'vour, that nothing happen which may let or hinder that 'which we have ſo happily begun; and let us take good 'heed that our Gold and Silver do not witneſs againſt 'us at the day of Judgment, if we refuſe to beſtow the 'ſame, that we may make ſo good a Sacrifice unto God. 'And for my part I offer to wage and furniſh of mine own 'Coſts and Charges, an hundred Men well horſed, with 'all other Furniture to them belonging, and that ſo long, 'until the utter Deſtruction and Subverſion of theſe 'wretched and curſed Caitifs be fully performed and fi'niſhed.

An Oration of Catiline, that is, the Oration of the Biſhop of Aix, ſeditious and bloody.

Your Oblations be againſt the Scripture.

Your Pilgrimage is Idolatry.

Your Charity is gone indeed, when ye ſeek ſo the Blood of your Brethren.

Your eſtimation is Phariſaical, your Juriſdiction is tyrannical, your Ordinances ſerve not to Chriſts Glory, but your own.

The day ſhall come when men ſhall think they do a good ſervice to God, in putting you to death. John 16.

This Oration pleaſed the whole multitude, ſaving one Doctor of Divinity, a Frier Jacobin, named Baſſinet, who then anſwered again with this Oration.

'THis is a weighty matter (ſaid he) and of great im'portance; we muſt therefore proceed wiſely, and in 'the fear of God, and beware that we do nothing raſhly. 'For if we ſeek the death and deſtruction of theſe poor and 'miſerable People wrongfully, when the King and the No'bility ſhall hear of ſuch an horrible ſlaughter, we ſhall be in 'great danger, leſt they do to us as we read in the Scrip'tures was done to the Prieſts of Baal. For my part I 'muſt

The Oration of Baſſinet anſwering to the Biſhop of Aix.

K. Hen. 8

The godly Repentance of Baſſinet.

'muſt ſay, and unfeignedly confeſs, that I have too raſhly 'and lightly ſigned many Proceſſes againſt thoſe which have 'been accuſed of heretical Doctrine: but now I do proteſt 'before God which ſeeth and knoweth the Hearts of Men, 'that, ſeeing the lamentable end and effect of mine Aſ'ſignments, I have had no quietneſs in my Conſcience, 'conſidering that the ſecular Judges, at the Report of the 'Judgment and Sentence given by me and other Doctors 'my Companions, have condemned all thoſe unto moſt 'cruel death, whom we have adjudged to be Hereticks. And 'the cauſe why in Conſcience I am thus diſquieted, is this; 'that now of late, ſince I have given my ſelf more diligent'ly to the reading and contemplation of the holy Scriptures, 'I have perceived that the moſt part of thoſe Articles, which

The Teſtimony of Baſſinet for Lutherans.

'they that are called Lutherans do maintain, are ſo conform'able and agreeing to the Scriptures, that for my part I 'can no longer gainſay them, except I ſhould even wilfully 'and maliciouſly reſiſt and ſtrive againſt the holy Ordinan'ces of God. Albeit hitherto to maintain the honour of 'our holy Mother the Church, and of our holy Father the 'Pope, and of our Orders, I have conſented to the Opi'nions and doings of other Doctors, as well through igno'rance, as alſo becauſe I would not ſeem to attempt any 'thing againſt the Will and Pleaſure of the Prelates and 'Vicars general. Yet now it ſeemeth unto me, that we 'ought not any more to proceed in this matter as we have 'done in time paſt. It ſhall be ſufficient to puniſh them 'with Fines, or to baniſh them, which ſhall ſpeak too in'temperately and raſhly againſt the Conſtitutions of the 'Church, and of the Pope. And ſuch as ſhall be plainly 'convicted by the holy Scripture to be blaſphemous or 'obſtinate Hereticks, to be condemned to death according 'to the enormity of their Crimes or Errors, or elſe to 'perpetual Priſon. And this my Advice and Counſel I de'ſire you to take in good part.

With this Counſel of Baſſinet all the Company was offended, but eſpecially the Biſhop of Aix, who, lifting up his voice above all the reſt, ſaid thus unto him; O thou Man of little Faith! whereof art thou in doubt? Doſt thou repent thee of that thou haſt well done? Thou haſt told here a Tale that ſmelleth of Fagots and Brimſtone. Is there any difference (thinkeſt thou) between Hereſies and Blaſphemies ſpoken and maintained againſt the holy Scriptures, and Opinions holden againſt our holy Mother the Church, and contrary to our holy Father the Pope, almoſt undoubted and true God on Earth? Art thou a Maſter in Iſrael, and knoweſt thou not theſe things? Then ſaid the Biſhop of Arles, Could any Man intreat better of the little Bark of Chriſt Jeſus, than my Lord of Aix hath done? Then ſtood up Baſſinet again, and made this Oration.

God and the Pope, and the obedience of them two compared together, Joh. 3.

Another Oration of Baſſinet.

'IT is true that my Lord the Biſhop of Aix hath very well 'ſet out the manners and ſtate of the Clergy, and hath 'aptly reproved the Vices and Hereſies of this preſent time; 'and therefore ſo ſoon as mention was made of the Ship 'of Chriſt Jeſus, it came into my mind firſt of all of the 'high Biſhop of Jeruſalem, the Prieſts, the Doctors of the 'Law, the Scribes and Phariſees, which ſometimes had the 'governance of this Ship, being ordained Paſtors in the 'Church of God: But when they forſook the Law of God, 'and ſerved him with Men's Inventions and Traditions, he 'deſtroyed thoſe Hypocrites in his great Indignation; 'and having compaſſion and pity upon the People which 'were like Sheep without a Shepherd, he ſent diligent Fiſh'ers to fiſh for Men, faithful Workmen into his Harveſt, and 'Labourers into his Vineyard, which ſhall all bring forth 'true Fruits in their ſeaſon. Secondly, conſidering the 'purpoſe and intent of the Reverend Lord Biſhop of Aix, 'I called to mind the ſaying of the Apoſtle in his firſt Epiſtle 'and fourth Chapter unto Timothy, That in the latter days 'ſome ſhall fall away from the Faith, following after de'ceitful Spirits, and the Doctrine of Devils. And the 'Apoſtle giveth a Mark whereby a Man ſhall know them. 'Likewiſe our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in the ſeventh Chapter of 'Matthew, ſaith, That the falſe Prophets ſhall come cloathed 'in Sheep-ſkins, but inwardly they are ravening Wolves, and 'by their Fruits they ſhall be known. By theſe two, and 'divers ſuch other places, it is eaſie to underſtand, who are 'they that go about to drown this little Bark of Chriſt. 'Are they not thoſe which fill the ſame with filthy and un'clean things, with mire and dirt, with puddle and ſtink'ing Water? Are they not thoſe which have forſaken Jeſus 'Chriſt, the Fountain of living Water, and have digged 'unto themſelves Pits or Ciſterns which will hold no Wa'ter? Truly even thoſe they are which vaunt themſelves 'to be the Salt of Earth, and yet have no ſavour at all; 'which call themſelves Paſtors, and yet are nothing leſs 'than true Paſtors, for they miniſter not unto the Sheep the 'true paſture and feeding, neither divide and diſtribute the 'true Bread of the Word of Life. And (if I may be bold 'to ſpeak it) would it not be at this preſent as great a 'Wonder to hear a Biſhop preach, as to ſee an Aſs flie? Are 'not they accurſed of God which glory and avaunt them'ſelves to have the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, and 'neither enter in themſelves, nor ſuffer them that would 'enter, to come in? They may be known right well by 'their Fruits; for they have forſaken Faith, Judgment, and Matth. 23. 'Mercy, and there is no honeſt, clean, or undefiled thing in 'them, but their Habit, their Rochet, and their Surplice, 'and ſuch other. Outwardly they are exceeding neat and 'trim, but within they are full of all Abomination, Rapine, 'Gluttony, filthy Luſt, and all manner of Uncleanneſs; 'they are like painted Sepulchres, which outwardly appear 'beautiful and fair, but within they are full of Filth and 'Corruption. A Man ſhall know, I ſay, theſe ravening 'Wolves by their Fruits, which devour the quick and the 'dead under the pretence of long Prayer; and forſomuch 'as I am enforced to give place to the Truth, and that you 'call me a Maſter in Iſrael, I will not be afraid to prove by 'the holy Scriptures, that your great Pilot and Patron the 'Pope, and the Biſhops the Mariners, and ſuch others which 'impudently forſake the Ship of Chriſt Jeſus, to imbark 'themſelves in Pinnaces and Brigandines, are Pyrates and 'Robbers of the Sea, falſe Prophets, Deceivers, and not 'true Paſtors of the Church of Jeſus Chriſt.

Take heed of thoſe that come to you in Sheep-ſkins, but inwardly they are ravening Wolves. Matth. 7.

The Popes Pilots in Chriſts Ship are become Pyrats.

False Paſtors in Chriſts Church deſcribed.

When Dr. Baſſinet had thus freely and boldly uttered his mind, the whole multitude began to gather about him, and ſpitefully railed at him. But the Biſhop of Aix, above other, raging and crying out as he had been mad; Get thee out, ſaid he, from amongſt us, thou wicked Apoſtata, thou art not worthy to be in this Company. We have burned daily a great many which have not ſo well deſerved it, as thou haſt: We may now perceive, that there is none more ſtedfaſt and fervent in the Faith than the Doctors of the Canon Law. And therefore it were neceſſary to be decreed in the next General Council, that none ſhould have to do in matters of Religion but they alone: For theſe Knaves and beggarly Monks and Friers will bring all to naught. Then the other Doctors of the ſame Order boldly reproved the Biſhop of Aix for the Injury he had done unto them. After this there aroſe a great Diſſention amongſt them, inſomuch that there was nothing at that time determined. After Dinner all theſe reverend Prelates aſſembled together again, but they ſuffered neither Frier nor Monk to be amongſt them, except he were an Abbat. In this Aſſembly they made a general Compoſition confirmed with an Oath, That every Man ſhould endeavour himſelf that the ſaid Arreſt of Merindol ſhould be executed with all expedition, every Man offering to furniſh out Men of War, according to his ability. The Charge whereof was given to the Biſhop of Aix, and to the Preſident of the Canons, to ſollicite the matter, and to perſwade by all means poſſible the Preſidents and Counſellors of the ſaid Court of Parliament without fear or doubt, to execute the ſaid Arreſt with Drums, Enſigns diſplayed, Artillery, and all kind of Furniture of War.

A commendation for Doctors of the Canon Law.

The Biſhop of Aix, Arch-captain of this Perſecution.

This Conſpiracy being concluded and determined, the Biſhop of Aix departed incontinent from Avinion, to go unto Aix, to perform the Charge which was given to him. Notwithſtanding they deſired him to be the next day after the Council was holden, at a Banquet which ſhould be made at the houſe of the Biſhop of Rieux. To this Banquet ſuch as were known to be the faireſt and moſt beautiful Women in all Avinion, were called, to refreſh and ſolace theſe good Prelates, after the great pains and travel which they had taken for our holy Mother the Church. After they had dined, they fell to dancing, playing at Dice, and ſuch other Paſtimes as are commonly wont to be frequented at the Banquets and Feaſts of theſe holy Prelates. After this they walked abroad to ſolace themſelves, and to paſs the time till Supper.

As

Ex fructibus eorum cognoſcetis eos.

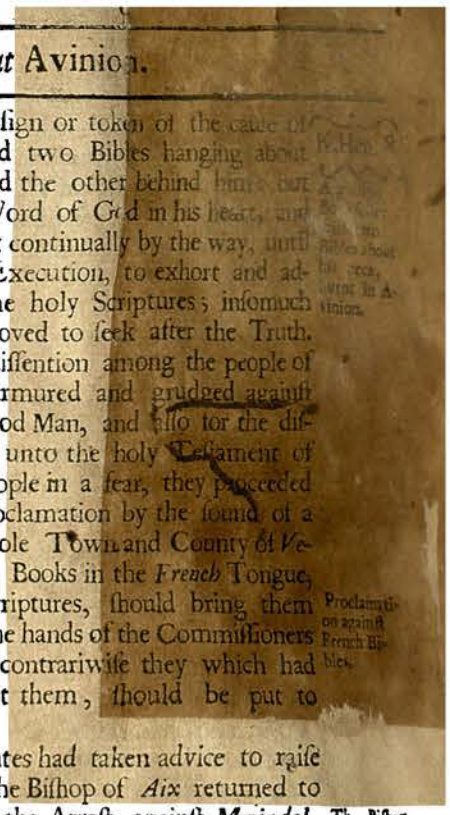
As they paſſed through the ſtreets, every one leading his Minion upon his Arm, they ſaw a Man which ſold bawdy Images and Pictures, with filthy Rhymes and Ballads annexed to the ſame, to move and ſtir up the people to whoredom and knavery. All theſe goodly Pictures were brought up by the Biſhops; which were as many as a Mule could well carry. And if there were any obſcure Sentence, or hard to underſtand in thoſe Rhymes or Ballads, the ſame theſe learned Prelates did readily expound, and laughed pleaſantly thereat. In the ſame place, as they walked along, there was a Bookſeller which had ſet out to ſale certain Bibles in French and Latine, with divers other Books; which when the Prelates beheld, they were greatly moved thereat, and ſaid unto him, Dareſt thou be ſo hardy to ſet out ſuch Merchandiſe to ſell here in this Town? Doſt thou not know that ſuch Books are forbidden? The Bookſeller anſwered, Is not the holy Bible as good as theſe goodly Pictures, which you have bought for theſe Gentlewomen? He had ſcarce ſpoken theſe words, but the Biſhop of Aix ſaid, I renounce my part of Paradiſe, if this fellow be not a Lutheran. Let him be taken, ſaid he, and examined what he is; and incontinently the Bookſeller was taken and carried unto Priſon, and ſpitefully handled: for a Company of Knaves and Ruffians, which waited upon the Prelates, began to cry out, A Lutheran, a Lutheran, to the fire with him, to the fire with him, and one gave him a blow with his fiſt, another pulled him by the hair, and others by the beard, in ſuch ſort that the poor Man was all imbrued with Blood before he came to Priſon.

Bawdy Pictures received, Gods Book rejected.

The morrow after he was brought before the Judges in the preſence of the Biſhops, where he was examined in this form as followeth: Haſt thou not ſet forth to ſale the Bible and the New Teſtament in French? The Priſoner anſwered, that he had ſo done. And being demanded, Whether he underſtood or knew not, that it was forbidden throughout all Chriſtendom to print or ſell the Bible in any other Language than in Latin? He anſwered, that he knew the contrary, and that he had ſold many Bibles in the French Tongue, with the Emperor's Priviledge, and many other printed at Lyons; alſo New Teſtaments imprinted by the King's Priviledge. Furthermore he ſaid, that he knew no Nation throughout all Chriſtendom, which had not the holy Scriptures in their vulgar Tongue: and afterward with a bold courage thus he ſpake unto them: O you Inhabitants of Avinion! are you alone in all Chriſtendom thoſe Men which do deſpiſe and abhor the Teſtament of the Heavenly Father? Will ye forbid and hide that which Jeſus Chriſt hath commanded to be revealed and publiſhed? Do you not know that our Lord Jeſus Chriſt gave power unto his Apoſtles to ſpeak all manner of Tongues, to this end that his holy Goſpel ſhould be taught unto all Creatures in every Language? And why do you not forbid thoſe Books and Pictures, which are full of Filthineſs and Abomination, to move and ſtir up the People to Whoredom, and to Uncleanneſs, and to provoke God's Vengeance and great Indignation upon you all? What greater Blaſphemy can there be, than to forbid God's moſt holy Books, which he ordained to inſtruct the ignorant, and to reduce and bring again into the way ſuch as are gone aſtray? What Cruhlty is this, to take away from the poor ſilly Souls their nouriſhment and ſuſtenance? But my Lords, you ſhall give an heavy account, which call ſweet ſower, and ſower ſweet, which maintain abominable and deteſtable Books and Pictures, and reject that which is holy.

Chriſtian conſtancy in a good Bookſeller.

Then the Biſhop of Aix and the other Biſhops began to rage, and gnaſh their teeth againſt this poor Priſoner. What need you, ſaid they, any more examination? Let him be ſent ſtraight unto the fire without any more words. But the Judge Laberius and certain others were not of that mind, neither found they ſufficient cauſe why to put him to death, but went about to have him put to his Fine, and to make him confeſs and acknowledg the Biſhop of Aix, and others his Companions, to be the true Paſtors of the Church. But the Bookſeller anſwered, that he could not do it with a good Conſcience, foraſmuch as he did ſee before his Eyes, that theſe Biſhops maintained filthy Books and abominable Pictures, rejecting and refuſing the holy Books of God, and therefore he judged them rather to be the Prieſts of Bacchus and Venus, than the true Paſtors of the Church of Chriſt. Whereupon he was immediately condemned to be burned, and the Sentence was executed the very ſame day. And for a ſign or token of the cauſe of his Condemnation, he carried two Bibles hanging about his neck, the one before, and the other behind him: but this poor Man had alſo the Word of God in his heart, and in his mouth, and ceaſed not continually by the way, until that he came to the place of Execution, to exhort and admoniſh the people to read the holy Scriptures; inſomuch that divers were thereby moved to ſeek after the Truth. The Prelates ſeeing a great diſſention among the people of Avinion, and that many murmured and grudged againſt them for the death of this good Man, and alſo for the diſhonour which they had done unto the holy Teſtament of God, minding to put the people in a fear, they proceeded the next day to make a Proclamation by the ſound of a Trumpet throughout the whole Town and County of Venice, That all ſuch as had any Books in the French Tongue, intreating upon the holy Scriptures, ſhould bring them forth, and deliver them into the hands of the Commiſſioners appointed for that purpoſe: contrariwiſe they which had any ſuch Books found about them, ſhould be put to death.



Proclamation againſt French Bibles.

Then after that theſe Prelates had taken advice to raiſe great Perſecution in Venice, the Biſhop of Aix returned to proſecute the Execution of the Arreſt againſt Merindol, travelling earneſtly with the Preſident Caſſaneus to that effect; declaring unto him the Good-will of the Prelates of Avinion and Province, and the great affection they bare both to him and his, with many fair promiſes if he would put the Arreſt in Execution. The Preſident anſwered him, that it was no ſmall matter to put the Arreſt of Merindol in execution: Alſo that the ſaid Arreſt was given out more to keep the Lutherans in fear, which were a great number in Province, than to execute it in effect, as it was contained in the ſaid Arreſt. Moreover he ſaid, That the Arreſt of Merindol was not definitive, and that the Laws and Statutes of the Realm did not permit the Execution thereof without further Proceſs. Then ſaid the Biſhop, if there be either Law or Statute which do hinder or let you, we carry in our ſleeves to diſpence therewithal. The Preſident anſwered, It were a great ſin to ſhed the innocent Blood. Then ſaid the Biſhop, The Blood of them of Merindol be upon us, and upon our Succeſſors. Then ſaid the Preſident, I am very well aſſured, that if the Arreſt of Merindol be put in Execution, the King will not be well pleaſed to have ſuch deſtruction made of his Subjects. Then ſaid the Biſhop, Altho the King at the firſt do think it evil done, we will ſo bring it to paſs, that within a ſhort ſpace he ſhall think it well done; for we have the Cardinals on our ſide, and eſpecially the moſt Reverend Cardinal of Tournon, which will take upon him the defence of our Cauſe, and we can do him no greater pleaſure, than utterly to root out theſe Lutherans: ſo that if we have any need of his Counſel or Aid, we ſhall be well aſſured of him: And is not he the principal, the moſt excellent and prudent Adverſary of theſe Lutherans, which is in all Chriſtendom?

By this and ſuch other like talk the Biſhop of Aix perſwaded the Preſident and Councellors of the Court of Parliament, to put the ſaid Arreſt in Execution, and by this means, through the authority of the ſaid Court, the Drum was ſounded throughout all Province, the Captains were prepared with their Enſigns diſplayed, and a great number of Foot-men and Horſe-men began to ſet forward, and marched out of the Town of Aix in order of Battel, well horſed and furniſhed againſt Merindol, to execute the Arreſt. The Inhabitants of Merindol being advertiſed hereof, and ſeeing nothing but preſent death to be at hand, with great lamentation commended themſelves and their Cauſe unto God by Prayer, making themſelves ready to be murthered and ſlain, as Sheep led unto the Butchery.

The Popes Army ſetteth forward toward Merindol.

Whilſt they were in this grievous diſtreſs, pitiouſly mourning and lamenting together, the Father with the Son, the Daugther with the Mother, the Wife with the Husband, ſuddenly there was news brought [illegible], that the Army was retired, and no Man knew at that time how, or by what means; yet notwithſtanding afterward it was known, that the Lord of Alenc, a wiſe Man, and learned in the Scriptures, and in the Civil Law, being moved with great zeal and love of Juſtice, declared unto the Preſident Caſſanee, that he ought not ſo to proceed againſt the Inhabitants of Merindol by way of force of Arms, contrary to all form and order of Juſtice, without Judgment or Condemna-demnation, or without making any difference between the guilty and the innocent. And furthermore he ſaid, I deſire you, my Lord Preſident, call to remembrance the Counſel which you have written in your Book entituled Catalogus Gloriæ Mundi; in the which Book you have intreated and brought forth the Proceſſes which were holden againſt the Rats by the Officers of the Court and Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Authun. For as it happened, there was almoſt throughout all the Bailiwick of Lauſſois ſuch a great number of Rats, that they deſtroyed and devoured all the Corn of the Country. Whereupon they took counſel to ſend unto the Biſhop of Authun's Official, to have the Rats excommunicate. Whereupon it was ordained and decreed by the ſaid Official, after he had heard the Plaintiff of the Procurator fiſcal, that before he would proceed to Excommunication, they ſhould have admonition and warning according to the order of Juſtice. For this cauſe it was ordained, that by the ſound of a Trumpet, and open Proclamation made throughout all the Streets of the Town of Authun, the Rats ſhould be cited to appear within three days; and if they did not appear, then to proceed againſt them.

A ſtory of excommunicating the Rats for eating up the Corn.

The three days were paſſed, and the Procurator came into the Court againſt the Rats, and for lack of Appearance obtained default, by Virtue whereof he required that they would proceed to the Excommunication. Whereupon it was judicially acknowledged that the ſaid Rats, being abſent, ſhould have their Advocate appointed them to hear their defence, forſomuch as the Queſtion was for the whole deſtruction and baniſhing of the ſaid Rats. And you my Lord Preſident, being at that time the Kings Advocate at Authun, were then choſen to be the Advocate to defend the Rats. And having taken the charge upon you in pleading the matter, it was by you there declared, that the Citation was of no effect, for certain Cauſes and Reaſons by you there alledged. Then it was decreed, that the ſaid Rats ſhould be once again cited throughout the Pariſhes where they were. Then after the Citations were duly ſerved, the Procurator came again into the Court as before; and there it was alledged by you my Lord Preſident, how that the term of Appearance given unto the Rats was too ſhort, and that there were ſo many Cats in every Town and Village as they ſhould paſs through, that they had juſt cauſe to be abſent.

The Preſident Chaſſanee choſen Advocate for the Rats.

Wherefore my L. Preſident, you ought not ſo lightly to proceed againſt theſe poor Men, but you ought to look upon the holy Scriptures, and there you ſhall find how ye ought to proceed in this matter; and you my Lord have alledged many places of the Scripture concerning the ſame, as appeareth more at large in your ſaid Book; and by this plea of a matter which ſeemeth to be but of a ſmall importance you have obtained great fame and honour, for the upright declaration of the manner and form how Judges ought gravely to proceed in criminal Cauſes. Then my Lord Preſident, you which have taught others, will you not alſo learn by your own Books? the which will manifeſtly condemn you, if you proceed any further to the deſtruction of theſe poor Men of Merindol. For are they not Chriſtian Men, and ought you not as well to miniſter Right and Juſtice unto them, as you have done to the Rats? By theſe and ſuch like Demonſtrations the Preſident was perſwaded, and immediately called back his Commiſſion which he had given out, and cauſed the Army to retire, the which was already come near unto Merindol, even within one mile and a half.

The perſwaſion of the L. of Alenc to Chaſſanee, to return his Army from Merindol.

Then the Merindolians underſtanding that the Army was retired, gave thanks unto God, comforting one another, with admonition and exhortation always to have the fear of God before their Eyes, to be obedient to his holy Commandments, ſubject to his moſt holy Will, and every Man to ſubmit himſelf unto his Providence, patiently attending and looking for the hope of the Bleſſed, that is to ſay, the true life, and the everlaſting Riches, having always before their eyes for example our Lord Jeſus Chriſt the very Son of God, who hath entred into his Glory by many Tribulations. Thus the Merindolians prepared themſelves to endure and abide all the Afflictions that it ſhould pleaſe God to lay upon them: and ſuch was their Anſwer to all thoſe that either pitied, or elſe ſought their deſtruction. Whereupon the bruit and noiſe was ſo great, as well of the Arreſt, as of the Enterpriſe of the Execution, and alſo of the patience and conſtancy of the Merindolians, that it was not hidden or kept ſecret from King Francis, a King of noble Courage and great Judgment, who gave Commandment unto the Noble and Virtuous Lord Mounſieur de Langeay, which then was his Lieutenant in Thurin a City in Piemont, that he ſhould diligently enquire and ſearch out the Truth of all this matter. Whereupon the ſaid Mounſieur de Langeay ſent unto Province two Men of fame and eſtimation, giving them in charge to bring unto him the Copy of the Arreſt, and diligently to enquire out all that followed and enſued thereupon; and likewiſe to make diligent inquiſition of the life and manners of the Merindolians, and others which were perſecuted in the Country of Province.

Francis the French King ſendeth Mounſieur Langeay to enquire better of the Merindolians.

Theſe Deputies brought the Copy of the Arreſt, and of all that happened thereupon, unto the ſaid Mounſieur de Langeay, declaring unto him the great Injuries, Pollings, Extortions, Exactions, Tyrannies, and Cruelties, which the Judges as well Secular as Eccleſiaſtical uſed againſt them of Merindol, and others. As touching the Behaviour and Diſpoſition of thoſe which were perſecuted, they reported, that the moſt part of the Men of Province affirmed them to be Men given to great labour and travel; and that about 200 years paſt, (as it is reported) they came out of the Country of Piemont to dwell in Province, and took to tillage, and to inhabit many Hamlets and Villages deſtroyed by the Wars, and other deſert and waſte places; which they had ſo well occupied, that now there was great ſtore of Wines, Oyls, Honey, and Cattel, wherewith ſtrangers were greatly relieved and holpen. Beſides that, before they came into the Country to dwell, the place of Merindol was taxed but at four Crowns, which before the laſt deſtruction paid yearly unto the Lord for Taxes and Tallages, above three hundred and fifty Crowns, beſide other Charges.

A teſtimony in the commendation of the Merindolians.

The like was was alſo reported of Lormarin, and divers other places of Province, whereas there was nothing but Robbery before they came to inhabit there, ſo that none could paſs that way but in great danger. Moreover, they of the Country of Province affirmed, That the Inhabitants of Merindol, and the other that were perſecuted, were peaceable and quiet People, beloved of all their Neighbours, Men of good Behaviour, conſtant in keeping of their promiſe, and paying of their Debts, without traverſing or pleading at the Law: That they were alſo charitable Men, giving Alms, relieving the Poor, and ſuffered none amongſt them to lack, or to be in neceſſity. Alſo they gave Alms to ſtrangers, and to the poor Paſſengers, harbouring, nouriſhing and helping them in all their neceſſities, according to their power. Moreover, that they were known by this, throughout all the Country of Province, that they would not ſwear, nor name the Devil, or eaſily be brought to take an Oath, except it were in Judgment, or making ſome ſolemn Covenant. They were alſo known by this, That they could never be moved nor provoked to talk of any diſhoneſt matters, but in what Company ſoever they came, where they heard any wanton talk, Swearing or Blaſphemy to the diſhonour of God, they ſtraitway departed out of that Company. Alſo they ſaid, that they never ſaw them go to their Buſineſs, but firſt they made their Prayers. The ſaid People of Province furthermore affirmed, that when they came to any Fairs or Markets, or came to their Cities by any occaſion, they never in a manner were ſeen in their Churches: and if they were, when they prayed they turned away their faces from the Images, and neither offered Candles to them, nor kiſſed their feet. Neither would they worſhip the Reliques of Saints, nor once look upon them. And moreover, if they paſſed by any Croſs or Image of the Crucifix, or any other Saint by the way as they went, they would do no Reverence unto them. Alſo the Prieſts did teſtifie, that they never cauſed them to ſay any Maſſes, neither Dirges, neither yet De profundis, neither would they take any holy Water; and if it were carried home unto their houſes, they would not ſay once, God a mercy, yea, they ſeemed utterly to abhor it. To go on Pilgrimage, to make any Vows to Saints, to buy Pardons or Remiſſion of Sins with Money, yea, tho it might be gotten for a Half-penny, they thought it not lawful. Likewiſe when it thundered or lightned, they would not croſs themſelves, but caſting up their Eyes unto Heaven, fetch deep ſighs. Some of them would kneel down and pray, without bleſſing themſelves with the Sign of the Croſs, or taking of holy Water. Alſo they were never ſeen to offer, or caſt into the Baſon any thing for the maintenance tenance of Lights, Brotherhoods, Churches, or to give any offering either for the Quick or the Dead. But if any were in affliction or poverty, thoſe they relieved gladly, and thought nothing too much.

This was the whole tenor of the report made unto Monſieur de Langeay, touching the life and behaviour of the Inhabitants of Merindol, and the other which was perſecuted; alſo as touching the Arreſt, and that which enſued thereon. Of all thoſe things the ſaid Monſieur de Langeay, according to the charge that was given him, advertiſed the King, who underſtanding theſe things, as a good Prince moved with mercy and pity, ſent Letters of Grace and Pardon, not only for thoſe which were condemned for lack of appearance, but alſo for all the reſt of the Countrey of Provence, which were accuſed and ſuſpected in like caſe; expreſſly charging and commanding the ſaid Parliament, That they ſhould not hereafter proceed ſo rigorouſly as they had done before, againſt this People: but if there were any that could be found or proved, by ſufficient information, to have ſwerved from the Chriſtian Religion, that then he ſhould have good demonſtration made unto him by the Word of God, both out of the Old and New Teſtament: and ſo, as well by the gentleneſs as by the rigor of the ſame, he ſhould be reduced again unto the Church of Chriſt. Declaring alſo, That the King's pleaſure was, that all ſuch as ſhould be convict of Hereſy in manner aforeſaid, ſhould abjure; forbidding alſo all manner of perſons, of what eſtate or condition ſoever they were, to attempt any thing againſt them of Merindol, or other that were perſecuted, by any other manner of means, or to moleſt or trouble them in perſon or goods: revoking and diſannulling all manner of ſentences and condemnations of what Judges ſoever they were, and commanding to ſet at liberty all Priſoners which either were accuſed or ſuſpected of Lutheraniſm.

The King's Pardon procured and ſent down for the Merindolians.

By virtue of theſe Letters they were now permitted to declare their cauſe, and to ſay what they could in defence thereof. Whereupon they made a Confeſſion of their Faith, the effect whereof you ſhall ſee in the end of the Story. This Confeſſion was preſented firſt to the Court of Parliament; and afterward being declared more at large, with Articles alſo annexed thereunto, it was delivered to the Biſhop of Cavaillon, who required the ſame. Alſo to Cardinal Sadolet, Biſhop of Carpentras, with the like Articles, and alſo a Supplication to this effect: That the Inhabitants of Cabriers in the Country of Venice moſt humbly deſired him, that he would vouchſafe to receive and read the Confeſſion and Declaration of their Faith and Doctrine, in the which they, and alſo their Fathers before them, had been of a long time inſtructed and taught, which they were perſuaded to be agreeable to the Doctrine contained in the Old and New Teſtament. And becauſe he was learned in the holy Scriptures, they deſired him that he would mark ſuch Articles as he thought to be againſt the Scriptures, and if he ſhould make it to appear unto them, that there was any thing contrary to the ſame, they would not only ſubmit themſelves to abjuration, but alſo to ſuffer ſuch puniſhment as ſhould be adjudged unto them, even to the loſs, not only of all that they had, but alſo of their Lives. And moreover, if there were any Judg in all the Countrey of Venice, which by good and ſufficient information ſhould be able to charge them that they had holden any erroneous Doctrine, or maintained any other Religion than was contained in the Articles of their Confeſſion, they deſired him that he would communicate the ſame unto them, and with all obedience they offered themſelves to whatſoever ſhould be thought juſt and reaſonable. Upon this requeſt Cardinal Sadolet anſwered by his Letters written by his Secretary, and ſigned with his own hand, the tenour whereof here enſueth.

This moſt godly and Chriſtian Confeſſion you ſhall find more largely ſet out in Hen. Pant. and alſo in the French Story, intreating of the deſtruction of Merindol and Cabriers: alſo touching their Faith & Confeſſion you ſhall partly ſee hereafter.

The Merindolians require the judgment of Cardinal Sadolet touching their Articles.

The anſwer of Cardinal Sadolet to the Merindolians.

I have ſeen your Requeſt, and have read the Articles of your Confeſſion, wherein there is much matter contained; and do not underſtand that you are accuſed for any other Doctrine, but for the very ſame which you have confeſſed. It is moſt true, that many have reported divers things of you worthy of reproof, which, after diligent enquiry made, we have found to be nothing elſe but falſe reports and ſlanders. As touching the reſt of your Articles, it ſeemeth unto me, that there are many words therein which might well be changed without prejudice unto your Confeſſion. And likewiſe it ſeemeth to me, that it is not neceſſary that you ſhould ſpeak ſo manifeſtly againſt the Paſtors of the Church. For my part, I deſire your Welfare, and would be ſorry that you ſhould be ſo ſpoiled or deſtroyed as they do pretend. And to the end you ſhall the better underſtand my amity and friendſhip towards you, ſhortly I will be at my Houſe by Cabriers, whether ye may reſort unto me either in greater or ſmaller numbers, as you will, and return ſafely without any hurt or damage, and there I will advertiſe you of all things that I think meet for your profit and health.

The Biſhop of Cavaillon ſeeketh the deſtruction of Cabriers.

About this time, which was the year of our Lord 1542, the Vice-legate of Avinion aſſembled a great number of Men of War, at the ſuit of the Biſhop of Cavaillon, to deſtroy Cabriers. When the Army was come within a mile of Cabriers, the Cardinal Sadolet went with [illegible] to the Vice-legat, and ſhewed him the requeſt of the Inhabitants of Cabriers, with the Articles of their Confeſſion, and the Offers that they made; ſo that for that preſent the Army retired, without any hurt or damage done unto the Inhabitants of Cabriers. After this the Cardinal Sadolet went unto Rome; but before his departure he ſent for divers of Cabriers, and certain Farmers of his own, whom he knew to be of the number of thoſe which were called Lutherans, and told them, That he would have them in remembrance as ſoon as he came to Rome, and communicate their Articles and Confeſſion unto the Cardinals, truſting to find a mean to have ſome good reformation, that God ſhould be thereby glorified, and all Chriſtendom brought to unity and concord; at the leaſt, nothing at all doubting but that the fouleſt Abuſes ſhould be corrected and amended; adverti-ſing them in the mean time to be wiſe and circumſpect, to watch and pray, for that they had many Enemies. With this Oration of Cardinal Sadolet, they of Cabriers were greatly comforted, truſting that at the ſuit of Cardinal Sadolet they ſhould have anſwer of their Confeſſion. But at his return they underſtood that he found all things ſo corrupt at Rome, that there was no hope of any Reformation there to be had, but rather mortal War againſt all ſuch as would not live according to the Ordinances of the Church of Rome. Likewiſe ſaid the Treaſurer of Carpentras, who albeit he payed out money to furniſh Souldiers that were hired for the deſtruction of Cabriers, notwithſtanding he did aid them ſecretly all that he might. Howbeit he could not do it ſo ſecretly, but that it came to the knowledg of the Legate; whereupon he was conſtrained to withdraw himſelf.

On the other part, the Biſhop of Aix and Cavaillon purſued ſtill the execution of the Arreſt of Merindol. Then it was ordained by the Court of Parliament, That, according to the King's Letters, John Durand, Counſellor of the Court of Parliament, with a Secretary, and the Biſhop of Cavaillon, with a Doctor of Divinity, ſhould go unto Merindol, and there declare unto the Inhabitants the Errors and Hereſies which they knew to be contained in their Confeſſion, and make them apparent by good and ſufficient information; and having ſo convicted them by the Word of God, they ſhould make them to renounce and abjure the ſaid Hereſies; and if the Merindolians did refuſe to abjure, then they ſhould make relation thereof, that the Court might appoint how they ſhould further proceed. After this Decree was made, the Biſhop of Cavaillon would not tarry until the time which was appointed by the Court for the execution of this matter; but he himſelf, with a Doctor of Divinity, came to Merindol to make them to abjure. Unto whom the Merindolians anſwered, That he enterprized againſt the authority of the Parliament, and that it was againſt his Commiſſion ſo to do. Notwithſtanding he was very earneſt with them that they ſhould abjure, and promiſed them, if they would ſo do, to take them under his wings and protection, even as the Hen doth her Chickens, and that they ſhould be no more robbed or ſpoiled. Then they required that he would declare unto them what they ſhould abjure. The Biſhop anſwered, that the matter needed no diſputation, and that he required but only a general Abjuration of all Errors which would be no damage or prejudice to them; for he himſelf would not ſtick to make the like Abjuration. The Merindolians anſwered him again, That they would do nothing contrary to the Decree and Ordinance of the Court, or the King's Letters, wherein he commanded that firſt the Errors ſhould be declared unto them, whereof they were accuſed: wherefore they were reſolved to underſtand what thoſe Errors and Hereſies were, that being informed thereof by the Word of God, they might ſatisfy the King's Letters; otherwiſe it it were but hypocriſy and diſſimulation to do as he required them. And if he could make it to appear unto them by good and ſufficient information, that they had holden any Errors and Hereſies, or ſhould be convict thereupon by the Word of God, they would willingly abjure; or if in their Confeſſion there were any word contrary to the Scriptures, they would revoke the ſame. Contrariwiſe, if it were not made manifeſt unto them, that they had holden any Hereſies, but that they had always lived according to the doctrine of the Goſpel, and that their Confeſſion was grounded upon the ſame, then they ought by no means to move or conſtrain them to abjure any Errors which they held not, and that it were plainly againſt all equity and juſtice ſo to do.

The Biſhops condemn the Merindolians for hereſy, and yet can ſhew no hereſies in them by the Word of God.

Then the Biſhop of Cavaillon was marvellouſly angry, and would hear no word ſpoken of any demonſtration to be made by the Word of God, but in a fury curſed and gave him to the Devil that firſt invented that means. Then the Doctor of Divinity, whom the Biſhop brought thither, demanded what Articles they were that were preſented by the Inhabitants of Merindol; for the Biſhop of Cavaillon had not yet ſhewed them unto him. Then the Biſhop of Cavaillon delivered the Doctor the Confeſſion, which after he had read, the Biſhop of Cavaillon ſaid, What! will you any more witneſs or declaration? this is full of Hereſy. Then they of Merindol demanded, In what point? whereupon the Biſhop knew not what to anſwer. Then the Doctor demanded to have time to look upon the Articles of the Confeſſion, and to conſider whether they were againſt the Scriptures or no. Thus the Biſhop departed, being very ſore aggrieved that he could not bring his purpoſe to paſs.

The Biſhop ſore aggrieved to have hereſy tried by the Word of God.

After eight days the Biſhop ſent for this Doctor, to underſtand how he might order himſelf to make their Hereſies appear which were in the ſaid Confeſſion. Whereunto the Doctor anſwered, That he was never ſo much abaſhed: for when he had beholden the Articles of the Confeſſion, and the Authorities of the Scriptures that were there alledged for the confirmation thereof, he had found that thoſe Articles were wholly agreeable and according to the holy Scriptures; and that he had not learned ſo much in the Scriptures all the days of his life, as he had in thoſe eight days, in looking upon thoſe Articles, and the Authorities therein alledged.

The Articles of the Merindolians approved by the Doctor.

Shortly after the Biſhop of Cavaillon came unto Merindol, and calling before him the Children both great and ſmall, gave them money, and commanded them with fair words to learn the Pater noſter and the Creed in Latin. The moſt part of them anſwered, That they knew the Pater noſter and the Creed already in Latin, but they could make no reaſon of that which they ſpake, but only in the vulgar tongue. The Biſhop anſwered, That it was not neceſſary they ſhould be ſo cunning, but that it was ſufficient that they knew it in Latin; and that it was not requiſite for their ſalvation, to underſtand or to expound the Articles of of their Faith; for there were many Biſhops, Curates, yea, and Doctors of Divinity, whom it would trouble to expound the Pater noſter and the Creed. Here the Bayliff of Merindol, named Andrew Maynard, asked, To what purpoſe it would ſerve to ſay the Pater noſter and the Creed, and not to underſtand the ſame? for in ſo doing they ſhould but mock and deride God. Then ſaid the Biſhop unto him, Do you underſtand what is ſignified by theſe words, I believe in God? The Bayliff anſwered, I ſhould think my ſelf very miſerable, if I did not underſtand it; and then he began orderly to give an account of his Faith. Then ſaid the Biſhop, I would not have thought there had been ſo great Doctors in Merindol. The Bayliff anſwered, The leaſt of the Inhabitants of Merindol can do it yet more readily than I: but I pray you, queſtion with one or two of theſe young Children, that you may underſtand whether they be well taught or no. But the Biſhop either knew not how to queſtion with them, or at the leaſt would not.

Then one named Pieron Roy ſaid, Sir, one of theſe Children may queſtion with another, if you think it ſo good, and the Biſhop was contented. Then one of the Children began to queſtion with his fellows, with ſuch grace and gravity as if he had been a Schoolmaſter; and the Children one after another anſwered ſo unto the purpoſe, that it was marvellous to hear: for it was done in the preſence of many, among whom there were four Religious Men, that came lately out of Paris, of whom one ſaid unto the Biſhop, I muſt needs confeſs, that I have often been at the common Schools of Sorbon in Paris, where I have heard the diſputations of the Divines; but yet I never learned ſo much as I have done by hearing theſe young Children. Then ſaid William Armant, Did you never read that which is written in the eleventh Chapter of St. Matthew, where it is ſaid, O Father, Lord of Heaven and Earth, I render thanks unto thee, that thou haſt hidden theſe things from the ſage and wiſe Men of the World, and haſt revealed them unto young Infants: But behold, O Father, ſuch was thy good will and pleaſure. Then every Man marvelled at the ready wit and witty anſwers of the Children of Merindol.

Mat. 11.

When the Biſhop ſaw he could not thus prevail, he tried another way, and went about by fair and flattering words to bring his purpoſe to paſs. Wherefore, cauſing the Strangers to go apart, he ſaid, That he now perceived they were not ſo evil as many thought them to be; notwithſtanding, for the contentation of them which were their perſecutors, it was neceſſary that they ſhould make ſome ſmall Abjuration, which only the Bayliff, with two Officers, might make generally in his preſence, in the name of all the reſt, without any Notary to record the ſame in writing; and in ſo doing they ſhould be loved and favoured of all Men, and even of thoſe which now perſecuted them: and that they ſhould ſuſtain no infamy thereby, for there ſhould be no report thereof made, but only to the Pope, and to the High-Court of Parliament of Provence: And alſo if any Man in time to come would turn the ſame to their reproach, or alledg it againſt them to their hurt or damage, they might utterly deny it, and ſay they made no Abjuration at all, becauſe there were no records made thereof, or witneſſes to prove the ſame. For this purpoſe he deſired them to talk together, to the end there might be an end made in this matter, without any further buſineſs.

The Merindolians are moved to abjure.

The Bayliff, and the two Officers, with divers other Ancients of the Town, anſwered, That they were fully reſolved not to conſent to any Abjuration, howſoever it were to be done, except that (which was always their exception) they could make it appear unto them by the Word of God, that they had holden or maintained any Hereſy; marvelling much that he would go about to perſuade them to lie to God and to the World. And albeit that all Men by nature are Liars, yet they had learned by the Word of God, that they ought diligently to take heed that their Children did not accuſtom or uſe themſelves to lie, and therefore puniſhed them very ſharply, when as they took them with any Lie, even as if they had committed any Robbery; For the Devil is a Liar, and the Father of Lies. Here the Biſhop roſe up in great anger and indignation, and ſo departed.

In matters of Faith and Religion ought to be no diſſimulation.

Within a while after the Biſhop of Aix ſollicited Maſter John Durandus, Counſellor of the Court of the Parliament of Province, to execute the Commiſſion which was given him; that is, to go unto the place of Merindol, together with the Secretary of the ſaid Court, and there in the preſence of the Biſhop of Cavaillon, accompanied with a Doctor of Divinity, to declare the Errors and Hereſies, which the Biſhops pretended the Inhabitants of Merindol to be infected and entangled withal, and, according to their duty, to make it appear by the Word of God, and ſo being convict, to make them abjure and renounce the ſaid Hereſies. Whereupon the ſaid Counſellor Durandus certified the day that he would be preſent at Merindol, to the end and purpoſe that none of the Inhabitants ſhould be abſent. At the day appointed the ſaid Counſellor Durandus, the Biſhop of Cavaillon, a Doctor of Divinity, and a Secretary, came unto Merindol, where were alſo preſent divers Gentlemen, and Men of underſtanding of all ſorts, to ſee this Commiſſion executed. Then they of Merindol were advertiſed that they ſhould not appaar all at once, but that they ſhould keep themſelves apart, and appear as they ſhould be called, in ſuch order and number as ſhould be appointed unto them. After that Durandus, the Biſhop of Cavaillon, the Doctor of Divinity, and the Secretary were ſet in place where Juſtice was accuſtomed to be kept, there was called forth Andrew Maynard, the Bayliff of Merindol; Jenon Romane, and Micheline Maynard, Syndiques; John Cabrie, and John Palenc, Ancients of Merindol; and John Bruneral, Under-bayliff. After they had preſented themſelves with all due reverence, the Counſellor Durandus ſpake thus unto them.

Durand ſtirred up by the Biſhop to execute the Commiſſion againſt the Merindolians.

Durandus the Commiſſioner cometh to Merindol.

Syndicus is a Greek word, and ſignifieth as much as an Advocate or Patron, or Deputy ſent to plead out cauſe.

You

The words of Durandus to the Merindolians.

You are not ignorant that, by the Arreſt given out by the high Court of Province, you were all condemned to be burned, both Men, Women, and Children; your Houſes alſo to be beaten down, and your Town to be razed and made deſolate, &c. as is more largely contained in the ſaid Arreſt. Notwithſtanding, it hath pleaſed the King, our moſt gracious Prince, to ſend his Letters unto the ſaid Court, commanding that the ſaid Arreſt ſhould not ſo rigorouſly proceed againſt you: but if it could by ſufficient Information be proved, that you, or any of you, had ſwerved from the true Religion, demonſtration ſhould be made thereof unto you by the Word of God, whereby you might be reduced again to the Flock of Chriſt. Wherefore it was determined in the ſaid Court of Parliament, that the Biſhop of Cavaillon, with a Doctor of Divinity, ſhould in my preſence declare unto you the Errors and Hereſies wherewith they ſay you are infected; and after good demonſtration made by the Word of God, you ſhould publickly and ſolemnly renounce and abjure the ſaid Hereſies; and in ſo doing, ſhould obtain the Grace and Pardon contained in the King's Letters: wherefore ſhew your ſelves this day, that you be obedient unto God, the King and the Magiſtrates. When he had thus ſpoken, what anſwer you, ſaid he, to that which I have propounded?

Then Andrew Maynard the Bailiff, deſired that they would grant them an Advocate to anſwer according to the Inſtructions which they would give him, forſomuch as they were Men unlearned, and knew not how to anſwer as in ſuch a caſe was requiſite. The Counſellor anſwered, that he would hear their Anſwer neither by Advocate nor by Writing, but would hear them anſwer in their own perſons: Notwithſtanding he would give them leave to go apart, and talk together, but not to ask any counſel, but only among themſelves: and then to anſwer one after another. Upon this determination, the Bayliff and the two Syndiques, with other two ancient Men, talked together a while and determined that the two Syndiques ſhould ſpeak firſt, and after them the Bailiff, then the two ancient Men, every Man according as God ſhould give them Grace, and by and by preſented themſelves. Whereat the Counſellor Durandus was greatly abaſhed, to ſee that they had decreed and determined ſo ſpeedily. Then Michelin Maynard began to anſwer, deſiring the Counſellor and the Biſhop, with the the other Aſſiſtants, to pardon him, if that he anſwered over rudely, having regard that they were poor, rude, and ignorant Men. His Anſwer hete followeth.

The Anſwer of the Merindolians to Durandus

We are greatly bound, ſaith he, to give God thanks, that, beſides other his Benefits beſtowed upon us, he hath now delivered us from theſe great Aſſaults, and that it hath pleaſed him to touch the heart of our Noble King, that our cauſe might be intreated with juſtice, and not by violence. In like manner are we alſo bound to pray for our Noble King, which, following the example of Samuel and Daniel, hath not diſdained to look upon the cauſe of his poor Subjects. Alſo we render thanks unto the Lords of the Parliament, in that it hath pleaſed them to miniſter Juſtice according to the King's Commandment. Finally, we thank you my Lord Durandus, Commiſſioner in this preſent cauſe, that it hath pleaſed you in ſo few words to declare unto us the manner and order how we ought to proceed. And for my part, I greatly deſire to underſtand and know the Hereſy and Errors whereof I am accuſed: and whereas they ſhall make it appear unto me, that I have holden any Errors or Hereſies, I am contented to amend the ſame, as it ſhall be ordained and provided by you.

After him anſwered Jenon Romine the other Syndique, a very ancient Father, approving all that which his Fellow before had ſaid, giving God thanks that in his time, even in his latter days, he had ſeen and heard ſo good News, that the cauſe of Religion ſhould be decided and debated by the Holy Scriptures, and that he had often heard ancient Men ſay, that they could never obtain of the Judges, in all their Perſecution, to have their Cauſe debated in ſuch ſort.

The Bailiff of Merindol anſwereth.

Then Andrew Maynard the Bailiff anſwered, ſaying, That God had given to theſe two Syndiques the Grace to anſwer ſo well, that it was not neceſſary for him to ſay or add any more thereunto. Notwithſtanding it ſeemed good that their Anſwers were put in writing, which was not done by the Secretary, that had done nothing elſe but mock and jeer at all that had been ſaid: Wherefore he required the Commiſſioner to look unto the matter. Then the Commiſſioner was very angry, and ſharply rebuked his Secretary, commanding him to ſit nearer and to write their Anſwers word for word, and he himſelf with a ſingular memory repeated their anſwers, and oftentimes asked if it were not ſo. The ſaid Anſwers being thus put in writing, the Commiſſioner asked the Bailiff, if he had any more to anſwer, ſaying, that he had done him great pleaſure to ſhew him his Secretaries Fault, willing him to ſpeak boldly what he thought good for the defence of their Cauſe. Then the Bailiff ſaid, Forſomuch as it hath pleaſed you to give me audience and liberty to ſpeak my mind freely: I ſay moreover, that it ſeemeth unto me that there is no due form of Proceſs in this Judgment: for there is no Party here that doth accuſe us. If we had an Accuſer preſent, which, according to the rule of the Scripture, either ſhould prove by good demonſtration out of the Old and New Teſtament that whereof we are accuſed, or, if he were not able, ſhould ſuffer puniſhment due unto ſuch as are Hereticks; I think he would be as greatly troubled to maintain his Accuſations, as we to anſwer unto the ſame.

The Proceeding with the Merindolians not after form of Law.

After that the Bailiff had made this anſwer, John Palenc, one of the Ancients of Merindol, ſaid, that he approved all that had been ſaid by the Syndiques, and that he was able to ſay no more than had been ſaid by them before. The Commiſſioner ſaid unto him: You are, I ſee, a very ancient Man, and you have not lived ſo long, but that you have ſomething to anſwer for your part in defence of your cauſe. And the ſaid Palenc anſwered, ſeeing it is your pleaſure that I ſhould ſay ſomething, it ſeemeth unto me unpoſſible that (ſay what we can) we ſhould have either victory or vantage; For our Judges be our Enemies.

John Palenc anſwereth.

Then John Bruneral, Under-Bailiff of Merindol, anſwered, That he would very fain know the Authority of the Counſellor Durandus, Commiſſioner in this Cauſe, foraſmuch as the ſaid Counſellor had given them to underſtand, that he had Authority of the High Court to make them abjure their Errors, which ſhould be found by good and ſufficient information, and to give them, ſo doing, the Pardon contained in the King's Letters, and quit them of all Puniſhment and Condemnation. But the ſaid Commiſſioner did not give them to underſtand that if it could not be found, by good and ſufficient Information, that they were in error, he had any power or authority to quit and abſolve them of the ſaid Sentence and Condemnation: wherefore it ſeemed that it ſhould be more vantage for the ſaid Merindolians, if it ſhould appear that they were Hereticks, than to be found to live according to the Doctrine of the Goſpel. For this cauſe he required, that it would pleaſe the ſaid Commiſſioner to make declaration thereof: Concluding, that if it did not appear, by good and ſufficient information againſt them, that they had ſwerved from the Faith, or if there were no Accuſer that would come forth againſt them, they ought to be fully abſolved, without being any more troubled, either in Body or Goods.

The under-Bailiff of Merindol anſwereth.

Durandus the Commiſſioner required to ſhew his Commiſſion.

Theſe things were thus in debating, from ſeven of the clock in the morning until eleven. Then the Commiſſioner diſmiſſed them till after dinner. At one of the clock at afternoon, they were called for again, and demanded whether they would ſay any elſe touching that which was propounded in the morning by the ſaid Commiſſioner. They anſwered, No. Then ſaid the Commiſſioner, What do you conclude for your defence? the two Syndiques anſwered, We conclude, that it would pleaſe you to declare unto us the Errors and Hereſies whereof we are accuſed. Then the Commiſſioner asked the Biſhop of Cavaillon, what information he had againſt them. The Biſhop ſpake unto him in his ear, and would not anſwer aloud. This talk in the ear continued almoſt half an hour, that the Commiſſioner & all other that ſtood thereby were weary thereof. In the end, the Commiſſioner ſaid unto them, That the Biſhop of Cavaillon had told him, that it was not needful to make it apparent by information, for ſuch was the common report. Hereunto they anſwered, That they required the Cauſes and Reaſons alledged by the Biſhop of Cavaillon againſt them, ſhould be put in writing. The Biſhop was earneſt to the contrary, and would have nothing, that either he ſaid or alledged, to be put in writing. Then John Bruneral required the Commiſſioner, that at the leaſt he would put in writing, that the Biſhop would ſpeak nothing againſt them that they could underſtand; and that he would not ſpeak before the Commiſſioner but only in his ear,

Ear. The Bishop on the contrary part defended, that he would not be named in Process. There was great disputation upon this matter, and continued long. Then the Commissioner asked the Merindolians if they had the Articles of their Confession, which they had presented to the high Court of Parliament. Then they required that their Confession might be read, that by the reading thereof, they might understand whether it were the Doctrine which they held, and the Confession which they had presented, or no. Then the Confession was read publickly before them, which they did allow and acknowledge to be theirs. This done, the Commissioner asked the Doctor, If he did find in the said Confession any heretical Opinions, whereof he could make demonstration by the Word of God, either out of the Old or New Testament. Then spake the Doctor in Latin a good while. After he had made an end, Andrew Maynard the Bailiff desired the Commissioner according as he had propounded, to make the Errors and Heresies that they were accused of, apparent unto them by good information, or at the least to mark those Articles of their Confession, which the Bishop and the Doctor pretended to be heretical; requiring him also to put in register the refusal as well of the Bishop as of the Doctor, of whom the one spake in his ear, and the other in Latine, so that they of Merindol could not understand one word. Then the Commissioner promised them to put in Writing all that should make for their Cause. And moreover he said, that it was not needful to call the rest of the Merindolians, if there were no more to be said to them than had been said to those which were already called. And this is the Sum of all that was done at the Afternoon.

What were the Articles and Doctrine of their Confession read. Sleid. lib. 10.

Many which came thither to hear these Disputations, supposing they should have heard some goodly Demonstrations, were greatly abashed to see the Bishop and the Doctor so confounded; which thing afterward turned to the great Benefit of many: for hereby they were moved to require Copies of the Confession of their Faith; by means whereof they were converted and imbraced the Truth, and namely three Doctors who went about divers times to dissuade the Merindolians from their Faith, whose Ministry God afterwards used in the preaching of his Gospel: Of whom one was Dr. Combaudi Prior of St. Maximin, afterwards a Preacher in the Territory of the Lords of Berne. Another was Dr. Somati, who was also a Preacher in the Bailiwick of Tonon. The other was Dr. Heraudi, Pastor and Minister in the County of Newcastle.

The Doctors converted by the Confession of the Merindolians.

After this the Inhabitants of Merindol were in rest and quietness for a space, insomuch that every Man feared to go about to trouble them, seeing those which persecuted them did receive nothing but shame and confusion; as it did manifestly appear, not only by the sudden death of the President Chassanee, but also many other of the chiefest Counsellors of the Parliament of Province, whose horrible End terrified many, but especially the strange and fearful Example of that bloody Tyrant John de Roma, set out as a Spectacle to all Persecutors, whereof we have spoken before.

The sudden death of a Persecutor.

Thus the Lord repressing the rage of the Adversaries for a time, stayed the Violence and Execution of that cruel Sentence or Arrest given out by the Parliament of Province against the Merindolians, until John Miniers, an exceeding bloody Tyrant, began a new Persecution. This Miniers, being Lord of Opede near to Merindol, first began to vex the poor Christians by pilling and polling, by oppression and extortion, getting from them what he could to enlarge his Seigniory or Lordship, which before was very base. For this cause he put five or six of his own Tenants into a Cistern under the ground, and closing it up, there he kept them till they died for hunger, pretending that they were Lutherans and Waldoys, to have their Goods and Possessions. By this, and such other Practices this Wretch was advanced in short space to great Wealth and Dignity, and so at length became not only the chief President of the High Court of Parliament, but also the King's Lieutenant General in the Country of Province, in the absence of the Lord Grignan, then being at the Council of Wormes in Germany. Now therefore seeing no opportunity to be lacking to accomplish his devilish Enterprise, he imployed all his Power, Riches, and Authority not only to confirm and to revive that cruel Arrest given out before by the Court of Parliament, but also (as a right Minister of Sathan) he exceedingly increased the Cruelty thereof, which was already so great, that it seemed there could nothing more be added thereunto. And to bring this Mischief to pass, he forged a most impudent Lie, giving the King to understand, that they of Merindol and all the Country near about, to the number of twelve or fifteen thousand were in the field in Armour with their Ensigns displayed, intending to take the Town of Marseille, and make it one of the Cantons of the Switzers; and to stay this Enterprise, he said, it was necessary to execute the Arrest Manu militari: and by this means he obtained the King's Letters Patents, through the help of the Cardinal of Tournon, commanding the Sentence to be executed against the Merindolians, notwithstanding the King had before revoked the said Sentence, and given strict Commandment that it should in no wise be executed, as is before mentioned.

Minerius made the Kings Lieutenant of Province.

False Accusations and Crimes forged upon the innocent Christians.

The King abused by wicked Counsel.

After this he gathered all the King's Army, which was then in Province ready to go against the Englishmen, and took up all besides, that were able to bear Armour, in the chiefest Towns of Province, and joyned them with the Army which the Pope's Legat had levied for that purpose in Avinion, and all the Country of Venice, and imployed the same to the Destruction of Merindol, Cabriers, and other Towns and Villages to the number of two and twenty, giving Commission to his Souldiers to spoil, ransack, burn, and to destroy all together, and to kill Man, Woman, and Child without all mercy, sparing none: No otherwise than the Infidels and cruel Turks have dealt with the Christians, as before in the Story of the Turks you may read.

For as the Papists and Turks are alike in their Religion; so are the said Papists like, or rather exceed them in all kinds of Cruelty that can be devised. But this Arch-tyrant before he came to Merindol, ransacked and burnt certain Towns, namely La Roch, St. Stephens, Ville Laure, Lormarin, La Motte, Cabrierettes, St. Martin, Pipin and other places moe, notwithstanding that the Arrest extended but only to Merindol: Where the most of the poor Inhabitants were slain and murdered without any resistance; Women and Maidens ravished; Women with Child, and little Infants born and to be born, were also most cruelly murdered; the Paps of many Women cut off, which gave suck to their Children, which looking for suck at their Mother's Breast, being dead before, died also for hunger. There was never any such Cruelty and Tyranny seen before.

Eight Towns with the most part of the people destroyed for true Religion.

Horrible Cruelty upon Women and young Infants.

The Merindolians seeing all on a flaming fire round about them, left their Houses, and fled into the Woods, and remained all that Night at the Village Sanfales, and thereabouts in wonderful fear and perplexity; for the Bishop of Cavaillon, Deputy to the Bishop of Rome's Legat, had appointed certain Captains to go and slay them. The next day they went a little further, hiding themselves in Woods, for there was danger on every side, and Miniers had commanded under pain of death, that no Man should aid them by any means, but that they should be slain without pity or mercy, wheresoever they were found. The same Proclamation was of force also in the Bishop of Rome's Dominions thereby; and it was said, that the Bishops of that Country did find a great part of the Army. Wherefore they went a tedious and painful Journey, carrying their Children upon their Shoulders, and in their Arms, and in their Swadling-clothes, and many of them also being great with Child, were constrained so to do. And when they were come to the place appointed, thither was already resorted a great number which had lost their Goods, and saved themselves by flight.

Not long after it was shewed them how that Miniers was coming with all his power to give the charge upon them. This was in the evening, and because they should go through rough and cumbersom places, and hard to pass by, they all thought it most expedient for their safegard to leave behind them all the Women and Children, with a few other, and among them also certain Ministers of the Church; the residue were appointed to go to the Town of Mussi. And this did they upon hope that the Enemy would shew mercy to the multitude of Women and Children being destitute of all Succour. No Tongue can express what Sorrow, what Tears, what Sighing, what Lamentation there was at that woful departing, when they were compelled to be thus ſeparated aſunder, the Husband from his dear Wife, the Father from his ſweet Babes and tender Infants, the one never like to ſee the other again alive. Notwithſtanding after the Miniſters had ended their ordinary Sermons, with Evening-Prayers and Exhortations, the Men departed that night, to avoid a greater inconvenience.

A lamentable Separation of the Merindolians from their Wives and Children.

When they had gone all the night long, and had paſſed over the great Hill of Libron, they might ſee many Villages and Farms ſet on fire. Miniers in the mean time had divided his Army into two parts, marching himſelf with the one towards the Town of Merindol; and having knowledg by Eſpial whither the Merindolians were fled, he ſendeth the other part to ſet upon them, and to ſhew their accuſtomed cruelty upon them. Yet before they came to the place where they were, ſome of Miniers Army, either of good will, or moved with pity, privily conveyed themſelves away, and came unto them, to give them warning that their Enemies were coming: and one of them from the top of an high Rock, where he thought that the Merindolians were underneath, caſteth down two ſtones, and afterward, altho he could not ſee them, he called unto them that they ſhould immediatly flie from thence. But the Enemies ſuddenly came upon them, finding them all aſſembled together at prayers, and ſpoiled them of all that they had, pulling off their garments from their backs: ſome they raviſhed, ſome they whipped and ſcourged, and ſome they ſold away like Cattel, practiſing what cruelty and villany ſoever they could deviſe againſt them. The Women were in number about five hundred.

The Merindolians overtaken of their Enemies.

In the mean time Miniers came to Merindol, where he found none but a young Man named Maurice Blane, who had yielded himſelf unto a Souldier, promiſing him for his ranſom two French Crowns. Miniers would have had him away by force, but it was anſwered that the Souldier ought not to loſe his Priſoner. Miniers therefore, paying the two Crowns himſelf, took the young Man, and cauſed him to be tied unto an Olive-Tree, and ſhot through with Harquebuſſes, and moſt cruelly martyred. Many Gentlemen which accompanied Miniers againſt their wills, ſeeing this cruel Spectacle, were moved with great compaſſion, and could not forbear Tears: For albeit this young Man was not yet very well inſtructed, neither had before dwelt at Merindol, yet in all his torments, having always his eyes lifted up to Heaven, with a loud voice he ceaſed not ſtill to call upon God: and the laſt words that he ſpake were theſe; Lord God, theſe Men take away my life full of miſery, but thou wilt give unto me life everlaſting by thy Son Jeſus Chriſt, to whom be glory. So was Merindol without any reſiſtance valiantly taken, ranſack'd, burnt, razed and laid even with the ground. And albeit there was no Man to reſiſt, yet this valiant Captain of Opede, armed from top to toe, trembled for fear, and was ſeen to change his colour very much.

Vile Cruelty ſhewed upon a young Man of Merindol.

The Town of Merindol deſtroyed of the Papiſts.

When he had deſtroyed Merindol, he laid ſiege to Cabriers, and battered it with his Ordnance; but when he could not win it by force, he, with the Lord of the Town, and Poulin his chief Captain, perſuaded with the Inhabitants to open their Gates, ſolemnly promiſing, that if they would ſo do, they would lay down their Armor, and alſo that their Cauſe ſhould be heard in judgment with all equity and juſtice, and no violence or injury ſhould be ſhewed againſt them. Upon this they opened their Gates, and let in Miniers, with his Captains, and all his Army. But the Tyrant, when he was once entred, falſified his promiſe, and raged like a Beaſt. For firſt of all he picked out about thirty Men, cauſing them to be bound, and carried into a Meadow near to the Town, and there to be miſerably cut and hewn in pieces of his Souldiers.

The Town of Cabriers ſilly taken.

Oaths and Promiſe broken of the Papiſts.

30 Men Martyrs.

Then, becauſe he would leave no kind of cruelty unattempted, he alſo exerciſed his fury and outrage upon poor ſilly Women, and cauſed forty of them to be taken, of whom divers were great with child, and put them into a Barn full of Straw and Hay, and cauſed it to be ſet on fire at four corners; and when the ſilly Women, running to the great Window where the Hay is wont to be caſt into the Barn, would have leaped out, they wete kept in with Pikes and Halberds. Then there was a Souldier which moved with pity at the crying out and lamentation of the Women, opened a door to let them out; but as they were coming out, the Tyrant cauſed them to be ſlain and cut in pieces, opening their bellies that their Children fell out, whom they trod under their feet. Many were fled into the Wine-cellar of the Caſtle, and many hid themſelves in Caves, whereof ſome were carried into the Meadow, and there ſtripped naked were ſlain: Other ſome were bound two and two together, and carried into the Hall of the Caſtle, where they were ſlain by the Captains, rejoycing in their bloody butchery and horrible ſlaughter.

40 Women Martyrs.

Cruelty Metonical or rather Fury Diabolical.

That done, this Tyrant, more cruel than ever was Herod, commanded Captain John de Gay with a Band of Ruffians to go into the Church, (where was a great number of Women, Children, and young Infants) to kill all that he found there; which the Captain refuſed at firſt to do, ſaying, that were a cruelty unuſed among Men of War. Whereat Miniers being diſpleaſed, charged him upon pain of rebellion and diſobedience to the King, to do as he commanded him. The Captain fearing what might enſue, entred with his Men, and deſtroyed them all, ſparing neither young nor old.

In this mean while certain Souldiers went to ranſack the Houſes for the ſpoil, where they found many poor Men that had there hidden themſelves in Cellars, and other privy places, flying upon them, and crying out, Kill, kill. The other Souldiers that were without the Town, killed all that they could meet with. The number of thoſe that were unmercifully murdered, were about a thouſand perſons of Men, Women, and Children. The Infants that eſcaped their fury, were baptized again of their Enemies.

Above a thouſand Martyrs of Cabriers.

In token of this jolly Victory the Pope's Officers cauſed a Pillar to be erected in the ſaid place of Cabriers, in the which was ingraven the year and the day of the taking and ſacking of this Town, by John Miniers Lord of Opede, and chief Preſident of the Parliament of Province, for a memorial for ever of that barbarous Cruelty, the like whereof was never yet heard of. Whereupon we with all our poſterity have to underſtand what be the reaſons and arguments wherewith the Antichriſt of Rome is wont to uphold the impious ſeat of his abomination; who now is come to ſuch exceſs and profundity of all kinds of Iniquity, that all Juſtice, Equity and Verity being ſet aſide, he ſeeketh the defence of his cauſe by no other thing but only by force and violence, terror and oppreſſion, and ſhedding of blood.

The Arguments whereupon the Doctrine of the Popes Church ſtandeth.

In this mean while the Inhabitants of Merindol, and other places thereabout, were among the mountains and rocks, in great neceſſity of victuals, and much affliction; who had procured certain Men which were in ſome favour and authority with Miniers, to make requeſt for them unto him, that they might depart ſafely whither it ſhould pleaſe God to lead them, with their Wives and Children, altho they had no more but their Shirts to cover their nakedneſs. Whereunto Miniers made this anſwer: I know what I have to do; not one of them ſhall eſcape my hands; I will ſend them to dwell in Hell among the Devils.

Antichriſt here playeth the Devil.

After this there was a Power ſent unto Coſta, which likewiſe they overcame, and committed there great ſlaughter. Many of the Inhabitants fled away, and ran into an Orchard, where the Souldiers raviſhed the Women and Maidens; and when they had kept them there incloſed a day and a night, they handled them ſo beaſtly, that thoſe which had great Bellies, and the younger Maidens died ſhortly after. It were impoſſible to comprehend all the lamentable and ſorrowful examples of this cruel Perſecution againſt the Merindolians, and their Fellows, inſomuch that no kind of cruel Tyranny was unpractiſed: for they which eſcaped by Woods, and went wandring by Mountains, were taken and ſet in Gallies, or elſe were ſlain outright.

The Town of Coſta deſtroyed.

Martyrs of Coſta.

Many which did hide themſelves in Rocks and dark Caves, ſome were famiſhed with hunger, ſome were ſmothered with fire and ſmoke put unto them. All which may more fully be underſtood by the Records of the Court, and by the Pleas between them and their Adverſaries in the high Conſiſtory of the Court of Paris, where all the doors being ſet open, and in the publick hearing of all the People, the cauſe of this Trouble and Perſecution was ſhortly after ſolemnly debated between two great Lawyers; the one called Aubrius, which accuſed Minerius the Preſident committed to priſon; and the other called Robertus, the defendant againſt him. The cauſe why this matter of Merindol was brought in plea and judgment to be decided by the Law, was this:

When the Merindolians were ſlain, their Cauſe was pleaded.

K. H. 8.

Francis the French King noted of tyranny by Charles the fifth Emperor.

Henry the ſecond, French King, which newly ſucceeded Francis his Father above-mentioned, conſidering how this cruel and infamous Perſecution againſt his own Subjects and People was greatly miſliked of other Princes, and alſo objected both againſt him & his Father as a note of ſhameful tyranny, by the Emperor himſelf Charles the fifth, and that in a publick Council of all the States of Germany, for ſo murthering and ſpoiling his own natural Subjects, without all reaſon and mercy; he therefore, to the intent to purge and clear himſelf thereof, cauſed the ſaid matter to be brought into the Court, and there to be decided by order of Juſtice.

The cauſe of the Merindolians after their death pleaded fifty times in the Court.

Which Cauſe, after it was pleaded to and fro in publick Audience, no leſs than fifty times, and yet in the end could not be determined, ſo it brake off & was paſſed over; and at length Minerius, being looſed out of Priſon, was reſtored to his liberty and poſſeſſions again, upon this condition and promiſe made unto the Cardinal Charles of Lorain, that he ſhould baniſh and expel theſe new Chriſtians (terming ſo the true Profeſſors of the Goſpel) out of all Province.

Minerius looſed out of Priſon.

The juſt ſtroke of God upon cruel Minerius.

Thus Minerius being reſtored, returned again into Province, where he began again to attempt greater tyranny than before. Neither did his raging fury ceaſe to proceed, before the juſt Judgment of God lighting upon him, brought him by a horrible Diſeaſe unto the torments of death, which he moſt juſtly had deſerved. For he being ſtrucken with a ſtrange kind of bleeding at the lower parts, in manner of a bloody Flux, and not being able to void any Urin, thus by little and little his Guts within him rotted: and when no Remedy could be found for this terrible Diſeaſe, and his Intrails now began to be eaten of Worms, a certain famous Chirurgeon, named La Mote, which dwelt at Arles, a Man no leſs godly than expert in his Science, was called for; who after he had cured him of this difficulty of making Water, and therefore was in great eſtimation with him; before he would proceed further to ſearch the other parts of his putrefied Body, and to ſearch out the inward Cauſe of his Malady, he deſired that they which were preſent in the Chamber with Minerius, would depart a little aſide. Which being done, he began to exhort Minerius with earneſt words, ſaying, How the time now required that he ſhould ask forgiveneſs of God by Chriſt, for his enormous Crimes and Cruelty, in ſhedding ſo much innocent Blood, and declared the ſame to be the cauſe of this ſo ſtrange profuſion of Blood coming from him.

Fal given to Minerius of his Surgeon.

Minerius ſeeketh the Blood of his Surgeon.

These words being heard, ſo pierced the impure Conſcience of this miſerable Wretch, that he was therewith more troubled than with the Agony of his Diſeaſe: inſomuch that he cried out to lay hand upon the Chirurgeon as an Heretick. La Mote hearing this, eſtſoons conveyed himſelf out of ſight, and returned again to Arles. Notwithſtanding it was not long but he was ſent for again, being intreated by his Friends, and promiſed moſt firmly, that his coming ſhould be without any peril or danger: and ſo with much ado, he returned again to Minerius, what time all now was paſt remedy: and ſo Minerius raging and caſting out moſt horrible and blaſpheming words, and feeling a Fire which burnt him from the Navel upward, with extream ſtench of the lower parts, finiſhed his wretched Life. Whereby we have notoriouſly to underſtand, that God through his mighty Arm, at length confoundeth ſuch Perſecutors of his Innocent and faithful Servants, and bringeth them to nought; to whom be praiſe and glory for ever.

The wretched end of wretched Minerius the Perſecutor.

The juſt plague of God upon three Perſecutors.

Moreover, beſides this Juſtice of God ſhewed upon Minerius, here alſo is not to be forgotten that which followed likewiſe upon certain of the other which were the chief doers in this Perſecution under Minerius aforeſaid; namely Lewis de Vaine, Brother-in-Law to the ſaid Preſident, and alſo the Brother and the Son-in-Law to Peter Durant, Maſter-butcher of the Town of Aix; the which three did ſlay one another, upon a certain ſtriſe that fell upon them. And upon the ſame day the Judg of Aix, who accompanied Minerius in the ſame Perſecution, as he returned homeward, going over the River of Durance, was drowned. Ex hiſt. Gallica, Henr. Pantal. & aliis.

Notes upon the Story of Merindol, above recited.

THus haſt thou heard (loving Reader) the terrible troubles and ſlaughters committed by the Biſhops and Cardinals, againſt theſe faithful Men of Merindol, which for the hainous tyranny, and example of the Fact moſt unmerciful, may be comparable with many of the firſt Perſecutions in the Primitive Church, done either by Decius, or Dioclesianus.

The Goſpellers of Merindol came firſt of the Waldenſes.

Now touching the ſaid Story and People of Merindol, briefly by the way is to be noted, that this was not the firſt time that theſe Men of this Country were vexed; neither was it of late years that the Doctrine and Profeſſion of them began. For (as by the courſe of Time, and by ancient Records it may appear) theſe Inhabitants of Province, and other Coaſts bordering about the Confines of France, and Piedmont, had their continuance of ancient Time, and received their Doctrine firſt from the Waldenſes, or Albigenſes, which were (as ſome ſay) about the year of our Lord 1170; or (as others do reckon) about the year of Lord 1216, whereof thou haſt (gentle Reader) ſufficiently to underſtand, reading before.

Vid. ſupra.

Theſe Waldenſes, otherwiſe called Pauperes de Lugduno, beginning of one Petrus Waldus, Citizen of Lions, as is before ſhewed, by violence of Perſecution being driven out of Lions, were diſperſed abroad in divers Countries, of whom ſome fled to Maſſilia, ſome to Germany, ſome to Sarmatia, Livovia, Bohemia, Calabria, and Apulia; divers ſtraied to the Countries of France, eſpecially about Province and Piedmont, of whom came theſe Merindolians above mentioned, and the Angrognians with others, of whom now it followeth likewiſe (God willing) to diſcourſe. They which were in the Country of Toloufe, of the place where they frequented, were called Albii, or Albigenſes. Againſt the which Albigenſes, Frier Dominicus was a great doer, labouring and preaching againſt them ten years together; and cauſed many of them to be burned, for the which he was highly accepted and rewarded in the Apoſtolical Court, and at length, by Pope Honorius the third, was made Patriarch of the black Guard of the Dominick Friers. Ex Antonio part. 3. titul. 19. Capitulo 1.

Theſe Albigenſes, againſt the Pope of Rome, had ſet up to themſelves a Biſhop of their own, named Bartholomæus, remaining about the Coaſts of Croatia and Dalmatia, as appears by a Letter of one of the Pope's Cardinals above ſpecified. For which Cauſe the See of Rome took great indignation againſt the ſaid Albigenſes, and cauſed all their faithful Catholicks, and Obedientiaries to their Church, to riſe up in Armour, and to take the ſign of the holy Croſs upon them, to fight againſt them, Anno 1206; by reaſon whereof great multitudes of them were pittifully murdered, not only of them about Toloufe & Avinion in France, (as is afore to be ſeen) but alſo in all quarters, miſerable ſlaughters and burnings of them long continued, from the reign of Frederick the ſecond, Emperor, almoſt to this preſent time, through the inſtigation of the Roman Popes.

Vid. ſupra.

Paulus Æmilius the French Chronicler, in his ſixth Book, writing of theſe Pauperes de Lugduno, and Humiliati, and dividing theſe two Orders from Albigenſes, reporteth that the two former Orders were rejected of Pope Lucius the third. And in their place other two Orders were approved, to wit, the Order of the Dominick Friers, and of the Franciſcans. Which ſeemeth not to be true, forſomuch as this Pope Lucius was twenty years before Innocent the third: and yet neither in the time of Pope Innocent the Order of the Dominick Friers was approved; but in the time of Pope Honorius the third, who was forty years after Pope Lucius. Again, Bernardus Lutzenbergenſis, in Catal. Hæret. affirmeth, That theſe Pauperes de Lugduno, or Waldenſes, began firſt, Anno 1218. Which if it be true, then muſt the other report of Æmilius be falſe, writing of the Sect of Pauperes Lugdunenſes, to be refuſed by Pope Lucius the 3*d*, who was long before this, in the year of our Lord 1181.

Amongſt other Authors which write of thoſe Waldenſes, Joannes Sleid. lib. 16. intreating of their Continuance and Doctrine, thus writeth of them. There be, ſaith he, in the French Province a People called Waldoys. Theſe of an ancient trade and cuſtom among them, do not acknowledg the Biſhop of Rome, and ever have uſed a manner of Doctrine, ſomewhat more pure than the reſt, but eſpecially ſince the coming of Luther, they have increaſed in more knowledg and perfection of judgment. Wherefore they have been oftentimes complained upon to the King, as tho they contemned the Magiſtrate, and would move Rebellion, with other ſuch Matters falſely ſurmiſed againſt them, more of deſpite and malice, than of any juſt cauſe of truth. There be of them certain Towns and Villages, among which Merindol is one. Againſt theſe Meridolians Sentence was given five years paſt, at Aix, being the high Tribunal Seat or Judgment Place of Province, that all ſhould be deſtroyed without reſpect of Age or Perſon, in ſuch ſort, as that the Houſes being plucked down, the Village ſhould be made plain even with the ground, the Trees alſo ſhould be cut down, and the place altogether made deſolate and deſert. Albeit, tho it were thus pronounced, yet was it not then put in execution, by the means of certain that perſwaded the King to the contrary, namely, one William Belſay, who was at the ſame time the King's Lieutenant in Piedmont. But at the laſt, April 12. 1545. John Minerius Preſident of the Counſel of Aix, calling the Senate, read the King's Letters, commanding them to execute the Sentence given, &c.

This confeſſion worthy of perpetual memory, you ſhall ſee more largely ſet out in H. Pantaleon writing of the deſtruction of Cabriers and Merindol, and alſo in the French ſtory. Ex Joan. Sleid. l. 16.

Moreover, concerning the Confeſſion and the Doctrine of the ſaid Merindolians, received of ancient time from their Forefathers the Waldenſes, thus it followeth in the ſaid Book and Place of John Sleidan.

At laſt (ſaith Sleidan) after he had deſcribed what great cruelty was ſhewed againſt them, when the report hereof was bruited in Germany, it offended the minds of many: and indeed the Switzers, who were then of a contrary Religion to the Pope, intreated the King, that he would ſhew mercy to ſuch as were fled. Whereunto the ſaid King Francis made anſwer in this wiſe; pretending that he had juſt cauſe to do as he did: Inferring moreover, that they ought not to be careful what he did within his Dominions, or how he puniſhed his Offenders, more than he was about their Affairs, &c. Thus hard was the King againſt them, notwithſtanding (ſaith Sleidan) that he, the year before, had received from the ſaid his Subjects of Merindol, a Confeſſion of their Faith and Doctrine: The Articles whereof were, That they, according to the Chriſtian Faith confeſſed, firſt God the Father, Creator of all things: The Son, the only Mediator and Advocate of Mankind: The Holy Spirit, the Comforter and Inſtructer of all Truth. They confeſſed alſo the Church, which they acknowledged to be the fellowſhip of God's Elect, whereof Jeſus Chriſt is head. The Miniſters alſo of the Church they did allow, wiſhing that ſuch as did not their Duty ſhould be removed.

The Confeſſion & Faith of the Waldenſes in Merindol.

And as touching Magiſtrates, they granted likewiſe the ſame to be ordained of God to defend the Good, and to puniſh the Tranſgreſſors. And how they owe to him, not Love only, but alſo Tribute and Cuſtom, and no Man herein to be excepted, even by the Example of Chriſt, who paid Tribute himſelf, &c.

Likewiſe of Baptiſm, they confeſſed the ſame to be a viſible and an outward ſign, that repreſenteth to us the renewing of the Spirit, and mortification of the Members.

Furthermore, as touching the Lord's Supper, they ſaid and confeſſed the ſame to be a Thanksgiving, and a Memorial of the benefit received through Chriſt.

Matrimony they affirmed to be Holy; and inſtituted of God, and to be inhibited to no Man.

That good Works are to be obſerved and exerciſed of all Men, as Holy Scripture teacheth.

That falſe Doctrine, which leadeth Men away from the true Worſhip of God, ought to be eſchewed.

Briefly and finally, the order and rule of their Faith they confeſſed to be the Old and New Teſtament; proteſting that they believed all ſuch things as are contained in the Apoſtolick Creed: Deſiring moreover the King to give credit to this their declaration of their Faith; ſo that whatſoever was informed to him to the contrary, was not true, and that they would well prove, if they might be heard.

And thus much concerning the Doctrine and Confeſſion of the Merindolians out of Sleidan, and alſo concerning their Deſcent and Off-ſpring from the Waldenſes.

And many other more, Enemies of God, and Miniſters of Satan.

TO proceed now further in the perſecution of theſe Waldois, or Waldenſes, you have heard hitherto, firſt how they dividing themſelves into divers Countries, ſome fled to Province, to Toloufe, of whom ſufficient hath been ſaid. Some went to Piedmont, and the Valley of Angrogne, of whom it followeth now to intreat, God willing.

Thus theſe good Men, by long Perſecution, being driven from place to place, were grievouſly in all places afflicted, but yet could never be utterly deſtroyed, nor yet compelled to yield to the ſuperſtitious and falſe Religion of the Church of Rome: but ever abſtained from their corruption and Idolatry, as much as was poſſible, and gave themſelves to the Word of God, as a Rule both truly to ſerve him, and to direct their lives accordingly.

They had many Books of the Old and New Teſtament tranſlated into their Language. Their Miniſters inſtructed them ſecretly, to avoid the fury of their Enemies which could not abide the light, albeit they did not inſtruct them with ſuch purity as was requiſite. They lived in great ſimplicity, and with the ſweat of their brows. They were quiet and peaceable among their Neighbours, abſtaining from blaſphemy, and prophaining of the Name of God by Oaths, and ſuch other impiety: from lewd games, dancing, filthy ſongs, and other vices and diſſolute life, and conformed their life wholly to the rule of God's Word. Their principal care was always, that God might be rightly ſerved, and his Word truly preached: inſomuch that in our time, when it pleaſed God to ſet forth the Light of his Goſpel more clearly, they never ſpared any thing to eſtabliſh the true and pure miniſtry of the Word of God and his Sacraments. Which was the cauſe that Satan with his Miniſters did ſo perſecute them of late more cruelly than ever he did before, as manifeſtly appeareth by the bloody and horrible Perſecutions which have been, not only in Province, againſt thoſe of Merindol and Cabriers; alſo againſt them of Prague and Calabria, (as the Hiſtories afore written do ſufficiently declare) but alſo againſt them in the Country of Piedmont, remaining in the Valley of Angrogne, and of Lucerne, and alſo in the Valley of S. Martin and Perouſe, in the ſaid Country of Piedmont. Which People of a long time were perſecuted by the Papiſts, and eſpecially within theſe few years they have been vexed in ſuch ſort, and ſo diverſly, that it ſeemeth almoſt incredible: and yet hath God always miraculouſly delivered them, as hereafter ſhall enſue.

Albeit the People of Angrogne had before this time certain to preach the Word of God, and miniſter the Sacraments unto them privately; yet in the year of our Lord 1555, in the beginning of the month of Auguſt, the Goſpel was openly preached in Angrogne. The Miniſters and and the People intended at the firſt to keep themſelves ſtill as ſecret as they might: but there was ſuch concourſe of People from all parts, that they were compelled to preach openly abroad. For this cauſe they built them a Church in the midſt of Angrongne, where Aſſemblies were made, and Sermons preached. It hapned about that time, that one John Martin of Briqueras, a mile from Angrongne, which wanted every where, that he would ſlit the Miniſter's noſe of Angrongne, was aſſaulted by a Wolf which bit off his noſe, ſo that he died thereof mad. This was commonly known to all the Towns thereabout.

The juſt hand of God upon John Martin a Perſecutor.

At this ſeaſon the French King held theſe foreſaid Valleys, and they were under the juriſdiction of the Parliament of Thurin. In the end of Decemb. following, news was brought, that it was ordained by the ſaid Parliament, that certain horſemen and footmen ſhould be ſent to ſpoil and deſtroy Angrongne. Whereupon ſome which pretended great friendſhip to this People, counſelled them not to go forward with their Enterpriſe, but to forbear for a while, and to wait for better opportunity. But they notwithſtanding calling upon God, determined with one accord conſtantly to perſiſt in their Religion, and in hope and ſilence to abide the good pleaſure of God: ſo that this enterpriſe againſt Angrongne was ſoon daſhed. The ſame time they began alſo openly to preach in Luſerne.

In the month of March 1556, the Miniſters of the Valley of St. Martin preached openly. At that time certain Gentlemen of the Valley of St. Martin took a good Man named Bartholomew, a Bookbinder, Priſoner, as he paſſed by the ſaid Valley, the which was ſent by and by to Turin; and there with a marvellous conſtancy, after he had made a good Confeſſion of his Faith, he ſuffered death: inſomuch that divers of the Parliament were aſtoniſhed and appalled at his conſtancy. Yet they of the ſaid Parliament, being ſore incenſed againſt the Valdoys, ſent one named the Preſident of St. Julian, aſſociating unto him one called De Eccleſia. and others, to hinder their enterpriſe. Theſe coming firſt to the Valley of Perouſe, whereas yet no Preachers were, but they were accuſtomed to reſort to the Sermons of Angrongne, very much troubled and feared the poor People there.

Bartholomew a Bookbinder, martyr.

The Preſident of St. Julian and other, ſent to the Angrognians.

From thence they went to the Valley of St. Martin, and remained there a good while, tormenting the poor People, and threatning their utter ruin and deſtruction. After that they came to Luſerne, troubling and vexing the People there in like manner. From thence they went to Angrongne, accompanied with many Gentlemen, and a great rabble of Prieſts of the ſaid Country. But by the way, the Preſident enquired for one dwelling at St. Johns near to Angrongne, and examined him, Whether he had not baptized his Child at Angrongne, and wherefore he had ſo done? The poor ſimple Man anſwered, that he had baptized his Child at Angrongne, becauſe Baptiſm was there miniſtred according to the inſtitution of Chriſt. Then the Preſident in great rage commanded him in the King's Name to baptize his Child again, or elſe he ſhould be burnt. The poor Man deſired the Preſident that he might be ſuffered to make his Prayer to God, before he ſhould make anſwer thereunto. Which after he had done in the Hall, before all the company there preſent, he required the Preſident that he would write, and ſign the ſame with his own hand, that he would diſcharge him before God, of the danger of that offence, if he ſhould baptize his Child again, and that he would take the peril upon him and his. The Preſident hearing this, was ſo confounded, that he ſpake not one word a good while after. Then ſaid he, in a great fury; Away thou Villain out of my ſight; and after that he was never called more.

Note here how the Papiſts play the Anabaptiſts. Example of good prayer.

The Preſident confounded at the poor Mans anſwer.

After they were come to Angrogne, the Preſident having viſited the two Temples, cauſed a Monk to preach in the one, the People being there aſſembled: who pretended nothing elſe, but only to exhort them to return to the Obedience of the See of Rome. The aforeſaid Monk, with the Preſident, and all his whole Retinue, kneeled down twice, and called upon the Virgin Mary: but the Miniſters and all the People ſtood ſtill, and would not kneel, making no ſign or token of reverence. As ſoon as the Monk had ended his Sermon, the People requeſted inſtantly, that their Miniſter might alſo be ſuffered to preach, affirming that the ſaid Monk had ſpoken many things which were not according to the Word of God. But the Preſident would not grant their Requeſt. After that the ſaid Preſident admoniſhed them, in the Name of the King and the Parliament of Thurin, that they ſhould return to the Obedience of the Pope, upon pain of loſs of Goods and Life, and utter deſtruction of their Town. And withal he recited unto them the pitious diſcomfiture of their Brethren and Friends, which had been done before in Merindol and Cabriers, and other places in the Country of Province. The Miniſters and the People anſwered, that they were determined to live according to the Word of God, and that they would obey the King and all their Superiors in all things, ſo that God thereby were not diſpleaſed: and furthermore, if it were ſhewed unto them by the Word of God, that they erred in any point of Religion, they were ready to receive correction, and to be reformed. This talk endured about ſix hours together, even until night. In the end, the Preſident ſaid there ſhould be a Diſputation appointed for thoſe matters. Whereunto the People gladly agreed. But after that there was no more mention made thereof.

The people would not kneel to pray to our Lady.

The People of Angrogne threatned with deſtruction.

The Angrognians deſired to be tried by the Word of God.

Here he remained fourtain days, daily practiſing new devices to vex and torment them with new Proclamations, now calling to him the Syndiques and head-Officers, now ſeverally, and now altogether, that ſo for fear he might make them relent: cauſing alſo Aſſemblies to be made in every Pariſh by ſuch as he appointed, thinking thereby to divide the People. Notwithſtanding he nothing prevailed with all that he could do: but ſtill they continued conſtant. In ſo much that they with one accord preſented a brief Confeſſion of their Faith, with an anſwer to certain Interrogatories propounded by the Preſident: In the which they confeſſed,

The Syndiques were as Sheriffs, Counſellors, or Advocates.

That the Religion wherein both they and their Elders had been long inſtructed and brought up, was the ſame which is contained both in the Old and New Teſtament, the which is alſo briefly compriſed in the twelve Articles of the Chriſtian Belief.

The Articles and Confeſſion of the Angrognians exhibited to the Preſident.

Alſo, that they acknowledged the Sacraments inſtituted by Chriſt, whereby he diſtributeth abundantly his Graces and great Benefits, his heavenly Riches and Treaſures to all thoſe which receive the ſame with a true and lively Faith.

Furthermore, that they received the Creeds of the four General Councils; that is to ſay, of Nice, Conſtantinople, Epheſus, and Chaltedon, and alſo the Creed of Athanaſius, wherein the Myſtery of the Chriſtian Faith and Religion is plainly and largely ſet out.

Item, The Ten Commandments expreſſed in the 20*th* Chapter of Exodus, and in the 5*th* of Deuteronomy, in the which the Rule of a godly and holy Life, and alſo the true Service which God requireth of us, is briefly compriſed: and therefore following this Article, they ſuffered not by any means (ſaid they) any groſs Iniquities to reign amongſt them; as unlawful Swearing, Perjury, Blaſphemy, Curſing, Slandering, Diſſention, Deceit, wrong Dealing, Uſury, Gluttony, Drunkenneſs, Whoredom, Theft, Murder, Sorcery, Witchcraft, or ſuch like; but wholly endeavoured themſelves to live in the Fear of God, and according to his holy Will.

Moreover, they acknowledged the Superior Powers, as Princes and Magiſtrates, to be ordained of God; and that whoſoever reſiſteth the ſame, reſiſteth the Ordinance of God; and therefore humbly ſubmitted themſelves to their Superiors with all obdience, ſo that they commanded nothing againſt God.

Finally, they proteſted, That they would in no point be ſtubborn, but if that their Forefathers or they had erred in any one jot concerning true Religion, the ſame being proved by the Word of God, they would willingly yield and be reformed.

Their Interrogatories were concerning the Maſs, Auricular Confeſſion, Baptiſm, Marriage, and Burials, according to the inſtitution of the Church of Rome.

The Interrogatories.

To the firſt they anſwered, That they received the Lord's Supper as it was by him inſtituted, and celebrated by his Apoſtles: but as touching the Maſs, except the ſame might be proved by the Word of God, they would not receive it.

Their Anſwers to the Interrogatories. Maſs.

To the ſecond, touching Auricular Confeſſion, they ſaid, that for their part they confeſſed themſelves daily unto God, acknowledging themſelves before him to be miſerable ſinners, deſiring of him pardon and forgiveneſs of their ſins, as Chriſt inſtructed his in the Prayer which 1 John 1. he caught them: Lord forgive us our ſins. And as St. John ſaith; If we confeſs our ſins to God, he is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins, and to cleanſe us from all unrighteouſneſs. And according to that which God himſelf ſaith by his Prophet; O Iſrael, if thou return, return unto me. And again, O Iſrael, it is I, it is I which forgiveth thee thy ſins. So that, ſeeing they ought to return to God alone, and it is he only which forgiveth ſins, therefore they were bound to confeſs themſelves to God only, and to no other. Alſo it appeareth, that David in his Pſalms, and the Prophets, and other faithful Servants of God, have confeſſed themſelves both generally and particularly unto God alone: yet if the contrary might be proved by the Word of God, they would (ſay they) with all humbleneſs receive the ſame.

Jerem. 3. Ezek. 43.

Auricular Confeſſion.

Baptiſm.

Thirdly, As touching Baptiſm, they acknowledged and received that holy Inſtitution of Chriſt, and adminiſtred the ſame with all ſimplicity, as he ordained it in his Holy Goſpel, without any changing, adding or diminiſhing in any point, and that all this they did in their Mother-Tongue, according to the Rule of St. Paul, who willeth that in the Church every thing be done in the Mother-Tongue, for the edification of our Neighbour: but as for their Conjurations, Oiling, and Salting, except the ſame might be proved by the ſacred Scripture, they would not receive them.

1 Cor. 14.

The manner of Burials.

Fourthly, As touching Burials, they anſwered, that they knew there is a difference between the Bodies of the true Chriſtians and the Infidels, forſomuch as the firſt are the Members of Jeſus Chriſt, Temples of the Holy Ghoſt, and partakers of the glorious Reſurrection of the Dead, and therefore they accuſtomed to follow their Dead to the Grave reverently, with a ſufficient company, and exhortation out of the Word of God, as well to comfort the Parents and Friends of the Dead, as alſo to admoniſh all Men diligently to prepare themſelves to die. But as for the uſing of Candles or Lights, praying for the Dead, ringing of Bells, except the ſame might be proved to be neceſſary by the Word of God, and that God is not offended therewith, they would not receive them.

Obedience to Mens traditions.

Fifthly, As touching obedience to Mens Traditions they received and allowed all thoſe Ordinances which (as S. Paul ſaith) ſerve for Order, Decency, and Reverence of the Miniſtry. But as for other Ceremonies, which have been brought into the Church of God, either as a part of Divine Service, or to merit remiſſion of Sins, or elſe to bind Mens Conſciences, becauſe they are repugnant to the Word of God, they could by no means receive them.

Councils not to be preferred before God's Word

Gal. 1.

And whereas the Commiſſioners affirmed the ſaid Traditions to have been ordained by Councils: firſt, they anſwered, that the greateſt part of them were not ordained by Councils. Secondly, That Councils were not to be preferred above the Word of God, which ſaith, If any Man, yea or Angel from Heaven, ſhould preach unto you otherwiſe, than that which hath been received of the Lord Jeſus, let him be accurſed. And therefore (ſaid they) if Councils have ordained any thing diſſenting from the Word of God, they would not receive it.

Finally, they ſaid, That the Councils had made divers notable Decrees concerning the election of Biſhops and Miniſters of the Church; concerniug Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, as well of the Clergy as of the People; alſo concerning the diſtribution of the Goods and Poſſeſſions of the Church; and further, that all Paſtors which were either Whoremongers, Drunkards, or offenſive in any caſe, ſhould be put from their Office. Moreover, that whoſoever ſhould be preſent at the Maſs of a Prieſt which was an Whoremonger, ſhould be excommunicate. And many ſuch other things which were not in any point obſerved. And that they omitted to ſpeak of many other things which were ordained by divers Councils, very ſuperſtitious, and contrary to the holy Commandments of God, as they would be ready to prove (ſaid they) if they ſhould have occaſion and opportunity thereunto.

Councils not kept of the Papiſts in many points

Diſputation required.

Wherefore they required the Commiſſioners, that a Diſputation might be had (as by the ſaid Preſident was pretended) publickly, and in their preſence, and then if it might be proved by the Word of God, that they erred either in Doctrine, or Converſation and manner of living, they were content with all humbleneſs to be corrected and reformed, as they had beforeſaid. Beſeeching them to conſider alſo that their Religion had been obſerved and kept from their Anceſtors, until their time, many hundred years together: and yet for their parts, being convicted by the infallible Word of God, they would not obſtinately hold to the defence thereof. Saying moreover, that they, together with the ſaid Lords Deputies, confeſſed all one God, one Saviour, one Holy Ghoſt, one Law, one Baptiſm, one Hope in Heaven; and in ſum, they affirmed that their Faith and Religion was firmly founded and grounded upon the pure Word of God: wherefore it is ſaid, that bleſſed are they which hear the ſame, and keep it.

For the Antiquity of these Waldoys, see before.

Turks and Jews find more favour with the Papiſts than the true Chriſtians.

To be ſhort, ſeeing it is permitted to the Turks, Saracens, and Jews (which are mortal Enemies to our Saviour Chriſt) to dwell peaceably in the faireſt Cities of Chriſtendom; by good reaſon they ſhould be ſuffered to live in the deſolate Mountains and Valleys, having their whole Religion founded upon the holy Goſpel, and worſhipping the Lord Jeſus, and therefore they moſt humbly beſought them to have pity and compaſſion upon them, and to ſuffer them to live quietly in their Deſerts; proteſting that they and theirs would live in all fear and reverence of God, with all due ſubjection and obedience to their Lord and Prince, and to his Lieutenants and Officers.

The Preſident, and the reſt of the Commiſſions, perceiving that they laboured in vain, returned to Thurin with the Notes of their Proceedings; the which immediatly were ſent unto the King's Court, and there the matter remained one year before there was any anſwer made thereunto. During which time the Waldoys lived in great quietneſs, as God of his infinite goodneſs is wont to give ſome comfort and refreſhing to his poor Servants, after long troubles and afflictions. The number of the faithful ſo augmented, that throughout the Valleys God's Word was purely preached, and his Sacraments duly adminiſtred, and no Maſs was ſung in Angrogne, nor in divers other places. The year after, the Preſident of St. Julian, with his Aſſociates, returned to Pignerol, and ſent for thither the chief Rulers of Angrogne, and of the Valley of Luſerne, that is, for ſix of Angrogne, and for two of every Pariſh beſides, and ſhewed unto them, how that the laſt year they had preſented their Confeſſion, the which, by a Decree made by the Parliament of Turin, was ſent to the King's Court, and there diligently examined by learned Men, and condemned as heretical. Therefore the King willed and commanded them to return to the obedience of the Church of Rome, upon pain of loſs, both of Goods and Life: injoining them moreover to give him a direct anſwer within three days. From thence he went to Luſerne, and cauſed the houſholders, with great threatnings, to aſſemble themſelves before certain by him appointed: but they with one aſſent perſiſted in their former Confeſſion. And leſt they ſhould ſeem ſtubborn in the defence of any erroneous Doctrine, they deſired that their Confeſſion might be ſent to all the Univerſities of Chriſtendom, and if the ſame in any part by the Word of God were diſproved, it ſhould immediatly be amended: but contrariwiſe, if that were not done, then they to be no more diſquieted.

A breathing time given of God to the Angrognians.

Perſecution again beginneth againſt the Angrognians.

The Luſernians require trial by God's Word.

The Preſident not contented with this, the next morning ſent for ſix of Angrogne by him named, and for two out of every other Pariſh, the which he and the Gentlemen of the Country threatned very ſore and warned twelve of the chief of Angrogne, and certain of the other Pariſhes to appear perſonally at the Parliament of Thurin, and to bring before the Judges of the ſaid Parliament their Miniſters and Schoolmaſters, thinking, if they were once baniſhed the Country, that then their enterpriſe might ſoon be brought to an end. To the which it was anſwered, that they could not, nor ought not to obey ſuch a Commandment.

The Angrognians required to bring in their Miniſters and Schoolmaſters.

A little while after Proclamation was made in every place, that no Man ſhould receive any Preacher coming from Geneva, but only ſuch as were appointed by the Archbiſhop of Thurin, and other his Officers, upon pain of confiſcation of their Goods, and loſs of their Lives, and that every one ſhould obſerve the Ceremonies, Rites, and Religion uſed in the Church of Rome. Furthermore, if any of the foreſaid Preachers of Geneva came into thoſe quarters, that they ſhould immediatly be apprehended, and by no means their abode there by any one to be concealed, upon the pain aforeſaid. And furthermore, the names of thoſe which ſhould diſcloſe any one of them ſhould be kept ſecret, and alſo for their accuſation, they ſhould have the third part of the Goods confiſcated, with a full pardon, if that the ſaid Accuſers were any of thoſe which privily did keep or maintain the ſaid Miniſters: and that they and all other, which would return to their Mother the Church, might freely and ſafely come and recant before the ſaid Commiſſioners. The Germans make ſupplication for the Angrongnians.

and

At the ſame ſeaſon the Princes of Germany, and certain of the Switzers, ſent unto the French King, deſiring him to have pitty on the foreſaid Churches; and from that time, until three years after, the People of the foreſaid Valleys were not moleſted by any of the Kings Officers, but they were ſore vexed by the Monks of Pignerol, and the Gentlemen of the Valley of St. Martin.

Geffery Variallia; martyr.

About that time a Miniſter of Angrogne, named Geffrey Variallia, born in Piedmont, a vertuous and learned Man, and fearing God, went to viſit certain Churches in thoſe Quarters where he was born, and coming homeward was taken at Berge, and from thence led to Thurin, where he, after he had made a good Confeſſion of his Faith, to the confirmation of many, and to the terror of his Adverſaries, moſt conſtantly ſuffered.

A notable example of a good Hangman.

A few days after a Miniſter of the Valley of Luſerne, returning to Geneva, was taken Priſoner at Suſe, and ſoon after ſent to Thurin, and with an invincible conſtancy made his Confeſſion before thoſe of the Parliament, and in the end was condemned to be burnt. The Hangman at the time of Execution, feigned himſelf to be ſick, and ſo conveighed himſelf away. And ſo likewiſe another ſerved them, being appointed by the foreſaid Court to execute the poor Miniſter. It is credibly reported that the Hangman, which executed certain Germans a little before, would by no means do this execution. Whereupon the Miniſter was ſent to Priſon again, where after long and painful indurance, ſeeing the Priſon door open, he eſcaped, and returned to his Cure.

Now four years being paſt, in ſuch manner, as we have hitherto touched in this ſtory, in the year following, which was 1559, there was a Peace concluded between the French King and the King of Spain. Whereupon the Country of Piedmont (certain Towns excepted) was reſtored to the Duke of Savoy: under whoſe Regiment the foreſaid Churches, and all other faithful People in Piedmont, continued in great quietneſs, and were not moleſted: and the Duke himſelf was content to ſuffer them to live in their Religion, knowing that he had no Subjects more faithful and obedient than they were. But Satan hating all quietneſs, by his Miniſters ſtirred the Duke againſt the ſaid Churches of Piedmont, his own natural Subjects. For the Pope and the Cardinals, ſeeing the good inclination of the Duke towards this People, incenſed him to do that, which otherwiſe he would not. The Pope's Legat alſo which then followed the Court, and others that favoured the Church of Rome, laboured by all means to perſwade the Duke, that he ought to baniſh the ſaid Waldoys, which maintained not the Pope's Religion: alledging, that he could not ſuffer ſuch a People to dwell within his Dominion, without prejudice and diſhonour to the Apoſtolick Sea. Alſo that they were a rebellious People againſt the holy Ordinances and Decrees of their holy Mother the Church. And briefly, that he might no longer ſuffer the ſaid People, being ſo diſobedient and ſtubborn againſt the holy Father, if he would indeed ſhew himſelf a loving and obedient Son.

The Pope ſtirreth up the Duke of Savoy againſt the Angrongnians.

Such deviliſh Inſtigations were the cauſe of theſe horrible and furious Perſecutions, wherewith theſe poor People of the Valleys, and the Country of Piedmont, was ſo long vexed. And becauſe they foreſaw the great Calamities which they were like to ſuffer, to find ſome remedy for the ſame (if it were poſſible) all the ſaid Churches of Piedmont, with one common conſent wrote to the Duke, declaring in effect, that the only cauſe why they were ſo hated, and for the which he was by their Enemies ſo ſore incenſed againſt them, was their Religion, which was no new, or light Opinion, but that wherein they and their Anceſtors had long continued, being wholly grounded upon the infallible Word of God, contained in the Old and New Teſtament. Notwithſtanding, if it might be proved by the ſame Word, that they held any falſe or erroneous Doctrine, they would ſubmit themſelves to be reformed with all obedience.

But it is not certain whether this Advertiſement was delivered unto the Duke or no: for it was ſaid that he would not hear of that Religion. But howſoever it was in the month of March following, there was a great Perſecution raiſed againſt the poor Chriſtians which were at Carignan. Amongſt whom there were certain godly Perſons taken, and burnt within four days after; that is to ſay, one named Mathurine, and his Wife, and John de Carquignam, dwelling in the Valley of Luſerne, taken Priſoner as he went to the Market at Pignerol. The Woman died with great conſtancy. The good Man, John de Carquignam, had been in Priſon divers times before for Religion, and was always delivered by God's ſingular Grace and Providence. But ſeeing himſelf taken this laſt time, incontinent he ſaid, he knew that God had now called him. Both by the way as he went, and in Priſon, and alſo at his death, he ſhewed an invincible conſtancy, and marvellous vertue, as well by the pure Confeſſion which he made touching the Doctrine of Salvation, as alſo in ſuffering with patience the horrible torments which he endured, both in Priſon, and alſo at his death. Many at that time fled away: others being afraid of that great cruelty, and fearing alſo Man more than God, looking rather to the Earth than to Heaven, conſented to return to the obedience of the Church of Rome.

Mathurin and his Wife Joh. de Carquignam, Martyrs.

Perſecution beginneth in the Valleys.

Within few days after, theſe Churches of the ſaid Waldoys, that is to ſay, Le Larch, Meronne, Meane, and Suſe, were wonderfully aſſaulted. To recite all the outrage, cruelty, and villany that was there committed, it were too long: for brevities ſake we will recite only certain of the principal and beſt known. The Churches of Meane and Suſe ſuffered great affliction. Their Miniſter was taken amongſt others. Many fled away, and their Houſes and Goods were ranſack'd and ſpoiled. The Miniſter was a good and faithful Servant of God, and endued with excellent Gifts and Graces, who in the end was put to moſt ſhameful and cruel death. The great patience which he ſhewed in the midſt of the fire, greatly aſtoniſhed the Adverſaries. Likewiſe the Churches of Larch and Meronne were marvelouſly tormented and afflicted. For ſome were taken and ſent to the Galleys, other ſome conſented and yielded to the Adverſaries, and a great number of them fled away. It is certainly known, that thoſe which yielded to the Adverſaries, were more cruelly handled than the others which continued conſtant in the Truth. Whereby God declareth how greatly he deteſteth all ſuch as play the Apoſtates, and ſhrink from the Truth.

The Miniſter of Meane, martyr.

God's ſecret judgment upon them that ſhrink from his Truth.

But for the better underſtanding of the beginning of this horrible Perſecution againſt the Waldoys, here note, that firſt of all the Proclamations were made in every place, that none ſhould reſort to the Sermons of the Lutherans, but ſhould live after the cuſtom of the Church of Rome, upon pain of forfeiture of their Goods, and to be condemned to the Gallies for ever, or loſe their lives. Three of the moſt cruel Perſons that could be found, were appointed to execute this Commiſſion. The firſt was one Thomas Jacomel a Monk, and Inquiſitor of the Romiſh Faith; a Man worthy for ſuch an Office, for he was an Apoſtate, and had renounced the known Truth, and perſecuted mortally and maliciouſly the poor Chriſtians, againſt his own Conſcience, and of ſet purpoſe, as his Books do ſufficiently witneſs: he was alſo a Whoremonger, and given over to all other Villanies and filthy living, and in the horrible ſin of Sodomy, which he commonly uſed, he paſſed all his Fellows. Briefly, he was nothing elſe but a miſhapen Monſter both againſt God and Nature. Moreover, he ſo afflicted and tormented the poor Captives of the ſaid Waldoys, by ſpoiling, robbery, and extortion, that he deſerved not only to be hanged, but to be broken upon the Wheel 100 times, and to ſuffer ſo many cruel deaths, if it were poſſible; ſo great, ſo many, and ſo horrible were the Crimes that he had committed.

Cruel Perſecutors. Th. Jacomel a cruel Apoſtata.

The rigorous handling of the Waldoys.

The ſecond was the Collateral Corbis, who in the Examination of the Priſoners, was very rigorous and cruel; for he only demanded of them, Whether they would go to the Maſs, or be burnt within three days? and in very deed executed his ſayings. But it is certainly reported, that he ſeeing the conſtancy, and hearing the Confeſſion of the poor Martyrs, feeling a remorſe, and tormented in Conſcience, proteſted that he would never meddle any more.

Martyrs.

The

The third was the Provoſt de la Juſtice, a cruel and crafty Wretch, accuſtomed to apprehend the poor Chriſtians, either by night, or early in the morning, or in the highway going to the Market, and was commonly lodged in the Valley of Luſerne, or thereabouts. Thus the poor People were always as the ſilly Sheep in the Wolves Jaws, or as the Sheep which are led unto the Slaughter-houſe.

The cruel Monks of Pignerol.

At that ſeaſon one named Charles de Comptes, of the Valley of Luſerne, and one of the Lords of Angroghe, wrote to the ſaid Commiſſioners, to uſe ſome lenity towards them of the Valley of Luſerne. By reaſon whereof they were a while more gently entreated than the reſt. At that ſeaſon the Monks of Pignerol, and their Aſſociates, tormented grievouſly the Churches near about them. They took the poor Chriſtians as they paſſed by the way, and kept them Priſoners within their Abbey. And having aſſembled a Company of Ruffians, they ſent them to ſpoil thoſe of the ſaid Churches, and to take Priſoners Men, Women, and Children; and ſome they ſo tormented, that they were compelled to ſwear to return to the Maſs; other ſome alſo they ſent to the Gallies, and other ſome they burnt cruelly.

Martyrs.

They which eſcaped, were afterward ſo ſick, that they ſeemed to have been poiſoned. The ſame year there were two great Earthquakes in Piedmont, and alſo many great Tempeſts and horrible Thunders.

The Gentlemen of the Valley of St. Martin, entreated their Tenants very cruelly, threatning them, and commanding them to return unto the Maſs; alſo ſpoiling them of their Goods, impriſoning them, and vexing them by all the means they could. But above all the other, two eſpecially, that is to ſay, Charles Trutchet, and Boniface his Brother, the which, the ſecond day of April, before day, with a company of Ruffians, ſpoiled a Village of their own Subjects, named Renclaret: the which as ſoon as the Inhabitants of the ſaid Village perceived, they fled into the Mountain covered with Snow, naked and without Victual, and there remained until the third night after. In the morning, certain of his Retinue took a Miniſter of the ſaid Valley Priſoner, which was come out of Calabria, and was going to viſit the poor People of Renclaret, and led him Priſoner to the Abby, where ſoon after he was burnt, with one other of the Vally of St. Martin.

Ch. Truchet and Boniface his Baother, two cruel Perſecutors.

A Miniſter of Calabria burnt.

The third night after, they of Pragela, having pitty upon the poor People of Renclaret, ſent about four hundred to diſcomfit the company of the Truchets, and to reſtore thoſe which were fled to their Houſes. They were furiouſly aſſaulted by the ſhot of their Enemies, who notwithſtanding in the end were put to flight, and but one of the four hundred hurt.

God's people reſcued.

About the year before, the ſaid Truchet, being accompanied with a company of Ruffians, arreſted Priſoner the Miniſter of Renclaret as he was at his Sermon. But the People were ſo moved by his outragious dealing, and eſpecially the Women, that they had almoſt ſtrangled the ſaid Truchet; and the reſt of them were ſo canvaſſed, that they had no liſt to come there again any more. By reaſon whereof he ſo vexed them by Proceſſes, that they were compelled to agree with him, and to pay him ſixteen hundred Crowns.

A Miniſter of the Valley of Renclaret taken & wounded.

Soon after the Lords of the ſaid Vally took another Miniſter of the ſame Vally, as he was going to preach in a Pariſh a mile from his houſe: but the People perceiving that, ſpeedily purſued him and took him. The Enemies, ſeeing that they were not able to lead him away, wounded him ſo ſore, that they left him for dead. Whereupon they ſo perſecuted the poor People, that they were almoſt deſtroyed.

Here is not to be forgotten, that the ſame night, in the which the company of Truchet was diſcomfited, was ſo ſtormy and terrible, and the Gentlemen of that Country were ſo terrified, that they thought they ſhould have been all deſtroyed. Wherefore they uſed more gentleneſs towards the people than before. Except Charles Truchet and his Brother, the which went to the Duke, and made grievous complaints againſt the Waldoys, not only for that which was done and paſt, but alſo perſwaded the Duke, that they went about to build three Fortreſſes in the Mountains, and alſo intended to maintain certain Garriſons of Strangers, charging them further with divers other Crimes, of the which they were in no point guilty. The Duke, being moved by theſe falſe ſurmiſes, gave in charge to the ſaid Accuſers, that the Fortreſs of the Valley of St. Martin, the which about twenty years before was razed by the Frenchmen, ſhould be built again, and that therein ſhould be placed a perpetual Garriſon, and that the People ſhould make ſo plain and wide the rugged ways, that Horſemen might eaſily paſs; with divers ſuch other things. And all this to be done at the coſts and charges of thoſe that would not ſubmit themſelves to the Obedience of the Romain Church.

False complaints brought to the Duke againſt the Waldoys.

This Commiſſion being ſealed, the Gentlemen cauſed the Fortreſs to be built again, and put therein a Garriſon, and proclaimed the Commiſſion. The poor people being thereat amazed, withſtood the Commiſſioners, and ſent certain to the Duke: and immediately after the Commiſſioners returned to the Dukes Court, being at Nice, to inflame his anger more againſt them. But God ſoon prevented this miſchief: For the Truchets being at Nice, went to the Sea with divers Noblemen, and immediatly they were taken Priſoners by the Turks, put into the Gallies, ſore beaten with Ropes, and ſo cruelly handled, that it was commonly reported that they were dead: and long time after, denying their Nobility, were ſent home, having paid 400 Crowns for their ranſom. Some ſay, that the Duke himſelf was almoſt taken. But it is ſure that he fell ſick ſoon after. In the month of April next following, the Lord of Raconis was preſent at a Sermon, in a place near unto Angrogne. The Sermon being ended, he talked with the Miniſters: and having diſcourſed as well of the Duke's ſickneſs, as alſo of his clemency and gentleneſs, he declared to them, that the Perſecution proceeded not of him, and that he meant not that the Commiſſion ſhould have been ſo rigorouſly executed. After that he demanded of them, what way they thought beſt to appeaſe the Duke's wrath: they anſwered, that the People ought not to be moved to ſeek by any means how to pleaſe and appeaſe the Duke, which might diſpleaſe God. But the beſt way they knew, was the ſame wherewith the ancient Servants of God uſed to appeaſe the Pagan Princes and Emperors, in the time of the great perſecutions of the Church; that is to ſay, to give out and preſent unto them in writing the Confeſſion of their Faith, and defence of the Religion which they profeſſed, truſting that, foraſmuch as the fury of divers prophane and Ethnick Emperors and Princes hath been heretofore appeaſed by ſuch means, the Duke being endued with ſuch ſingular Vertues as they ſaid he was, would alſo be pacified by the like means. And for that cauſe the poor People had before ſent a Supplication, with a Confeſſion of their Faith unto the Duke, but they were not certain whether he had received it or no: wherefore they deſired him to preſent the ſame unto the ſaid Duke himſelf. Whereunto he agreed, and promiſed ſo to do. Whereupon they ſent three Supplications, one to the Duke, the ſecond to the Dutcheſs, and the third to the Duke's Council; wherein they briefly declared what their Religion was, and the Points thereof, which they and their Anceſtors had of a long time obſerved, being wholly grounded upon the pure Word of God; and if by the ſame Word it would be proved that they were in error, they ſhould not be obſtinate, but gladly be reformed, and embrace the Truth. After this the Perſecution ſeemed to be ſomewhat aſſwaged for a little while.

The just judgment of God upon the Truchets, ſo cruelly vexing, ſpoiling, and acting of theſe poor Waldoys.

By what means the Chriſtians in times paſt have appeaſed the fury of Pagan Princes.

The Angrognians ſend forth three Supplications.

In the end of June next following, the Lord of Raconis and the Lord of Trinity, came to Angrogne, there to qualify (as they ſaid) the ſore Perſecution, and cauſed the chief Rulers and Miniſters to aſſemble together, propounding divers Points of Religion concerning Doctrine, the calling of Miniſters, the Maſs, and obedience towards Princes and Rulers: and furthermore declared unto them, that their Confeſſion was ſent unto Rome by the Duke, and daily they looked for anſwer. To all theſe Points the Miniſters anſwered. After this they demandeded of the chief Rulers, if that the Duke ſhould cauſe Maſs to be ſung in their Pariſhes, whether they would withſtand the ſame or no? They anſwered ſimply, that they would not. Then they demanded of them, if that the Duke would appoint them Preachers, whether they would receive them? They anſwered, that if they preached the Word of God purely, they would hear them. Thirdly, If that they were content that in the mean time their Miniſters ſhould ceaſe, and if they which ſhould be ſent preached not the Word of God ſincerely, then their Miniſters to preach again. If they would agree to this, they were promiſed that the Perſecution ſhould ceaſe, and the Priſoners ſhould be reſtored again. To this queſtion, after they had conferred with the People, they anſwered, anſwered, that they could by no means ſuffer that their Miniſters ſhould forbear preaching.

The two Lords not contented with this Anſwer, commanded in the Duke's Name, that all the Miniſters which were ſtrangers, ſhould out of hand be baniſhed the Country; ſaying, that the Duke would not ſuffer them to dwell within his Dominion for that they were his Enemies. Demanding alſo whether they would foſter and maintain the Princes Enemies within his own Land againſt his own Decree and expreſs Commandment? To the which anſwer was made by the chief Rulers, That they could by no means baniſh them, unleſs they were afore convicted of ſome Hereſie or other Crime; for their part they had always found them to be Men of pure and ſound Doctrine, and alſo of godly life and Converſation.

The Angrongnians deny to put away their Miniſters.

Thie done, immediately Proclamations were made, and the Perſecution began on every ſide to be more furious than it was before. Amongſt others, the Monks of Pignerol at that time were moſt cruel; for they ſent out a Company of hired Ruffians which daily ſpoiled and ranſackt houſes, and all that they could lay hands of; took Men, Women, and Children, and led them Captives to the Abby, where they were moſt ſpitefully afflicted and tormented. At the ſame time they ſent alſo a Band of the ſaid Ruffians by night to the Miniſters houſe of St. Germain, in the Valley of Perouſe, being led thither by a Traitor that knew the houſe, and had uſed to haunt thither ſecretly; who knocking at the door, the Miniſter knowing his voice, came forth immediately, and perceiving himſelf to be betrayed, fled; but he was ſoon taken and ſore wounded, and yet notwithſtanding they pricked him behind with their Halberds to make him haſten his pace. At that time alſo many they ſlew, many they hurt, and many alſo they brought to the Abby, and there kept them in Priſon, and cruelly handled them. The good Miniſter indured ſore Impriſonment, and after that a moſt terrible kind of death with a wonderful Conſtancy; for they roaſted him by a ſmall fire; and when half his body was burnt, he confeſſed and called upon the Lord Jeſus with a loud voice.

The Monks of Pignerol cruel againſt the Angrongnians.

The Miniſter of St. Germain betrayed and taken.

Barbarons cruelty ſhewed againſt the good Miniſter of St. Germain.

The Inquiſitor Jacomel, with his Monks, and the collateral Corbis amongſt other, ſhewed one Practice of moſt barbarous Cruelty againſt this poor Man; who when he ſhould be burnt, cauſed two poor Women of St. Germain (which they kept in Priſon), to carry Fagots to the fire, and to ſpeak theſe Words unto their Paſtor; Take this thou wicked Heretick, in recompence of thy naughty Doctrine, which thou haſt taught us. To whom the good Miniſter anſwered; Ah good Woman! I have taught you well, but you have learned ill. To be brief, they ſo afflicted and tormented thoſe poor People of St. Germain, and the places thereabout, that after they were ſpoiled of their Goods, and driven from their houſes, they were compelled to flie into the Mountain to ſave their lives. So great was the ſpoil of theſe poor People, that many which before had been Men of much Wealth, and with their Riches had miniſtred great Succour and Comfort to others, were now brought to ſuch Miſery, that they were compelled to crave Succour and Relief of others.

Two Women compelled to carry Fagots to burn their Paſtor.

Now foraſmuch as the ſaid Monks, with their Troops of Ruffians (which were counted to be in number about three hundred) made ſuch ſpoil and havock in all the Country, that no Man could there live in ſafety: It was demanded of the Miniſters, Whether it was lawful to defend themſelves againſt the Inſolence and furious Rage of the ſaid Ruffians? The Miniſters anſwered, That it was lawful, warning them in any caſe, to take heed of Bloodſhed. This Queſtion being once diſſolved, they of the Valley of Luſerne and of Angrongne, ſent certain Men to them of St. Germain to aid them againſt the Supporters of theſe Monks.

Whether it be lawful for the perſecuted people of Chriſt to ſtand to their own defence.

In the Month of June the Harveſt being then in Piedmont, divers of the Waldoys were gone into the Country to reap and to make proviſion for Corn, for very little groweth upon their Mountains: the which were all taken Priſoners at ſundry times and places, not one knowing of another; but yet God ſo wrought, that they all eſcaped out of Priſon, as it were by a Miracle: whereat the Adverſaries were marvellouſly aſtoniſhed. At the ſame time there were certain other alſo which had ſuſtained long Impriſonment, looking for nothing elſe but death; and yet they after a wonderful ſort, by God's merciful Providence, were likewiſe delivered.

Mirabilia Dei.

In the Month of July they of Angrongne being in a morning at harveſt upon the Hill ſide of St. Germain, perceived a Company of Souldiers ſpoiling them of St. Germain; and doubting leſt they ſhould go to Angrongne, made an out-cry. Then the People of Angrongne aſſembled togegether upon the Mountain, and ſome ran to St. Germain over the Hill, and ſome by the Valley. They which went by the Valley met with the Spoilers coming from St. Germain, loaden with Spoil, which they had gotten, and being but fifty, ſet upon the other, amounting to the number of one hundred and twenty Men well appointed, and gave them ſoon the overthrow. The Paſſage over the Bridge being ſtopped, the Enemies were fain to take the River Cluzon, where divers were ſore hurt, many were drowned, and ſome eſcaped very hardly; and ſuch a Slaughter was made of them, that the River was died with the Blood of them which were wounded and ſlain, but none of the Angrongnians were once hurt. If the ſaid River had been as great as it was wont commonly to be, there had not one Man eſcaped alive. The noiſe of the Harquebuſſes was great, and within leſs than one hours ſpace, there was three or four hundred of the Waldoys gathered together upon the River; and at the ſame time they had purpoſed to fetch away their Priſoners which were in the Abby, but they would not do it without the Counſel of their Miniſters, and ſo deferred the matter until the next day. But their Miniſters counſelled them not to enterpriſe any ſuch thing, but to refrain themſelves, and ſo they did. Albeit they doubted not, but if they had gone incontinent after that diſcomfiture unto the Abby, they might have found all open and eaſily have entred; for the Monks were ſo ſore afraid, that they fled ſuddenly to Pignerol, to ſave their Reliques and Images, which they carried thither. The reſt of the Country about were wonderfully afraid, and rang the Bells every where. The greater part of them fled, doubting leſt the poor Waldoys would have revenged the Wrongs and Out-rages done to them.

Victory of the Angrongnians over their Enemies.

The next day following, the Commander of St. Anthony de Foſſan came to Angrongne, accompanied with divers Gentlemen, ſaying, that he was ſent by the Duke: and having aſſembled the chief Rulers and Miniſters of Angrongne, and of the Valley of Luſerne, after he had declared unto them the cauſe of his coming, he read their Supplication directed to the Duke, which contained their Confeſſion, demanding of them, if it were the ſame which they had ſent to the Duke? They anſwered, yea. Then he began to diſpute, being ſent, as he ſaid, to inform them of their Errors, not doubting but they would amend according to their promiſe. Then he entred into a Diſputation of the Maſs, in a great heat, deriving the ſame from the the Hebrew word Maſſa, which ſignified (as he ſuppoſed) Conſecration, and ſhewed that this word Maſſa might be found in ancient Writers. The Miniſters anſwered, that he ill applied the Hebrew word; and further, that they diſputed not of the word Miſſa, but of that which is ſignified by the ſame, the which he ought firſt to prove by the Word of God. Briefly, that he could not prove either by the Word of God, or the ancient Fathers their private Maſs, their Sacrifice expiatory or propitiatory, their Tranſubſtantiation, their Adoration, their Application of the ſame for the quick and the dead, and ſuch other matters which are principal parts of the ſame Maſs. The Commander having here nothing to reply, fell into a marvellous Choller, railing and raging as if he had been ſtark mad, and told them that he was not come to diſpute, but to baniſh their Miniſters, and to place others in their rooms, by the Duke's Commandment, which he could not, unleſs their Miniſters were firſt driven out of the Country.

The Commander of St. Anthony ſent to Angrongne.

Diſputation about the Maſs.

From thence he went to the Abby of Pignerol, where he and Jacomel cauſed a number of the poor Inhabitants of Campillon, and of Fenil, which be of the Valley of Luſerne, to be taken Priſoners, ſpoiling them of their Goods, driving away their Cattel, and forcing them to ſwear and forſwear, and in the end ranſomed them for great Sums of Money. About that time a Gentleman of Campillon agreed with thoſe which were fled, for thirty Crowns to be paid unto him out of hand, that he would warrant them from any further vexation or trouble, ſo that they remained quiet at home. But when he had received the Mony, he cauſed the Commander of Foſſan with his Men by night to come to his houſe, and then ſent for the poor Men, thinking traiterously to have delivered them into the hands of their mortal Enemy, following therein the Decree of the Counsel of Constance, which is, That no promise is to be kept with Hereticks. But God, knowing how to succour his in their necessity, prevented this danger; for one of them had intelligence of the Commanders coming, and so they all fled. Thereupon they wrote to the Lord of Raconis, declaring unto him the proceedings of the Commander, and that he neither would nor could shew or prove any thing by the Word of God, as he had promised, but threatned them great Wrongs and Injuries, and would not suffer their Ministers to reply or say any thing for the defence of their Cause. And therefore they desired him to signifie the same to the Dukes Grace, to the end that he should not be offended, if they persisted still in their Religion, seeing it was not proved unto them by any reason taken out of the Scripture, that they erred.

Nothing proved by the Word of God against the Waldoys.

After this, there were many Commandments and Injunctions given out through all the Country, to banish these poor Waldoys, with the Doctrine of the Gospel, if it were possible, out of the Mountains and Valleys of Piedmont: but the poor people still desired, that according to that which they had so often before protested by Word and Writing, they might be suffered to serve God purely, according to the rule prescribed in his Word: simply obeying their Lord and Prince always, and in all things. Notwithstanding they were still vexed and tormented with all the Cruelty that could be devised, as partly it is already declared; but much more you shall perceive by that which followeth.

In in the end of October next following, the rumor went that an Army was levying to destroy them; and in very deed there were certain Bands levyed, ready to march at an hours warning. Furthermore, those Malefactors which heretofore were fled or banished for any Offence or Crime committed, were called home again, and pardoned of all together, so that they would take them to their Weapons, and go to destroy the Waldoys. The Ministers and chief Rulers of the Valleys of Luserne and Angrongne, thereupon assembled together oftentimes to take advice what in such an extremity were best to do. In the end they determined, that for certain days following there should be kept a general Fast, and the Sunday after, a Communion. Also that they should not defend themselves by force of Arms, but that every one should withdraw himself to the high Mountains, and every one to carry away such Goods as they were able to bear; and if their Enemies pursued them thither, then to take such advice and Counsel as it pleased God to give them. This Article of not defending themselves seemed very strange to the people, being driven to such an extremity, and the Cause being so just. But yet every one began to carry their Goods and Victuals into the Mountains, and for the space of eight days all the Ways were filled with comers and goers to the Mountains, like unto Ants in Summer, which provide for Winter. All this did they in this great Perplexity and Danger, with a wonderful Courage and Chearfulness, praising of God, and singing of Psalms, and every one comforting another. Briefly, they went with such joy and alacrity, that you should not have seen any which grudged to leave their houses, and fair Possessions, but were wholly determined patiently to abide the good pleasure of God, and also to die if he had so appointed.

Deliberation among the Waldoys, how to defend, and how not to defend themselves.

A few days after, certain other Ministers hearing what they of Angrongne and Luserne had concluded, wrote unto them, that this Resolution seemed very strange to some, that they ought not to defend themselves against the Violence of their Enemies, alledging many reasons, that in such extremity and necessity it was lawful for them so to do; especially the quarrel being so just, that is, for the defence of true Religion, and for the preservation of their own lives, and the lives of their Wives and Children, knowing that it was the Pope and his Ministers which were the cause of all these Troubles and cruel Wars, and not the Duke, who was stirred up thereunto only by their Instigations. Wherefore they might well and with good Conscience withstand such furious and outragious Violence. For the Proof hereof they also alledged certain Examples.

Whether Subjects for Religion may stand in their own defence?

During this season the Lord of Angrongne named Charles de Comptes of Luserne, laboured earnestly by all means possible to cause them of Angrongne to condescend to the Duke's pleasure, and sollicited them to send away their Ministers, promising that he would cause a Mass to be sung at Angrongne, and that the people should not be compelled to be present thereat, hoping that by that means the Duke's wrath would be appeased. The chief of Angrongne thereupon were assembled and made this Answer; That if the Duke would permit them to chuse other Ministers, they were content to send away their foreign Ministers and Strangers. But as touching the Mass, his Highness might well cause it to be sung in their Parishes, but they for their part could not with safe Consciences be present at the same, nor yet give their consent unto it.

The Angrongnians refuse to hear Mass.

The two and twentieth of October the said Lord of Angrongne went from Luserne to Mondevis, where he was then Governour for the Duke, and sent for the chief Rulers of Angrongne at several times, declaring unto them the great perils and dangers wherewith they were invironed, the Army being already at hand; yet promising them, if they would submit themselves unto him, he would send immediately to stay the Army. They of Angrongne answered, That they all determined to stand to that which they, two days before in their Assembly, had put in writing. With this Answer he seemed at that present to be content. The next day the rumor was, That they of Angrongne had submitted themselves to the Duke. On the morrow, which was Sunday, you should have seen nothing but weeping and mourning in Angrongne. The Sermon being ended, the Rulers were called before the Ministers and the People, the which affirmed, that they wholly cleaved unto their former writing; and they sent secretly to the Notary for the Copy of that which was passed in the Counsel-house at their last Assembly before the Lord de Comptes, in which was comprised, That Angrongne had wholly submitted her self to the good pleasure of the Duke. The People hearing that, were sore astonished, and protested rather to die than obey the same. And hereupon it was agreed, that at that very instant (albeit it were very late) certain should be sent to the Lord of Angrongne to signifie unto him, that the determination of the Council was falsified, and that it might please him the next morning to come to Angrongne to hear the voices of the People, not only of the Men, but also of the Women and Children. But he himself went not thither, having intelligence of the Uprore, but sent thither the Judge of that place. Then that which had been falsified was duly corrected; the Judg laying all the blame upon the Notary.

The determination and answer of the Angrongnians was falsified.

During this time the Adversaries cried out through all the Country of Piedmont; To the fire with them, to the fire with them. The Thursday after Angrongne, by Proclamations set up in every place, was exposed to the Fire and Sword. On Friday after, being the second of November, the Army approached to the borders of the Valley of Luserne, and certain Horse-men came to a place called St. John, a little beneath Angrongne. Then the people retired into the Mountains. Certain of St. John perceiving that the Horse-men not only spoiled their Goods, but also took their Fellows Prisoners, set upon them. It is not certain what number of their Enemies were there slain; but suddenly they retired to Bubiane, where their Camp then was, and not one of them of St. John was slain or hurt. It hapned at the same time, that two of the aforesaid Horsemen, being sore amazed, galloped before the rest towards the Army, being ready to march towards Angrongne, crying, They come, they come. At whose cry the whole Army was so astonished, that every Man fled his way, and they were all so scattered, that the Captains that day were not able to bring them in order again, and yet no Creature followed them.

open Proclamation against Angrongne.

Senacharib flieth from the face of Israel.

On the Saturday in the Morning the Army mustered in the Meadow-ground of St. John, near to Angrongne. They of Angrongne had sent certain to keep the Passages, and stop the Army that they should not enter, if it were possible. In the mean season the people retired into the Meadow of Toure, and little thought of the coming of the Army so soon, or that they would have made such a sudden Assault; for they were yet carrying of Victuals and other stuff, so that few of them kept the Passages. Now they which kept the Straits, perceiving that their Enemies prepared themselves to fight, fell down upon their knees, and made their Prayers unto God, that it would please him to take pity upon them, and not to look look upon their ſins, but to the Cauſe which they maintained, to turn the hearts of their Enemies, and ſo to work, that there might be no effuſion of Blood: and if it were his Will to take them, with their Wives and Infants out of this World, that he would then mercifully receive them into his Kingdom. In this ſort moſt fervent Prayers were made of all thoſe that kept the Paſſages, with Exhortation that they ſhould all together cry unto God, and crave his ſuccour and aſſiſtance in this great diſtreſs. All this the Lord of Trinity and the Army did well perceive.

Their Prayers thus ended, ſuddenly they perceived their Enemies coming towards them through the Vines to win the top of the Mountain of Angrongne. In the mean time the Prior of St. John and Jacomel were within the Temple of Angrongne, and communed with the Rulers touching an Agreement. Theſe were ſent thither by the Lord of Trinity to keep the People occupied. To be ſhort, the Combat began in divers places, and indured for a long ſpace in the Paſſages of Angrongne. The poor Waldoys being but few in number, and ſome of them having but Slings and Croſs-bows, were ſore preſſed with the multitude of their Enemies. At length they retired to the top of the Mountain, where they defended themſelves until Night.

A Combat between the L. of Trinity and the Waldoys.

When they had found a place where they might withſtand their Enemies ſtill purſuing them, they returned themſelves, and ſlew divers of them, and hurt many. When the Evening came, the Enemies reſted, and were about to encamp themſelves, there to ſup and lodge all night. Which thing when the Angrongnians perceived, they fell to prayer, deſiring God to aſſiſt and ſuccour them, but the Enemies flouted them and laughed them to ſcorn. Then the poor people deviſed to ſend a Drum into a little Valley hard by. And as they were making their Prayers unto God, and the Drum ſounded in the Valley, the Lord of Trinity cauſed his Souldiers, which were about to encamp themſelves, to remove thence; which was a great vantage unto the poor People, which now were ſore wearied with travel, all wet with ſweating, and very thirſty, and in great peril, if God had not given them ſome little breathing-time. Many of the Enemies that day were ſlain, and many hurt, of the which very few eſcaped; inſomuch that they reported that the ſhot was poiſoned, which this poor ſimple people never uſed to do in all theſe Wars. Of the Angrongnians that day there were but three ſlain, and one hurt, which afterwards was well healed again. This Combat gave great courage to the Waldoys, and ſore aſtoniſhed the Adverſaries. The ſame time the Army retiring, burnt many houſes, and made great ſpoil as they went, deſtroying alſo the Wines which were in the Preſſes.

Behold the policy of this poor people.

Gods holy help in time of need.

The ſaid Lord of Trinity with his Army camped in a Village beyond Toure, in the Valley of Luſerne, at the foot of the hill, between Angronge and the other Towns of the Valley of Luſerne, which profeſſed the Goſpel. They of the ſaid Village were always ſore againſt the Waldoys, Haters of true Religion, and were glad of this Out-rage and Violence done againſt the Profeſſors thereof: but they had their juſt Plague, for they were all deſtroyed. After this the ſaid Lord of Trinity cauſed the Fortreſs to be built again, which the Frenchmen had razed, and placed there a Garriſon, and after ſent another to the Fort of Villars, which is of the Valley of Luſerne; and another he ſent to the Fortreſs of Perouſe, and a fourth Garriſon he placed in the Caſtle of St. Martin. They of Angrongne (ſeeing themſelves to be now, as it were, in a Sea of Troubles) after they had recommended themſelves unto God by Prayer, and committed their cauſe unto him, ſent to them of Perouſe, St. Martin, and of Pragela, for aid and ſuccour; which ſent them all the help they were able.

Gods ſecret judgment in helping his, and puniſhing his Enemies.

The next day following there came Letters to Angrongne from the Lord of Trinity: the effect whereof was this; That he was ſorry for that which was done the day before, and that he came not thither to make War againſt them, but only to view if it were a place convenient to build a Fort therein to ſerve the Duke. Furthermore, that his Souldiers ſeeing the People aſſembled, as it were to defie them, upon that occaſion only were ſtirred up to give aſſault, and to ſet upon them. Alſo that he was ſorry that ſuch ſpoil was made of their Goods, and ſuch hurt done by fire. But if they would ſhew themſelves obedient to the Duke, he had good hope that all ſhould be well, and truſted ſome good Agreement ſhould be made. The Angrongnians anſwered, That they were marvelloufly agrieved to be ſo aſſaulted, ſpoiled and tormented by the Subjects of their Leige and natural Prince; And as they had oftentimes before offered themſelves to be more obedient and faithful to their Soveraign Prince the Duke, than any of all his Subjects beſides; ſo yet they ſtill offered the ſame Obedience. Alſo they moſt humbly beſought him, not to think it ſtrange if they, being conſtrained by ſuch extreme neceſſity, defended themſelves. Finally, as touching their Religion, they affirmed, that it was the pure Word of God, even as it was preached by the Prophets and Apoſtles, and the ſame which their Predeceſſors had obſerved for certain hundred years paſt. Moreover, that the cauſe was not concerning the Goods of the World, but the Honour and Glory of God, the Salvation or Deſtruction of the Souls both of them and theirs. And therefore it were much better for them to die all together, than to forſake their Religion. And yet if it might be proved unto them by good Demonſtration out of the Word of God, that they were in error; not by force of Arms, by Blood and Fire, they would then yield themſelves with all obedience; moſt humbly beſeeching him, and all other the Lords of the Country of Piedmont, to be their Interceſſors and Advocates to the Duke in this behalf.

The Angrongnian-anſwer to the Meſſage.

The crafty Meſſage of the L. of Trinity to the Angrongnians.

Upon Munday being the fourth day of November, the Lord of Trinity ſent his Army to Villars and Toilleret. The leſſer Company aſcended towards Villars. The People ſeeing their Enemies approaching, after they had called upon God with fervent Prayer, ſtrongly defended themſelves, and ſlew many: many alſo were hurt, and the reſt fled. The other Company aſcended towards Toilleret. And altho they of that place were but few in number, and that part of the Army the greater, yet making their Prayers unto God, and commending their Cauſe unto him, they defended themſelves likewiſe valiantly.

The Town of Villars aſſaulted.

In the mean ſeaſon, they of Villars being emboldened by their late Victory, came to aſſiſt their Neighbours, and being aſſembled together, they couragiouſly purſued their Enemies, and put them to flight. In this Purſuit it chanced (which here is not to be forgotten) that this poor people, by an an Ambuſh of their Enemies which came another way, were ſuddenly encloſed on every ſide, and like to be deſtroyed; but yet they all eſcaped, and not one of them was ſlain, only three were hurt, which were ſoon cured again. On the Enemies ſide there were ſo many ſlain, that they were laid together by whole Cart-loads. This was the Reward of thoſe which were deſirous to ſhed innocent Blood. The ſame day the Inhabitants of Sauſon near to Roccapiata, aſſembled in great number together, and went to a rich Man's houſe of Roccapiata, and ſpoiled all that he had. Certain of Roccapiata (in number not paſt ſeventeen) underſtanding this, ſet upon them, and ſoon put them to flight, took away their Drum, and forced them to leave their Booty behind them.

God giveth victory to his Servants

The juſt reward upon the Lords Enemies.

After that the Lord of Trinity had received the Letters of the Angrongnians, he ſent unto them his Secretary, named Chriſtopher Gaſtaut, (which ſaid himſelf, that he favoured the Verity of the Goſpel) accompanied with a Gentleman of the ſaid Valley; whoſe charge was to cauſe the chief Rulers to ſend certain to commune with the ſame Lord of Trinity, ſaying, that he had good tidings to declare unto them; and moreover, that he would deliver them a ſafe Conduct to come and go. Whereupon they ſent four unto him, whom he intreated very courteouſly, and rehearſed unto them, how the Duke at his Departure from the Court, told him, that altho the Pope, the Princes and Cities of Italy, yea, his own Council were fully reſolved, that of neceſſity they of the ſaid Religion ſhould be deſtroyed, yet notwithſtanding, God otherwiſe put into his mind, and that he had taken Counſel of God what he ſhould do in this matter; that is, that he would uſe them gently. Furthermore, he declared unto them, that the Dutches bear them good affection, and favoured them very much, and that ſhe had commended their Cauſe unto the Duke, perſwading with him to have regard to that poor People, and that their Religion was ancient and old, with many ſuch other things. Moreover, they had, ſaid he, great Friends in the Duke's Court, not doubting but if they ſhould ſend certain to the Court with a Supplication, they ſhould obtain more than they themſelves would require; and he for his part would imploy himſelf in their Affairs to the uttermoſt of his power: and ſo he promiſed that he would retire himſelf with his Army. This he ſeemed to ſpeak unfeignedly. The People deſiring but to live peaceably in their Religion, and under the Obedience of their lawful Prince, were content to follow his Counſel.

About this ſeaſon they of Angrongne perceived that a part of the Army aſcended the Hill of Tailleret, (which is the half way betweed Angrongne and thoſe of the Valley of Luſerne) and the other part had already gotten away, which led to the Meadow of Toure, by the which they of Angrongne might eaſily have been incloſed. Therefore they ſent certain immediately to keep the Way, who ſoon after encountred with their Enemies and obtained the Victory, purſuing and chaſing them to their Camp, not without great loſs of their Men. The number of their Enemies ſlain, was not known; for their cuſtom was immediately to carry away thoſe which were ſlain. Not one of Angrongne periſhed that day, nor yet was hurt. It was feared that this Combat would have hindred the Agreement; but the Lord of Trinity could well diſſemble the matter, and excuſed that days Journey, putting the fault upon them of Tailleret, whom he charged to have ſlain certain of his Men in the High-way, and amongſt other his Barbar.

A Combat between the Angrongnians and the Perſecutors.

The crafty diſſimulation of the Lord of Trinity.

On Saturday following, being the ninth of November, the ſaid Lord of Trinity ſent again for them of Angrongne, to conſult with them touching the Agreement, uſing the like Communication as before; and added thereunto, that in token of true obedience they ſhould carry their Armour into two of the Houſes of the chief Rulers, not fearing, but it ſhould be ſafe; for it ſhould remain in their own keeping, and if need were, they ſhould receive it again. Alſo, that he upon Sunday (which was the next day) would cauſe a Maſs to be ſung within the Temple of St. Laurance in Angrongne, accompanied with a very few, and thereby the Duke's wrath would be aſſwaged.

The next morning he went into the Temple (whereat they were ſore agrieved, albeit they could not withſtand him) his Army marching afore him: and having cauſed a Maſs to be ſung, he deſired to ſee the Meadow of Toure, ſo much ſpoken of, that thereof he might make a true Report unto the Duke; and thither the Rulers with a great Troop of his own Men went, the reſidue of his Company remained behind; the which ſpoiled certain Houſes, and ſeized the Armour which they had delivered up before; but they found no great ſtore, for the People had taken away the greateſt Part thereof. The ſaid Lord being entred into the Meadow of Toure, the People began to make a Commotion; whereof he having intelligence, returned immediately. All that day he ſhewed himſelf very courteous to all whom he met.

The People in this mean time perceived themſelves to be in great danger, and were ſore moved at the ſight of the Army, the Spoil of the Souldiers, the taking away of their Armour, but eſpecially becauſe the ſaid Lord of Trinity had viewed the Meadow of Toure, foreſeeing his traiterous meaning and purpoſe. A few days after the ſaid Lord of Trinity ſent his Secretary Gaſtaut to Angrongne to talk with them concerning the Agreement, and to make a full Reſolution thereof: which was read in the Aſſembly by the Secretary; the Sum whereof was this: That the People of Angrongne ſubmitted themſelves to render all Honour and Reverence to God according to his holy Word, and all due obedience to the Duke their Soveraign Prince, to whom they ſhould ſend certain Men to demand Pardon of him, concerning their bearing Armour in their extreme neceſſity, and humbly to beſeech him that he would ſuffer them to live peaceably in their Religion, which was according to the Word of God, not compelling them to do any thing againſt their Conſcience; as it appeareth more amply in the Supplication, which after this the Angrongnians made, and cauſed to be read before the Secretary in the open Aſſembly, the which here enſueth.

Behold the double dealing and diſſimulation of the Papiſts to bring their wicked purpoſe to paſs

To the moſt excellent and worthy Prince, the Duke of Savoy, &c. our Soveraign Lord and natural Prince.

The Supplication of the Angrongnians to their Duke.

'MOſt Noble and Renowned Prince, we have not certain of our Men unto your Highneſs, to give teſtimony of our humble, hearty, and unfeigned Obedience unto the ſame, and with all ſubmiſſion deſire Pardon touching the bearing of Armour by certain of our People in their extreme neceſſity, and for all other our Treſpaſſes, for the which your Soveraign Grace might conceive any offence againſt us.

A lawful requeſt of the Angrongnians to live after Gods Word.

'Secondly, To deſire in moſt humble wiſe your ſaid Highneſs, in the Name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that it would pleaſe the ſame, to ſuffer us to live with freedom of Conſcience in our Religion, which alſo is the Religion of our Anceſtors, obſerved for certain hundred years paſt. And we are perſwaded, that it is the pure Goſpel of our Lord Jeſus, the only Verity, the Word of Life and Salvation, which we profeſs. Alſo, that it may pleaſe your moſt gracious Clemency not to take in ill part, if we, fearing to offend and diſpleaſe God, cannot conſent unto certain Traditions and Ordinances of the Church of Rome, and herein to have pity upon our poor Souls, and the Souls of our Children, to the end that your Highneſs be not in any wiſe charged in the juſt Judgment of God for the ſame, where all Men muſt appear to anſwer for their doings.

'On our part, we proteſt that we will ſeek nothing but to be the true Servants of God, to ſerve him according to his holy Word; and alſo to be true and loyal Subjects to your Highneſs, and more obedient than any other, being always ready to give our Goods, our Bodies, our Lives, and the Lives of our Children, for your Noble Grace, as alſo our Religion teacheth us to do: only we deſire that our Souls may be left at liberty to ſerve God according to his holy Word.

'And we your poor humble Subjects ſhall moſt heartily pray our God and Father for the good and long Proſperity of your Highneſs, for the moſt vertuous Lady your Wife, and for the Noble Houſe of Savoy.

To this Supplication they of St. John, of Roccapiata, of St. Bartholomew, and of Perouſe, with thoſe of the Valley of Luſerne, did agree. For it was concluded, that the Agreement made ſhould extend to all the Confederates of the ſame Religion. Whiles they were treating of this Agreement, the Lord of Trinity vexed cruelly them of Tailleret, under this pretence, becauſe they had not preſented themſelves to treat of this Agreement: He tormented them after this ſort; firſt he commanded that all their Armour ſhould be brought before him, and then they on their knees, ſhould ask him pardon, becauſe they came not to treat of the Agreement with the reſt; which notwithſtanding the moſt part of them did. Then he commanded them to attend upon him, to inrol all the Names of thoſe which would be of the foreſaid Agreement.

The wretched dealing of the L. of Trinity againſt them of Tailleret.

Whereupon the next morning the chief of the Houſholders went to the Village named Bouvets, the place appointed thereunto, and when they had heard a Sermon, and called upon God, they began to write their Names. The inrolling of their Names not being fully ended, word was brought, that the Souldiers had gotten the top of the Mountain, and had taken all the Paſſages; whereat they of Tailleret were ſore amazed, and ran with all ſpeed to defend their Wives and Children. Some they ſaved, the moſt part with their Goods, were in their Enemies hands already. At this time with ſacking, ſpoiling and burning, they did much miſchief.

After this the Lord of Trinity ſent word to them which were fled, that, if they would return, he would receive them to mercy. The poor people for the moſt part, truſting on his promiſe, returned to Bouvets, and yet the next morning the Souldiers came thither to apprehend them and their Miniſters, and beſet the place on every ſide. Such as were ſwift of foot, and could ſhift beſt, eſcaped, but very hardly: The reſt were all hurt or taken, and yet they all eſcaped by a marvellous means: for it happened that there was an old Man which could not run faſt, to whom one of the Souldiers came with a naked Sword in his hand to have ſlain him. The old Man ſeeing the imminent danger, caught caught the Souldier by the Legs, overthrew him, and drew him by the heels down the hill.

The Souldier cried out, Help, help, this Villain will kill me. His Fellows hearing him cry, made haſte to reſcue him; but in the mean time the old Man eſcaped. The reſt ſeeing what the old Man had done, took heart of Grace, and albeit their Armour and Weapons were taken from them, yet with Stones and Slings they ſo beat and diſcomfited their Enemies, that for that preſent time they carried no Priſoners away.

The day following the Souldiers returning to the ſaid Tailleret, robbed, ſpoiled, and carried away all that they could finde, and ſo continued three days together; which was very eaſie for them to do, becauſe the poor Men, fearing leſt they ſhould be charged with violating the Agreement, made no reſiſtance, but retired towards Villars.

The fourth day the ſaid Lord of Trinity, to torment the poor Taillerets yet more cruelly, ſent his Army again before day to the Mountain, and into the ſame place, and becauſe the People of the ſaid Village were retired towards Villars, and ſcattered about the Borders thereof in the high Mountains, the Souldiers not yet ſatisfied with ſpoiling and ſacking the reſt that they found in the ſaid Tailleret, ranging about the Confines thereof, ravened and made havock on every ſide of whatſoever they could lay hands on, taking Priſoners both Men and Women, which were loaden with carriage.

The Village of Tailleret ſacked and ſpoiled.

The cruelty of Papiſts.

The poor Priſoners were cruelly handled. Amongſt other there was one, whoſe Ear a Souldier of Mondevis, in a raging fury, bit clean off, with theſe words, I will carry, ſaid he, the fleſh of theſe wicked Hereticks with me into my Country. They of Villars alſo complained of the great Cruelty that was ſhewed unto them, during the time of the Agreement.

The which when the Lord of Trinity underſtood, to make a ſhew that he was offended therewith, he came to his Souldiers (which were ſo weary that they could ſcantly go, not with fighting, but becauſe they were ſo heavily loaden with ſpoil, that they were not able to carry it) and pretending to be in great choler, ſome he beat, and ſome things alſo of a ſmall value he cauſed to be reſtored, but all the reſt was kept back and carried away. The ſame day two Women, the Mother and the Daughter, were found in a Cave in the Mountain, wounded to death by the Souldiers, and died immediately after. So likewiſe a blind Man, an hundred years of age, which was fled into a Cave with his Son's Daughter being eighteen years old, which fed him, was ſlain by the Enemies, and as they would have forced the Maiden, ſhe eſcaped from them, and fell from the top of the Mountain, and died.

Two Women the Mother and the Daughter, Martyrs. The Grandfather and his Niece died Martyrs.

At that time alſo a great Company of Women of Taillerets and Villars were taken as they fled, with their Goods, and brought to the Camp, and ſent away empty. There was at the ſame time a certain Souldier which promiſed the Lord of Trinity to find out the Miniſter of Taillerets, and to deliver him into his own hands. And to bring his purpoſe to paſs, he never ceaſed until he had found him, and after that he purſued him a long time. But as he was purſuing and chaſing him, certain at unawars coming out of the Mountain, reſcued the poor Miniſter, and killed the Souldier with ſtones.

Quicke Perſecutor killed with ſtones.

In this eſpecially is to be noted, that during theſe troubles divers of the Papiſts had ſent their Daughters into the Mountains to the Waldoys to be kept, fearing leſt they ſhould have been raviſhed by the Souldiers, being wholly given over as to all Cruelty and Rapine, ſo to all Villany and Abomination, by whom they were before threatned to be ſo abuſed.

All this being done, the ſaid Lord of Trinity cauſed the head Officers and chiefeſt of the People to aſſemble together, and declared unto them, that the maintaining of the Army was a great charge to the Duke, and that it was meet that they ſhould bear the one half of the Charges. For this cauſe he demanded of them twenty thouſand Crowns. But by the means of the Secretary Gaſtaut, who was promiſed a hundred Crowns for his Wine (that is to ſay, for a Bribe) four thouſand of thoſe twenty were abated, ſo that they granted unto him ſixteen thouſand, of the which Sum the Duke releaſed the one half. Then the Lord of Trinity preſſed this poor People to deliver the eight thouſand out of hand, to pay the Souldiers their Wages (as he ſaid) and ſo withdrew his Army. The year before Corn was exceeding dear, for a Sack was commonly ſold for ſix Crowns, yea, and ſome for eight Crowns, and alſo they had very little Corn growing upon their Mountains: wherefore they were now very bare of Money. But they being in this perplexity, and deſiring nothing more than to live in peace and quietneſs, went about to ſell their Cattel to pay this Money. But the Lord of Trinity had given out a Commandment, that none ſhould buy any Cattel of the Waldoys without his Licence. Then Licence was given out to certain to buy great ſtore of Cattel, and that for a ſmall price: and the common bruit was, that he had part of the Gain. When the Money was paid, yet the Army notwithſtanding retired not.

The Papiſts falſe of promiſe.

The poor Waldoys preſſed at ſixteen thouſand Crowns.

After this the Lord of Trinity commanded the Waldoys to ſurrender up all their Armour, to furniſh the Duke's Forts, otherwiſe he threatned to ſend his Souldiers among them, and indeed he conſtrained many ſo to do. Then he demanded moreover the eight thouſand Crowns, which the Duke had remitted, and conſtrained them to promiſe the payment thereof. After that, he commanded that the Miniſters ſhould be ſent away, until the matter were determined before the Duke, otherwiſe he would ſend his Souldiers to diſlodge them out of hand: whereupon, with one common aſſent and accord, they determined that their Miniſters ſhould withdraw themſelves for a ſpace, until the Army were retired; which was not done without marvellous Sighs, and Lamentation and Tears. At that ſeaſon there fell ſuch abundance of Snow, that the like had not been ſeen of a long time before: ſo that the People were conſtrained to make a Way with great travel and pain, through the top of the Mountain of St. Martin, for their Miniſters to paſs. Now thought the Lord of Trinity ſo to have incloſed them, he keeping the plain, and the Mountains being covered ſo thick with Snow, that by no means they ſhould have eſcaped his hands. But the People cauſed them to paſs the top of the Mountain, and at their Departure there flocked out of every quarter great multitudes to the Village of Boby, and came together in a ſecret place there, called le Puis, not without great Grief and Sorrow; for they found them altogether in tears and mourning, that their Miniſters ſhould be ſo taken from them, and they now left as Lambs amongſt Wolves.

The care of the Waldoys for their Miniſters.

The Army was advertiſed that the Miniſters were aſſembled together, and incontinent a great Troop of Harquebuſſes were at hand, which fought them even to the very top of the Mountain, inſomuch that if they had remained there but one hour longer, they had been all taken. From that time for certain days after they did nothing but range about in all places, ſeeking for the Miniſters, and there was no Houſe, Chamber, Cave, nor ſecret Corner into which they did not enter, under pretence to ſeek for the Miniſters. There was neither Cheſt, nor any thing elſe ſo ſtrong, but they brake it open, ſaying, that the Miniſters were hidden therein, and by that means they took, ſpoiled, and carried away whatſoever they would.

Gods Providence for his Miniſters.

The Lord of Trinity promiſed oftentimes, that altho it were forbidden to all the Miniſters to preach, yet the Miniſter of Angrongne ſhould be excepted: and furthermore, ſent the ſaid Miniſter word, that if he would demand any thing of the Duke, it ſhould be granted him. Whereupon the ſaid Miniſter made this Requeſt, That the poor People might live peaceably in their Religion. A while after, he ſent for the ſame Miniſter to confer with him privately upon certain Points of Religion. The Miniſter went unto him, having thereto the conſent of the People. The Lord of Trinity propounded unto him three Points: The firſt concerning the Supremacy of the Pope; the other concerning Tranſubſtantiation. Of the which two Points the Miniſter then immediately declared his Opinion, and he ſeemed to agree thereunto, and required him to put the ſame in Writing. The laſt (which was his whole drift) was to perſwade the Miniſter to go to the Duke's Court, and there he to defend the Cauſe of the People, alledging certain Reaſons to perſwade him ſo to do. Whereunto the Miniſter anſwered, that he was bound to God and his Church, and if it ſeemed convenient to the Miniſters and People that he ſhould go, he would be content to do the ſame, and thereof he promiſed to ſend him anſwer immediately, with the which anſwer he ſeemed to be contented.

Mark here the fair pretence, and traiterous meaning of the L. of Trinity, which by and by after ſeeketh the death of this good Miniſter.

Shortly after, the foreſaid Lord, and tarrying for an anſwer, ſent his Army to the Temple of St. Lawrence in Angrogne, pretending to ſing a Maſs there, and ſuddenly the Souldiers beſieged the Miniſter's houſe. The Miniſter being warned thereof, aſſayed to eſcape. The Souldiers attempted nothing by force, but uſed gentle perſwaſions to the contrary, for there were not yet many of them. But the Miniſter puſhed on further, and the Souldiers followed him half a mile, but fearing the People, durſt go no further. The Miniſter withdrew himſelf into the Rocks upon the Mountain, accompanied with five other. The Army was by and by at his Heels, and fought a good while in the Houſes and Cottages on every ſide, cruelly handling the People whom they took, to make them confeſs where their Miniſter was, ſpoiling their Houſes, taking ſome Priſoners, and beating other ſome: but yet they could not learn of them where their Miniſter was. At the length they eſpied him among the Rocks, where they thought to have encloſed him, and ſo they purſued him in the Rocks, all covered with Snow, until it was night, and could not take him. Then they returned and ſpoiled his Houſe, and diligently ſearched out all his Books and Writings, and carried them to the Lord of Trinity in a Sack, who cauſed them all to be burnt in his preſence; ſuppoſing (as it well appeared) that the Letters which he had ſent to Angrogne, touching the Agreement, ſhould be with the reſt burnt: for he did not the like in the other Miniſters Houſes. That day they ſpoiled forty Houſes in Angrogne, broke their Mills, and carried away all the Corn and Meal that they found.

The Miniſter of Angrogne purſued of the Souldiers.

The Miniſters houſe ſpoiled.

40 houſes in Angrogne ſpoiled.

About midnight the Souldiers returned with Torch-light to the Miniſter's Houſe to ſeek him, and ſearched every Corner. The next morning Commandment was given to the Rulers of Angrogne, that within twenty four hours they ſhould deliver their Miniſter, or elſe Angrogne ſhould be put to the Fire and Sword. The Rulers anſwered, that they could not ſo do, for they knew not where he was, and the Souldiers had chaſed him over the Mountain. After certain days, when the Souldiers had burned Houſes, ſpoiled the People, broken their Mills, and done what miſchief they could, the Army retired. Notwithſtanding the Lord of Trinity left Garriſons in the forenamed Fortreſſes, but all at the coſts and charges of the Waldoys: the which Garriſons, not contented with their Wages, ſpoiled continually. Upon a night five Souldiers went with Torches to a rich Man's Houſe of Angrogne, and ſpoiled the ſame. The good Man of the Houſe hardly eſcaped with life by the top of the Houſe, for there were twelve Pellets ſhot off at him. Whereof one touched his Face, and ſtrook his Hat from his Head, without any further hurt.

God's holy protection in ſaving his Servants.

The Rulers of Angrogne, which were gone to the Fortreſs to carry thither Victuals and Mony, were by the Souldiers retained, and in deſpight of them and the People cauſed a Maſs to be ſung before them, and forced them to be preſent at it: and becauſe they would not kneel down to it, they were beaten almoſt to death. The one of them was ſent again for more mony; the other with great peril of his life leap'd over the Walls, and being purſued to Angrogne, eſcaped.

Two Rulers of Angrogne beaten almoſt to death for not kneeling to the Maſs.

Certain days after a certain company of Souldiers came unto the midſt of Angrogne, as tho they would have paſſed through, and called for Meat and Drink. The poor Men brought that they had unto them in a cloſe Court. When they had eaten and drunken, they cauſed the Women to avoid, and then bound fourteen of thoſe which had brought them Victuals, by two and two together, and led them away. Their Wives and Children perceiving this, ſo fiercely purſued them with ſtones, that they were fain to let go ten of their Priſoners for haſte, and had much ado to ſave themſelves. The other four they led away to the Fortreſs; of the which two were ranſomed: the other two were hanged up by the Feet and the Hands; and having tormented them almoſt to death, they releaſed them for a great ſum of mony. The one of the which died the next night; the other lay ſick without hope of life a long time after, and his fleſh fell from his hands and his feet, and thereof he became lame, and after that his fingers fell off alſo.

Cruelty ſhewed for kindneſs.

Note how God did bleſs his Servants ſtanding in their own defence.

Two Martyrs of Angrogne.

In like manner did the other Garriſons entreat the Villages adjoining unto them.

The Garriſon of Toure and of Villars, being aſſembled together in a night, went to Tailleret, to the place called Bouvets, and breaking in at the windows and tops of the houſes, breaking open the doors, ſacking and ſpoiling all that they could lay hands of, took alſo 14 Priſoners, and bound them two and two together by the Arms, and ſo led them to the Fortreſs of Toure. But two which were eſcaped, whilſt the Souldiers were taking others, ſet upon them which led the Priſoners, and ſo valiantly aſſaulted and beat them with ſtones, that they forced them to let go 12 of the Priſoners, the which tumbling and rolling themſelves down the Mountain, having their hands bound behind their backs, and faſtned two and two together by the arms, were contented rather ſo to die, than to be carried to the Fortreſs; and yet in the end they eſcaped. The other two which were led to the Fortreſs, were cruelly tormented, and in the end, the one of them the Captain ſtrangled with his own hands, who was very young, and but a Child: The other which was about threeſcore years of age, whoſe name was Odul Gemet, ſuffered a ſtrange and cruel death: for when they had bound him, they took a kind of Beaſts which live in Horſe-dung, called in French Eſcarbotz, and put them unto his Navel, covering them with a diſh, the which within ſhort ſpace pierced into his Belly, and killed him. Theſe and the like, more than barbarous cruelties, have been revealed by the Souldiers themſelves.

Note again how God bleſſeth his people, ſtanding to their defence againſt the bloody Papiſts.

Two Martyrs.

A barbarous kind of torment uſed againſt a Martyr of the Lord called Odul Gemet, by the cruel Papiſts.

The poor Waldoys were yet in great Captivity and diſtreſs, but eſpecially becauſe they had not the preaching of God's Word amongſt them as they were wont to have; and therefore taking to them a good courage, they determined to begin preaching again, albeit ſecretly, for two principal cauſes: The one for fear of moving the Duke, and hindering the voyage of their Meſſengers, having yet ſome hope of good ſucceſs. The other, that no occaſion might be given to the Souldiers of further trouble and courage, for that was it which they eſpecially deſired. Alſo they of Angrogne were fully determined, aſſoon as their Meſſengers were returned from the Duke, to preach openly, what News ſoever they brought, were they good or evil; and furthermore, not to be Contributaries to the finding of the Garriſon, neither yet to ſuffer the ſame to enter into Angrogne.

Be wiſe like Serpents.

The Meſſengers of the Angronnians cruelly entreated.

The Meſſengers which were ſent to the Duke, being at Verſale, were there detained ſix weeks, and all that while were cruelly handled by the Popiſh Doctors, and were conſtrained by force and violence to promiſe to return to the Maſs. Furthermore, they would have conſtrained them to promiſe the ſame in the behalf of the reſt, but they would not. After they were preſented to the Duke, the Secretary Gaſtaut, took the Supplication of the Waldoys out of the Meſſenger's hands, and delivered another. After they had preſented themſelves to the Duke, and asked pardon for bearing of Armour; they were conſtrained alſo to crave pardon of the Pope's Legat; which at the beginning they would in no caſe do. Now when theſe Meſſengers were returned, bringing theſe woful News, and the People underſtood that there was a new Commandment given out, that they ſhould return to the Maſs: alſo that the Popiſh Preachers were appointed, and ready to come unto them, and they commanded to go to fetch them and entertain them accordingly; there was wonderful lamentation, weeping, and mourning, for this great calamity.

A new commandment to the Angrognians to go to Maſs.

Hereupon, they of the Valley of Luſerne and of Poy, being aſſembled together, by one aſſent ſent two Maſters, with certain other of the People, to the Church of Pragela (which be in the Country of Dolphine) to ſignify unto them the pitious eſtate of the poor Churches of the Vallies of Piedmont, to have their counſel and advice how to prevent the great dangers at hand if it were poſſible. For this cauſe they fell all to prayer, and after they had long called upon God deſiring his Grace, and the ſpirit of diſcretion and counſel, well to conſider of thoſe weighty and urgent Affairs wherewith they were oppreſſed; in the end it was concluded, that all the People dwelling in the ſaid Valleys and Mountains of Piedmont, and thoſe of Dolphine ſhould join in a league together. Whereupon they all promiſed by God's Grace and Aſſiſtance, to maintain the pure preaching of the Goſpel, and adminiſtration of the holy Sacraments; the one to aid and aſſiſt the other, and to render all obedience to their Superiors, ſo far as they were commanded by the Word of God. Moreover, that it ſhould be lawful for God's aſſiſtance in time of need.

(1.Hen.8.

for none of the ſaid Vallies to promiſe or conclude any thing touching the eſtate of Religion, without the conſent of the reſt of the Vallies. And for more ſure confirmation of the ſaid League, certain of the Miniſters and Elders of the Churches of Dolphine were ſent to the Valley of Luſerne, to underſtand if they would give their conſent hereunto, and ratify the ſame.

The People of Piedmont brought into great diſtreſs.

Theſe Meſſengers, the Miniſters and others of Dolphine, being arrived in the Evening at the Village of Boby, and the People being there aſſembled, word was brought that the next day every Houſholder ſhould appear in the Council-Houſe, to know whether they would return to the Maſs or no: and that they which would receive the Maſs, ſhould quietly enjoy their Houſes; and they which would not, ſhould be delivered to the Juſtices, and condemned to be burned, or ſent to the Gallies. Wherefore the People was brought to this extremity, either to die, or flee, or elſe to renounce God. To flee ſeemed to them beſt, if the great Snow had not let them; wherefore ſeeing themſelves in ſuch diſtreſs, they moſt gladly conſented to the League. After this they exhorted one another, ſaying: Foraſmuch as we ſhall be all called for to morrow, to renounce and forſake our God, and revolt again to Idolatry, let us now make ſolemn proteſtation, that we will utterly forſake the falſe Religion of the Pope, and that we will live and die in the maintenance and confeſſion of God's holy Word. Let us all go to morrow into the Temple, to hear the Word of God, and after let us caſt down to the ground all the Idols and Altars. To this every Man agreed, ſaying, Let us ſo do, yea, and that very ſame hour in the which they have appointed us to be at the Council-houſe.

Images and Altars broken down in the Church of Boby.

The next day after they aſſembled themſelves in the Church of Boby, and as ſoon as they came into the Temple, without any further delay, they beat down the Images, and caſt down the Altars. After the Sermon, they went to Villars to do the like there. By the way they encountred with a Band of Souldiers, which were going to ſpoil a Village named Le Val Guichard, and to take the poor Inhabitants Priſoners. The Souldiers, ſeeing them ſo ill appointed, mocked them, and diſcharged their Hand-guns upon them, thinking at the firſt brunt to have put them to flight. But they valiantly defended themſelves, and with ſtones chaſed them even to the Fortreſs. When they came to Villars, they beat down their Images and Altars, and afterwards beſieged the Fortreſs, and demanded the Priſoners which were there detained.

Images and Altars caſt down in the Church of Villars.

The ſame day the Judg of Luſerne, called Podeſta, went to the Council-houſe, to enroll the Names of thoſe which would return to the Maſs; but ſeeing what was done, he was ſore afraid, and deſired the People to ſuffer him to return quietly; which they willingly granted unto him. Divers Gentlemen alſo of the Valley came thither with the Judg, to make their poor Tenants to forſake God; but ſeeing the Tumult, they were faſh to flee into the Caſtle, where they and the Garriſon were beſieged ten days together, not without great danger of their Lives. The ſecond day of the Siege, the Captain of Toure went with a Company of Souldiers, thinking to raiſe the Siege; but they were by thoſe that kept the Paſſages either ſlain or diſcomfited. As much was done the third day. The fourth day he returned with three Bands, and with the Garriſon of Toure, which cauſed a furious Combat, wherein many of the Enemies were ſlain, and a great number hurt, and yet of thoſe that beſieged the Fort there was not one Man hurt.

God giveth victory to his Servants.

Another Combat between the Waldoys and their Enemies.

In the time of this Siege they attempted divers means to take the ſaid Fortreſs, but without Ordnance it was impoſſible ſo to do; wherefore they were now paſt all hope of winning it. Moreover, the Lord of Trinity, returning with his Army, was come to the Valley of Luſerne, and the next day after might eaſily have raiſed the Siege. Wherefore when the Garriſon (not knowing that the Lord of Trinity was ſo near) deſired that they might depart with Bag and Baggage, they granted their requeſt. In this Siege half of the Souldiers were ſlain, and many were hurt, as well with Harquebuſſes as with Stones. During this Siege, the Souldiers for lack of water were conſtrained to make their Bread with Wine, which tormented their Stomachs, and cauſed great Diſeaſes. Here is not to be forgotten, that the Souldiers, which a while before did ſo cruelly perſecute the poor Miniſters, ſeeking by all means poſſible to deſtroy them, were now fain to pray them to ſave their Lives, and to promiſe them that they ſhould have no hurt, and alſo to ſafe-conduct them into a ſure place; neither would they depart until they had promiſed them ſo to do. Which the Miniſters did promiſe, and alſo perform very willingly. Then the Souldiers ſeeing themſelves much beholden to the Miniſters ſo gently dealing with them, gave them great thanks, and promiſed them in recompence thereof all the pleaſure that they could ſhew them. The ſame night the Fortreſs was razed.

The People of Piedmont brought into great diſtreſs.

The ſecond day of February the Lord of Trinity camped at Luſerne, and placed a Garriſon in the Priory of St. John, a Village of the Waldois between Luſerne and Angrongne. The next day in the morning the ſaid Lord of Trinity ſent word unto them of Angrongne, that if they would not take part with the reſt, they ſhould be gently handled. All the week before they were ſollicited by him to conſent to the ſame, but they would give no anſwer. The ſame day they of Angrongne, and the reſt of the Vallies, fully agreed and determined to defend their Religion by force, and that the one ſhould aid the other, and no agreement to be made by any one without the conſent of the reſt. About noon the Lord of Trinity marched with his Army by St. John, to enter into the Borders of Angrogne by a place called La Sonnillette, where they had fought before. The People had made certain Bulwarks of Earth and Stone, not paſt three foot high, where they defended themſelves valiantly againſt their Enemies, which aſſailed them divers ways. When the Enemies were ſo weary that they could fight no longer, they put freſh Souldiers into their places; ſo that the Combat endured until night, and all that day the Army could not enter into the Borders of Angrongne. Many of the Enemies were ſlain, and a great number hurt; and but two of Angrongne ſlain, of whom the one was ſlain by his own folly, becauſe he was too greedy upon the ſpoil. The Army, being now well beaten and tired, reſted a while, to make themſelves ſtronger for a further miſchief.

Note how the Miniſters of the Goſpel promiſe to their Enemies and perform, doing good for evil.

The Fortreſs gotten by the Angrongnians.

God compelleth his Servants to defend their Religion by force.

Another Combat between the Lord of Trinity and the Angrongnians.

God giveth victory again to his People.

The Friday following, which was the ſeventh of February, at the break of the day, the Army marched towards Angrongne by five ſeveral places. The People of Angrongne were not yet aſſembled, and none there were to reſiſt, but only a few which kept the Watch; the which ſeeing their Enemies coming upon them in ſo many places, and perceiving that they went about to encloſe them, after they had valiantly fought for a ſpace, they recoiled by little and little to a high place called La Caſſe, where the Combat was renewed with a greater fierceneſs than before. But the Lord of Trinity ſeeing the loſs of his Men, and above all, that one of great credit and authority in the Duke's Court, was wounded to death, blew a retreat, and deſcended to Angrongne, (the People being fled to the Meadow of Toure) and there ſpoiled and burnt all the Wines, Victuals, and the reſt of the Goods that he could find; ſo that in a ſhort ſpace he had burned about a thouſand Houſes of Angrongne.

Another Fight between the Lord of Trinity and the Angrongnians.

A notable Miracle of God in keeping the Temples of the Goſpel from burning.

And here is not to be forgotten, that they oftentimes ſet fire upon the two Temples of Angrongne, where the Word of God was preached, but they could never burn them. So did they alſo to the Miniſter's Houſe, which notwithſtanding remained whole, the Houſes round about being all conſumed with fire. This day none of Angrongne was ſlain or hurt, ſaving only one that was hurt in his thigh.

Note again the ſecret Work of God.

There were in all Angrongne but two that were Enemies to the Word of God, which that ſame day were ſlain by the Souldiers; not in the Combat, but for their riches which they had about them, as they were running away. The one of them was a very covetous Wretch, and had great ſtore of Gold and Silver, and would ſpend nothing, either to help himſelf, or ſuccour others, no not his poor Parents. All this was ſpoiled by the Souldiers, with a hundred or two hundred Crowns beſides, which he had about him. Beſides theſe two there was not one of Angrongne ſlain that day. All the reſt of the People retired to the Meadow of Toure, the ſcituation whereof we will here declare, for the better underſtanding of that which followeth.

Unkindneſs to Parents rightly rewarded.

The Meadow of Tour deſcribed.

Toure is a little Valley upon the Borders of Angrongne, invironed about with Mountains, two miles in length, but very narrow. On both ſides and in the midſt thereof, there be about two hundred ſmall Houſes and Cottages; alſo Meadows, Paſtures for Cattel, Ground for Tillage, Trees, and goodly Fountains. On the South-ſide and the North the Mountains are ſo high, that no Man can that way approach unto the ſaid Valley. On the other coaſts a Man may enter by seven or eight ways. This place is not past two miles from Angrongne; the way thither is very narrow, and ill to pass by because of the Hills which be on both sides. There is also a River hard by, but very small, but the banks thereof be very high in many places. The People had carried thither very few Victuals, partly because the way was so ill, and also through the sudden return of the Army.

The juſt hand of God upon his Enemies.

The Enemies again driven back.

In the mean time the Lord of Trinity, after he had now twice assaulted Angrongne, sent certain to burn Rosa, and to discover the ways which led to the Valley of Luserne; but the Souldiers were driven back four days together by those which kept the Passages. Whereupon he sent his whole Army, whom they valiantly withstood from the morning till night. Then they of Luserne sent new Aid. During this Combat, an Ambushment of Souldiers descended from the top of the mountain, by a place so hard to pass by, that no Man would have suspected it. The poor People, seeing themselves so environed of their Enemies, saved themselves, some running through the midst of their Enemies, and other some into the Rocks.

The poor Christians run through the Pikes.

The Enemies being entred into Rosa, consumed all with Fire and Sword. The residue of the People fled by the secret way leading to the Valley of Luserne, and wandred all that night upon the Mountains full of Snow, loaden with their stuff, carrying their little Infants in their arms, and leading the other by the hands, with great pain and travel. When they of the Valley saw them, they ran unto them, praising God for their deliverance, for they thought they had been all slain. Albeit this poor People were here in such great extremity, yet they were joyful, and comforted themselves, without any lamentation or mourning, except the little poor Infants which cried out for cold.

The Angrognians with their young Infants flee into the Mountains.

A few days after the Lord of Trinity entred into the Valley of Luserne by three several ways, that is to say, by Rosa, by the Plains, and by the sides of Tailleret. They which kept the Passages, at the first resisted their Enemies valiantly, but perceiving that they were assailed on every side, they retired to Villars, and there defended themselves awhile. But because they saw that their Enemies had already passed the Plain, and gotten above Villars towards Boby, they gave over, and left Villars, and fled into the Mountains. The Souldiers being entred, burned Houses, and slew all that they could find. The poor People which were fled into the Mountains, seeing the Village on fire, praised God, and gave him thanks, that had made them worthy to suffer for his Name, and for his Cause; and also they were glad to see the Village on fire, lest that their Enemies should encamp there themselves. Then the Souldiers in great rage mounted the Hills on every side, pursuing the poor People in great fury; but a few of them, after they had ardently called upon God, took courage, and beat back their Enemies to Villars. This done, the Army retired.

The Waldoys again assaulted by the Lord of Trinity.

Few days after the Meadow of Toure was assaulted by three several ways on the East side. The Combat endured a long season, where divers of the Enemies were hurt, and many slain. But none of this poor People were slain that day, only two were hurt, which were soon healed again. But to declare the Conflicts, Assaults, Skirmishes, and Alarms, which were at Angrongne and other places thereabouts, it were too long; for brevities sake it shall be sufficient to touch the most principal, and those which are most worthy of memory.

On Saturday, which was the 14*th* day of February, the People which were in the uppermost part of the Meadow of Toure, perceived that a Company of Souldiers were ascended up the Hill to Angrongne, and burning the rest of the Houses there: they doubted that it was a policy of their Enemies to draw them thither, and in the mean time to set on them behind, and so to win the Meadow of Toure from them. Therefore they sent only six Harquebusses against those Souldiers; the which having the higher ground, and not espied of their Enemies, discharged all their Guns together. Whereupon incontinent the Souldiers fled, albeit no Man pursued them; whether they fled of policy, or for fear, it was not known.

The wicked fleeth when no Man pursueth him.

Shortly after they of the Ward of the Meadow of Toure, which were in the Watch on the top of the Mountain, (because every morning there was a Sermon made, whereunto the People resorted, and they might see afar off round about them) espied a Troop of Souldiers marching on that side of the Hill which is between the East and the North, and soon after that discovered another Company, which marched on the North side towards the said Troop. The first were ascended an hour before the other, and fought on the top of the Mountain called Melese, but they were soon discomfited: and because they could not run fast by means of the deep Snow, and difficulty of the ways, in fleeing they fell often down upon the ground. Whilst they that pursued them were earnest in the chase, and had taken from them their Drum, behold, there came certain unto them, crying out that the other Troop was entred into the Meadow of Toure, by means whereof they gave over the chase, or else not one of their Enemies had escaped, as they which were there reported for a truth. Not one of Angrongne was slain or hurt.

K. Hen. 8.

The Persecutors pursued.

The other Troop which came by the North side, took a high Hill in the top of the Mountain, the which seemed to be almost inaccessible, by reason of the Snow and Ice which was there. The chiefest of this Company were Lodowick of Monteil, (which had been before Master of the Camp in the King's Wars) and Charles Truchet. When they were come to the top of the Hill, they caused seven Souldiers to go down the Hill, and to view the way, and to see whether the Troop might descend that way or no. These seven went down almost to the Houses. They sent also other to occupy the rest of the high places which were near to the foot of the Hill and the Rocks. In the mean time the Ministers, and the People which were in the midst of the Valley of the Meadow, saw all this, and were much discouraged therewith; wherefore they fell to prayer, and called upon God ardently, not without great sighs, lamentation and tears even until night.

God's People fight prayer.

The seven Spies which came down to discover the ways, cried unto their Captain Truchet, Come down, come down, Seignior Charles, this day Angrongne shall be taken. The other cried to them again, Ascend, ascend, and return, or else you shall be slain every one of you. Immediatly issued out five against these Spies, and took certain, and chased the rest. The first of the five which set upon them, cast two of them down upon the ground with a Fork of Fire. Soon after eight of Angrongne issued out against the whole Troop, which was wonderful to see them go with such courage and boldness, to assail such a multitude, and it seemed that they should have been all destroyed and hewn in pieces. The first of the eight went a good way before the other, to discover the Enemies, and carried a great Staff, which they call a Rancon, as is somewhat bigger than an Halbert: the other followed by two and two together, with Harquebusses. These eight went from Rock to Rock, from Hill to Hill, about the Mountain, and chased their Enemies valiantly. Then came twelve other, the which joyning with the rest, fought with a wonderful courage, and made great slaughter of their Enemies. Soon after there came from the Valley of Luserne an hundred Harquebusses, with one of their Ministers, according to their manner, which were wont to send out a Minister withal, as well for prayer and exhortation, as to keep the People in order, that they exceed not measure, as it came to pass that day.

The courage of God's People against their Enemies.

At the length they saw them also coming which returned from the discomfiture of the former Troop, making a great noise, and having a Drum sounding afore them, which they had taken from their Enemies; which joined with them of the Valley of Luserne, and having made their earnest prayer unto God, immediatly they came to succour the other that now were encountring valiantly with their Enemies. Then the Enemies seeing such a Company marching against them, with such courage and boldness, after the other had once called upon God, their Hearts were so taken from them, that suddenly they fled, and as soon as the other began to pray, they began also to flee: But because they could not well save themselves by running away, they turned back twice, and fought, and some in the mean time fled.

A Conflict between the Angrognians and their Enemies.

He that carried the Rancon, and discovered the Enemies, was but a very young and a simple Man, and was esteemed to be one that could do nothing but (as they say in their language) handle La Sape, that is to say, a Hatchet, and kept Cattel: and yet he, with those that followed, so discomfited the Enemies, that it was wonderful to behold. He brake his great Rancon with laying load upon them; and and after that he broke alſo four of their own Swords in purſuing of them. There was a Boy of eighteen years of Age, and of ſmall ſtature, which alone ſlew the Lord of Monteil, Maſter of the Camp (as is ſaid) to the King: wherewith the Enemies were marvellouſly aſtoniſhed and diſcouraged. Another ſimple Man, who, a Man would have thought, durſt not once have looked Charles Truchet in the face (becauſe he was a very big Man, ſtrong and puiſſant, and one of the chiefeſt Captains of the whole Army) threw down the ſaid Truchet with the ſtroke of a Stone. Then a young Man leapt upon him, and ſlew him with his own Sword, which was four fingers broad, and cleft his head in pieces.

David with his Sling killeth Goliah.

The cruelty of this wretched Truchet againſt this poor People appeareth before in this ſtory.

This Truchet was one of the principal Authors of this War, and one of the chiefeſt Enemies of true Religion, and of the poor Waldoys, that could then be found. It was ſaid alſo, that he vaunted and promiſed before to the ſaid Lord of Trinity, that he would deliver into his hands the Medow of Toure. But God ſoon brought his proud brags to naught. And for his ſpoiling, pilling, and polling of the poor People, he lay ſpoiled and naked like a Beaſt in the wild Mountain of Angrogne. Two of the chiefeſt among them offered to pay a great ſum of Crowns for their Ranſom, but they could not be heard. They were purſued more than a mile, and were ſo diſcomfited, that they fled without any reſiſtance, and if the night had not let them, they had purſued them further.

The Miniſter, when he ſaw the great effuſion of Blood, and the Enemies to flee, cried to the People, ſaying, that it was enough, and exhorted them to give thanks unto God. They which heard him, obeyed, and fell to prayer: but they which were further off, and heard him not, chaſed their Enemies till dark night. Inſomuch, that if the reſt had done the like, very few of their Enemies had eſcaped. That day they had ſpoiled their Enemies of a great part of their Armour and Munition. So God reſtored in this Combat, and in others, to the poor Waldoys, the Armour which the Lord of Trinity had taken from them before. Thanks were given to God in every place; and every Man cried, Who is he which ſeeth not that God fighteth for us? This Victory gave great courage to the poor Waldoys, and greatly aſtoniſhed the Enemies.

God fighteth for his People.

Pharaoh's heart yet remaineth indurate.

The 18*th* of February, The Lord of Trinity, not ſatisfied with burning and deſtroying the greateſt part of Villars, returned to burn all the little Villages round about, which pertain to the ſame, and eſpecially to purſue the poor People, which were fled up into the Mountains, and dividing his Army into three parts, he entred by three ſeveral ways above mentioned. The two firſt Companies joined together between Villars and Boby, having a great Company of Horſemen. From thence they went to ſeek the People which were in the Mountain of Combe, by ſuch a way as they did not ſuſpect, and where there were no Warders to defend the place. Notwithſtanding, the Warders which were next, ſeeing their Enemies aſcending that way, ſpeedily ran before them, and calling upon God for his aid and ſuccour, they ſet themſelves againſt their Enemies: and albeit they were but thirty in number, yet they valiantly beat them back twice, coming out of their Bulwarks, that is to ſay, certain Houſes which at that time ſerved them for that purpoſe, albeit they were not made to that uſe. Many of the Enemies were ſlain at thoſe two Combats, and not one of the other ſide. The Lord of Trinity, ſeeing his Men ſo fiercely driven back, ſent out the greateſt part of his Army, which were eſteemed to be 15 hundred Men. There came alſo about an hundred to ſuccour the Warders. The Combat was very cruel and fierce. At length the poor People were aſſaulted ſo vehemently, that they were fain to forſake their Bulwarks, loſing two of their Men. Then the Enemies thought all to be theirs, and blew their Trumpets, triumphing that they had put the People to flight. But the People, retiring not paſt a ſtones caſt, took courage, and crying altogether to the Lord for ſuccour, they turned themſelves to the face of their Enemies, and with great fore and power they hurled ſtones at them with their ſlings.

The Waldoys again drive their Enemies back.

After this the Enemies reſted themſelves a while, and by and by after they gave a furious aſſault, but yet they were again mightily reſiſted. Yet once again the Enemies reſted, and in the mean time the People fell to Prayer, calling upon God altogether, with their faces lifted up towards Heaven; which fraied the Enemies more than any thing elſe. After this, they gave yet another great aſſault, but God by the hands of a few drove them back. Yea, God here ſhewed his great Power, even in the little Children alſo, which fervently called upon God, threw ſtones at their Enemies, and gave courage alſo unto the Men. So did alſo the Women, and the vulgar ſort, that is to ſay, thoſe which were meet for no feats of War, remaining upon the Mountain; and beholding theſe furious Combats, kneeled upon the ground, and having their faces lifted up towards Heaven, with tears and groanings they cried, Lord help us. Who heard their Prayers.

After that theſe three Aſſaults were given, there came one unto them crying; Be of good courage, God hath ſent thoſe of Angrongne to ſuccour us. He meant, that they of Angrogne were fighting for them in another place, that is to ſay, towards Tailleret, where the third part of the Army was. The People perceiving that they of Angrogne were come to that place to ſuccour them, began to cry, Bleſſed be God, who hath ſent us ſuccour: they of Angrogne be here to ſuccour us. The Enemies hearing this, were aſtoniſhed, and ſuddenly blew a Retreat, and retired into the Plain.

The enemies retire.

The Angrognians help their Fellows.

That Troop which was gone towards Tailleret, divided themſelves into three Companies. The firſt marched by the ſide of the Mountain, burning many Houſes, and joined with the main Army. The ſecond Company, which was of ſeven ſcore, marched higher, thinking to take the People at unawares. But they were by ſeven Men ſtrongly reſiſted and driven back. The third Company attained the top of the Mountain, thinking to incloſe the People; but as God would, they of Angrogne, which came to ſuccour them, encountred with them, and with great force put them to flight.

They of Villars, of whom mention is made before, after they had refreſhed themſelves with a little Bread and Wine, (for the moſt part of them had eaten nothing all that day) chaſed their Enemies till it was almoſt night, ſo fiercely, that the Maſter of the Camp was fain to ſend to the Lord of Trinity (which was at Toure) for ſuccour, or elſe all would have been loſt. Which he did; and immediatly he rode with all ſpeed to Luſerne to ſave himſelf, hearing the Alarm which was given at St. John by thoſe of Angrogne, and fearing leſt the way ſhould have been ſtopped. The Army retired with great difficulty (notwithſtanding the new Aid which was ſent them) and with great loſs of Men. One of their Captains confeſſed ſince, that if they had been purſued any further, they had fled all that night long. Since that time they never returned again into the Valley of Luſerne.

The Perſecutors put to flight.

On Monday, being the 17*th* of March next following, the Lord of Trinity, to be revenged of thoſe of the Medow of Toure, aſſembled all the Force that he could make with the Gentlemen of the Country. Inſomuch that whereas before his Army was commonly but four thouſand, it was now between ſix and ſeven thouſand: and ſecretly in the night ſeaſon he encamped with part of his Army in the midſt of Angrogne, from whence the poor Inhabitants were fled before. The next morning, after the Sermon and Prayers were ended, they perceived the other part of the Army to be encamped at the foot of the Mountain of Angrogne on the Eaſt ſide. Soon after they perceived how both parts of the Army coaſted the Hills ſide, the one towards the other, being ſuch a multitude, ſo glittering in their Harneſs, and marching in ſuch array, that the poor People at the firſt were aſtoniſhed thereat. Notwithſtanding, the Aſſembly fell down upon their knees three or four times, crying, Help us, O Lord; beſeeching him to have regard to the glory of his holy Name, to ſtay the effuſion of Blood, if it were his good pleaſure, and to turn the hearts of their Enemies to the truth of his holy Goſpel. Theſe two parts of the Army joined together near to the Bulwarks of the Medow of Toure, and gave the aſſault in three ſeveral places. One of the Bands mounted ſecretly by the Rocks, thinking to have incloſed the People in their Bulwarks. But as ſoon as they which kept the Bulwark below had eſpied them, they forſook the place, and marched ſtraight towards them; and as they marched, they met with the Aid which was ſent unto them from the Valley of Luſerne, very luckily, and coming as it were from Heaven: which joining together, ſoon diſcomfited their Enemies with Stones and Harquebuſſes. They purſued them fiercely in the Rocks, and vexed them wonderfully, becauſe the Rocks are ſo ſteep that no Man can aſcend or deſcend without great pain and difficulty. The Captain of this Band was named Baſtian of Virgil, a Man very expert in the Affairs of War. He at his going out of his Lodging, threatned that he would do great and terrible things that day. His Hoſteſs hearing that, ſaid unto him, Monſieur, if our Religion be better than theirs, you ſhall have the Victory; but if theirs be better than ours, you ſhall not prevail. Shortly after the Captain was brought again into his Inn, ſo wounded and ſo feeble, that he was not like to live. Then ſaid his Hoſteſs unto him, Monſieur, it is now well ſeen that their Religion is better than ours.

The proud threats of Haman.

There was alſo another Band which kept the top of the Hill, to aſſault the Bulwatks from thence. The middlemoſt Bulwark was then aſſaulted, in the which were very few to defend the ſame: the which ſeeing the number of their Enemies, retired back, leaving therein five only to defend it. There was a huge Rock not far from the foreſaid Bulwark, behind the ſame a great number of the Enemies were hid. And anon there iſſued out two Enſigns, aſſuring themſelves to win the Bulwark; but immediatly one of their Enſign-bearers was wounded to death. Whereupon many reculed back; the other ſet up his Enſign upon the Bulwark. They which were within, had neither Halberd, nor any other long Weapon, but only one Pike, and the ſame without any Iron; the which one of the five took, and threw down the Enſign, and manfully beat back the Scalers, and threw them down to the ground. Divers of the Enemies were entred into the Bulwark by a Dore below, and ſlew one of the five which kept the middle part of the Bulwark. The other four looked to be deſtroyed out of hand. Then one of the four chaſed away thoſe which had entred below, with ſtones: and the other three, leaving their Hand-guns, defended themſelves likewiſe with great ſtones: and perceiving the Band which was on the Rocks to flee, they took courage, and withſtood their Enemies valiantly till their Companions were returned from the chaſe.

The Bulwarks manfully defended.

In the mean time the Bulwark which was upon the ſide of the Mountain, was furiouſly aſſailed by the one half of the Army. Thoſe that were within, ſuffered their Enemies to approach near to the Bulwark, without any Gunſhot or other defence: whereat the Enemies much marvelled: but when they were even at hand, they fell upon them. ſome with throwing of ſtones, ſome with rolling down mighty ſtones, and ſome with Harquebuſſes. There was a huge ſtone rolled down, which paſſed throughout the whole Army, and ſlew divers. The Souldiers at that time had won a little Cottage near to the ſaid Bulwark, which did much hurt to the poor Men. But among them one deviſed to roll down a great huge ſtone againſt the Cottage, which ſo ſhook it, and amazed the Souldiers, that they thought they had been all deſtroyed, and incontinent they fled, and never would enter into it again.

Behold the Artillery of this ſimple People, and with what Weapons they fought.

Then the Souldiers made certain Fences of wood, five foot long, three foot broad, and of the thickneſs of three boards: but they were ſo ſore vexed with the ſhot of the Harquebuſſes, that they were fain to lay all thoſe Fences aſide. The Miners alſo made others of earth for the Souldiers. But all theſe Policies of the Enemies availed them nothing: for the ſlaughter was ſo great, that in divers places you might have ſeen three lying dead one upon another. God ſo wrought with the poor Chriſtians, that the ſhot of two Harquebuſſes ſlew four Men. It was ſaid for a certain, that the ſhot of an Hurquebuſs came ſo near the Lord of Trinity's head, that it brake a Wand which he bare in his hand, and made him to retire ſixſcore paces backward; and ſeeing his Souldiers in ſuch great numbers murthered and wounded on every ſide, he wept bitterly. Then he retired the reſt of his Army. That day he thought aſſuredly to have entred into the Medow of Toure. Moreover, he was determined, if that days journey had not ſucceeded, to incamp thereby, and the next morning very early to renew the Aſſault. Many Gentlemen and others came thither to ſee the diſcomfiture of the poor Waldoys: and likewiſe thoſe of the Plain looked for nothing, but to hear the piteous ruin and deſolation of this poor People. But God diſpoſed it otherwiſe; for the Lord of Trinity had much ado to ſave himſelf and his: and ſeeing the miſchief which they intended to do unto others, was fallen now upon their own heads, they were wonderfully aſtoniſhed. They of the Plain alſo, when they ſaw the number of the dead Bodies and the Wounded to be ſo great (for from noon until the evening they ceaſed not to carry them away) were likewiſe exceedingly diſmaied. Albeit they carried not away all; for there were many that lay near to the Bulwarks, which the People covered with winding-ſheets the next morning. The Souldiers themſelves confeſſed to them of the Medow of Toure, that if they had purſued them, they had been all ſlain, they were ſo tired and clean out of heart.

The Lord of Trinity with his Army driven back.

The Papiſts aſtoniſhed and diſmayed on every ſide by the wonderful judgement of God.

Many marvelled why the People did not follow the Army, but eſpecially the Souldiers, ſeeing the great diſcomfiture which they had done, and that they had gotten ſuch vantage of them already, but this was done for two cauſes. The one was, becauſe they had already determined not to follow the Army being once retired, to avoid the effuſion of blood, meaning only to defend themſelves. The other cauſe was, for that they were weary, and had ſpent all their Munition: For many of them had ſhot off about thirty times, and none of them under twenty, ſpending great ſtore both of Pellets and Hail-ſhot. The reſt of the Army retired, crying with a loud voice, God fighteth for them, and we do them wrong.

God's People avoid the ſhedding of blood.

The next day one of the principal Captains of the Army ſurrendred his Charge to the Lord of Trinity, ſaying unto him, that he would never fight againſt this People any more; and upon that he departed. It is a marvellous thing, and worthy of perpetual Memory, that in that Combate there were but two of the Waldoys ſlain, and two hurt. Through the whole Country of Piedmont, every Man ſaid, God fighteth for them. One of the Captaines confeſſed, that he had been at many fierce Aſſaults and Combats, and ſundry Battels well fought, but yet he never ſaw Souldiers ſo fainthearted and amazed: yea, the Souldiers themſelves told him, they were ſo aſtoniſhed, that they could not ſtrike. Moreover, they ſaid, that this People never ſhot, but they hurt or killed ſome of the Souldiers. Some others ſaid, That the Miniſters by their Prayers conjured and bewitched them, that they could not fight: and indeed wonderful is it, and marvellous are the Judgments of God, that notwithſtanding ſo many Combats and Conflicts, ſo great Aſſaults and Adventures, ſo much and ſo terrible ſhot, continually made againſt this poor People, yet all in a manner came to no effect: ſo mightily God's Holy Power wrought for his People. Inſomuch that, for all the ſaid Combats, Skirmiſhes, and ſo many Conflicts of all the Angrognians there were but nine only that miſcarried, and the whole number of thoſe that were ſlain were but only fourteen Perſons. Where alſo is to be noted, not without great admiration, how few there were, and thoſe alſo but poor ſilly Shepherds and Neatherds, to incounter with ſuch a mighty Power, of ſo ſtrong and brave Souldiers coming againſt them with Weapons and Armour, being ſo well furniſhed and appointed with Munition, as they were in all points accordingly; and the other on the contrary ſide being warned, and unprovided of all habiliment of War, having for their defence for the moſt part nothing elſe but Slings and Stones, and a few Harquebuſſes.

God fighteth for his People.

Only 14 of all the Waldoys ſlain in all theſe Conflicts.

The 9th of March there was a hot Skirmiſh at Angrogne. For three Companies of Souldiers went to Angrogne, to burn and ſpoil all that remained, and to deſtroy the Wives which were hidden in the ground. Where, amongſt themſelves, they mocked and flouted the poor People, ſaying, Theſe Lutheran Waldoys are valiant Fellows behind their Bulwarks: but if they had been in the plain Field, they had been well canvaſſed. After this it chanced that thirty of the Waldoys went and aſſailed theſe foreſaid Companies in the plain Field. They fought a long ſeaſon, and that ſo near, that ſome of them fought hand to hand. In this Conflict one of thoſe of Angronge, wreſtled with a Captain of the Enemies, ſtrong and mighty, and caſt him down upon the ground. Many of the Souldiers were ſlain, and many hurt. But of the Angrognians there was but one ſlain, and another hurt a little, which notwithſtanding gave not over to fight manfully. Then the Souldiers, ſeeing the loſs of their Men, retired ſuddenly.

Another skirmiſh between the Enemies and the Angrognians.

After that, the Lord of Trinity ſent two Gentlemen, of the Valley of Luſerne to them of Angrogne, to feel them if they would come to any agreement. To whom anſwer was made, that they would ſtand to their firſt Anſwer. From that time he ſent very often to intreat of the Agreement: but what his meaning was, it might well appear. For when the poor People hoped for ſome agreement, they were moſt furiouſly aſſaulted. Upon this, there was a day aſſigned in the Valley of Luſerne, to confer touching the Agreement with certain Men pertaining to the Lord of Raconis, and a ſafe Conduct was promiſed and granted.

Note the practice of Papiſts.

Behold how this traiterous Trinity, whilſt he pretendeth an Agreement, goeth about to deſtroy theſe poor Men.

The night afore the Miniſters and Rulers of Angrogne ſhould take their Journey, they perceived a Company of Souldiers going up a Hill, by the which they of Angrogne ſhould paſs, and hid them in Houſes on the ways ſide, thinking to take at unwares them of Angrogne, which were ſent to treat of the Agreement. But they, having intelligence of this conſpiracy, watched and warded. It was an eaſy matter, as divers thought, that night to have taken the Lord of Trinity, and have ſpoiled his whole Camp.

David ſpares King Saul.

But they of Angrogne and Luſerne would not execute this enterpriſe, leſt thereby they ſhould offend God, and paſs the bounds of their Vocation, taking upon them no more but to defend themſelves.

At that time a pittiful caſe happened in the Medow of Toure. The Lord of Raconis, ſeeming to be ſorry for this War, ſent into the Medow of Toure an honeſt Man of Briqueras, named Francis of Gilles, to take advice what means were beſt to further the Agreement. Who, having conſulted with the Miniſters and Rulers, returned homeward that day according to his Maſter's Commandment, and having ſent back one which conducted him, was murdered ſoon after at the foot of Angrogne, by two of Angrogne which otherwiſe ſeemed to be honeſt, and of good Parentage. Soon after, one of the two, which had committed this Fact, entred into the Medow of Toure, and was immediatly apprehended and bound. He confeſſed the Fact without any further delay. Immediatly the other alſo was taken.

The Waldoys were marvellouſly troubled and aggrieved with this Fact, and wrote to the Lord of Raconis, declaring unto him the whole Circumſtance of the Fact, and that they had the Offenders in Ward, and that if it would pleaſe him to ſend certain to examine the matter, they for their part would ſo execute juſtice in the puniſhment of them, that their innocency to all Men ſhould appear. The Lord of Raconis wrote unto them that they ſhould deliver unto him the Offenders, and that he would do ſuch juſtice upon them, as the Caſe required. To the which they of Angrogne anſwered, That upon three Conditions they ſhould be delivered according to his requeſt. Firſt, That the Priſoners ſhould be compelled to do nothing againſt their Conſciences; and as touching Religion, nothing ſhould be ſpoken unto them, but out of the Word of God. Secondly, That ſpeedy and ſharp juſtice ſhould be executed upon them; and that hereafter this ſhould be no prejudice to the Liberties and Priviledges of the People of Angrogne. The third, That the execution of them ſhould be upon the Borders of Angrogne, for an example to all other. This being accorded with one aſſent (yea without contradiction of their Parents) they ſent them Priſoners, accompanied with ſixty Gunners, to the Confines of Luſerne, and there delivered them into the hands of the Lord of Raconis. This redounded to the great commendation of them of Angrogne.

The juſt dealing of the Angrognians.

After this, the Lord of Trinity, having left certain Garriſons about Angrogne, and the Valley of Luſerne, went to Perouſe near to the Valley of St. Martin, to ſuccour the Garriſon there, being in great danger, and there remained a month. During which time, they of Angrogne, and the Valley of Luſerne, lived in more quietneſs than afore: but yet they were much afflicted, by reaſon of the ſcarcity of Victuals which ſore preſſed them, and namely thoſe of the Medow of Toure, for they were ſpoiled of their Victuals. This poor People lived with Milk and with Herbs, having very little Bread. But afterwards, when they were even like to be famiſhed, God of his goodneſs ſent them better ſuccour, both of Corn and Bread than they had before. The Enemies thought to have taken the Medow of Toure by Famine: for they took away the Victuals that were to be had in all places round about. Every Houſhold was ſuffered to have no more than ſhould ſuſtain them that day, and that alſo was very little; to the end that they ſhould not ſuccour this poor People.

Scarceneſs of Victuals among the Angrognians.

God's Mercy towards his People.

After that the Lord of Trinity, being returned from Perouſe to Luſerne, ſent certain to intreat of an Agreement, and required to commune with ſome of the People. Then they began to conſult and deviſe by all means, how they might come to ſome good Agreement. But on Monday, being the 17*th* of April, by break of day, he ſent certain Bands of Spaniards, which he had there, with the Garriſon of Toure, to the Mountain of Tailleret, by the way which leadeth to the Medow of Toure, on the South ſide: They murdered Men, Women, and Children of Tailleret, whom they found in their Beds. Then they marched on along upon the Mountain, towards the Medow of Toure. Anon after, the People perceived two other Companies of Souldiers, marching by Angrogne by two ſeveral ways, to aſſault the Medow of Toure. In the morning as ſoon as they roſe, they blew their Horns, for they ſaw the Spaniards already entred. When they had made their Prayers, every Man ran to meet the Enemies; ſome on the Eaſt ſide, and the other on the South. They which firſt reſiſted the Spaniards (who were already paſt the Bulwarks) were in the beginning but twelve Gunners, and a few other, whom they cauſed to go up to the Hill, and roll down great ſtones. Theſe twelve, having found a fit place for their purpoſe to ſtay the Spaniards, began to ſhoot off their Harquebuſſes at them. The Spaniards ſeeing themſelves ſo ſore aſſaulted both above and beneath, and the place ſo narrow & ſo ſtrait, recoiled back, and retired as faſt as they could by the ſame way by the which they came. If they had tarried a little longer, they had been incloſed between the two Mountains: which place was ſo ſtrait, that they could not have eſcaped. The People chaſed them unto their Camp, which was at Toure. As they fled, they found often ſome Forts, where they did reſiſt for a little while, but they were always beaten out. In this Combat, God gave victory to the poor Waldoys, and great ſlaughter of the Spaniards; where alſo very many of them were ſore hurt and wounded.

Note how this bloody wretch pretending agreement, peace and quietneſs, immediatly ſeeketh the deſtruction of this poor people.

God giveth victory to the Waldoys againſt the Spaniards.

The ſaid Lord of Trinity ſent unto the Spaniards, that they ſhould not faint and give over, but ſtick to it like Men, and he would ſhortly ſend them ſuccour: but they would not. Thoſe of the Valley of Luſerne, hearing of this conflict, came in the mean time to help their Neighbours. Amongſt others, there was one ſlain in that battel, for whom the Lord of Trinity much lamented, ſaying, that he would rather have loſt a whole Band than that Man. The other two Companies which marched by Angrogne, perceiving the Spaniards to be ſo beaten and put to flight, and ſeeing alſo thoſe of the Medow of Toure coming to encounter with them, retired in haſte. Upon that the L. of Trinity went to Cavors, three miles from Luſerne, being in a great perplexity; and as he was about to ſend ſuccour to the Spaniards, he heard the ſound of a Drum above Luſerne, and ſuſpected that there was an Army of the Waldoys coming againſt him. Upon this divers of the Souldiers fled away by the Plain, crying that all was loſt. It was certainly reported, that if the Waldoys had purſued the Army, as they might eaſily have done, the Camp had that day been chaſed out of Luſerne. The poor people lacked no courage ſo to do; for albeit they had neither eat nor drank all the day before, and had ſo ſore travelled and fought, yet they ſaid, that if they had but a little refreſhed themſelves with a morſel of Bread, and a glaſs of Wine, they durſt take upon them to enter into the Camp of their Enemies.

God taketh the hearts from his Enemies.

God giveth courage to the poor Waldoys.

Within a few days after, they of Angrogne were adverтiſed by the Lord of Trinity's Letters, that he fully determined to cut down their Trees and Vines, and deſtroy their Corn being on the ground. And furthermore, that two Forts ſhould be built at Angrogne. The day was aſſigned, and Horſemen appointed, with all ſpeed to execute this miſchievous enterprize. The poor people thought that they ſhould be aſſailed as ſore as ever they were, and fight as hard as ever they did before. But God prevented this cruel attempt; for the night afore that this ſhould be executed, the Lord of Trinity received certain Letters from the Duke, which ſtaid this enterprize. They of the Medow of Toure being advertiſed that the Lord of Trinity did now intend to ſend Ordnance to beat down the Bulwarks which were made of Stones, they made a Bulwark of Earth, which was in compaſs about 500 paces, which they might eaſily ſee from Luſerne. They in the Medow of Toure told the Lord of Trinity's Men, that if they brought any Artillery, they ſhould

The Waldoys ſend a Supplication to the Dutcheſs.

About this ſeaſon, the chief Rulers and Miniſters of the Waldoys, requeſted earneſtly the Lord of Raconis to preſent a Supplication which they had made to the Dutcheſs of Savoy: for they had intelligence, that ſhe was ſore offended that her Subjects were ſo cruelly handled. In which Supplication they declared the equity of their Cauſe, proteſting all due obedience to the Duke their Soveraign Lord, and if it might be proved by the pure Word of God that they held any Error, they would with all humble ſubmiſſion receive correction, and be reformed, humbly beſeeching her Grace to appeaſe the diſpleaſure which the Duke had conceived againſt them, by the untrue ſurmiſes of their Adverſaries; and if there were any thing wherein they had offended him, they moſt humbly craved his gracious Pardon.

The Waldoys offer to be judged by the Word of God.

The Lord of Trinity ſore ſick.

About this time the Lord of Trinity, by ſickneſs, was in great danger of his Life. Soon after the Supplication was delivered, the Dutcheſs ſent an Anſwer to the Waldoys, by the ſaid Lord of Raconis. The effect thereof was, That ſhe had obtained of the Duke's Grace all that they demanded in their Supplication, upon ſuch conditions as the ſaid Lord Raconis would propound unto them. But when they underſtood that the ſaid Conditions were very rigorous, they ſent another Supplication unto the Dutcheſs, wherein they humbly beſought her Grace to be a means that the ſaid Conditions and Articles might be moderated; which Articles here follow.

Another Supplication ſent to the Dutcheſs.

First, That they ſhould baniſh their Miniſters.

Secondly, That they ſhould receive the Maſs, and other Ceremonies of the Romiſh Church.

Thirdly, That they ſhould pay a Ranſom to the Souldiers for certain of their Men which they had taken.

Fourthly, That they ſhould aſſemble and preach no more as they were wont to do.

Fifthly, That the Duke would make Fortreſſes at his pleaſure in all that Country, with other like things.

The Supplication of the Dutcheſs.

The People made humble requeſt in this their laſt Supplication, That it would pleaſe the ſaid Dutcheſs to give the Duke her Husband to underſtand, how that theſe Conditions were ſtrange and rigorous. And as for their parts, altho they had good trial of their Miniſters, that they were good Men and fearing God, of ſound Doctrine, of good Life, and honeſt Converſation; yet nevertheleſs they were contented ſo to do, if he would give leave to ſome of them to remain: requeſting this, that it might be permitted unto them to chuſe ſome other good Miniſters in their places, before they departed, leſt that their Churches ſhould remain without Paſtors.

The Conditions whereunto the Waldoys did agree and conſent.

Concerning the Maſs, and other Ceremonies of the Church of Rome, if the Duke ſhould cauſe them to be miniſtred in their Pariſhes, they neither would nor could withſtand the ſame, and for their part, they would do no injury or violence to thoſe that ſhould miniſter them, or be preſent thereat: notwithſtanding they beſought him, that they might not be conſtrained to be preſent themſelves at the miniſtration thereof, or to pay any thing to the maintenance of the ſame, or elſe to yield either favour or conſent thereunto.

As touching the Ranſom which was demanded of them for their Priſoners, conſidering the extream Poverty that they were in, and the great Calamities and Damages which they had ſuffered, it was to them a thing unpoſſible. Yea, if his Highneſs were truly informed what loſs they had ſuſtained, by burning, ſpoiling, and ſacking of their Houſes and Goods, without all mercy or pitty, he would not only not require of them any ſuch thing, but as a gracious and merciful Prince, he would ſuccour and ſupport them, that they might be able to maintain their poor Families, whom they nouriſhed (as they were bound to do) to the Service of God, and of their ſaid Lord and Prince: and therefore they deſired that it might pleaſe him, that their poor Brethren remaining in Captivity and Priſon, and ſuch as were ſent to the Gallies for the profeſſion of their Religion, might ſpeedily be delivered and ſet at liberty.

As for their Aſſemblies and Preachings, they were contented that they ſhould be kept only amongſt themſelves, in their accuſtomed Places, and in other Valleys aforeſaid, where any Aſſembly of the Faithful ſhould be, which were deſirous to hear the preaching of the Goſpel.

Touching the Fortreſſes, foraſmuch as by thoſe which were already made, they had ſuffered great moleſtations and troubles, as well concerning their Goods, as alſo their Religion: they were aſſured, that if he ſhould build up new Forts, they ſhould never be able to abide the Troubles, Miſeries, and Calamities that would follow thereupon; and therefore they moſt humbly deſired the ſaid Dutcheſs to be ſo good and gracious unto them, as to obtain of the Duke, that he would accept their Perſons in the ſtead of Forts; and that, ſeeing thoſe Places were by Nature and of themſelves ſtrong and well fortified, it might pleaſe their ſaid Lord the Duke to receive them into his protection and ſafeguard: and by the Grace and Aſſiſtance of God they would ſerve him themſelves for ſuch Walls and Forts, that he ſhould not need to build any other. And becauſe many of theſe which dwelt near about them had robbed and ſpoiled them, not only of their houſhold Goods and ſuch other things, but alſo driven away their Cattel; that it might pleaſe him to give them leave to recover the ſaid Goods by way of Juſtice, and to buy again that which the Souldiers had ſold, and that for the ſame price for the which it was ſold.

Briefly, they alſo beſought their ſaid Lord, that it may pleaſe him to be ſo gracious unto them, as to grant them a confirmation of all their Franchiſes, Immunities, and Privileges, as well general as particular, given unto them as well by him as by his Predeceſſors: and likewiſe of thoſe which as well they as their Anceſtors had bought of their Lords, and to receive them, as his moſt humble and obedient Subjects, into his protection and ſafeguard.

And becauſe in time paſt, in the ſtead of good and ſpeedy Juſtice, all iniquity was committed by thoſe that had the adminiſtration of Juſtice in their Valleys, and forſomuch as their Purſes were emptied and puniſhed rather than the Malefactors, that it might pleaſe him to give order that ſuch Juſtice might be done amongſt them; whereby the Wicked might be puniſhed with all ſeverity, and the Innocent defended and maintained in their right.

Torment of Conſcience in ſliding from the Truth.

Finally, foraſmuch as divers of this poor People (being aſtoniſhed at the coming of the Army, and fearing leſt they ſhould not only be ſpoiled of all their Good, but alſo they with their Wives and Children be utterly deſtroyed) made promiſe againſt their Conſciences, to live according to the Traditions of the Church of Rome; they were marvelouſly troubled and tormented in ſpirit; and did nothing but languiſh in that diſtreſs. Wherefore they humbly beſought the ſaid Dutcheſs to take pitty upon them, and to obtain that they might not be compelled to do any thing againſt their Conſcience; and moreover, that it might pleaſe the Duke to permit them to live in liberty and freedom of Conſcience; alſo, that all their poor Brethren, baniſhed for the Cauſe of Religion, might return home to their Houſes; and that all Confiſcations and Penalties made againſt them, might be aboliſhed. And for their part, they promiſed to give all due reverence and honour to God and his Holy Word, and to be true and faithful Subjects unto their Lord and Prince. Yea, more than any other. Underneath the ſaid Supplication there was written:

> Your faithful and humble Subjects, the poor afflicted of the Vallies of Luſerne, Angrogne, St. Martin, and Perouſe, and generally all the People of the Waldoys, which inhabit the Country of Piedmont.

After that this Supplication was viewed and read of the ſaid Dutcheſs, ſhe ſo perſwaded with the Duke, that anſwer was made with theſe conditions, declared in theſe Articles following.

Concluſions

Nevertheleſs it ſhall be permitted to their Miniſters to come within the Precinct aforeſaid, to viſit the ſick, and exerciſe other things neceſſary to their Religion, ſo that they preach not, nor make any Aſſembly there.

The Pariſh of Tailleret, La Rua de Bonet.

It ſhall alſo be permitted to them of Tailleret, La Rua de Bonet, bordering upon Toure, to have their Sermons and Aſſemblies in places accuſtomed, ſo that they enter not for that purpoſe into the reſt of the Confines of Toure.

The Valleys of Luſerne & S. Martin.

That it ſhall not be lawful for the ſaid Members of the Valleys of Luſerne and St. Martin, to come to the reſt of their Borders, nor any other of his Highneſs Dominions: nor to have their Preachings, Aſſemblies, or Diſputations, out of their own Borders, having liberty to have them therein. And if they be examined of their Faith, it ſhall be lawful for them to anſwer without danger of puniſhment in Body or Goods.

The Pariſh of Perouſe.

The like ſhall be lawful for them of the pariſh of Perouſe, which at this preſent are fled becauſe of the ſaid Religion, and were wont to have their Aſſemblies and Preachings, and other Miniſteries according to their Religion, at the place called le Puis: ſo that they come not to other places and borders of the ſaid Pariſh.

The Pariſh of Pinachia.

It ſhall be permitted to them of the Pariſh of Pinachia, of the Valley of Perouſe, which at this preſent be fled becauſe of the ſaid Religion, and were wont to go to Sermons and Aſſemblies, and other Miniſteries of that Religion, to have the like, only at the place called le Grandoubion.

Order for Villages being far from the Pariſh Church.

It ſhall be permitted to all them of the Towns and Villages of the ſaid Valleys, which at this preſent are fled, and continue in the ſaid Religion, notwithſtanding any promiſe or abjuration made before this War againſt the ſaid Religion, to repair and return to their Houſes with their Houſholds, and to live according to the ſame, going and coming to the Sermons and Aſſemblies which ſhall be made by their Miniſters in the places above ſpecified, ſo that they obey that which is above-ſaid.

And becauſe that many of the ſaid Towns and Villages dwell out of the Precinct of the Preaching, having need to be viſited, and of other things according to their ſaid Religion, their Miniſters, which dwell within the Precinct, ſhall be ſuffered, without prejudice, to viſit and duly aid them of ſuch Miniſteries as ſhall be neceſſary for them, ſo that they make no Sermons or Aſſemblies.

The Pariſh of Meane, and St. Bartholomew.

The Goods of the Waldoys reſtored.

The Goods already ſeized as forfeit, ſhall be reſtored to all the Inhabitants of the ſaid Valleys, and to all that are fled and continue in the ſaid Religion, as well of them of the ſaid Valleys, as of Roccapiata, St. Bartholomew, and of Meane, ſo that they be not ſeized for any other cauſe than for the ſaid Religion, and for the War preſent and lately paſt.

It ſhall be lawful for them aforeſaid to recover by way of Juſtice, of their Neighbours, their moveable Goods and Cattel, ſo it be not of Souldiers: and that which hath been ſold, they ſhall alſo recover by way of Juſtice, ſo that they reſtore the price for which it hath been ſold. Their Neighbours ſhall have the like againſt them.

The Liberties reſtored

The ſaid Valleys ſhall be provided for, to have good Juſtice miniſtred unto them, whereby they may know they are kept in ſafe-guard by his Highneſs, as well as all his other Subjects.

The Inhabitants of the ſaid Valleys, ſhall make a Roll of all the Names and Surnames of all them of the ſaid Valleys, which are fled for Religion, as well ſuch as have abjured as others, to the end they may be reſtored and maintained in their Goods and Houſholds, and enjoy ſuch Grace and Benefits as their Prince and Lord hath beſtowed on them.

And inſomuch as it is known to every Man, that the Prince may build Fortreſſes in his Country, where it ſhall pleaſe him without contradiction, nevertheleſs to take all ſuſpition out of the minds of the aforeſaid Waldoys, it is declared, that if at any time hereafter his Highneſs will make a Fort of Villars, the Inhabitants of the ſaid place ſhall not be conſtrained to bear the Charges, but only as they ſhall think good, lovingly to aid their Prince. Which Fort being builded (by God's Aid) a Governor and Captain ſhall therein be appointed, which ſhall attempt nothing but the ſervice of his Highneſs, without offence of the Inhabitants, either in their Goods or Conſciences.

M. Martin de Pragela, Miniſter of the Waldoys.

It ſhall be lawful for them, before the diſcharging of their Miniſters, ſuch as it ſhall pleaſe his Highneſs to have diſcharged, to chuſe and call other in their ſteads: ſo that they chuſe not Mr. Martin de Pragela, nor change not from one place to another of the ſaid Valleys, any of them which be diſcharged.

Maſs ſet up, but not compelled to come to it.

The Maſs, and other Service after the uſage of Rome, ſhall be kept in all the Pariſhes of the ſaid Valleys, where the Sermons, Aſſemblies, and other Miniſteries of their Religion are made; but none ſhall be compelled to be preſent thereat, nor to miniſter aid or favour to ſuch as ſhall uſe that Service.

All the Expences and Charges born by his Highneſs in this War, ſhall be forgiven and releaſed to them for ever: alſo the 8000 Crowns wherein the Inhabitants of the ſaid Valleys were behind, as part of 16000 Crowns which they had promiſed in the War paſſed. And his Highneſs will command that the Writings for that cauſe made, ſhall be annulled and cancelled.

Their Priſoners reſtored by ranſom reaſonable.

All the Priſoners ſhall be rendered and reſtored which ſhall be found to be in the hands of the Souldiers, paying Ranſom reaſonable, according to their Goods, as they ſhall be ſeaſed: and thoſe which ſhall be adjudged to be wrongfully taken, ſhall be releaſed without ranſom.

The Captives in Gallies reſtored.

Likewiſe all they of the ſaid Valleys, which for Religion, and not for other Cauſes, are detained in the Gallies, ſhall be releaſed without Ranſom.

Finally, It ſhall be lawful for all them of the ſaid Valleys, them of Meane, Roccapiata, and St. Bartholomew, of what degree, eſtate, and condition ſoever they be be (except Miniſters) to accompany and dwell, and to be in daily converſation with the reſt of his Highneſs's Subjects, and to tarry, go, and come in all places of his Highneſs's Country, to ſell and buy, and uſe all Trades of Merchandize, in all places in his Highneſs's Country, as before is ſaid, ſo that they preach not, nor make any Aſſemblies or Diſputations, as we have before ſaid: And that they which be of the Limits dwell not out of them: and they which be of the Towns and Villages of the ſaid Vallies, dwell not out of them, nor of their borders: And in ſo doing they ſhall not be moleſted by any means, and ſhall not be offended nor troubled in body or goods, but ſhall remain under the protection and ſafeguard of his Highneſs.

The liberty of Traffick granted.

Furthermore, his Highneſs ſhall ſet order to ſtay all troubles, inconveniencies, ſecret conſpiracies of wicked Perſons, after ſuch ſort, that they ſhall remain quietly in their Religion. For obſervation whereof, George Monaſtier, one of the Elders of Angrongne; Conſtantion Dialeſtini, otherwiſe called Rembaldo, one of the Elders of Villars; Pirrone Arduino, ſent from the Communalty of Boby; Michael Ramondet, ſent from the Communalty of Tailleret, and of La Rua de Bouet, bordering upon Toure; John Malenote, ſent from certain Perſons of St. John; Peter Paſchall, ſent from the Communalty of the Valley of St. Martin; Thomas Romam of St. Germaine, ſent from the Communalty of the ſame place, and of all the Valley of Perouſe, promiſe for them and their Communalties ſeverally, that the Contents of theſe Concluſions aforeſaid ſhall be inviolably kept, and for breach thereof do ſubmit themſelves to ſuch puniſhment as ſhall pleaſe his Highneſs; promiſing likewiſe to cauſe the chief of the Families or the Communalties to allow and confirm the ſaid Promiſe.

The Elders of the Vallies of Piedmont.

The honourable Lord of Raconis doth promiſe, that the Duke's Highneſs ſhall confirm and allow the foreſaid Concluſions to them, both generally and particularly, at the interceſſion and ſpecial favour of the noble Lady the Princeſs.

The Lord of Raconis.

The Lady Princeſs Interceſſor for the Waldoys.

In teſtimony whereof, the foreſaid Lord of Raconis hath confirmed theſe preſent Concluſions with his own hand; and the Miniſters have likewiſe ſubſcribed in the name of all the ſaid Vallies; and they which can write, in the name of all their Communalties.

At Cavor, the 5th day of June, 1561.

Philip of Savoy.
Francis Valla, Miniſter of Villars.
Claudius Bergius, Miniſter of Tailleret.
Georgius Monaſterius.
Michael Raymundet.

THis Accord being thus made and paſſed, by the means of the Dutcheſs of Savoy, the poor Waldoys have been in quiet until this preſent: and God of his infinite goodneſs having delivered them out of ſo many troubles and conflicts, hath ſet them at liberty to ſerve him purely, and with quietneſs of conſcience.

Wherefore there is none at this preſent, (except he be altogether blind or ſenſeleſs) but he ſeeth and well perceiveth, that God would make it known by experience to theſe poor Waldoys, and all other faithful People, that all things turn to the beſt to them which love and fear him: For by all theſe Afflictions which they ſuffered, (as is before rehearſed) this good heavenly Father hath brought them to repentance and amendment of life; he hath effectuouſly taught them to have recourſe to his Fatherly Mercy, and to embrace Jeſus Chriſt for their only Saviour and Redeemer.

All things turn to the beſt to them that love the Lord.

Furthermore, he hath taught them to tame the deſires and luſts of the Fleſh, to withdraw their hearts from the World, and lift them up to Heaven; and to be always in a readineſs to come to him, as unto their moſt loving and pitiful Father. To be ſhort, he hath ſent them to the School of his Children, to the end they ſhould profit in patience and hope; to make them to mourn, weep, and cry unto him. And above all, he hath made them ſo often to prove his ſuccours at time of need, to ſee them before their eyes, to feel and touch them with their hands (as a Man would ſay) after ſuch ſort, that they have had good occaſion, and all the Faithful with them, never to diſtruſt ſo good a Father, and ſo careful for the health of his Children, but to aſſure themſelves they ſhall never be confounded, what thing ſoever happen.

And yet to ſee this more manifeſtly, and that every Man may take profit thereof, it ſhall be good to underſtand what this poor People did whilſt they were in theſe Combats and Conflicts. So ſoon as they ſaw the Army of their Enemies approach, they cried all together for aid and ſuccour to the Lord; and before they came to defend themſelves, they fell to prayer, and in fighting lifted up their hearts, and ſighed to the Lord. As long as the Enemies were at reſt, every one of theſe poor People on their knees called upon God. When the Combat was ended, they gave him thanks for the comfort and ſuccour which they had felt. In the mean time the reſt of the People, with their Miniſters, made their hearty prayer unto God, with ſighs and tears, and that from the morning until the evening. When night was come, they aſſembled again together: They which had fought, rehearſed the wonderful aid and ſuccour which God had ſent them, and ſo all together rendred thanks unto him for his fatherly goodneſs. Always he changed their ſorrow into joy. In the morning trouble and affliction appeared before them, with great terror on all ſides; but by the evening they were delivered, and had great cauſe of rejoycing and comfort.

K. Heq. 8. The behaviour of these good Men in their Perſecutions.

This poor People had two terrible Enemies, War and Famine, which kept them under in ſuch ſort, that a Man would have thought they had been utterly loſt and deſtroyed: But God of his endleſs mercy delivered them from ſuch dangers, and reſtored them to their houſes, where they remained afterwards in peace and quietneſs; and all they which had declared themſelves to be their open Enemies, were brought to confuſion, as well thoſe which ſought to get their goods, as thoſe which only deſired to ſhed their blood. For proof whereof, the only example of two Gentlemen of the Valley of Luſerne ſhall ſuffice. Theſe not only moved cruel War againſt their poor Tenants and others, but moſt ſhamefully ſpoiled them, and took intolerable Fines of all thoſe that diſobeyed their Edicts to keep a good Conſcience.

War and Famine two Enemies againſt theſe Men.

Beſides this, they went about to ſeize all their Goods as forfeit, waiting to have the whole forfeiture thereof themſelves. And for this cauſe they did not only incenſe the Duke with falſe reports, and with grievous complaints and accuſations againſt theſe poor Waldoys, but alſo purſued the ſame ſo long, and with ſuch charges, that they were fain to ſell their Inheritance, in hope to bring their purpoſe to paſs, and to enjoy that goodly Prey, which they thought could not eſcape their hands. But in the end for their reward they got nothing but ſhame and confuſion.

Example of God. favour towards his Servants, and confuſion toward their Perſecutors.

And as for the Monks and Prieſts, which by ſuch means thought to advance themſelves, and to bring their Trumpery in eſtimation, they have loſt the little Rule which they had over that People, and are confounded, and their Religion brought to diſdain. Thus God beateth down thoſe which exalt themſelves above meaſure, and maketh his Adverſaries to fall into the pits which they themſelves have made. Let us pray unto him therefore, that it would pleaſe him likewiſe to ſtretch out his puiſſant Arm at this day to maintain his poor Church now afflicted, and to confound all the devices of Satan and his Members, to the advancement of his Glory and Kingdom.

The Concluſion of the Story.

The concluſion of the Story of Merindol and Angrongne. Merindol and Cabriers in Province under the French King. Angrongne and others in Piedmont under the Duke of Savoy. The cruelty of the Adverſaries. The patience of the Martyrs.

And thus haſt thou, Chriſtian Reader, for thy erudition and comfort, the ſtory and doings diſcourſed concerning theſe two Countries, both of Province and alſo of Piedmont, the one being ſubject under the dominion of France, the other belonging to the Duke of Savoy; in the which two foreſaid Regions and Countries how long the Goſpel of Chriſt hath continued (even from the time of the firſt Waldenſes) the Hiſtory it ſelf declareth.

Furthermore, what Injuries and Wrongs have been done againſt them for the Goſpel's ſake, what rigour and cruelty hath been ſhewed of the adverſary part: again, for their part, what patience in their ſuffering, what conſtancy in their doctrine, what truth in their words, and ſimplicity in their deeds, what obedience towards their Magiſtrates, and faith towards God they have uſed; and finally, how miraculouſly and mightily God hath fought for his People, and confounded the Enemies, the ſaid Hiſtory may give thee full knowledg and experience.

Wherein

K.Hen.8.

Wherein this thou haſt moreover, for thy more learning, to note and conſider with thy ſelf, beſides many other memorable things in this Story contained, how unwilling this People were at firſt, and what remorſe of Conſcience they had for their obedience towards their Magiſtrates, to lift up any hand or finger for their own defence. And therefore many of them being ſlain and cruelly murthered, as willingly offering their Throats without any reſiſtance to the cruel hands of their Enemies, the reſt were compelled to fly into the Mountains, being ſpoiled of Houſe, Victual, and Weapon, only to ſave their poor lives with flying (which otherwiſe they would not with reſiſting) in Rocks and Caves, thinking there rather to periſh by Famine, than to uſe that defence for themſelves, which Nature giveth to every brute Beaſt to help it ſelf, as it may, againſt violence and injury. Yet theſe poor Waldoys refuſing all reſiſtance, and laying down their own Weapons (for obedience ſake) yea, not lifting up their own hands to defend their own heads, only uſed the poor ſhift of flying from their Enemies till at length the rage of thoſe bloody Perſecutors, ſatisfied with no Blood, nor contented with any reaſon, ceaſed not ſtill moſt furiouſly to inveſt them, yea, to take alſo the Mountains from them, which had taken from them their Houſes before; neither yet permitting them to live with the wild Beaſts in the Deſert, which could not live in their Towns at home, till at length, by extream neceſſity, the Providence of God ſo working with them, they were compelled to turn their faces, and to take thoſe Weapons, which the ground gave unto their hands. And with theſe ſtones ſo marvellouſly the God of Hoſts wrought for his People, that they beat, vanquiſhed, and overthrew their Adverſaries, they confounded their Pride, they abated their Malice, and at laſt ſtayed the intollerable rage of their Perſecution. So mercifully and victoriouſly the Lord God Omnipotent fought with his People, or rather for his People, they but turning almoſt their faces to their Enemies, no otherwiſe than he fought in times paſt with Joſhua againſt the Heathen, with the Iſraelites againſt the Philiſtims, with the Macchabees againſt Antiochus and the Syrians.

Then they which are in Jewry, let them fly into the Mountains. Luke 21.

The Waldoys compelled to defend themſelves.

Note how the Lord bleſſed the Waldoys, ſtanding to their own defence.

This Hiſtory carrying with it a true narration of things done in the ſaid Country of Piedmont, and written as it ſeemeth by certain of the Miniſters which were at the doing thereof, with the like faith and ſimplicity we have collected partly out of the Italian, and partly out of the French Tongue: for in both Languages it is written, altho in the French Tongue it is much more largely diſcourſed, which Book moſt principally herein we have followed; the Title whereof thus beginneth, Hiſtoire des perſecutiones & Guerres faits contre le peuple appelle Vaudoys, &c.

Now that we have finiſhed theſe Forreign Hiſtories concerning ſuch Matters as have been paſſed in other Realms and Nations, of Germany, Italy, Spain, France, and Savoy: conſequently it remaineth, after this digreſs, to return and reduce our ſtory again to our own Country Matters, here done and paſſed at Home, after that firſt we ſhall have added one forreign Story more concerning the martyrdom of a Chriſtian Jew, which ſuffered about theſe years in Conſtantinople among the Turks, in this wiſe as followeth.

The ſtory of a Chriſtian Jew in Conſtantinople, martyred by the Turks.

A Jew chriſtened and martyred at Conſtantinople. Anno 1528.

TO theſe Forreign Martyrs aforeſaid we will adjoin the Hiſtory of a certain Jew, who in the year of our Lord 1528, dwelling in the City of Conſtantinople, and there receiving the Sacrament of Baptiſm, was converted, and became a good Chriſtian. When the Turks underſtood hereof, they were vehemently exaſperated againſt him, that he forſaking his Jewiſhneſs, ſhould be regenerate to the Faith of Chriſt: and fearing leſt his Converſation ſhould be a detriment to their Mahometical Law, they ſought means how to put him to death; which in ſhort time after they accompliſhed. And for the greater infamy to be done to the Man, they caſt his dead Corps into the ſtreets, commanding that no Man ſhould be ſo hardy as to bury the ſame.

A Chriſtian Jew Martyr.

The Turks of Conſtantinople.

Wherein the marvellous Glory and Power of Chriſt appeared. For the dead Corps lying ſo by the ſpace of nine days in the midſt of the ſtreets, retained ſo his native colour, and was ſo freſh, without any kind of filthineſs or corruption, and alſo not without a certain pleaſant and delectable ſcent or odour, as if it had been lately ſlain, or rather not ſlain at all. Which when the Turks beheld, they were thereat marvellouſly aſtonied; and being greatly afraid, they themſelves took it up, and carried it to a place near without the Town, and buried it.

The Concluſion.

The Contents of the Book following.

HAving thus comprehended the Troubles and Perſecutions of ſuch godly Saints, and bleſſed Martyrs, which have ſuffered in other Forreign Nations above mentioned: here now ending with them, and beginning the eighth Book, we are, God willing, to return again to our own Matters, and to proſecute ſuch Acts and Records, as to our own Countrey of England do appertain. In the proceſs whereof, among many other things, may appear the marvellous Work of God's Power and Mercy in ſuppreſſing and baniſhing out of this Realm, the long uſurped Supremacy of the Pope: alſo in ſubverting and overthrowing the Houſes of Monks and Friers, with divers other matters appertaining to the Reformation of Chriſt's true Church and Religion. All which things as they have been long wiſhed, and greatly groaned for in times paſt of many godly learned Men: ſo much more ought we now to rejoice and give God thanks, ſeeing theſe days of Reformation which God hath given us. If John Huſſe, or good Jerome of Prague, or John Wickliff before them both, or William Brute, Thorpe, Swinderby, or the Lord Cobham; If Ziſca with all the Company of the Bohemians; if the Earl Reymundus, with all the Tholoſſians; if the Waldoys, or the Albigenſes, with infinite other, had been either in theſe our Times now, or elſe had ſeen then this ruin of the Pope, and revealing of Antichriſt, which the Lord now hath diſpended unto us, what joy and triumph would they have made! Wherefore now beholding that thing which they ſo long time have wiſhed for, let us not think the benefit to be ſmall, but render therefore moſt humble thanks to the Lord our God: who by his mighty Power, and the brightneſs of his Word, hath revealed this great Enemy of his ſo manifeſtly to the eyes of all Men, who before was hid in the Church ſo colourably, that almoſt few Chriſtians could eſpy him. For who would ever have judged or ſuſpected in his mind, the Biſhop of Rome (commonly received and believed, almoſt of all Men, to be the Vicar and Vicegerent of Chriſt here in Earth) to be Antichriſt, and the great Adverſary of God, whom St. Paul ſo expreſly propheſieth of in theſe latter days to be revealed by the brightneſs of the Lord's coming, as all Men now for the moſt part may ſee it is come to paſs? Wherefore to the Lord, and Father of Lights, who revealeth all things in his due time, be praiſe and glory for ever. Amen.

Antichriſt long hid, and now revealed.

At Coventry Anno 1521.

In the ſame number of theſe Country Men above rehearſed was alſo Robert Silkeb, who at the apprehenſion of theſe, as is above recited, fled away, and for that time eſcaped. But about two years after he was taken again, and brought to the ſaid City of Coventry, where he was alſo burned the morrow after he came thither, which was about the Thirteenth day of January, Anno 1521.

Thus, when theſe were diſpatched, immediately the Sheriffs went to their Houſes, and took all their Goods and Cattel to their own uſe, not leaving their Wives and Children any parcel thereof to help themſelves withal. And forſomuch as the people began to grudge ſomewhat at the cruelty ſhewed, and at the unjuſt death of theſe innocent Martyrs, the Biſhop, with his Officers and Prieſts, cauſed it to be noiſed abroad by their Tenants, Servants, and Farmers, that they were not burned for having the Lords Prayer and the Commandments in Engliſh, but becauſe they did eat Fleſh on Fridays and other Faſt days. Which could not be proved either before their death or after, nor yet was any ſuch matter greatly objected to them in their examinations. The witneſſes of this Hiſtory be yet alive, which both ſaw them and knew them. Of whom one is by name Mother Hall, dwelling now in Bagington, two miles from Coventry. By whom alſo this is teſtified of them, that they above all other in Coventry pretended moſt ſhew of worſhip and devotion at the holding up of the Sacrament, whether to colour the matter, or no, it is not known. This is certain, that in godlineſs of life they differed from all the reſt of the City: Neither in their occupying would they uſe any Oath, nor could abide it in them that occupied with them.

Patrick Hamelton a Scottiſh Man born, of an high and Noble Stock, and of the Kings blood, young, and of flouriſhing age, and excellent towardneſs, of twenty three years, called Abbot of Ferme, firſt coming out of his Country with three companions, to ſeek godly learning, went to the Univerſity of Marpurge in Germany, which Univerſity was then newly Erected by Philip Lantgrave of Heſs, where he uſing conference and familiarity with learned men, namely with Franciſcus Lambertus, ſo profited in knowledge, and mature judgment in matters of Religion, that he through the incitation of the ſaid Lambert was the firſt in all that Univerſity of Marpurge which publickly did ſet up Concluſions there to be diſputed of, concerning Faith and Works: arguing alſo no leſs learnedly than fervently upon the ſame. What theſe propoſitions and concluſions were, partly in his Treatiſe hereafter following, called Patricks Places, may appear.

Of this Philip Lantgrave of Heſſe, read before.

Of the Univerſity of Marpurge read before.

Thus the ingenious wit of this learned Patrick increaſing daily more and more in knowledge, and inflamed with godlineſs, at length began to revolve with himſelf touching his return into his Country, being deſirous to impart unto his Country-men, ſome fruit of underſtanding which he had received abroad. Whereupon, perſiſting in his godly purpoſe, he took one of the three which he brought out of Scotland, and ſo return home without any longer delay. Where he not ſuſtaining the miſerable ignorance and blindneſs of that people, after he had valiantly taught and preached the truth, and refelled their abuſes, was firſt accuſed of Hereſie, and afterward conſtantly and ſtoutly ſuſtaining the quarrel of Gods Goſpel, againſt the High-Prieſt and Archbiſhop of Saint Andrews, named James Betón, was cited to appear before him and his College of Prieſts, the Firſt day of March, An. 1527. But he being not only forward in knowledge, but alſo ardent in Spirit, not tarrying for the hour appointed, prevented the time, and came very early in the morning before he was looked for, and there mightily diſputing againſt them, when he could not by the Scriptures be convicted, by force he was oppreſſed: and ſo the Sentence of Condemnation being given againſt him, the ſame day after Dinner, in all the hot haſte, he was had away to the Fire, and there Burned; the King being yet but a Child, which thing made the Biſhops more bold. And thus was this Noble Hamelton, the bleſſed Servant of God, without all juſt cauſe, made away be cruel Adverſaries, yet not without great fruit to the Church of Chriſt; for the grave teſtimony of his blood left the verity and truth of God more fixed and confirmed in the hearts of many, than ever could after be plukt away: inſomuch that divers afterward, ſtanding in his quarel, ſuſtained alſo the like Martyrdom, as hereafter (Chriſt willing) ſhall appear, as place and time ſhall require.

{KING Hen.8.}

The Articles and Opinions objected againſt Maſter Patrick Hamelton, by James Beton Archbiſhop of Saint Andrews.

Articles out of the Regiſters.

THat Man hath no Free-will.

That there is no Purgatory.

That the Holy Patriarks were in Heaven before Chriſts paſſion.

That the Pope hath no power to looſe and bind: Neither any Pope had that power after Saint Peter.

That the Pope is Antichriſt, and that every Prieſt hath the power that the Pope hath.

That Maſter Patrick Hamelton was a Biſhop.

That it is not neceſſary to obtain any Bulls from any Biſhop.

That the Vow of the Popes Religion is a Vow of Wickedneſs.

That the Popes Laws be of no ſtrength.

That all Chriſtians, worthy to be called Chriſtians, do know that they be in the ſtate of Grace.

That none be ſaved, but they are before Predeſtinate.

Whoſoever is in deadly ſin, is unfaithful.

That God is the cauſe of ſin, in this ſenſe, that is, that he withdraweth his grace from Men, whereby they ſin.

That it is diveliſh Doctrine, to enjoyn to any ſinner actual penance for ſin.

That the ſaid Maſter Patrick himſelf doubteth whether all Children, departing incontinent after their Baptiſm, are ſaved or condemned.

That Auricular Confeſſion is not neceſſary to Salvation.

¶ Theſe Articles above written were given in, and laid againſt M. Hamelton, and inſerted in their Regiſters, for the which alſo he was condemned, by them which hated him to death. But other learned Men, which communed and reaſoned with him, do teſtifie, that theſe Articles following were the very Articles, for the which he ſuffered.

His Articles otherwiſe more truly collected.

1. Man hath no Free-wil.
2. A Man is only juſtified by Faith in Chriſt.
3. A Man ſo long as he liveth, is not without ſin.
4. He is not worthy to be called a Chriſtian, which believeth not that he is in grace.
5. A good Man doth good Works: good Works do not make a good Man.
6. An evil Man bringeth forth evil Works: evil Works, being faithfully repented, do not make an evil Man.
7. Faith, Hope, and Charity be ſo linked together, that one of them cannot be without another in one Man in this Life.

And as touching the other Articles, whereupon the Doctors gave their Judgments, as divers do report, he was not accuſed of them before the Biſhop. Albeit in private diſputation he affirmed and defended the moſt of them.

Here followeth the Sentence Pronounced againſt him.

The ſentence againſt M. Patrick Hamelton.

CHriſti nomine invocato: We James, by the mercy of God, Archbiſhop of Saint Andrews, Primate of Scotland, with the Council, Decree, and Authority of the Moſt reverend Fathers in God, and Lords, Abbots, Doctors, of Theology, Profeſſors of the Holy Scripture, and Maſters of the Univerſity, aſſiſting us for the time, ſitting in Judgment within our Metropolitan Church of Saint Andrews, in the cauſe of Heretical pravity, againſt Maſter Patrick Hamelton, Abbot or Penſionary of Ferme, being ſummoned to appear before us, to anſwer to certain Articles affirmed, taught, and preached by him, and ſo appearing before us, and accuſed, the merits of the cauſe being ripely weighed, diſcuſſed, and underſtood by faithful Inquiſition made in Lent laſt paſt: We have found the ſame Maſter Patrick many ways infamed with Hereſie, diſputing, holding and maintaining divers Hereſies of Martin Luther, and his Followers, repugnant to our Faith, and which are already * condemned by general Councils, and moſt famous Univerſities. And he being under the ſame Infamy, we decerning before him to be ſummoned and accuſed upon the Premiſſes, he of evil mind (as may be preſumed) paſſed to other parts forth of the Realm, ſuſpected and noted of Hereſie. And being lately returned, not being admitted, but of his own head, without licence or priviledge, hath preſumed to preach wicked Hereſie.

* Condemned by Councils and Univerſities but here is no mention of the Scripture.

We have found alſo, that he hath affirmed, publiſhed, and taught divers Opinions of Luther, and wicked Hereſies, after that he was ſummoned to appear before us, and our Council: That Man hath no Free-will: That Man is in ſin ſo long as he liveth: That Children, incontinent after their Baptiſm, are ſinners: All Chriſtians, that be worthy to be called Chriſtians, do know that they are in grace: No man is juſtified by works, but by faith only: Good works make not a good man, but a good man doth make good works: That Faith, Hope, and Charity are ſo knit, that he that hath the one hath the reſt, and he that wanteth the one of them wanteth the reſt, &c. with divers other Hereſies and deteſtable Opinions: and hath perſiſted ſo obſtinate in the ſame, that by no counſel nor perſwaſion he may be drawn there-from to the way of our right faith.

Note here that theſe Articles agree not with the Articles in the Regiſter before mentioned.

Wolves in Lambsskins.

All theſe premiſes being conſidered, we having God and the integrity of our Faith before our eyes, and following the council and advice of the Profeſſors of the holy Scripture, Men of Law, and other aſſiſting us for the time, do pronounce, determine, and declare the ſaid Maſter Patrick Hamelton, for his affirming, confeſſing, and maintaining of the foreſaid Hereſies, and his pertinacity (they being condemned already by the Church, general Councils, and moſt famous Univerſities) to be an Heretick, and to have an evil opinion of the Faith, and therefore to be condemned and puniſhed like as we condemn, and define him to be puniſhed, by this our ſentence definitive, depriving and ſentencing him to be deprived of all Dignities, Orders, Offices, and Benefices of the Church; and therefore do judge and pronounce him to be delivered over unto the ſecular Power, to be puniſhed, and his goods to be confiſcate.

M. Patrick given to the ſecular Power.

This our ſentence definitive was given and read at our Metropolitan Church of St. Andrews, the laſt day of the Month of February, Anno 1527. being preſent the Moſt reverend Fathers in Chriſt, and Lords, Gawand, Biſhop, of Glaſgow, George, Biſhop Dunkelden, John Biſhop of Brecham, William Biſhop of Dunblane, Patrick Prior of Saint Andrews, David Abbot of Abirbrothoke, George Abbot of Dunfermeling, Alexander, Abbot of Cannbuskineth, Henry Abbot of Lendors, John Prior of Peterweme, the Dean and Subdean of Glaſgow, M. Hugh Spens, Thomas Ramſay, Allane Meldrum, &c. In the preſence of the Clergy and the People.

After the condemnation and Martyrdom of this true Saint of God was diſpatched by the Biſhops and Doctors of Scotland, the Rulers and Doctors of the Univerſity of Lovaine, hearing thereof, received ſuch joy and conſolation at the ſhedding of that innocent Blood, that for the abundance of heart they could not ſtay their Pen to utter condign thanks, applauding and triumphing in their Letters ſent to the aforeſaid Biſhop of Saint Andrews, and Doctors of Scotland, at the worthy and famous deſervings of their atchieved enterpriſe in that behalf; as by the Tenour of their ſaid Letter may appear, which here followeth.

¶ The copy of a Letter congratulatory, ſent from the Doctors of Lovaine to the Archbiſhop of Saint Andrews and Doctors of Scotland, commending them for the death of M. Patrick Hamelton.

A Letter of thanks, ſent from Lovaine to them of Scotland for ſhedding the blood of Patrick Hamelton.

YOur excellent Vertue (moſt honourable Biſhop) hath ſo deſerved, that albeit we be far diſtant both by Sea and Land, without conjunction of familiarity, yet we deſire with all our hearts to thank you for your worthy deed, by whoſe works that true Faith, which not long ago was tainted with Hereſie, not only remaineth unhurt, but alſo is more confirmed. For as our dear Friend

Maſter Alexander Galoway, Chanon of Aberden, hath ſhewed us the preſumption of the wicked Heretick Patrick Hamelton, which is expreſſed in this your example, in that you have cut off when there was no hope of amendment, &c.

What joy the Papiſts make in ſpilling the blood of Chriſtians.

The which thing as it is thought commendable to us, ſo the manner of the proceeding was no leſs pleaſant, that the matter was performed by ſo great conſent of ſo many States, as of the Clergy, Nobility, and vulgar People, not raſhly, but moſt prudently, the Order of Law being in all points obſerved. We have ſeen the ſentence which ye pronounced, and alway do approve the ſame, not doubting but that the Articles which be inſerted are Erroneous: ſo that whoſoever will defend for a truth any one of the ſame, with pertinacity, ſhould be eſteemed an enemy to the Faith, and an adverſary to the holy Scripture. And albeit one or two of them appear to be without Error, to them that will conſider only the bare words; as for example, Good Works make not a good Man, but a good Man worketh good Works; yet there is no doubt but they contain a Lutheran ſenſe, which in a manner they ſignifie, to wit, that Works done after faith and juſtification make not a Man the better, nor are worthy of any reward before God. Believe not that this example ſhall have place only among you, for there ſhall be among externe Nations which ſhall imitate the ſame, &c.

If ye could ſhew to what place of the Scripture, we would gladly hear you. The Univerſity of St. Andrews was founded about the year of our Lord 1516. in the reign of King James the firſt, who brought into Scotland out of other Countries two Doctors of Divinity, and eight Doctors of Decrees: with divers other. Hect. Boet. lib. 16. c. 17.

Certainly ye have given us great courage, ſo that now we acknowledge your Univerſity, which was founded according to the example of our Univerſity of Lovaine, to be equal to ours, or elſe above; and would God occaſion were offered of teſtifying our minds toward you. In the mean time let us labour with one conſent, that the ravening Wolves may be expelled from the Sheepfold of Chriſt, while we have time. Let us ſtudy to Preach to the People more learnedly hereafter, and more wiſely. Let us have Inquiſitors, and eſpiers of Books containing that Doctrine, eſpecially that are brought in from far Countries, whether by Apoſtative Monks, or by Merchants, the moſt ſuſpected kind of Men in theſe days. It is ſaid, That ſince Scotland firſt embraced the Chriſtian Faith, it was never defiled with any Hereſie. Perſevere therefore, being moved thereunto by the example of England your next Neighbour, which in this moſt troublous time is not changed, partly by the working of the Biſhops, among the which * Roffenſis hath ſhewed himſelf an Evangelical Phœnix, and partly of the King, declaring himſelf to be another Matthias of the New Law, pretermitting nothing that may defend the Law of his Realm. The which if your Moſt renowned King of Scotland will follow, he ſhall purchaſe to himſelf Eternal glory. Further as touching the condign commendation due for your part (Moſt reverend Biſhop) in this behalf, it ſhall not be the leaſt part of your praiſe, that theſe Hereſies have been extinct ſometimes in Scotland, you being Primate of Scotland, and principal Author thereof: albeit that they alſo which have aſſiſted you, are not to be defrauded of their deſerved praiſe; as the reverend Biſhop of Glaſgow, of whoſe erudition we have here given us partly to underſtand, and alſo the reverend Biſhop of Aberden, a ſtout Defender of the Faith, together with the reſt of the Prelates, Abbots, Priors, and Profeſſors of holy Scripture. Let your reverend Fatherhood take this little teſtificate of our duty toward you in good part, whom we wiſh long and happily well to fare in Chriſt.

From Lovain, Anno 1528. April 21.

By the Maſters and Profeſſors of Theology in the Univerſity of Lovaine.

Yours to command.

* He meaneth Fiſher B. of Rochester, who wrote againſt Oecolampadius and Luther, and at length was beheaded for Treaſon. King Henry the Eighth is here a Mathias, when he maketh with you, but when he put down the Pope and his Abbies, then ye make him an Heretick.

IN this Epiſtle of the Lovanian Doctors I ſhall not need (gentle Reader) to note unto thee, what a pernitious thing in a Common-wealth is blind ignorance, when it falleth into cruel Hearts. Which may well be compared to a Sword put into the Hands of one that is both Blind and Mad. For as the blind Man, having no ſenſe to ſee and judge, knoweth not whom he ſtriketh: ſo the madman, being cruel and furious, hath no compaſſion in ſparing any. Whereupon it happeneth many times with theſe Men, as it did with the Blind furious Phariſees, that as they having the Sword of Authority in their hands, in ſtead of Malefactors and falſe Prophets, ſlew the true Prophets of God, and at laſt Crucified the King of Glory: ſo theſe Catholick Lovanians, and followe their Meſſias of Rome, take in their hands the Sword of Juriſdiction, who neither ſeeing what to ſpare, nor can whom to ſmite, under the ſtile and pretence of Hereti murther and blaſpheme, without mercy, the true Preachers of the Goſpel, and the holy Anointed of the Lord.

But to return to the matter again of M. Hamelton; here is moreover to be obſerved, as a note worthy of memory, that in the year of our Lord 1564, in the which year this preſent Hiſtory was Collected in Scotland, there were certain faithful Men of credit then alive, who being preſent the ſame time when M. Patrick Hamelton was in the Fire, heard him to cite and appeal the Black-frier called Cambel, that accuſed him to appear before the high God, as general Judge of all Men, to anſwer to the innocency of his death, and whether this accuſation was juſt or not, between that and a certain day of the next Month, which he there named. Moreover, by the ſame witneſs it is teſtified, that the ſaid Frier died immediately before the ſaid day came, without remorſe of conſcience that he had perſecuted the innocent. By the example whereof divers of the people the ſame time much muſed, and firmly believed the Doctrine of the foreſaid Maſter Hamelton to be good and juſt.

A marvelous example of Gods juſt puniſhment upon the accuſer, of M. Hamelton.

Hereunto I thought good to adjoyn a certain godly and profitable Treatiſe of the ſaid M. Patrick Hamelton, written firſt by him in Latin, and afterward tranſlated by John Frith into Engliſh; which he names Patricks places; not unprofitable in my mind, to be ſeen and read of all Men, for the pure and comfortable Doctrine contained in the ſame, as not only by the Treatiſe it ſelf may appear, but alſo by the preface of the ſaid John Frith, prefixed before, which alſo I thought not inconvenient to inſert with the ſame, as here followeth.

A Treatiſe of M. Patrick Hamelton, called Patricks Places.

A brief Treatiſe of M. Patrick Hamelton, called Patricks places, Tranſlated into Engliſh by John Frith, with the Epiſtle of the ſaid Frith prefixed before the ſame, as followeth.

John Frith unto the Chriſtian Reader.

The Preface of John Frith before Patricks Places.

BLeſſed be God of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which in theſe laſt days and perilous times hath ſtirred up in all Countries witneſſes unto his Son, to teſtifie the truth unto the unfaithful, to ſave at the leaſt ſome from the ſnares of Antichriſt, which lead to perdition, as ye may here perceive by that excellent and well learned young Man, Patrick Hamelton, born in Scotland of noble Progeny: who to teſtifie the truth ſought all means, and took upon him Prieſthood (even as Paul circumciſed Timothy, to win the weak Jews) that he might be admitted to Preach the pure Word of God. Notwithſtanding, as ſoon as the Chamberlain and other Biſhops of Scotland had perceived that the Light began to ſhine, which diſcloſed their falſehood that they conveyed in darkneſs, they laid hands on him, and becauſe he would not deny his Saviour Chriſt at their inſtance, they burnt him to aſhes. Nevertheleſs, God of his bounteous mercy (to publiſh to the whole World what a Man theſe Monſters have murthered) hath reſerved a little Treatiſe, made by this Patrick, which if ye liſt, ye may call Patricks Places: for it treateth exactly of certain Common places, which known, ye have the pith of all Divinity. This Treatiſe I have turned into the Engliſh-Tongue, to the profit of my Nation: to whom I beſeech God to give light, that they may eſpie the deceitful paths of perdition, and return to the right way which leadeth to life everlaſting, Amen.

The Doctrine of the Law.

What the Law is.

THe Law is a Doctrine that biddeth good, and forbiddeth evil, as the Commandments do ſpecifie here following.

The

{KING Hen. 8.}

The Ten Commandments of God.

A division of the Commandments. Ex. 20.

1. Thou shalt Worship but one God.
2. Thou shalt make thee no Image to worship it.
3. Thou shalt not swear by his Name in Vain.
4. Hold the Sabbath day Holy.
5. Honour thy Father and thy Mother.
6. Thou shalt not kill.
7. Thou shalt not commit adultery.
8. Thou shalt not steal.
9. Thou shalt not bear false witness.
10. Thou shalt not desire ought that belongeth to thy Neighbour.

All these Commandments are briefly comprised in these two here under ensuing.

The love of God. The love of our Neighbour. Mat. 22. Love thy Lord God with all thine Heart, with all thy Soul, and with all thy Mind, This is the first, and great Commandment. The second is like unto this, that is, Love thy Neighbour as thy self. On these two Commandments hangeth all the Law and the Prophets.

Certain General Propositions proved by the Scripture.

The first Proposition.

He that loveth God loveth his Neighbour.

The first Proposition. Probation. 1 Joh. 4. This Proposition is proved 1 John 4. If a Man say, I love God, and yet hateth his Brother, he is a lyer. He that loveth not his Brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?

The second Proposition.

The second Proposition. Mat. 7. Rom. 13. He that loveth his Neighbour as himself, keepeth all the Commandments of God.

This Proposition is proved Mat. 7. Rom. 18. Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, even so do to them. For this is the Law and the Prophets, Matth. 7.

He that loveth his Neighbour, fulfilleth the Law. Thou shalt not commit adultery: Thou shalt not kill: Thou shalt not steal: Thou shalt not bear false witness: Thou shalt not desire, &c. And if there be any other Commandment, all are comprehended in this saying, Love thy neighbour as thy self, Rom. 13. Rom. 13.

All the Law is fulfilled in one word, That is, Love thy Neighbour as thy self. Galathians 5. Gal. 5.

℄ Argument.

Major. Bar- He that loveth his Neighbour keepeth all the Commandments of God. Romans 13.

Minor. ba- He that loveth God, loveth his Neighbour. 1 Joh. 4.

Conclusion. ra. Ergo, he that loveth God keepeth all the Commandments of God.

The fourth Proposition.

The third Proposition. Probation. Joh. 16. He that hath Faith loveth God.

My Father loveth you, because you love me, and believe that I come of God. John 16.

℄ Argument.

Major. Bar- He that keepeth the Commandments of God hath the love of God.

Minor. ba- He that hath Faith keepeth all the Commandments of God.

Conclusion. ra. Ergo, he that hath Faith loveth God.

The fourth Proposition.

The fourth Proposition. Probation. Hebr. 11. He that keepeth one Commandment of God, keepeth them all.

This Proposition is confirmed, Heb. 11. It is impossible for a Man without Faith to please God, that is, To keep any one of Gods Commandments, as he should do: Then whosoever keepeth any one Commandment hath Faith.

℄ Argument.

Major. Bar- He that hath Faith keepeth all the Commandments of God.

Minor. ba- He that keepeth one Commandment of God hath Faith.

Conclusion. ra. Ergo, he that keepeth one Commandment, keepeth them all.

The fifth Proposition.

The fifth Proposition. He that keepeth not all the Commandments of God, keepeth not one of them.

Argument.

The Law requireth perfect obedience. Enthimema. He that keepeth one Commandment of God, keepeth all.

Ergo, he that keepeth not all the Commandments of God, keepeth not one of the.

The sixth Proposition.

The sixth Proposition or assertion. ℄ It is not in our power to keep any one of the Commandments of God.

Argument.

Major. Bar- It is unpossible to keep any of the Commandments of God, without grace.

Minor. ro- It is not in our power to have Grace.

Conclusion. co. Ergo, it is not in our power to keep any of the Commandments of God.

And even so may you reason concerning the Holy Ghost and Faith, forsomuch as neither without them we are able to keep any of the Commandments of God, neither yet be they in our power to have. Non est volentis neque currentis, &c. Rom. 9.

The seventh Proposition.

The seventh Proposition. The Office of the Law. ℄ The Law was given us to shew our sin.

By the Law cometh the knowledge of sin; Rom. 3. I knew not what sin meant, but through the Law: For I had not known what lust had meant, except the Law had said, Thou shalt not lust. Without the Law sin was dead, that is, It moved me not, neither wist I that it was sin, which notwithstanding was sin, and forbidden by the Law; Rom. 7. Rom. 7.

The eighth Proposition.

The eighth Proposition. ℄ The Law biddeth us do that thing which is impossible for us.

℄ Argument.

Major. Da- The keeping of the Commandments is to us unpossible.

Minor. ri- The Law commandeth to us the keeping of the Commandments.

Conclusion. i. Ergo, the Law commandeth unto us that is unpossible.

Objection. Objection.

But thou wilt say; Wherefore doth God bid us do that is unpossible for us?

Answer. Answer.

The Law ordained to bring us to Christ. I answer, to make thee know that thou art but evil, and that there is no remedy to save thee in thine own hand: and thou maiest seek remedy at some other: for the Law doth nothing else but command thee.

The Doctrine of the Goſpel.

THe Goſpel is as much to ſay in our Tongue, as good tydings; like as theſe be here-under following, and ſuch other.

John 4. Chriſt is the Saviour of the World.

Luke 2. The Goſpel is the Word of Comfort.
Rom. 7. The Law is the word of Unreſt.
Eph. 6. The Goſpel is the Word of Peace.

℄ A Diſputation between the Law and the Goſpel; where is ſhewed the difference or contrariety between them both.

The contrary operation of the Law, and of the Goſpel.

THe Law ſaith, Pay thy Debt.
The Goſpel ſaith, Chriſt hath paid it.
The Law ſaith, Thou art a Sinner, deſpair, and thou ſhalt be damned.
The Goſpel ſaith, Thy ſins are forgiven thee, be of good comfort, for thou ſhalt be ſaved.

The Goſpel ſaith, Chriſt is thy Righteouſneſs, thy Goodneſs, Satisfaction.
The Law ſaith, Thou art bound and obliged to me, to the Devil, and to Hell.
The Goſpel ſaith, Chriſt hath delivered thee from them all.

The Doctrine of Faith.

The Doctrine of Faith.

FAith is to believe God, like as Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for Righteouſneſs.

To believe God, is to believe his Word, and to recount it true that he ſaith.

He that believeth not Gods Word, believeth not God himſelf.

He that believeth not Gods Word counteth him falſe and a lyar, and believeth not that he may and will [illegible] his Word, and ſo he denieth both the might of God, and God himſelf.

Without Faith it is unpoſſible to pleaſe God, Rom. 14. all that cometh not of Faith is ſin; for without Faith can no man pleaſe God, Heb. 11.

Induction.

An argument called Inductio.

He that lacketh Faith truſteth not God, he that truſteth not God, truſteth not his Word; he that truſteth not his Word, holdeth him falſe and a lyar; he that holdeth him falſe and a lyar believeth not that he may do that he promiſeth, and ſo denieth he that he is God.

Ergo, a primo ad ultimum, he that lacketh Faith cannot pleaſe God.

A compariſon between Faith and Incredulity.

¶ A Compariſon between Faith and Incredulity.

FAith is the root of all good.
Incredulity is the root of all evil.
Faith maketh God and man good Friends.
Incredulity maketh them Foes.
Faith bringeth God and man together.
Incredulity ſundreth them.
All that Faith doth, pleaſeth God.
All that Incredulity doth, diſpleaſeth God.
Faith only maketh a man good and righteous.
Incredulity only maketh him unjuſt and evil.
Faith maketh a man a Member of Chriſt.
Incredulity maketh him a Member of the Devil.
Faith maketh him Inheritor of Heaven.
Incredulity maketh a man the Inheritor of Hell.
Faith maketh a man the Servant of God.
Incredulity maketh him the Servant of the Devil.
Faith ſheweth us God to be a ſweet Father.
Incredulity ſheweth him a terrible Judge.
Faith holdeth ſtiff by the Word of God.
Incredulity wavereth here and there.
Faith counteth and holdeth God to be true.
Incredulity holdeth him falſe and a lyar.
Faith knoweth God.
Incredulity knoweth him not.
Faith loveth both God and his Neighbour.
Incredulity loveth neither of them.
Faith only ſaveth us.
Incredulity only condemneth us.

Faith

Faith extolleth God and his deeds.
Incredulity extolleth her ſelf and her own deeds.

Of Hope.

What Hope is.

HOpe is a truſty looking after the thing that is promiſed us to come as we hope after the everlaſting Joy, which Chriſt hath promiſed unto all that believe in him.

We ſhould put our hope and truſt in God alone, and in no other thing.

IT is good to truſt in God and not in man, Pſalm 118.

He that truſteth in his own heart is a Fool, Prov. 28.

It is good to truſt in God, and not in Princes, Pſal. 118.

They ſhall be like unto the Images which they make, and all that truſt in them, Pſal. 115.

He that truſteth in his own thoughts doth ungodly, Prov. 12.

Curſed is he that truſteth in man, Jer. 17.

Bid the rich men of this World that they truſt not in their unſtable riches, but that they truſt in the living God, 1 Tim. 6.

It is had for them that truſt in money to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, Luke 18.

Moreover we ſhould truſt in him only, that may help us, God only may help us, therefore we ſhould truſt in him only.

Well are they that truſt in God, and woe to them that truſt not in him, Pſal. 2. Jer. 17.

Well is that man that truſteth in God, for God ſhall be his truſt, Pſal. 14. Eccleſ. 34.

He that truſteth in him ſhall underſtand the verity, Sap. 3.

They ſhall rejoyce that truſt in thee: they ſhall ever be glad, and thou wilt defend them, Pſal. 5.

Of Charity.

The rule of Charity.

CHarity is the love of thy Neighbour. The rule of Charity is this; Do as thou wouldſt be done to: for Chriſt holdeth all alike, the Rich, the Poor, the Friend and the Foe, the Thankful and Unthankful, the Kinſman and Stranger.

A Compariſon between Faith, Hope, and Charity.

A difference between Faith, Hope and Charity

FAith cometh of the Word of God, Hope cometh of Faith, and Charity ſpringeth of them both.

Faith believeth the Word, Hope truſteth after that that is promiſed by the Word; Charity doth good unto her Neighbour, through the love that it hath to God, and gladneſs that is within her ſelf.

Faith looketh to God and his Word; Hope looketh unto his Gift and Reward; Charity looketh on her Neighbours profit.

Faith receiveth God; Hope receiveth his Reward; Charity loveth her Neighbour with a glad heart, and that without any reſpect of reward.

Faith pertaineth to God only; Hope to his Reward, and Charity to her Neighbour.

The Doctrine of Works.

No manner of Works make us righteous.

What good Works do.

WE believe that a man ſhall be juſtified without Works, Rom. 3.

No man is juſtified by the deeds of the Law, but by the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt, and we believe in Jeſus Chriſt that we may be juſtified by the Faith of Chriſt, and not by the deeds of the Law: for if righteouſneſs come by the Law, then died Chriſt in vain, Gal.

That no man is juſtified by the Law is manifeſt; for a Acts 17. righteous man liveth by his Faith, but the Law is not of Faith.

Moreover, ſith Chriſt the Maker of Heaven and Earth, and all that is therein, behoved to die for us, we are compelled to grant that we were ſo far drowned and ſunken in ſin, that neither our deeds, nor all the Treaſures that ever God made or might make, could have holpen us out of them: therefore no Deeds or Works may make us righteous.

No Works make us unrighteous.

Argumentum à contrario ſenſu.

IF any evil Works make us unrighteous; then the contrary Works ſhould make us righteous. But it is proved that no Works can make us righteous: therefore no Works make us unrighteous.

Works makes us neither good nor evil.

Works make us neither good nor evil before God.

IT is proved that Works neither make us righteous nor unrighteous: therefore no Works make us either good or evil; for righteous and good are one thing, and unrighteous and evil likewiſe one.

Good works make not a good man, nor evil works an evil man: but a good man bringeth forth good works, and an evil man evil works.

Good fruit maketh not the tree good, nor evil fruit the tree evil: But a good tree beareth good fruit, and an evil tree evil fruit.

The goodneſs of the tree goeth befok his fruit.

A good man cannot do evil works, nor an evil man good works: for a good tree cannot bear evil fruit, nor an evil tree good fruit.

A man is good ere he do good works, and evil ere he do evil works: for the tree is good ere it bear good fruit, and evil ere it bear evil fruit.

ℂ Every man, and the works of man, are either good or evil.

Good fruits are ſigns of a good tree, but not the cauſe thereof.

EVery tree, and the fruits thereof, are either good or evil. Either make ye the tree good, and the fruit good alſo, or elſe make the tree evil, and the fruit of it likewiſe evil, Mat. 12.

A good man is known by his works: for a good man doth good works, and an evil man evil works. Ye ſhall know them by their fruit; for a good tree beareth good fruit, and an evil tree evil fruit. A man is likened to the tree, and his works to the fruit of the tree.

Beware of the falſe Prophets, which come to you in ſheeps clothing, but inwardly they are ravening Wolves: Ye ſhall know them by their fruits, Luke 7.

ℂ None of our Works either ſave us or condemn us.

Objection.

IF works make us neither righteous nor unrighteous, then thou wilt ſay, It maketh no matter what we do. I anſwer, If thou do evil, it is a ſure argument that thou art evil, and wanteſt Faith. If thou do good, it is an argument that thou art good, and haſt Faith; for a good tree beareth good fruit, and an evil tree evil fruit. Yet good fruit makes not the tree good, nor evil fruit the tree evil; ſo that man is good ere he do good deeds, and evil ere he do evil deeds.

Anſwer.

ℂ The man is the tree, his works are the fruit.

Faith maketh the man good.

FAith maketh the good tree, and Incredulity the evil tree: ſuch a tree, ſuch fruit, ſuch a man, ſuch works. For all things that are done in Faith pleaſe God, and are good works: and all that are done without Faith diſpleaſe God, and are evil works.

A good man maketh good works.

To ſay that our Works do ſave us, is to deny that Chriſt is our Saviour.

Whoſoever believeth or thinketh to be ſaved by his works, denieth that Chriſt is his Saviour, that Chriſt died for him, and all things that pertain to Chriſt. For how is he thy Saviour, if thou migheſt ſave thy ſelf by thy works, or whereto ſhould he die for thee, if any works might have ſaved thee?

What is this to ſay, Chriſt died for thee? Verily that thou ſhouldſt have died perpetually; and Chriſt to deliver thee from death died for thee, and changed thy perpetual death, into his own death: for thou madeſt the fault, and he ſuffered the pain, and that for the love he had to thee before thou waſt born, when thou hadſt done neither good nor evil.

Now,

{KING Hen. 8.}

Now ſeeing he hath paid thy debt, thou needeſt not, neither canſt thou pay it; but ſhouldſt be damned if his blood were not. But ſith he was puniſhed for thee, thou ſhalt not be puniſhed.

Finally, he hath delivered thee from thy condemnation and all evil, and deſireth nought of thee, but that thou wilt acknowledge what he hath done for thee, and bear it in mind, and that thou wouldſt help other for his ſake both in word and deed, even as he hath holpen thee for nought, and without Reward.

O how ready would we be to help other, if we knew his goodneſs and gentleneſs towards us, he is a good and a gentle Lord, for he doth all for nought. Let us, I beſeech you, therefore follow his footſteeps, whom all the World ought to praiſe and worſhip. Amen.

ℂ He that thinketh to be ſaved by his Works calleth himſelf Chriſt.

No Saviour but Chriſt.

FOr he calleth himſelf the Saviour, which pertaineth to Chriſt only.

What is a Saviour, but he that ſaveth? and he ſaith, I ſaved my ſelf, which is as much to ſay as, I am Chriſt; for Chriſt only is the Saviour of the World.

ℂ We ſhould do no good Works for the intent to get the Inheritance of Heaven, or remiſſion of ſin.

No remiſſion but in Chriſt.

FOr whoſoever believeth to get the Inheritance of Heaven, or Remiſſion of Sin, through Works, he believeth not to get the ſame for Chriſts ſake; and they that believe not that their ſins are forgiven them, and that they ſhall be ſaved for Chriſts ſake, they believe not the Goſpel: for the Goſpel ſaith, You ſhall be ſaved for Chriſts ſake, your ſins are forgiven for Chriſts ſake.

He that believeth not the Goſpel, believeth not God. So it followeth, that they which believe to be ſaved by their works, or to get remiſſion of their ſins by their own deeds, believe not God, but recount him as a Lyar, and ſo utterly deny him to be God.

Objection.

Thou wilt ſay, Shall we then do no good deeds?

Anſwer.

Good works excluded not to be left undone, but not to juſtifie us, when they are done.

I ſay not ſo, but I ſay we ſhould do no good Works to the intent to get the Inheritance of Heaven, or Remiſſion of Sin. For if we believe to get the Inheritance of Heaven through good Works, then we believe not to get it through the promiſe of God. Or if we think to get Remiſſion of our Sins by our deeds, then we believe not that they are forgiven us, and ſo we count God a Lyar. For God ſaith, Thou ſhalt have the Inheritance of Heaven for my Sons ſake, Thy ſins are forgiven thee for my Sons ſake: and you ſay it is not ſo, But I will win it through my Works. Thus you ſee I condemn not good deeds, but I condemn the falſe truſt in any works; for all the works wherein a man putteth any confidence, are therewith poiſoned, and become evil.

Not the doing of good works, but the truſting in good works condemned.

Wherefore thou muſt do good works, but beware thou do them not to deſerve any good through them; for if thou do, thou receiveſt the good not as the Gifts of God, but as debt to thee, and makeſt thy ſelf Fellow with God, becauſe thou wilt take nothing of him for nought. And what needeth he any thing of thine, which giveth all things, and is not the poorer?

Therefore do nothing to him, but take of him, for he is a gentle Lord, and with a gladder will giveth us all that we need, than we can take it of him; if then we want ought, let us thank our ſelves.

Preſs not therefore to the Inheritance of Heaven through preſumption of thy good works; for if thou do, thou counteſt thy ſelf holy and equal to God, becauſe thou wilt take nothing of him for nought; and ſo ſhalt thou fall as Lucifer fell for his pride.

FINIS.

ℂ Certain brief Notes or Declarations upon the foreſaid places of Maſter Patrick.

Notes.

THis little Treatiſe of Maſter Patricks Places, albeit in quantity it be ſhort, yet in effect it comprehendeth matter able to fill large Volumes, declaring to us the true Doctrine of the Law, of the Goſpel, of Faith, and of Works, with the nature and properties, and alſo the difference of the ſame. Which difference is thus to be underſtood, that in the cauſe of Salvation, in the office of juſtifying, theſe are to be removed and ſeparated aſunder, the Law from the Goſpel, and Faith from Works: otherwiſe in the perſon that is juſtified, and alſo in order of Doctrine, they ought commonly to go neceſſarily together.

The Law and the Goſpel, how they are to be joyned, and how to be ſeparated

Therefore, whereſoever any queſtion, or doubt riſeth of Salvation, or our juſtifying before God, there the Law and all good works muſt be utterly excluded and ſtand apart, that Grace may appear free, the promiſe ſimple, and that Faith may ſtand alone, which Faith alone without Law or Works, worketh to every man particularly his Salvation, through meer promiſe, and the free Grace of God. This word particularly, I add, for the particular certifying of every mans heart, privately and peculiarly, that believeth in Chriſt. For as the Body of Chriſt is the cauſe efficient of the redemption of the whole World in general: ſo is Faith the inſtrumental cauſe, by which every man applieth the ſaid Body of Chriſt particularly to his own Salvation. So that in the action and office of Juſtification, both Law and Works here be utterly ſecluded and exempted, as things having nothing to do in this behalf. The reaſon is this, for ſeeing that all our Redemption univerſally ſpringeth only from the Body of the Son of God crucified, then is there nothing that can ſtand us in ſtead, but that only wherewith this Body of Chriſt is apprehended. Now, forſomuch as neither the Law nor Works, but Faith only is the thing which apprehendeth the Body and Death of Chriſt, therefore Faith only is that matter which juſtifieth every Soul before God, through the ſtrength of that object which it doth apprehend. For the object only of our Faith is the Body of Chriſt, like as the brazen Serpent was the object only of the eyes of the Iſraelites looking, and not of their hands working: by the ſtrength of which object, through the promiſe of God, immediately proceeded health to the beholders. So the Body of Chriſt, being the object of our Faith, ſtriketh righteouſneſs to our Souls, not through working, but believing only.

Grace free. Promiſe ſimple. Faith alone. Particularly

The Body of Chriſt is the efficient cauſe of our Redemption in general. Faith is the inſtrumental cauſe of every mans particular Salvation.

Note the object of Faith. Faith with her object only ſaveth. A ſimilitude between the brazen Serpent and Chriſts body

Thus you ſee how Faith, being the only eye of our Soul, ſtandeth alone with her object in caſe of juſtifying; but yet nevertheleſs, in the body ſhe ſtandeth not alone: for beſides the Eye, there be alſo Hands to work, Feet to walk, Ears to hear, and other Members more, every one convenient for the ſervice of the Body, and yet there is none of them all that can ſee, but only the eye. So in a Chriſtian mans life, and in order of Doctrine, there is the Law, there is Repentance, there is Hope, Charity, and deeds of Charity; all which in Life and in Doctrine are joyned, and neceſſarily do concur together, and yet in the action of juſtifying there is nothing elſe in man, that hath any part or place but only Faith apprehending the Object, which is the Body of Chriſt Jeſus for us crucified, in whom conſiſteth all the worthineſs and fulneſs of our Salvation, by Faith; that is, by our apprehending and receiving of him according as it is written, John 1. Whoſoever received him he gave them power to be made the Sons of God, even all ſuch as believed in his Name, &c. Alſo Eſay 53. And this juſt Servant of mine in the knowledge of him ſhall juſtifie many, &c.

Faith is only the eye of the Soul, which looketh to Chriſt

As many as received him, to them he gave power, &c. John 1.

And he by the knowledge of him ſhall juſtifie many, &c. Eſay 53.

Argument.

Da- Apprehending and receiving of Chriſt only maketh us juſtified before God, John 1.

ti- Chriſt only is apprehended and received by Faith.

ſi. Ergo, Faith only maketh us juſtified before God.

Argument.

Argument.

Ba- Justification cometh only by apprehending and receiving of Christ, Esay 53.
ro. The Law and Works do nothing pertain to the apprehending of Christ.
co. Ergo, the Law and Works pertain nothing to Justification.

Argument.

All our righteousness, is as filthy clouts Esay 64. Ce- Nothing which is unjust of it self can justifie us before God, or help any thing to our Justifying.
la- Every work we do is unjust before God, Esay 64.
re. Ergo, no work that we do can justifie us before God, nor help any thing to our justifying.

Argument.

When ye have done all that is commanded you, say we are unprofitable Servants, Luke 17. Without me ye can do nothing, John 15. Ca- If works could any thing further our Justification, then should our works something profit us before God.
me- No works, do the best we can, do profit us before God, Luke 17.
stres. Ergo, no works that we do can any thing further our Justification.

Argument.

Ba- All that we can do with God, is only by Christ, Joh. 15.
ro- Our works and merits be not Christ, neither any part of him.
co- Ergo, our works and merits can do nothing with God.

Argument.

The Law worketh anger, Rom. 4. Da- That which is the cause of condemnation, cannot be the cause of justification.
ri- The Law is the cause of comdemnation, Rom. 4.
i. Ergo, it is not the cause of Justification.

A Consequent.

Now are we quit and delivered from the Law, being dead to that wherein we were once holden. Rom. 7. We are quit and delivered from the Law, Rom. 7.
Ergo, we are not quit and delivered by the Law.

'Forsomuch therefore as the truth of the Scripture in 'expres words, hath thus included our Salvation in Faith 'only, we are enforced necessarily to exclude all other 'causes and means in our Justification, and to make this 'difference between the Law and the Gospel, between 'Faith and works, affirming, with Scripture and word of 'God, that the Law condemneth us, our works do not 'avail us, and that Faith in Christ only justifieth us. And 'this difference and distinction ought diligently to be learned 'and retained of all Christians, especially in conflict of con'sciencebetween the Law and the Gospel, Faith and Works, 'Grace and Merits, Promise and Condition, Gods free ele'ction and mans Free-will: so that the light of the free 'Grace of God in our Salvation may appear to all consci'ences, to the immortal Glory of Gods holy Name. Amen.

The order and difference of places.

Antithea. The Law to be discerned from the Gospel.

The Gospel. { Faith. { Promise. / Gods free } / Grace. { election. }

The Law. { Works. { Condition. / Merits. { Mans free-will. }

'The difference and repugnance of these foresaid places 'being well noted and expended, it shall give no small 'light to every faithful Christian, both to understand the 'Scriptures, to judge in cases of Conscience, and to recon'cile such places in the Old and New Testament, as else 'may seem to repugn, according to the rule of S. Augustine, 'saying, Distingue tempora, & conciliabis Scripturas, &c. 'Make distinction of times, and thou shalt reconcile the 'Scriptures, &c. Contrariwise where men be not perfectly 'in these places instructed, to discern between the Law 'and the Gospel, between faith and works, &c. So long 'they can never rightly establish their minds in the 'Promises of Gods Grace: but walk confidently out of 'order, in all matters of Religion. Example whereof 'have too much in the Romish-Church, who confoun 'these places together without distinction, following 'method, have perverted the true order of Christian Do'ctrine, and have obscured the sweet comfort and benefit 'of the Gospel of Christ, not knowing what the true use of 'the Law nor of the Gospel meaneth.

The fault of the Church in confounding these places.

℄ In the Doctrine of the Law three things to be noted.

'In the Law therefore three things are to be considered. 'First, what is the true vigour and strength of the Law, 'which is, to require full and perfect obedience of the whole 'man, not only to restrain his outward actions, but also 'his inward motions, and inclinations of will and affection 'from the appetite of sin. And therefore saith St. Paul, The 'Law is spiritual, but I am carnal, &c. Rom. 7. Where'upon riseth this Proposition, That it is not in our nature 'and power to fulfil the Law. Item, the Law commandeth 'that which is to us unpossible, &c.

The first point to be noted in the Doctrine of the Law.

The strength of the Law.

'2. The second thing to be noted in the Doctrine of 'the Law, is, to consider the time and place of the Law, 'what they be, and how far they extend. For as the 'surging Seas have their banks and bars to keep them in; 'so the Law hath its times and limits, which it ought not 'to pass. If Christ had not come and suffered, the time 'and dominion of the Law had been everlasting. But now 'seeing Christ hath come, and hath died in his righteous 'Flesh, the power of the Law against our sinful flesh doth 'cease. For the end of the Law is Christ, Rom. 10. that 'is, the death of Christs Body is the death of the 'Law to all that believe in him: so that whosoever re'pent of their sins, and flee to the death and passion of 'Christ, the condemnation and time of the Law to them 'is expired. Wherefore this is to be understood as a per'petual rule in the Scripture, that the Law with all his Sen'tences and Judgments, wheresoever they are written, ei'ther in the Old Testament or in the New, do ever include 'a privy exception of repentance and belief in Christ, to 'the which always it giveth place, having there his end, 'and can proceed no further: according as St. Paul doth 'say, The Law is our Schoolmaster until Christ, that we 'might be justified by Faith, Gal. 3.

The second thing to be noted in the Law.

The due time and place of the Law.

The death of Christ is the death of the Law, that is, of the condemnation of the Law.

The time of the Law how long it lasteth, Gal. 3.

'Moreover, as the Law hath his time how long to 'reign, so also it hath his proper place, where to reign. By 'the reign of the Law here is meant the condemnation of 'the Law: for as the time of the Law ceaseth when the 'Faith of Christ in a true repenting heart beginneth; so 'hath the Law no place in such as be good and faithful; 'that is, in Sinners repenting and amending, but only in 'them which be evil and wicked. Evil men here I call 'such, which walking in sinful flesh, are not yet driven by 'earnest Repentance to flee to Christ for Succour. And 'therefore saith St. Paul, To the just man there is no law 'set, but to the unjust and disobedient, &c. 1 Tim. 1. By 'the just man here is meant, not he which never had 'disease, but he who knowing his disease seeketh out the 'Physitian, and being cured, keepeth himself in health, as 'much as he may, from any more Surfeits. Notwithstand'ing he shall never so keep himself, but that his health '(that is, his new Obedience) shall always remain frail and 'unperfect, and shall continually need the Physitian. Where 'by the way these three things are to be noted; first, the 'sickness it self: secondly, the knowing of the sickness: 'thirdly, the Physitian. The sickness is sin. The know'ing of the sickness is repentance, which the Law worketh. 'The Physitian is Christ. And therefore although in re'mission of our sins repentance is joyned with faith, yet it is 'not the dignity or worthiness of Repentance that causeth 'remission of sins, but only the worthiness of Christ, 'whom faith only apprehendeth; no more than the feeling 'of the disease is the cause of health, but only the Physitian. 'For else when a man is cast and condemned by the Law, 'it is not Repentance that can save or deserve life, but if 'his pardon come, then is it the grace of the Prince, and 'not his Repentance that saveth.

Justitia non est tex posita, sed injustis, & inobsequentibus. 1 Tim. 1.

In remission of sins three things to be noted. 1. The disease. 2. The knowing of the disease. 3. The Physitian. Repentance is joyned with Faith, yet is it no cause of Salvation.

'The third point to be considered in the Doctrine of 'the Law, is this, that we mark well the end and purpose 'why the Law is give n which is not to bring us to Salva'tion,

The third point to be noted in the Doctrine of the Law.

{KING} {Hen. 8}

'tion, nor to work Gods favour, nor to make us good: 'but rather to declare and convict our wickedneſs, and to 'make us feel the danger thereof, to this end and purpoſe, 'that we ſeeing our condemnation, and being in our 'ſelves confounded, may be driven thereby to have our re- 'fuge to Chriſt the Son of God, and to ſubmit our ſelves 'to him, in whom only is to be found our remedy, and 'in none other. And this end of the Law diſcreetly ought 'to be pondered of all Chriſtians. Otherwiſe they that 'conſider not this end and purpoſe of the Law, fall into 'manifold Errors and Inconveniences. Firſt, they pervert 'all order of Doctrine. Secondly, they ſeek that in the 'Law which the Law cannot give. Thirdly, they are not 'able to comfort themſelves, nor other. Fourthly, they 'keep mens Soûls in an uncertain doubt and dubita- 'tion of their Salvation. Fifthly, they obſcure the light 'of Gods Grace. Sixthly, they are unkind to Gods Be- 'nefits. Seventhly, they are injurious to Chriſts Paſſion, 'and Enemies to his Croſs. Eightly, they ſtop Chriſtian 'liberty. Ninthly, they bereave the Church, the Spouſe 'of Chriſt, of her due comfort, as taking away the Sun 'out of the World. Tenthly, in all their doings they 'ſhoot at a wrong mark: for where Chriſt only is ſet up 'to be apprehended by our Faith, and ſo freely to juſtifie 'us; they leaving this Juſtification by Faith, ſet up other 'marks, partly of the Law, partly of their own deviſing, 'for men to ſhoot at. And here cometh in the manifeſt 'and manifold Abſurdities of the Biſhop of Romes Doctrine, 'which (the Lord willing) we will rehearſe, as in a Cata- 'logue here following.

Inconveniences that riſe in not knowing the true end of the Law.

Errors and Abſurdities of the Papiſts, touching the Doctrine of the Law and of the Goſpel.

Errors in the Popes Doctrine concerning the Doctrine of the Law.

1. THey erroneouſly conceive opinion of Salvation in the Law, which only is to be ſought in the Faith of Chriſt, and in no other.

2. They erroneouſly do ſeek Gods favour by works of the Law: not knowing that the Law in this our corrupt nature worketh only the anger of God, Rom. 3.

This Article repugneth againſt this place of John 1. The Law is given by Moſes, Grace and verity by Jeſus Chriſt.

3. They err alſo in this, that where the Office of the Law is divers and contrary from the Goſpel, they without any difference confound the one with the other, making the Goſpel to be a Law, and Chriſt to be a Moſes.

What is the whole Service of God in the Popes Church, but only an heap of Ceremonies?

4. They err in dividing the Law unskilfully into three parts, into the Law-Natural, the Law-Moral, and the Law-Evangelical.

This Article repugneth againſt this Scripture, Go and preach the Goſpel to every Creature, He that believeth, &c. But they preach as though Chriſt had ſaid, Go and preach the Law to every Creature.

5. They err again in dividing the Law-Evangelical into Precepts and Counſels, making the Precepts to ſerve for all men, the Counſels only to ſerve for them that be perfect.

This Article is contrary to the place Rom. 8. That which the Law could not perform in the behalf of our weak fleſh, &c.

6. The chief ſubſtance of all their teaching and preaching reſteth upon the works of the Law, as may appear by their Religion, which wholly conſiſteth in mens Merits, Traditions, Laws, Canons, Decrees, and Ceremonies.

This Article repugneth againſt the place, Gal. 2. For if righteouſneſs come by the Law, then Chriſt died in vain.

7. In the Doctrine of Salvation, of Remiſſion, and Juſtification, either they admit the Law equally with the Goſpel, or elſe, clean ſecluding the Goſpel, they teach and preach the Law, ſo that little mention is made of the Faith of Chriſt, or none at all.

8. They err in thinking, that the Law of God requireth nothing in us under pain of damnation, but only our obedience in extern actions: as for the inward affections and concupiſcence they eſteem but light matters.

This Article favoureth of the pride of the Phariſie, which ſaid, I am not like this Publican.

9. They, not knowing the true nature and ſtrength of the Law, do erroneouſly imagine that it is in mans power to fulfil it.

10. They err in thinking, that it is in mans power not only to keep the Law of God, but alſo to perform more perfect works than be in Gods Law commanded, and theſe they call the works of perfection. And hereof riſe the works of Supererogation, of Satisfaction, of Congruity and Condignity, to ſtore up the Treaſure-houſe the Popes Church, to be ſold out to the people for money.

This Article repugneth againſt this place of Matth. 23. Woe to you Scribes and Phariſees, which for the Doctrines of men tranſgreſs the commandments of God

11. They err in ſaying, that the State Monaſtical is more perfect for keeping the Counſels of the Goſpel, than other States be in keeping the Law of the Goſpel.

This Article repugneth againſt this place, They bind heavy burdens and grievous to bear, and lay them on mens ſhoulders, Matth. 23.

12. The Counſels of the Goſpel they call the vows of their religious men, as profound Humility, perfect Chaſtity, and wilful Poverty.

13. They err abominably, in equalling their Laws and Conſtitutions with Gods Law, and in ſaying, that mans Law bindeth under pain of damnation, no leſs than Gods Law.

14. They err ſinfully, in puniſhing the Tranſgreſſors of their Laws more ſharply than the Trangreſſors of the Law of God, as appeareth by their Inquiſitions, and their Canon-Law, &c.

15. Finally they err moſt horribly in this, that where the free promiſe of God aſcribeth our Salvation only to our Faith in Chriſt, excluding works: they contrary aſcribe Salvation only, or principally to works and merits, excluding Faith. Whereupon ariſeth the application of the ſacrifice of the Maſs, Ex opere operato, for the quick and dead, application of the Merits of Chriſts Paſſion, in Bulls, application of the merits of all religious Orders, and ſuch other more, above ſpecified more at large in the former part of this Hiſtory.

ℂ Here follow three Cautions to be obſerved and avoided in the true underſtanding of the Law.

The firſt Caution.

Three cautions to be avoided concerning the right underſtanding of the Law.

FIrſt, That we, through the miſ-underſtanding of the Scriptures, do not take the Law for the Goſpel, nor the Goſpel for the Law; but skilfully diſcern and diſtinguiſh the voice of the one from the voice of the other. Many there be, which reading the Book of the New Teſtament, do take and underſtand whatſoever they ſee contained in the ſaid Book, to be only and meerly the voice of the Goſpel. And contrariwiſe, whatſoever is contained in the compaſs of the Old Teſtament; that is, within the Law, Stories, Pſalms, and Prophets, to be only and meerly the word and voice of the Law. Wherein they are deceived; for the preaching of the Law and of the Goſpel are mixed together in both the Teſtaments, as well the Old as the New. Neither is the order of theſe two Doctrines to be diſtinguiſhed by Books and leaves, but by the diverſity of Gods Spirit ſpeaking unto us. For ſometimes in the Old Teſtament God doth comfort as he comforted Adam with the voice of the Goſpel. Sometimes alſo in the New Teſtament he doth threaten and terrifie, as when Chriſt threatned the Phariſees. In ſome places again, Moſes and the Prophets play the Evangeliſts: inſomuch that Hierome doubted whether he ſhould call Eſay a Prophet or an Evangeliſt. In ſome places likewiſe Chriſt and the Apoſtles ſupply the part of Moſes: And as Chriſt himſelf until his death was under the Law (which Law he came not to break, but to fulfil) ſo his Sermons made to the Jews, run all for the moſt part upon the perfect Doctrine and Works of the Law, ſhewing and teaching what we ought to do by the right Law of Juſtice, and what danger enſueth in not performing the ſame. All which places though they be contained in the Book of the New Teſtament, yet are they to be referred to the Doctrine of the Law, ever having in them included a privy exception of Repentance and Faith in Chriſt Jeſus. As in example, where Chriſt thus preacheth, Bleſſed be they that be pure of heart, for they ſhall ſee God, &c. Mat. 5. Again, Except ye be made like theſe Children ye ſhall not enter, &c. Mat. 18. Item, But he that doth the will of my Father ſhall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, &c. Matth. 7. Item, the Parable of the unkind Servant, juſtly caſt into priſon for not forgiving his Fellow, &c. Mat. 18. The caſting of the rich Glutton into Hell, &c. Luke 16. Item, He that denieth me here before men, I will deny him before my Father, &c. Luke 12. With ſuch other places of like condition. All theſe (I ſay) pertaining to the Doctrine of the Law, do ever include in them a ſecret exception of earneſt Repentance and Faith in Chriſts pretious Blood. For elſe, Peter denied, and yet repented. Many Publicans and Sinners were unkind, unmerciful, and hard-hearted to their fellow Servants, and yet many of them repented, and by Faith were ſaved, &c. The Grace of Chriſt Jeſus work in us earneſt Repentance and Faith in him unfeigned. Amen.

The voice of the Goſpel ſoundeth ſometimes in the Old Teſtament.

The voice of the Law ſometimes is uſed in the New Teſtament.

What places of the Scripture are to be referred to the Law, and what to the Goſpel.

Mat. 5.

Mat. 18.

Mat. 7.

Mat. 18.

Luke 16.

Luke 12.

Briefly, to know when the Law ſpeaketh, and when the Goſpel ſpeaketh, and to diſcern the voice of the one from the voice of the other, this may ſerve for a note, That when there is any moral work commanded to be done, dorſe, either for eſchewing of puniſhment, or upon promiſe of any reward temporal or eternal, or elſe when any promiſe is made with condition of any work commanded in the Law, there is to be underſtood the voice of the Law. Contrary, where the promiſe of life and ſalvation is offered unto us freely, without all our merits, and ſimply without any condition annexed, of any Law, either Natural, Ceremonial, or Moral: all thoſe places, whether they be read in the Old Teſtament or in the New, are to be referred to the Voice and Doctrine of the Goſpel. And this promiſe of God freely made to us by the Merits of Jeſus Chriſt, ſo long before propheſied to us in the Old Teſtament, and afterward exhibited in the New Teſtament, and now requiring nothing but our faith in the Son of God, is called properly the Voice of the Goſpel, and differeth from the voice of the Law in this, that it hath no condition adjoyned of our meriting, but only reſpecteth the Merits of Chriſt the Son of God; by whoſe Faith only we are promiſed of God to be ſaved and juſtified according as we read, Rom. 3. The righteouſneſs of God cometh by Faith in Jeſus Chriſt, in all and upon all that do believe, &c.

The promiſe of the Goſpel is without condition. Free without merits. Simple without condition.

What is the Goſpel properly.

Rom. 3.

The ſecond caution.

The ſecond caution or danger to be avoided, is, that we now knowing how to diſcern rightly between the Law and the Goſpel, and having intelligence not to miſtake the one for the other, muſt take heed again that we break not the Order between theſe two, taking and applying the Law where the Goſpel is to be applied, either to our ſelves or toward other. For albeit the Law and the Goſpel many times are to be joyned together in order of Doctrine: yet caſe may fall ſometimes, that the Law muſt be utterly ſequeſtred from the Goſpel. As when any perſon or perſons do feel themſelves with the Majeſty of the Law and Judgment of God ſo terrified and oppreſſed, and with the burthen of their ſins overweiged and thrown down into utter diſcomfort, and almoſt even to the pit of Hell, as happeneth many times to ſoft and timorous conſciences of Gods good Servants: when ſuch mortified hearts do hear, either in preaching or in reading, any ſuch example or place of the Scripture which pertaineth to the Law, let them think the ſame nothing to belong to them, no more than a mourning-weed belongeth to a Marriage-Feaſt: and therefore removing utterly out of their minds all cogitation of the Law, of fear, of judgment, and condemnation, let them only ſet before their eyes the Goſpel, the ſweet comforts of Gods promiſe, free forgiveneſs of ſins in Chriſt, Grace, Redemption, Liberty, rejoycing, Pſalms, Thanks, Singing, and a Paradiſe of Spiritual Jocundity, and nothing elſe; thinking thus with themſelves, that the Law hath done his office in them already, and now muſt needs give place to his better; that is, muſt needs give room to Chriſt the Son of God, who is the Lord and Maſter, the Fulfiller and alſo the Finiſher of the Law; for the end of the Law, is Chriſt, Rom. 10.

Who they be to whom the Goſpel only belongeth.

A Mourning Gown in a place of marriage doth not agree.

Chriſt the Fulfiller, and alſo the Finiſher of the Law.

The third danger to be avoided, is, that we do not uſe or apply; on the contrary ſide, the Goſpel in ſtead of the Law. For as the other before was even as much as to put on a Mourning-Gown in the Feaſt of a Marriage: ſo is this but even to caſt Pearls before Swine. Wherein is a great abuſe among many. For commonly it is ſeen that theſe worldly Epicures and ſecure Mammoniſts, to whom the Doctrine of the Law doth properly appertain, do receive and apply to themſelves moſt principally the ſweet Promiſes of the Goſpel: and contrariwiſe, the other contrite and bruiſed hearts, to whom belong only the joyful tidings of the Goſpel and not the Law, for the moſt part receive and retain to themſelves the terrible Voice and Sentences of the Law. Whereby it cometh to paſs, that many do rejoyce where they ſhould mourn; and on the other ſide many do fear and mourn where they need not. Wherefore to conclude, in private uſe of life, let every perſon diſcretly diſcern between the Law and the Goſpel, and aptly apply to himſelf that which he ſeeth convenient.

The third caution. Hovv to ſeparate the Law from the Goſpel.

And again, in publick order of Doctrine, let every diſcreet Preacher put a difference between the broken heart of the mourning Sinner, and the unrepentant Worldling, and ſo conjoyn both the Law with the Goſpel, and the Goſpel with the Law, that in throwing down the wicked ever he ſpare the weak-hearted; and again, ſo ſpare the weak, that he do not encourage the ungodly. And t[illegible] much concerning the conjunction and difference bet[illegible] the Law and the Goſpel, upon the occaſion of Mr. P[illegible] tricks Places.

Hovv to joyn both the Lavv and the Goſpel.

Henry Foreſt Martyr.

Within few years after the Martyrdom of Maſter Patrick Hamelton, one Henry Foreſt, a young man born in Lithquow, who a little before had received the Orders of Bennet and Collet (as they term them) affirmed, and ſaid, That Maſter Patrick Hamelton died a Martyr, and that his Articles were true: for the which he was apprehended, and put in priſon by James Beton Archbiſhop of Saint Andrews. Who, ſhortly after, cauſed a certain Frier, named Walter Laing, to hear his Confeſſion. To whom when Henry Foreſt in ſecret confeſſion had declared his conſcience, how he thought Maſter Patrick to be a good man, and wrongfully to be put to death, and that his Articles were true and not heretical, the Frier came and uttered to the Biſhop the confeſſion that he had heard, which before was not throughly known.

James Beton Archbiſhop of St. Andrews.

The Frier uttereth the Confeſſion of Henry Foreſt.

Whereupon it followed, that his Confeſſion being brought as ſufficient probation againſt him, he was therefore convented before the Council of the Clergy and Doctors, and there concluded to be an Heretick, equal in iniquity with Maſter Patrick Hamelton, and there decreed to be given to the ſecular Judges to ſuffer death.

When the day came of his death, and that he ſhould firſt be degraded, and was brought before the Clergy in a green place, being between the Caſtle of Saint Andrews and another place called Monymaill, aſſoon as he entred in at the door, and ſaw the face of the Clergy, perceiving whereunto they tended, he cried with a loud voice, ſaying, Fie on falſehood, Fie on falſe Friers, Revealers of Confeſſion: after this day let no man ever truſt any falſe Friers, Contemners of Gods Word, and Deceivers of men. And ſo they proceeding to degrade him of his ſmall Orders of Bennet and Collet, he ſaid with a loud voice, Take from me not only your own Orders, but alſo your own Baptiſm; meaning thereby whatſoever is beſides that which Chriſt himſelf inſtituted, whereof there is a great rabblement in Baptiſm. Then after his degradation, they condemned him as an Heretick equal with Maſter Patrick aforeſaid: and ſo he ſuffered death for his faithful Teſtimony of the truth of Chriſt and of his Goſpel, at the North Church-ſtile of the Abbey-Church of Saint Andrew, to the intent that all the people of Anguiſh might ſee the fire, and ſo might be the more feared from falling into the like Doctrine, which they term by the name of Hereſie. Ex Scriptis Teſtimania Scotorum.

Within a year after the Martyrdom of Henry Foreſt, or thereabout was called James Hamelton of Kynclitgow, his Siſter Katharine Hamelton, the Spouſe of the Captain of Dunbar, alſo another honeſt Woman of Lieth, David Straton of the Houſe of Lawriſtone, and Maſter Norman Gurley. Theſe were called to the Abby Church of Halyroodhouſe in Edinburgh by James Hay Biſhop of Roß, Commiſſioner to James Beton Archbiſhop, in preſence of King James the fifth of that name; who, upon the day of their accuſation, was altogether clad in red apparel. James Hamelton was accuſed as one that maintained the opinion of Maſter Patrick his Brother. To whom the King gave counſel to depart, and not to appear; for in caſe he appeared, he could not help him; becauſe the Biſhops had perſwaded him, that the cauſe of Hereſie did in no wiſe appertain unto him. And ſo James fled, and was condemned as an Heretick, and all his Goods and Lands confiſcate, and diſpoſed unto others.

James Hay, Biſhop of Roſſe, and Commiſſioner of James.

Beton Archbiſhop of St. Andrews.

Katharine Hamelton his Siſter, appeared upon the Scaffold, and being accuſed of an horrible Hereſie, to wit, that her own works could not ſave her, ſhe granted the ſame; and after long reaſoning between her and Maſter John Spens the Lawyer, ſhe concluded in this manner, Work here, Work there, what kind of working is all this? I know perfectly, that no kind of works can ſave me, but only the works of Chriſt my Lord and Saviour. The King hearing theſe words turned him about and laught, and called her unto him, and cauſed her to recant, becauſe ſhe was his Aunt, and ſhe eſcaped.

Maſter John Spens, Lawyer.

A great Hereſie in the Popes Church, that no works can ſave us but the works of Chriſt.

The Woman of Lieth was detected hereof, that when the Midwife in time of her labour, bad her ſay, Our Lady help me; ſhe cried, Chriſt help me, Chriſt help me, in whoſe help I truſt. She alſo was cauſed to recant, and ſo eſcaped without confiſcation of her goods, becauſe ſhe was married.

A great Hereſie to ſay Chriſt help, and not our Lady.

Maſter Norman Gurly, for that he ſaid, there was no ſuch thing as Purgatory, and that the Pope was not a Biſhop, but Antichriſt, and had no Juriſdiction in Scotland Againſt Purgatory.

Alſo David Straton, for that he ſaid There was no Purgatory, but the Paſſion of Chriſt, and the tribulations of this World; and becauſe that when Maſter Robert Lawſon Vicar of Egleſgrig, asked his Tith-Fiſh of him, he did caſt them to him out of the Boat, ſo that ſome of them fell into the Sea. Therefore he accuſed him, as one that ſhould have ſaid, that no Tithes ſhould be paid. Theſe two, becauſe after great ſolicitation made by the King, they refuſed to abjure and recant, were therefore condemned by the Biſhop of Roß as Hereticks, and were burned upon the Green ſide, between Lieth and Edenburgh, to the intent that the Inhabitants of Fiffe ſeeing the fire, might be ſtricken with terrour and fear, not to fall into the like. Ex eodem ſcripto.

¶ And thus much touching thoſe Martyrs of Scotland that ſuffered under James Beton, Archbiſhop of S. Andrews. After whom ſucceeded David Beton in the ſaid Archbiſhoprick, under whom divers other were alſo martyred, as hereafter (God willing) in their order ſhall appear.

Martyrs, and the cauſes of their Martyrdom.

Thomas Harding, an aged Father, dwelling at Cheſham in Buckinghamſhire.

At Cheſham in Buckinghamſhire, Anno 1553.

John Longland Biſhop of Lincoln.

Thomas Harding dwelling at Cheſham in the County of Buckingham, with Alice his Wife, was firſt abjured by William Smith Biſhop of Lincoln, Anno 1506, with divers other more, which the ſame time, for ſpeaking againſt idolatry and ſuperſtition, were taken and compelled, ſome to bear Fagots, ſome were burned in the Cheeks with hot irons, ſome condemned to perpetual Priſon, ſome thruſt into Monaſteries, and ſpoiled clean of all their Goods, ſome compelled to make Pilgrimage to the great Block, otherwiſe called our Lady of Lincoln, ſome to Walſingham, ſome to Saint Romuld of Buckingham, ſome to the Rood of Wendover, ſome to Saint John Shorne, &c. Of whom mention is made in the Table before.

Of this Thomas Harding much rehearſal hath been made before.

Rowland Vicar of great Wickam, the Biſhops Chaplain.

Firſt, This Thomas Harding and en*Alice* his Wife, being divers other joyned Penance Smith Biſhop of more, by Ward by the ſaid Biſhop Lincol eaſed again, in the year of our Lord 1515, of all ſuch Penance as was enjoyned him and his Wife at their juration, except theſe three Articles following, and were diſcharged of their Badges, or ſigns of their Fagot, &c. Only this Penance following the Biſhop continued ſub pœna relapſ.

Firſt, That neither of them during their life ſhould dwell out of the Pariſh of Amerſham.

Item, That either of them during their life ſhould faſt Bread and Ale every Corpus Chriſti Even.

It was happy that they were not put to bread and water.

Item, That either of them ſhould during their lives, upon Corpus Chriſti day, every year go on Pilgrimage to Aſheridge, and there make their offerings, as other people did, but not to do Penance. Alſo they were licenſed by the ſaid Biſhop to do their Pilgrimage at Aſheridge, on Corpus Chriſti Even, or Corpus Chriſti day, or ſome other, upon any cauſe reaſonable.

This Penance being to them enjoyned, Anno 1515, they obſerved till the year of our Lord 1522, ſave only in the laſt year the foreſaid Alice his Wife omitted her Pilgrimage going to Aſheridge upon Corpus Chriſti day. Alſo the ſaid Thomas Harding, being put to his Oath to detect other, becauſe he contrary to his Oath diſſembled, and did not diſcloſe them, was therefore enjoyned, in Penance for his Perjury, to bear upon his right ſleeve, both before and behind, a badge or patch of green Cloth, or Silk, embroidered like a Fagot, during his whole life, unleſs he ſhould be otherwiſe diſpenſed withal. And thus continued he from the year one thouſand five hundred twenty two, until the year 1532.

The taking of T. Harding.

At laſt the ſaid Harding in the year aboveſaid 1532, about Eaſter Holy days, when the other people went to the Church to commit their wonted idolatry, took his way into the Woods, there ſolitarily litarily to worſhip the true living God, in ſpirit and truth: Where, as he was occupied in a Book of Engliſh Prayers, leaning or ſitting upon a Stile by the Woods ſide, it chanced that one did eſpy him where he was, and came in great haſte to the Officers of the Town, declaring, that he had ſeen Harding in the Woods looking on a Book. Whereupon immediately a rude Rabble of them, like mad men, ran deſperately to his houſe to ſearch for Books, and in ſearching went ſo nigh, that under the Boords of his Floor they found certain Engliſh Books of holy Scripture. Whereupon this godly Father, with his Books, was brought before John Longland, Biſhop of Lincoln, then lying at Wooburn. Who with his Chaplains, calling Father Harding to examination, began to reaſon with him, proceeding rather with checks and rebukes than with any ſound arguments. Thomas Harding, ſeeing their folly and rude behaviour, gave them but few words, but fixing his truſt and care in the Lord, did let them ſay what they would. Thus at laſt they ſent him to the Biſhops Priſon, called little-eaſe, where he did lie with hunger and pain enough for a certain ſpace, till at length the Biſhop, ſitting in his Tribunal Seat like a Poteſtate, condemned him for relapſe to be burned to aſhes, committing the charge and overſight of his Martyrdom to Rouland Meſſenger, Vicar of great Wickham: Which Rouland at the day appointed, with a rabble of other like to himſelf, brought Father Harding to Cheſham again. Where, the next day after his return, the ſaid Rouland made a Sermon in Cheſham Church, cauſing Thomas Harding to ſtand before him all the preaching time; which Sermon was nothing elſe, but the maintaining of the juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Rome, and the ſtate of his Apoſtolical See, with the idolatry, fancys and traditions belonging unto the ſame. When the Sermon was ended, Rouland took lieved to the high Altar, and asked, whether he beremained any Bread, after the conſecration, there Chriſts natural Body ſubſtance than the ſubſtance of this Thomas Harding and of the Virgin Mary. To Belief do teach us, That our Sa The Articles of our of the Virgin Mary, and that he ſuffered Chriſt was born Pilate, and roſe from death the third day; ith under aſcended into Heaven, and ſitteth on the right hand then God in the glory of his Father.

Then was he brought into a mans-houſe in the Town, where he remained all night in prayer and godly meditations. So the next morning came the foreſaid Rouland again, about ten of the Clock, with a company of Bills and Staves, to lead this godly Father to his burning. Whom a great number both of men and women did follow. Of whom many bewailed his death, and contrary, the wicked rejoyced thereat. He was brought forth, having thruſt in his hands a little Croſs of wood, but no Idol upon it. Then he was chained unto the Stake, and deſiring the people to pray for him, and forgiving all his enemies and perſecutors, he commended his Spirit to God, and took his death moſt patiently and quietly, lifting up his hands to Heaven, ſaying, Jeſus, receive my ſpirit.

When they had ſet fire on him, there was one that threw a Billet at him, and daſhed out his Brains; of what purpoſe he ſo did, it is not known; but as it was ſuppoſed, that he might have forty days of pardon, as the Proclamation was made at the burning of William Tilſeworth above mentioned; whereas Proclamation was made the ſame time, That whoſoever did bring a Fagot or a Stake to the burning of an Heretick, ſhould have forty days of pardon. Whereby many ignorant people cauſed many of their children to bear Billets and Fagots to their burning.

In fine, when the Sacrifice and Burnt-offering of this godly Martyr was finiſhed, and he burnt to aſhes, in the Dell, going to Botley, at the North end of the Town of Cheſham, Rouland the Ruler of the roſt, commanding ſilence, and thinking to ſend the people away with an Ita, miſſa eſt, with a loud voice ſaid to the people theſe words, not adviſing but what his Tongue did ſpeak, Good People, when ye come home, do not ſay that you have been at the burning of an Heretick, but of a good true Chriſtian man, and ſo they departed to Dinner, Rouland with the Rabble of other Prieſts much rejoycing at the burning of this good man. After Dinner they went to Church to Evenſong, becauſe it was Corpus Chriſti Even, where they fell to ſinging and chanting, with ringing and piping of the Organs. Well was he that could reach the higheſt Note, ſo much did they rejoyce at this goods mans burning. He ſhould have been burned on the Aſcenſion Even, but the matter was deferred unto the Even of Corpus Chriſti, becauſe they would honour their bready Meſſias with a bloudy Sacrifice. Thus Thomas Harding was conſumed to aſhes, he being of the age of ſixty years and above. Ex teſtimon. Scrip. Civium Amarſhemenſium.

40 days of pardon for bringing Fagots to burn good men.

I find in the Records of Lincoln, about the ſame time, and in the ſaid Country of Buckinghamſhire, in the which the foreſaid Thomas Harding did ſuffer, that divers other for the like Doctrine were moleſted and troubled, whoſe names with their cauſes hereunder followeth.

For the which he likewiſe, with the other, was troubled, and at length compelled alſo with them to kneel down and to ask his holy Catholick Fathers and Mothers of Rome bleſſing.

But what ſtand I here numbring the Sand? For if all the Regiſter Books were ſought, it would be an infinite thing to recite all them which through all the other Dioceſſes of the Realm in theſe days, before and ſince, were troubled and purſued for theſe and ſuch like matters. But theſe I thought for examples ſake here to ſpecifie, that it might appear what Doctrine it is, and how long it hath been in the Church, for the which the Prelates and Clergy of Rome have judged men Hereticks, and ſo wrongfully have moleſted poor ſimple Chriſtians.

Now, paſſing from the abjurations of thoſe poor men, we will ſomething ſpeak (God willing) of the life and doings of the contrary part, who were their perſecutors and chief rulers then of the Church, to the intent that by thoſe rulers it may better be diſcerned and judged, what manner of Church that was, which then ſo perſecuted the true Doctrine of Chriſt, and Members of his Church.

A brief

KING Hen. 8.

A brief Diſcourſe concerning the Story of Thomas Wolſey, late Cardinal of York, by way of digreſſion; wherein is to be ſeen and noted the expreſs Image of the proud, vain-glorious Church of Rome, how far it differeth from the true Church of Chriſt Jeſus.

Cardinal Wolſey.

ALTHOUGH it be not greatly pertinent unto this our Hiſtory, nor greatly requiſite, in theſe ſo weighty matters entreating of Chriſts holy Martyrs, to diſcourſe much of Thomas Wolſey Cardinal of York: Notwithſtanding forſomuch as there be many, which being carried away with a wrong opinion, and eſtimation of that falſe glittering Church of Rome, do think that Holineſs to be in it, which indeed is not: To the intent therefore, that the vain pomp and pride of that ambitious Church, ſo far differing from all pure Chriſtianity and godlineſs, more notoriouſly may appear to all men, and partly alſo to refreſh the Reader with ſome variety of matter, I thought compendiouſly to expreſs the ridiculous and pompous qualities, and demeanor of this foreſaid Thomas Wolſey, Cardinal and Legat of Rome, in whom alone the image and life of all other ſuch like followers and profeſſors of the ſame Church, may be ſeen and obſerved. For like as the Lacedemonians in times paſt were accuſtomed to ſhew and demonſtrate drunken men unto their children, to behold and look upon, that through the foulneſs of that Vice, they might enflame them the more to the ſtudy and deſire of Sobriety; even ſo it ſholl not be hurtful ſometimes to ſet forth the examples which are not honeſt, that others might thereby gather the inſtructions of better and more upright dealing.

Example of the Lacedemonians.

Wherefore thou ſhalt note here (good Reader) in this Hiſtory, with all judgment, the great difference of life and converſation between this Church and the other true humble Martyrs and Servants of God, whom they have and do yet perſecute. And firſt to begin with the firſt meeting and coming in of this Cardinal, and his fellow Cardinal Campeius into England: It was about the time when Pope Leo, intending to make War againſt the Turks, ſent three Legates together from Rome, whereof one went into Germany, another into France: Laurentius Campeius was appointed to come into England. When he was come to Calis, and that the Cardinal of York had underſtanding thereof, he ſent certain Biſhops and Doctors, with as much ſpeed as he could, to meet the Legat, and to ſhew him, that if he would have his Embaſſage effect, he ſhould ſend in Poſt to Rome, to have the ſaid Cardinal of York made Legat, and to be joyned with him in Commiſſion. Which thing he much affected, miſdoubting leſt his authority thereby might perhaps be diminiſhed through the coming of the Legat; and therefore required to be joyned with him in like degree of the Embaſſage. Campeius being a man light of belief, and ſuſpecting no ſuch matter, gave credit unto his words and ſent unto Rome with ſuch ſpeed, that within thirty days after the Bull was brought to Callis, wherein they were both equally joyned in Commiſſion; during which time the Cardinal of York ſent to the Legat at Callis red Cloth to cloath his Servants withal, which at their coming to Callis were but meanly apparelled.

Campeius ſent into England.

Cardinal Wolſey ſeeketh to be joyned in equal Commiſſion with Campeius.

Note the ſtate and pride of the Popes Clergy.

When all things were ready, Campeius paſſed the Seas and landed at Dover, and ſo kept forth his journey toward London. At every good Town as they paſſed, he was received with Proceſſion, accompanied with all the Lords and Gentlemen of Kent. And when he came to Black-heath, there met him the Duke of Northfolk, with a great number of Prelates, Knights and Gentlemen, all richly apparelled, and in the way he was brought into a rich Tent of Cloth of Gold, where he ſhifted himſelf into a Cardinals Robe furred with Ermines, and ſo took his Mule, riding toward London. Now mark the great humility in this Church of the Pope, and compare the ſame with the other Church of the Martyrs, and ſee which of them is more Goſpel-like.

The receiving of the Popes Legat into England.

This Campeius had eight Mules of his own, laden with diverr Farthels and other preparations. The Cardinal of York, thinking them not ſufficient for his eſtate, the night before he came to London, ſent him twelve Mules more, with empty Coffers covered with red to furniſh his carriage withal. The next day theſe twenty Mules were led through the City, as though they had been loden with treaſures, apparel and other neceſſaries, to the great admiration of all men, that they ſhould receive a Legat as it were a God, with ſuch and ſo great treaſure and riches. For ſo the common people do always judge and eſteem the majeſty of the Clergy, by no other thing than by their outward ſhews and pomp; but in the midſt of this great admiration there happened a ridiculous ſpectacle, to the great deriſion of their pride and ambition. For as the Mules paſſed through Cheapſide, and the people were preſſing about them to behold and gaze (as the manner is) it happened that one of the Mules breaking his Collar that he was led in, ran upon the other Mules, whereby it happened, that they ſo running together, and their Girts being looſed, overthrew divers of their burthens, and ſo there appeared the Cardinals gay treaſure, not without great laughter and ſcorn of many, eſpecially of Boys and Girles, whereof ſome gathered up pieces of Meat, other ſome pieces of Bread and roſted Eggs, ſome found Horſe-ſhoes and old Boots, with ſuch other Baggage, crying out, Behold here is my Lord Cardinals treaſure. The Muliters being therewithal greatly aſhamed, gathered together their treaſure again as well as they could, and went forward.

Ambition and pomp in the Cardinal.

How God confoundeth the pride and pomp of men.

The Cardinals 20 great Mules loden with roſted Eggs, and rotten ſhoes, and ſuch other treaſure.

About three of the Clock at afternoon, the 29*th* day of July, the Cardinal himſelf was brought through the City, with great pomp and ſolemnity, unto Paul's Church, where when he had bleſſed all men with the Biſhops bleſſing (as the manner is) he was guided forth unto the Cardinal of York's Houſe; where he was received by the ſaid Cardinal, and by him on the next day, being Sunday, was conducted unto the King, to fulfil his Embaſſage againſt the Turk; which might have deſtroyed all Hungary, in the mean time whiles they were ſtudying with what ſolemnity to furniſh out their Embaſſage.

Ex Edovar. Hallo.

When the Cardinal of York was thus a Legat, he ſet up a Court, and called it the Court of the Legat, and proved Teſtaments, and heard cauſes, to the great hinderance of all the Biſhops of the Realm. He viſited Biſhops, and all the Clergy, exempt, and not exempt; and under colour of Reformation, he got much treaſure, and nothing was reformed, but came to more miſchief; for by example of his pride, Prieſts and all ſpiritual perſons waxed ſo proud, that they ware Velvet and Silk, both in Gowns, Jackets Doublets and Shoes, kept open lechery, and ſo highly bare themſelves, by reaſon of his authorities and faculties, that no man durſt once reprove any thing in them, for fear to be called Heretick, and then they would make him ſmoke, or bear a Fagot. And the Cardinal himſelf was ſo elated, that he thought himſelf equal with the King; and when he had ſaid Maſs, he made Dukes and Earls to ſerve him of Wine with Aſſay taken, and to hold the Baſon at the Lavatories.

Furthermore, As he was Embaſſador ſent to the Emperor at Bruſſels, he had over with him the Great Seal of England, and was ſerved with his Servitors kneeling on their Knees, and many Noblemen of England waiting upon him, to the great admiration of all the Germans that beheld it; ſuch was his monſtrous pomp and pride, Ex Paralip. Ab. Urſp.

Ex Paralip. Ab. Urſp.

This glorious Cardinal in his tragical doings did exceed ſo far all meaſure of a good Subject, that he became more like a Prince than a Prieſt; for although the King bore the ſword, yet he bare the ſtroke, making (in a manner) the whole Realm to bend at his beck, and to dance after his Pipe. Such practices and ſetches he had, that when he had well ſtored his own Coffers, firſt he fetched the greateſt part of the Kings treaſure out of the Realm, in twelve great Barrels full of Gold and Silver, to ſerve the Popes Wars; and as his avaricious mind was never ſatisfied with getting, ſo his reſtleſs head was ſo buiſie, ruffling in publick matters, that he never ceaſed before he had ſet both England, France, Flanders, Spain and Italy together by the ears.

The climing of Cardinal Wolſey.

Cardinal Wolſey a great cauſer of Wars.

Thus this Legate well following the steps of his Master the Pope, and both of them well declaring the nature of their Religion, under the pretence of the Church practised great hypocrisie, and under the authority of the King he used great extortion, with excessive taxes and loans, and valuation of every mans substance, so pilling the Commons and Merchants, that every man complained, but no redress was had. Neither yet were the Church-men altogether free from the pillax and pollax, from the pilling and polling (I mean) of this Cardinal, who under his power Legantine gave by preventions all Benefices belonging to spiritual persons; by which, hard it is to say, whether he purchased to himself more riches, or hatred of the Spiritualty. So far his licence stretched, that he had power to suppress divers Abbys, Priories and Monasteries; and so he did, taking from them all their goods, moveables and unmoveables, except it were a little pension, left only to the heads of certain houses. By the said power Legantine he kept also general Visitations through the Realm, sending Doctor John Alein his Chaplain, riding in his Gown of Velvet, and with a great train, to visit all Religious Houses, whereat the Friers observants much grudged, and would in no wise condescend thereunto; wherefore they were openly accursed at Pauls-Cross, by Frier Forrest one of the same Order; so that the Cardinal at length prevailed both against them and all other. Against whom great disdain arose among the people, perceiving how he by Visitations, making of Abbots, Probats of Testaments, granting of Faculties, Licences, and other pollings in his Courts Legantine, had made his treasure equal with the Kings, and yet every year he sent great sums to Rome. And this was their daily talk against the Cardinal.

The pilling and polling of the Cardinal.

The Friers observants accursed of the Cardinal. Of Frier Forest. Vide infra. Ex Hallo. an. 17. Reg. Henric. 8.

Besides many other matters and grievances which stirred the hearts of the Commons against the Cardinal, this was one, which much pinched them, for that the said Cardinal had sent out certain straight Commissions in the Kings name, That every man should pay the sixth part of his goods. Whereupon there followed great muttering amongst the Commons, in such sort, that it had almost grown to some riotous commotion or tumult, especially in the parts of Suffolk, had not the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk with wisdom and gentleness stept in and appeased the same.

Ex Hallo, An. 19 Reg. Henric. 8.

Another thing that rubbed the stomachs of many, or rather which moved them to laugh at the Cardinal was this, to see his insolent presumption, so highly to take upon him, as the Kings chief Counsellor, to set a Reformation in the order of the Kings Houshold, making and establishing new Ordinances in the same. He likewise made new Officers in the House of the Duke of Richmond, which was then newly begun. In like manner he ordained a Council, and established another Houshold for the Lady Mary, then being Princess; so that all things were done by his consent, and by none other. All this, with much more, took he upon him, making the King believe that all should be to his honour, and that he needed not to take any pain, insomuch that the charge of all things was committed unto him; whereat many men smiled, to see his great folly and presumption.

At this time, the Cardinal gave the King the Lease of the Mannor of Hampton Court, which he had of the Lord of Saint Johns, and on which he had done great cost. Therefore the King again, of his gentle nature, licensed him to lie in his Mannor of Richmond, and so he lay there certain times. But when the Common people, and especially such as were King Henry the 7*th*'s servants, saw the Cardinal keep house in the Royal Mannor of Richmond, which King Henry the Seventh so much esteemed, it was a marvel to hear how they grudged, saying, See a Butchers Dog ly in the Mannor of Richmond. These with many other opprobrious words were spoken against the Cardinal, whose pride was so high, that he reguarded nothing; yet was he hated of all men.

Hampton Court given to the King.

And now to express some part of the ruffling practices and busie intermedlings of this Cardinal in Princes Wars, first here is to be noted, that after long Wars between England and France, 1524. (in the which Wars King Henry, taking the Emperors part against Francis the French King, had waged with his mony the Duke of Bourbon, and a great part of the Emperors Army, to invade and disturb certain parts of France) it hapned that the French King, coming with his Army toward Millain at the Siege of Pavia, was there taken by the Duke of Bourbon, and Viceroy of Naples, and so led Prisoner into Spain.

Francis the French King taken Prisoner.

Where note by the way, that all this while the Cardinal held with the Emperor, hoping by him to be made Pope; but when that would not be, he went clean from the Emperor to the French King, as, the Lord willing, you shall hear.

After this Victory gotten, and the French King being taken Prisoner, who remained in custody about a year and half; at length through great labour and solicitation, as well of other, as namely of the Cardinal and King Henry, an order was taken, and conditions propounded between the French King and the Emperor; among which conditions it was agreed, that they should resist the Turks, and oppress the Lutherans, and so was the King set at liberty, leaving behind him his two eldest Sons for pledges. But shortly after he revoked his Oath, being absolved by the Bishop of Rome, and said that he was forced to swear, or else he should never have been delivered. Which was Anno 1526. Pope Clement the Seventh, seeing the French King restored to liberty, and misdoubting the puissance and domination of the Emperor in Italy so near under his Nose, absolveth the French King from his Oath; also joyneth together a Confederacy of Venetians and other Princes against the Emperor, bearing great hatred against all them that any thing favoured the Emperors part, especially the Family of Columna in Rome, which Family was then Imperial; and therefore to shew his hatred against them, he said to Pompey, Cardinal of the same Family, in threatning words, That he would take away his Cardinals Hat. To whom it was answered again of the Cardinal, That if he so did, he would put on a Helmet to overthrow the Popes Triple Crown. Whereby it may appear here by the way, what holiness and vertue lieth in the Pope and Cardinals of that Catholick See of Rome.

The answer of the Cardinal to the Pope.

Thus the false Pope, under the lying Title of Holiness, was the Father of much mischief and of great Wars, which after ensued. For the Duke of Bourbon, and other of the Emperors Captains, having intelligence of the Popes purpose and confederacy, gathered their Army together, and after much bloudshed and fighting, about Millain, Hawd and Cremona, at length they approached and bent their Siege against Rome, and after three sharp assaults, obtained the City, with the whole spoil thereof; where also they besieged the foresaid Pope with his Cardinals, in the Mount of Adrian, and took him Prisoner An. 1527. As touching the cause of the besieging of Rome, now you have heard; for the manner of the taking of Rome, and of the Pope, the order thereof is thus described in Hall and other.

The Pope stirreth up Wars.

The Sacking of Rome, and taking of Pope CLEMENT.

THE Emperors Army departing from Florence to the City of Seynes, where they lost their Ordnance, took counsel there to go to Rome, and so much they travelled by night and day, commonly passing forty Miles day and night (their good will was such) that the sixth day of May, with Banners displayed they came before the City of Rome, being Saturday; the same day, and on Sunday, the Romans made Bulwarks, Rampiers, and other defences, and layed Ordnance on the Walls, and shot at them without, fiercely.

The taking of Rome.

Ex Paralyp. Abbat. Urspe.

The Duke of Bourbon determined that it was not best to lie still without, and be slain with Ordnance, considering that they were all naked people, and without great Ordnance; wherefore he determined to take the chance; and to give the assault, and so manfully they approached the Walls between the Burgo Novo and old Rome. But the Romans valiantly defended them with Hand-guns, Pikes, Stones, and other Weapons, so that the enemies were fain to retreat. Then the Romans were glad and set many fair Banners on their Towers and Bulwarks, and made great shouts; which the Duke of Bourbon seeing, cried

The Duke of Bourbon.

KING Hen.8.

cried to a new Aſſault. Then the Drumſlades ſtrook, and every man with a Ladder mounted; and at the firſt encounter, again the Romans put them a little back, which the Duke of Bourbon perceiving, cried God and the Emperor. Then every man manfully ſet on. There was a ſore fight, many an Arrow ſhot, and many a man felled; but at laſt the Emperors men got the Wall, and between every aſſault fell a Miſt, ſo that they within could not ſee what part they without would aſſail, which was profitable to the Emperors party. At the three aſſaults were ſlain three hundred Switzers of the Popes Guard. In this laſt aſſault was the Duke of Bourbon ſtrucken in the Thigh with a Hand-gun, of the which he ſhortly after died in a Chappel of St. Siſt, whither his Souldiers had brought him; and this chance notwithſtanding, the Army entred into Rome, and took the Popes Palace, and ſet up the Emperors Arms.

Three aſſaults againſt Rome

The Duke of Bourbon wounded.

The ſame day that theſe three aſſaults were made, Pope Clement paſſed little on the Emperors Army; for he had accurſed them on the Saturday before, and in his Curſe he called the Almains Lutherans, and the Spaniards Murreins or Moors; and when he was hearing of Maſs, ſuddenly the Almains entred into the Church, and ſlew his Guard and divers other. He, ſeeing that, fled in all haſte by a privy way to the Caſtle of Saint Angel; and all they that followed him that way, and could not enter, were ſlain, and if he in that fury had been taken, he had been ſlain. The Cardinals and other Prelates fled to the Caſtle of St. Angel, over the Bridge, where many of the Common-people were overpreſſed and trodden down as they gave way to the Cardinals and other Eſtates, that paſſed toward the Caſtle for ſuccour.

The Pope curſeth his enemies.

The Pope flieth.

The Cardinal of Senes, of Seſarine, of Tudertine, of Jacobace and of the Valle, tarried ſo long, that they could not get to the Caſtle for the multitude of the people; wherefore they were compelled to take another Houſe, called the Palace of Saint George, where they kept themſelves for a while as ſecretly as they might. You muſt underſtand, that through the City of Rome runneth a famous River called Tyber, and on the one ſide of the River ſtandeth the Caſtle of Saint Angel, or the Borough of Saint Angel; and the other ſide is called Burgo Novo, or the New Borough. This Bridge is called the Bridge of Sixte, which lieth directly before the Caſtle. At the end of this Bridge was a wonderful ſtrong Bulwark, well ordinanced and well manned. The Emperors men, ſeeing that they could do nothing to the Pope, nor to that part of the City, but by the Bridge, determined to aſſault the Bulwark, and ſo, as men without fear, came on the Bridge, and the Romans ſo well defended themſelves, that they ſlew almoſt four thouſand men. That ſeeing, the Prince of Orange, and the Marqueſs of Gnaſto, with all ſpeed gave aſſault, and notwithſtanding that the Romans ſhot great Ordnances, Hand-guns, Quarels, and all that might be ſhot; yet the Imperial perſons never ſhrank, but manly entred the Bulwark and ſlew and threw down out of the Loops all the Romans that they found, and after raced the Bulwark to the ground. The Pope was in the Caſtle of Saint Angel; and beheld this fight, and with him were four and twenty Cardinals, of which one called the Cardinal Sanctorum quatuor, or the Cardinal of Pouch, was ſlain, and with him were one thouſand Prelates and Prieſts, five hundred Gentlemen, five hundred Souldiers; wherefore immediately the Captains determined to lay Siege to the Caſtle of Saint Angel, leſt they within might iſſue out, and turn them to damage; wherefore ſuddenly a Siege was planted round about the Caſtle. In the mean ſeaſon, the Soldiers fell to ſpoil. Never was Rome ſo pilled, either of the Goths or Vandals; for the Soldier, were not content with the Spoil of the Citizens, but they robbed the Churches, brake up the Houſes of cloſe religious perſons, and overthrew the Cloiſters, and ſpoiled Virgins, and raviſhed married Women. Men were tormented if they had not to give every new asker or demander; ſome were ſtrangled, ſome were puniſhed by the Privy Members, to cauſe them to confeſs their Treaſure. This woodneſs continued a great while, and ſome man might think, that when they had gotten ſo much, then they would ceaſe and be quiet, but that was not ſo for they played continually at Dice, ſome five hundred, ſome a thouſand Ducats at a Caſt; and he that came to play laden with Plate, went again almoſt naked; and then fell to riffling again. Many of the Citizens, which could not patiently ſuffer that vexation, drowned themſelves in Tyber. The Soldiers daily, that lay at the Siege, made jeſts of the Pope. Sometime they had one riding like the Pope, with a Whore behind him, ſometime he bleſſed, and ſometime he curſed, and ſometime they would with one voice call him Antichriſt; and they went about to undermine the Caſtle, and to have thrown it down on his head, but the water, that environeth the Caſtle, diſappointed their purpoſe.

The Cardinals beſieged.

The Bulwark of the Romans beſieged and taken.

The Caſtle of St. Angel beſieged.

Rome ſpoiled.

The Pope mocked and ſcorned openly in Rome before his own face.

In this ſeaſon the Duke of Urbine, with fifteen thouſand men, came to aid the Pope; but hearing that Rome was taken, he tarried forty Mile from Rome, till he heard other word. The Marqueſs of Saluce, and Sir Frederico de Bodſo, with fifteen thouſand footmen, and a thouſand Horſemen, were at Vitarbe the 10*th* day of May; where they hearing that the City of Rome was taken, alſo tarried. The Cardinal of Colume came with an Army of Neapolitans to help the Emperors men, but when he ſaw the cruelty of the Soldiers, he did little to help them, but he hated them much.

The Pope beſieged and taken.

The Biſhop of Rome was thus beſieged till the 8th of the Ides of July; at which day he yielded himſelf for neceſſity and penury of all things in the Caſtle; and then he was reſtored to give Graces, and grant Bulls as he did before; but he tarried ſtill in the Caſtle of Saint Angel, and had a great number of Almains and Spaniards to keep him; but the Spaniards bare moſt rule in the Caſtle, for no man entred, nor came out of the Caſtle but by them. When the Month of July came, Corn began to fail in Rome, and the Peſtilence began to wax ſtrong; wherefore the great Army removed to a place called Narvia forty Miles from Rome, leaving behind them ſuch as kept the Biſhop of Rome.

War and Peſtilence in Rome.

When they were departed, the Spaniards never were contented till they had gotten the Almains out of the Caſtle of S. Angel, and ſo they had the whole cuſtody of the Pope. And thus much for the ſacking of Rome. Ex Paralip. Abb. Urſper.

The Cardinal beſtireth him for the Pope.

When the Cardinal here in England heard how his Father of Rome was taken Priſoner, he began to ſtir Coals, and hearing of his Captivity, he laboured with the King all that he might, to ſtir him up to fight with the ſaid Pope againſt the Emperor, and to be a defender of the Church, which if he would do, the Cardinal perſwaded him that he ſhould receive great reward at Gods hand. To whom the King anſwered again, and ſaid in this manner, My Lord, I more lament this evil chance, than my Tongue can tell; but where you ſay I am the defender of the Faith, I aſſure you, that this War between the Emperor and the Pope is not for the Faith, but for temporal Poſſeſſions and Dominions; and now ſith Pope Clement is taken by men of War, what ſhould I do? My perſon nor my people cannot reſcue him; but if my Treaſure may help him, take that which ſeemeth to you moſt convenient.

The Pope fighteth for temporal poſſeſſions.

Thus the Cardinal when he could not obtain at the Kings hands what he would, in ſtirring him up to mortal War, he made out of the Kings Treaſure twelveſcore thouſand pounds, which he carried over the Sea with him. After this, the Cardinal ſent his Commiſſion as Legate, to all the Biſhops, commanding Faſtings and ſolemn Proceſſions to be had, wherein they did ſing the Letany after this ſort, Sancta Maria, ora pro Clemente Papâ, Sancte Petre, ora pro Clemente Papa, and ſo forth all the Letany.

Twelve ſcore thouſand pounds conveyed out of England, by the Cardinal.

A new found Letany of the Lord Cardinals making.

This Cardinal, paſſing the Seas with the foreſaid ſums of mony, departed out of Calis, accompanied with Cuthbert Tonſtal Biſhop of London, the Lord Sands the Kings Chamberlain, the Earl of Darby, Sir Henry Guildford, and Sir Thomas More, with many other Knights and Squires, to the number of twelve hundred Horſe, having in his carriage fourſcore Wagons, and threeſcore Mules and ſumpter Horſes.

It were long to diſcourſe in this place the manifold abuſes and Treaſons which he practiſed when he came to the French Court at Amias, converting the great ſums of mony which before you heard he had obtained of the

King

War waged by the Cardinal.

King for the relief and ranſome of Pope Clement, which at that time was priſoner in the Emperors army, and beſtowing the ſame in the hiring of Soldiers, and furniſhing out the French Kings army; appointing alſo certain Engliſh Captains, in the King of Englands name, to go againſt the Emperor, to reſcue the Pope; all which army was paid with the King of Englands money.

Beſides that, he privily by his Letters cauſed Clarentius King at Armes, to joyn with the French Herauld, and openly to defie the Emperor; whereby there began great diſpleaſure to riſe between the Emperor and the King; but that the Emperor of his Politick nature would take no occaſion of diſpleaſure againſt the King of England.

The crafty practice of the Cardinal.

Now again he uttered another of his practices: for upon the ſaid defiance, the Cardinal ſurmiſing and whiſpering in the Kings ear, that the Emperor had evil intreated and impriſoned the Kings Embaſſadors in Spain, cauſed Hugo de Mendoza, the Emperors Embaſſador in England, to be attached, and put in ſafe keeping, and his houſe with all his goods to be ſeized. Which ſo remained, until that manifeſt Letters came of the gentle intreaty of the Kings Embaſſadors in Spain, and then he was again ſet at liberty. When as the Embaſſador complained hereof to the Cardinal, he laid all the fault upon Clarentius; ſaying alſo, that Clarentius had defied the Emperor, without the Kings knowledg, at the requeſt of the Herauld of France: wherefore at his return he ſhould loſe his head at Calis. Whereof Clarentius being advertiſed by the Captain of Baion, in his return took ſhipping at Bullen, and ſo privily came into England, and by means of certain of his friends of the Kings Privy-chamber he was brought into the Kings preſence before the Cardinal knew of it. Whereas he ſhewed unto the King the Cardinals Letters of Commiſſion, and declared the whole order and circumſtance of their gentle entreaty. When the King heard the whole circumſtance thereof; and had a while muſed thereupon, he ſaid, O Lord Jeſus, he that I truſted moſt, told me all theſe things contrary. Well Clarentius, I will no more be ſo light of credence hereafter; for now I ſee well that I have been made believe the thing that was never done: and from that time forward the King never put any more confidence or truſt in the Cardinal.

The Cardinal ſet Clarentius to defie the Emperor, and afterward would be excuſed by his death

The cauſe why the Cardinal ſhould bear the Emperor all this malice and grudg, after ſome writers, appeareth to be thus: At what time as Pope Clement was taken priſoner, (as is before ſaid) the Cardinal wrote unto the Emror, that he ſhould make him Pope. But when he had received an anſwer that pleaſed him not, he waxed furious mad, and ſought all means to diſpleaſe the Emperor, writing very ſharply unto him many menacing Letters, that if he would not make him Pope, he would make ſuch a ruffling betwixt Chriſtian Princes as was not this hundred years before, to make the Emperor repent, yea though it ſhould coſt the whole Realm of England.

The Cardinals proud threats againſt the Emperor.

Whereunto the Emperor made anſwer in a little Book, Imprinted both in Spaniſh and Dutch, anſwering unto many menacings of the Cardinal, and divers of his Articles; but ſpecially to that his ruffling threat, wherein he menaced him, that if he would not make him Pope, he would ſet ſuch a ruffling betwixt Chriſtian Princes as was not this hundred years, though it ſhould coſt the whole Realm of England. Whereunto the Emperour anſwering again, biddeth him look well about him, leſt through his doings and attempts he might bring the matter in that caſe, that it ſhould coſt him the Realm of England in deed.

The Emperors anſwer unto the Cardinals threats.

You have heard before, how that when Pope Clement was priſoner in the Emperors army, the Cardinal required the King, becauſe he did bear the Title of Defender of the Faith, that he would reſcue the Pope. Alſo what the Kings anſwer was thereunto, and what ſums of money he had obtained of the King. Now becauſe you ſhall not alſo be ignorant, by what means, and upon what occaſion this Title of the Defender of the Faith was given unto the King, we think it good ſomewhat to ſay in this place. When as Martin Luther had uttered the abomination of the Pope and his Clergy, and divers Books were come into England, our Cardinal here thinking to find a remedy for that, ſent immediately unto Rome for this Title of Defender of the Faith: which afterward the Vicar of Croyden preached, that the Kings Grace would not loſe it for all London and twenty miles about it. Neither is it marvel, for it coſt more than London and forty miles about it, conſidering the great ſums which you have heard the Cardinal obtained of the King for the Popes relief, beſides the effuſion of much innocent blood.

The Title of Defender of the Faith.

KING Hen. 8.

When this Glorious Title was come from Rome, the Cardinal brought it unto the Kings Grace at Greenwich; and though that the King had it already, and had read it, yet againſt the morning were all the Lords and Gentlemen that could in ſo ſhort ſpace be gathered, ſent for, to come and receive it with honour. In the morning the Cardinal gat him through the backſide into the Friers Obſervants, and part of the Gentlemen went round about, and welcomed him from Rome: part met him half way, and ſome at the Court-gate. The King himſelf met him in the Hall, and brought him up into a great Chamber, where was a ſeat prepared on high for the King and the Cardinal to ſit on whiles the Bull was read. Which pomp all men of wiſdom and underſtanding laughed to ſcorn.

The glorious vanity of the Cardinal laughed to ſcorn.

This done, the King went to his Chappel to hear Maſs, accompanied with many Nobles of his Realm, and Embaſſadors of ſundry Princes. The Cardinal being reveſted to ſing Maſs, the Earl of Eſſex brought the Baſon of water, the Duke of Suffolk gave the Aſſay, and the Duke of Norfolk held the Towel, and ſo he proceeded to Maſs. When Maſs was done, the Bull was again publiſhed, the Trumpets blew, the Shalms and Sackbuts played in honour of the Kings new ſtile. Then the King went to dinner, in the middeſt whereof the King of Heralds and his Company began the Largeſs, crying, Henricus, Dei Gratia, Rex Angliæ & Franciæ, Defenſor Fidei, & Dominus Hiberniæ. Thus were all things ended with great ſolemnity.

The Kings ſtile augmented.

Not much unlike to this was the receiving of the Cardinals Hat; which when a Ruffian had brought unto him to Weſtminſter under his Cloak, he cloathed the meſſenger in rich array, and ſent him back again to Dover; appointing the Biſhop of Canterbury to meet him, and then another Company of the Lords and Gentlemen, I wot not how often, before it came to Weſtminſter; where it was ſet upon a Cupboard, and Tapers round about it, ſo that the greateſt Duke in the land muſt make courteſie thereunto, and to his empty ſeat, he being away.

The thraſonical receiving of the Cardinals Hat.

And forſomuch as we are in hand with the acts and doings of Cardinal Wolſey, among many other things which of purpoſe we overpaſs, this is not to be exempted out of memory, touching his uncourteous, of rather churliſh handling of Richard Pacie, Dean of Pauls. This Pacy, being the Kings Secretary for the Latin Tongue, was of ſuch ripeneſs of wit, of learning and eloquence, alſo in foreign languages ſo expert, that for the one he was thought moſt meet to ſucceed after John Colet, in the Deanry of Pauls: beſide which he was alſo preferred to the Deanry of Exceter. For the other he was ſent in the Kings affairs Ambaſſador to Venice. Which function there he ſo diſcharged, that it is hard to ſay whether he procured more commendation or admiration among the Venetians, both for dexterity of his wit, and ſpecially for the ſingular promptneſs in the Italian Tongue, wherein he ſeemed nothing inferiour, neither to Peter Vanne here in England, the Kings Secretary for the Italian Tongue, nor yet to any other, which were the beſt in that Tongue in all Venice. For opinion and fame of learning, he was ſo notoriouſly accepted, not only here in England with Linacre, Grocinus, More and other, but alſo known and reported abroad in ſuch ſort, that in all the great heap of Eraſmus Epiſtles, he wrote almoſt to none ſo many, as he wrote to this Richard Pacy.

The cruel dealing of the Cardinal againſt Richard Pacy. R. Pacy Dean of Pauls.

As the ſaid Pacy was Reſident Embaſſador at Venice, the King having War the ſame time with Francis the French-King (as afore rehearſed) through the conducting of the Duke of Bourbon, whom he then waged with his expences, ſent commandment to Pacy to give attendance to the Duke of Bourbon, concerning the receit of that mony and other neceſſities and exploits to

that expedition appertaining. In the mean while, as the French King with his Army, and the Duke of Bourbon were approaching in Battel together, near about the City of Pavia, it ſo happened (ſome think through the crafty packing of the Cardinal) that the Kings money was not ſo ready as it was looked for. By reaſon whereof the Duke of Bourbon, perceiving his Soldiers about to ſhrink from him to the French King for lack of payment, called to him the Embaſſador, complaining unto him, how the King of England had deceived him, and broke promiſe with him, to his great diſhonour and utter undoing, &c. Pacie then being ſure of the Kings will, and ſuſpecting the crafty fetch of the Cardinal, deſired the Duke not to take diſcomfort, nor any diffidence of the Kings aſſured promiſe, excuſing the delay of the money as well as he could, by intercipation, or other cauſes by the way incident, rather than for any lack of fidelity on the Kings behalf: adding moreover, that if it would pleaſe him happily to proceed, as he had couragiouſly begun, he ſhould not ſtay for the Kings money: ſo ſure he was of the Kings mind therein, that he would ſupply the lack of that payment upon his own credit, among his friends at Venice, and ſo he did. Whereupon the Soldiers being ſufficiently ſatisfied with payment of their wages, proceeded forth with the Duke unto the Battel. In the which Battel the foreſaid French King, the ſame time before the City of Pavie, was taken priſoner, as is before declared. Which being eftſoons known to the King of England, Pacie had both condign thanks for his faithful ſervice, and alſo his money repayed again with the uttermoſt, as he well deſerved. But as the laud and the renowned praiſe of men for their worthy proweſſes, commonly in this world never go unaccompanied with ſome privy canker of envy and diſdain following after, ſo the ſingular induſtry of Pacie, as it won much commendation with many, ſo it could not avoid the ſecret ſting of ſome Serpents. For the conceived hatred of this Cardinal ſo kindled againſt him, that he never ceaſed, till firſt he brought him out of the Kings favour, and at laſt alſo out of his perfect wits.

The Duke of Bourbon diſappointed of the Kings money.

Richard Pacie helpeth the Duke of Bourbon with mony.

Richard Pacie was the means why the French King was taken.

The Cardinal hated Pacie.

The occaſion how he fell beſide himſelf was this, for that the Cardinal after the death of Pope Adrian hoping no leſs but that he ſhould have been advanced unto the Papacy, and yet miſſing thereof, he ſuppoſed with himſelf the fault chiefly to reſt in Pacies negligence, by whoſe great wit and learning, and earneſt means and ſute, he thought eaſily he might have atchieved and compaſſed the Triple Crown. Wherefore he ſeeing it otherwiſe come to paſs, and inflamed againſt Pacie for the ſame, wrought ſuch ways and means, that by the ſpace almoſt of two years, Pacie continuing at Venice, had neither writing from the King, nor his Council, what he ſhould do; nor yet any manner of allowance for his diet (although he wrote, and ſent Letters for the ſame to England very often) for the Cardinal had altogether incenſed the King againſt him. Whereupon the ſaid Pacie took ſuch an inward thought and conceit, that his wits began to fail him, he being notwithſtanding in ſure favour among the Senators of Venice, that neither for gold nor ſilver he could there have lacked. By ſome it was reported that the Venetian Legate here in England coming to the Cardinal, required if he would command any thing to the Engliſh Embaſſador at Venice? To whom he ſhould anſwer again in high words, ſaying, Paceus decepit Regem. Which words coming to Pacies ears, ſo deeply pierced his ſtomach, that he fell quite beſides himſelf. I heard it moreover of another thus teſtified, who had a Brother the ſame time dwelling with Pacie: that the Cardinal about the returning of Pacie from Venice, ſent him a Letter ſo powdred (with what Spices I cannot tell) that at the reading thereof Pacie being then in the fields, fell ſuddenly in ſuch a mighty running for the ſpace of two miles, that his ſervants had much ado to take him, and bring him home.

The Cardinal practiſeth againſt Pacie.

Pacie in great credit with the Venetians.

The Cardinal falſly belieth Pacie.

Pacie beſtraught of his wits.

This piteous caſe of Pacie was not a little lamented by the whole Senate, and chief Learned men in Venice, inſomuch that the King was not only certified thereof by Thomas Lupſet, (who then was chief man about Pacie, and his Secretary for that Embaſſage) but alſo the ſaid Senate of Venice wrote, in ſuch ſharp and vehement wiſe unto their Embaſſador then being in England, that he ſhould ſignifie unto the King touching Pacies caſe, that thereby the King knowing the truth, and the whole circumſtance of the matter, was not a little ſorrowful therefore. Whereupon Pacie was forthwith ſent for home, and when he came to England, he was commanded by the King to be ſpecially well tended and to lack no keeping. Inſomuch that within a ſmall proceſs of time he was pretily well come again to his wits, and began to ſtudy the Hebrew Tongue with Wakefield, ſo that (the Cardinal then being abſent) ſuch ways were found by his friends, that he was brought to the King, lying then at Richmond, where he and the King ſecretly communed together by the ſpace of two hours and more, not without great rejoycing to the King as it was perceived, to ſee him ſo well amended, and returned to himſelf again, giving likewiſe ſtrait charge and commandment, that he ſhould lack nothing. The Cardinal being then not preſent, when he heard of this, fearing leſt he had diſcloſed ſomewhat to the King, which he would not have known, and doubting that the King ſhould caſt his favour again unto Pacie, began within a while after to quarrel, and pick matters, and to lay certain things to Pacies charge, whereas he rather ſhould have cleared himſelf of thoſe things which Pacie laid unto him before the King, which was contrary to all good form and order of juſtice. For where the King had willed the Cardinal to purge himſelf of thoſe things which Pacie had rightly charged him withal, he ſitting in judgment with the Duke of Norfolk, and other States of the Realm, not as a Defendent, but as a Judg in his own cauſe, ſo bare out himſelf and weighed down Pacie, that Pacie was commanded to the Tower of London as priſoner: where he continued by the ſpace of two years, or thereabout, and afterward by the Kings commandment was diſcharged. But he being there priſoner, was therewith ſo deadly wounded and ſtricken, that he fell worſe from his wits than ever he was before, being in ſuch a Phrenſie or Lunacy, that to his dying day he never came perfectly to himſelf again. Notwithſtanding this in him was no perpetual Phrenſie, but came by fits; and when the fit was paſt, he could look on his Book, and reaſon and talk handſomely, but that now and then he ſhewed his diſeaſe. And thus much between the Cardinal and Pacie.

Pacie pretily recovered.

Pacie brought to the Kings ſpeech.

Pacie commanded to the Tower by the Cardinal.

Pacie diſcharged out of the Tower.

By the ſtory of Pacie, and alſo by other paſſages above mentioned, ye may partly conceive how greedy this Cardinal was to be made Pope. Touching which matter here by the way ſomething to intreat, firſt it is to be underſtood, that forſomuch as Pacie either would not or could not ſerve the Cardinals purpoſe herein, he thought to accompliſh his deſire by other means, and namely by Stephen Gardener, who was then ſhortly after ſent Embaſſador to Rome by the King and the Cardinal, in the time of Pope Clement the Seventh; and that for two ſpecial cauſes, one was about the divorcement, the other for promoting the Cardinal to be Pope. As touching the Divorcement we will ſpeak (the Lord willing) hereafter. In the mean time as concerning the advancement of the Cardinal, great labour was made, as in Letters may appear, ſent from the Cardinal to the ſaid Stephen Gardener; in the which Letters he did ſollicite the ſaid Gardener, by all means to purſue the ſuit, willing him to ſtick for no coſt, ſo far as ſix or ſeven thouſand pounds would ſtretch; for more he ſaid he would not give for the Triple Crown. Mark here (Chriſtian Reader) what an holy Catholick Church this is, which rather may be called a Burſe, or Mart of Merchants (Ne quid dicam durius) than any true form of a Church.

The Cardinal labours to be Pope.

Stephen Gardener Embaſſador at Rome for the King and the Cardinal.

Many both of his, and alſo of the Kings Letters, I could here inſert; but for growing of the Volume, I let them paſs. One for examples ſake, ſent by the Cardinal to Gardener, another alſo from the King to the ſaid Gardener, ſhall at this time ſuffice concerning this matter. And firſt the Copy of the Cardinals ambitious Letter here in form followeth.

The Copy of an ambitious Letter written by Tho. Wolſey Cardinal of York, unto Stephen Gardener, one of King Henries Orators in the Court of Rome, for the procuring of the Papal dignity to the ſaid Cardinal.

A Letter of the Cardinal to Stephen Gardener Liger at Rome.

MAſter Stephen, albeit ye ſhall be ſufficiently, with your Colleagues, by ſuch Inſtructions as be given to Mounſieur Vincent, informed of the Kings mind and mine, concerning my advancement unto the dignity Papal, not doubting but that for the ſingular devotion which you bear towards the King and his affairs, both general and particular, and perfect love which ye have toward me, ye will omit nothing that may be excogitate to ſerve and conduce to that purpoſe: yet I thought convenient, for the more fervent expreſſion of my mind in that behalf, to write unto you (as to the perſon whom I do moſt entirely truſt, and by whom this thing ſhall be more pithily ſet forth) theſe few words following of mine own hand, I doubt not but ye do profoundly conſider as well the ſtate wherein the Church and all Chriſtendom doth ſtand now preſently, as alſo the ſtate of this Realm, and of the Kings ſecret matter; which if it ſhould be brought to paſs by any other means than by the authority of the Church, I account this Prince and Realm utterly undone. Wherefore it is expedient to have ſuch a one to be Pope and common Father of all Princes, as may, can, and will give remedy to the premiſſes. And although I account my ſelf much unable, and that it ſhall be now incommodious in this mine old age to be the ſaid common Father, yet when all things be well pondered, & the qualities of all the Cardinals well conſidered (Abſit verbum jactantiæ) there ſhall be none found that can and will ſet remedy in the foreſaid things, but only the Cardinal of York, whoſe good will and zeal is not to you, of all men, unknown. And were it not for the reintegration of the ſtate of the Church and See Apoſtolick to the priſtine dignity, and for the conducing of peace amongſt Chriſtian Princes, and eſpecially to relieve this Prince and Realm from the calamities that the ſame be now in, all the riches or honour of the world ſhould not cauſe me, Ne dum aſpirare, ſed ne conſentire, to accept the ſaid dignity, although the ſame with all commodities were offered unto me.

Crafty pretences to ſerve ambitious purpoſes. O fained hypocriſie.

Belike the Cardinal here lacketh good neighbours, ſeeing he is compelled to praiſe himſelf. You may long ſay ſo, before we will believe You.

Nevertheleſs, conforming my ſelf to the neceſſity of the time, and the will and pleaſure of theſe two Princes, I am content to approve all my wit and ſtudy, and to ſet forth all means and ways, Ut beneſaciam rebus Chriſtianitatis, for the attaining of the ſaid dignity. For the atchieving and attaining whereof, foraſmuch as thereupon dependeth the health and wealth, not only of theſe two Princes and their Realms, but of all Chriſtendom, nothing is to be omitted that may conduce to the ſaid end and purpoſe. Wherefore, Maſter Stephen, ſince you be ſo plainly advertiſed of my mind and intent, I ſhall pray you to extend Omnes nervos ingenii tui, ut iſta res ad effectum produci poſſit, nullis parcendo ſumptibus, pollicitationibus, ſive laboribus: ita ut hominum videris ingenia & affectiones, ſive ad privata, ſive ad publica, ſic accommodes actiones tuas. Non deeſt tibi & Collegis tuis ampliſſima poteſtas, nullis terminis aut conditionibus limitata ſeu reſtricta; & quicquid feceris, ſcito omnia apud hunc Regem & me eſſe grata & tuta. Nam omnia (ut paucis abſolvam) in tuo ingenio & fide repoſuimus. Nihil ſupereſt aliud ſcribendum, niſi quod ſupplex orem, ut omnes actiones tuas ſecundet Deus opt. maximuſque, & ex corde vale.

Ex ædibus meis Weſtmonaſt. vii. Febr.

Tuæ ſalutis & amplitudinis cupidiſſimus,

T. Ebor.

Stephen Gardener the Cardinals truſty factor.

After this Letter of the Cardinal, conſequently here inſueth another Letter of the King, to the foreſaid Stephen Gardener, and other his Orators at Rome; containing ſuch inſtructions and documents as they ſhould practiſe with the Cardinals of Rome, in canvaſing for the ſaid Thomas Wolſey Cardinal of York to be elected Pope, if Pope Clement were dead: or if he were not dead, yet at leaſt to inſtruct them what to do when he ſhould die.

The contents of the Letter, albeit they include no great matter worthy our knowledg, nor greatly neceſſary for our ſtory, yet for the ridiculous manner of the handling, and curious Secretariſhip thereof, full of glorious affectation, I thought it not here unmeet for the ſtudies and appetites of ſome, to exemplifie the ſame, or at leaſt to make the Reader ſome paſtime by the way, in beholding the glorious ſtile of this vain-glorious Cardinal, being ſute-like to his glorious life. The Copy of the Letter bearing the name of the King, but indeed ſavouring altogether of the Cardinals device and ſwelling vein, doth thus proceed in form and ſtile as followeth.

¶ Inſtructions ſent by the Kings Highneſs, to his Truſty Counſellors and Servants, Mr. Stephen Gardener, Doctor of both Laws, Sir Francis Brian, Sir Gregory de Caſſalis, Knights, and Mr. Peter Vanne the Kings Secretary for the Italian Tongue, his Embaſſadors in the Court of Rome, for the Election of the Cardinal of York to the Papacy, if Pope Clement were dead.

Mark the ſtile, and you ſhall ſee that it is all one with the Cardinals former Letter, which he ſaith he wrote with his own hand.

Inſtructions in the Kings name to his Legates at Rome.

FIrſt whereas a good ſeaſon ſince the depeach of Maſter Stephen Gardener, an Ambaſſiate towards the Court of Rome, the Kings Highneſs by ſundry ways hath been advertiſed of the death of our holy Father the Pope Clement of that name the Seventh, whoſe ſoul Jeſus pardon, by mean whereof the charge heretofore committed by his Grace unto his Orators, to have been now executed with the ſaid late Pope, cannot at his hands take effect, his Highneſs pondering and profoundly conſidering the preſent ſtate of Chriſtendom, miſerably and piteouſly afflicted with the Inteſtine wars, diſſentions, and diſcords, reigning amongſt the Princes of the ſame, and how the dignity of the See Apoſtolick, by ſuch trouble and perſecution, as hath been inferred thereunto theſe years paſſed, is not a little diminiſhed and impaired, like to come to a total ruin, if by the help and aſſiſtance of good and vertuous Princes the ambition of thoſe which ſtudy the extermination thereof, be not in time repreſſed: conſidering furthermore, that as well to conduce the reſt and tranquility in Chriſtendom, as to reſtore, repair, and reintegrate the ſtate, authority, and reputation of the ſaid See Apoſtolick, nothing is more requiſite and neceſſary, than that ſuch a head and common Father be now, at this time of vacation of the dignity Papal, provided and elected to ſucceed in the ſame, as both may, can, and will purvey to the reſtauration of the ſaid See, and hath, and may have the aſſiſtance of ſuch vertuous and puiſſant Princes, as tender the defence, maintenance and increaſe of the dignity aforeſaid, and that may meet with the inordinate ambition of the Emperor, who nothing more ſtudieth, than for his own exaltation to ſuppreſs the Church and See Apoſtolick: remembring alſo the high importance of the Kings great and weighty cauſe of Matrimony, committed to the charge of the ſaid Orators, and how manifold dangers, and irreparable damages depend upon the tract, delay, or diſappointment thereof, which by no way or mean can be conduced to the Kings purpoſe and deſire by the authority of the Church, but only by ſpecial, aſſured and perfect favour of the Head of the ſame Church; his Highneſs alſo being as loth as any living Prince or perſon may be, to recur unto other refuge, ſuccour or remedy in the ſaid cauſe, than to the authority of the See Apoſtolick, if his Grace may there find the favour and benignity that to his merits towards the ſame be correſpondent; of which favour his Highneſs ſhould be clearly deprived and fruſtrate, in caſe the election of the future Pope ſhould paſs upon any perſon, of whom his Grace were not perfectly aſſured: his Highneſs for the reſpects and conſiderations before ſpecified, perceiving his good Brother and perpetual Allie the French King, in the ſaid

'said intention, to be unite, knit, and in all actions and 'doings of importance assuredly combined unto his Grace, 'proceeding together in one will, mind, purpose, and con-'formity, hath by good and mature deliberation, studied, 'devised, and excogitate with himself who were and 'might be the most able, meet, and convenient person, ha-'ving the qualities before specified, to be advanced at this 'time, unto the said dignity Papal. And finally when his 'Grace hath well revolved with himself all the respects 'and considerations aforesaid, noting also all things meet to 'be regarded in every of the Cardinals of the Church of 'Rome, both present now in the Court there, and absent 'from the same; it cannot be found that there is any per-'son sufficiently furnished with the requisites before speci-'fied, but only the most Reverend Father in God, and his 'most trusty Counsellor, the Lord Legate Cardinal, Arch-'bishop of York, Primate and Chancellor of this Realm. 'VVho being well known to have as fervent a zeal, study, 'mind, and desire to the universal weal, repose and tran-'quility of Christendom, to the reintegration and restaura-'tion of the dignity, authority, reputation, and rights of 'the Church and See Apostolick, to the surety, weal, and 'exaltation of the Kings Highness, the French King and 'other their Confederates, and finally to the perfection of 'the Kings said great and weighty cause, whereupon de-'pendeth the surety of his Royal person, succession, realm, 'people, and dominions, as any person living can or may 'have: and that the said most Reverend Father hath the 'fast assured favour herein of the French King (who of his 'own meer motion hath frankly and liberally offered unto 'him all that by himself, his friends, his power, his agents, 'or otherwise he may, or can possibly do for his advance-'ment to the said dignity Papal) is the person who for his 'singular vertue, his entire devotion to peace and restaura-'tion of the said See, the excellency of his wisdom, learn-'ing, and experience, the magnanimity in his actions and 'doings, the dignity wherein he is already constituted, the 'promotions which he hath attained, the substance that he 'is of, his reputation, his conduct, his diligence, his dex-'terity, his discretion, his policy, and finally, the notable 'and high favour that the Kings Highness, and the said 'French King bear unto him, is only he, that being called 'unto the said dignity Papal, may, can, and will meet with 'the inordinate ambition of the said Emperor, and conse-'quently with establishment of tranquility amongst Chri-'stian Princes, and is by the assistance of his friends, meet, 'convenient and able to succour, relieve, and clearly to re-'pair the piteous jacture and decay, that the Church and 'See Apostolick hath so long suffered, and to defend the 'same from the eminent danger now apparent to ensue if 'the said Emperor, who (as the Kings Highness is asser-'tained) determined in the beginning of January now 'passed to take his journey towards Rome, should take up-'on this vacation of the said See, (chanced, as is upon many 'evident presumptions to be thought by some detestable 'act committed for the said late Popes destruction) not 'by force, violence, cautele, blandishing promises, or other-'wise, have the election to proceed at his will, favour, and 'devotion; whereby having a Pope at his arbitrate, either 'he should not fail to usurp and take upon him the rights, 'provents, and patrimony of the Church, using him as his 'Chaplain and vassal, or else by little and little utterly to 'exclude and extinguish him and his authority.

See how this Prelate is all in his exaltation.

That is after his own desire.

'For this cause, if ever it were expedient that good 'Christian Princes look to the tuition, maintenance, defence, 'and continuance of Christs Church, Faith, and Religion, 'now is it the time, above all other, to provide and beware 'by all ways possible, lest the same neglected, forgotten, 'and not in time relieved, be brought unto extreme ruin. 'And therefore the Kings Highness having singular and 'special trust and confidence in the wisdoms, discretions, 'fidelities, diligences, and circumspections of his said Ora-'tors (to whom no part of the premisses is unknown, nor 'how necessary, and in any wise expedient it shall be for 'perfection of the Kings said great and weighty (*) matter 'to them committed, to have the said Lord Legate of York, 'and none other, advanced to the said dignity Papal) will-'eth, desireth, ordaineth, and expressly chargeth and com-'mandeth his said Orators, and every of them, no less to 'employ, endeavour, and determine themselves, to solicite, 'set forth, further promote, labour and conduce the ad-'vancement of the said Lord Legate of York to that dig-'nity, than they would that thing which the Kings High-'ness most highly, next God and his soul, with all 'earnestness and fervent mind doth, above all other 'things, covet and desire, and also no less than they 'would the speedy obtaining and perfection of all such 'things, touching the Kings said weighty matter com-'mitted to their charges: the making or marring 'whereof, the said late Pope being now deceased, consist-'eth only in the advancement of the said Lord Legate of 'York to the dignity Papal.

The Thrasonical praise of the Cardinal.

Note this cause. The Cardinal is most meet to be Pope, because he can best bridle the Emperor.

Destroyed authority were clean extinct, the Faith and Religion of Christ should stand and flourish much better

(*) By this weighty matter here is meant the cause of the Kings divorce.

'For (as the Kings said Embassadors may by their wis-'doms well think and consider) the same must of ne-'cessity come, and fortune either to one that is an as-'sured friend to his Grace and the French King, or 'to one that is a manifest enemy to them, favouring 'the Emperors part; or to one indifferent and mean 'between both. And if it should chance upon a ma-'nifest enemy, it is evident that the Kings desire at his 'hand were meerly impossible to be had, and never 'were to be attained that way. If it should come to 'one being indifferent and mean between both, it is 'more than notorious that his Grace, at the least, should 'be contained with fair words and promises, and yet 'such respect should be had to the Emperor, that fi-'nally under hope of obtaining something, there should 'be no more, but tract, delay, and finally no manner 'fruit nor effect: whereof experience hath already been 'seen in one that had cause to be more friendly to the 'King, than indifferent or mean between both, and 'yet how long the matter hath depended, is to the 'Kings said Embassadors well known. So that of ne-'cessity this thing must be conduced to one that is an 'assured friend. Then noting substantially the things ne-'cessary to concur in such a friend both for the weal of 'Christendom, the relief of the Church, the firm ad-'hering to the Kings Highness, and the French King with 'other their Confederates, and the perfect conducing of 'the Kings great matter which suffereth no tract, delay, 'or negative; it shall be found, that there is none other 'for this purpose, but only the said Lord Legate of 'York.

'The Kings said Embassadors shall therefore plant the 'foundation of all their study, labour, and sollicitation, 'only to that purpose. And for the better introduction 'of the ways and means, how this thing shall be sollici-'ted; they shall receive herewith a Schedule, wherein is 'mentioned and noted by name, how many, and what 'Cardinals of likelihood shall be present at the Election, 'and how many and which of the other shall be absent. 'Semblably, how many of them that be like to be present, 'may be thought to be friends to the Kings Highness, and 'the French King, whose names in the said Schedule be 'noted with A. and how many are thought to be Impe-'rial, whose names be noted with B. In the same Sche-'dule be also set out the number and names of those that 'be thought to be neutral or indifferent, marked with N. 'And furthermore, they be first mentioned therein, which 'be thought most like to aspire to that dignity.

A signifieth the Cardinals of the Kings, and the French Kings side. B signifieth the Cardinals of the Emperors side. But here is never a C to signifie any Cardinals on Christs side.

Herein be many things well to be regarded. First, the 'number of the Cardinals that are like to be present, which '(as is thought here) shall not exceed nine and thirty. Se-'condly, that to have Election to the Kings purpose, shall 'be requisite to have two parts of the three of the said 'number, which two parts must be twenty six. Then is 'it to be noted, that they which be thought to be friends 'to the Kings Highness and the French King, be in num-'ber twenty. So that if they may be made sure to the 'Kings devotion, there shall lack but six of the number, 'which shall suffice to make the Election: which number 'the Kings said Embassadors shall move, win, and attain, 'either of them that be thought to be indifferent, or some 'other.

'In the conducing whereof two ways be specially to be 'remembred. One is if the Cardinals present, having God 'and the Holy Ghost before them shall be minded (as to 'their duty appertaineth) to have respect to the present ca-'lamity of the Church and all Christendom, intending the 'relief, succour and restauration of the same, and to preserve 'themselves, and the dignity of the See Apostolick, then 'looking profoundly upon the state of the things, they

As though the Popes Election had any thing to do with the Holy Ghost.

'they cannot fail * facily of themſelves to find and per'ceive, that to conduce their purpoſe there is only the ſaid
'Lord Legate of York. And in this caſe it is verily to be 'thought, that very reaſon it ſelf, and their own conſci-
'ence ſhall lead them like vertuous Fathers, to have their 'principal reſpect hereunto; and (particular affections ſet
'apart) to accord and agree without difficulty to that 'which ſo manifeſtly is known to be the thing, above all
'other expedient. Nevertheleſs, becauſe percaſe humane
'fragility ſuffereth not all things to be pondered, trutinate,
'and weighed in juſt ballance, but that (as we be men)
'errors may run, unleſs then remedy be provided: it ap-
'pertaineth in matter of ſo high importance, to the com-
'fort and relief of all Chriſtendom, to ſuccour the infir-
'mity that may chance, not for corruption, or to any per-
'verſe, unlawful, or evil intent, but rather to help to the
'lacks and defaults, which by ſuch fragility might elſe take
'plâce; and therefore expedient it ſhall be that the Kings
'ſaid Orators, to ſo notable a purpoſe where they ſhall
'perceive the conſideration and reſpect, whereunto rea-
'ſon leadeth, to be in any part to be aided or ſupplied, do
'the ſame with pollicitations of promotions, ſpiritual offi-
'ces, dignities, rewards of money, or other things, ſuch
'as to them ſhall ſeem meet to the purpoſe, inculking into
'the minds of ſuch perſons as ſhall be requiſite, firſt what 'things the ſaid Lord Legate of York ſhall leave, if he
'ſhould be advanced to the ſaid dignity, which be ſuch as
'the eſtabliſhment of his ſtate conſidered, be far more to
'his commodity (if he ſhould regard his private weal)
'than to enter into this dangerous ſtorm, and troublous
'tempeſt, for the relief of the Church and all Chriſten-
'dom; whereunto (his ſaid private weal ſet apart) he is 'totally devoted and dedicate, to the expoſition of his 'body, blood, and life, glad and ready with the ſacrifice
'thereof to do ſervice to God, his Church, his Faith and 'Religion: which ſaid promotions, the Kings Highneſs
'finding cauſe, given unto him by the gratitude and con-
'formity of his friends, will not fail to beſtow to their be'nefit, beſides large rewards, to have this ſo vertuous an 'act brought to perfection. For pollicitation whereof, the 'Kings ſaid Embaſſadors be furniſhed at this time with 'ample commiſſion, as by the ſame they ſhall perceive:
'The effect whereof they ſhall execute without exception,
'as by their wiſdoms ſhall be thought convenient: ſo al-
'ways as it be done with ſuch circumſpection, as that 'there may be appearance of good fruit to enſue. And
'ſemblably they be furniſhed with Letters, as well to the 'College of Cardinals in general, as to them all that be
'like to be preſent in particular: which they ſhall now
'deliver to the beſt furtherance and advancement of their
'purpoſe, not ſparing to declare unto them the liberality
'of the ſaid Lord Legate of York, the ſubſtance that he is 'of, the aſſured aſſiſtance that he ſhall have of theſe Princes
'and their Confederates, whereby he ſhall be able above any 'other that they can deviſe, to reward, promote, advance
'and recompence his friends to the uttermoſt; aſſuring
'them that theſe two Princes will not fail alſo highly, and 'in the beſt ſort to conſider their gratitudes, with any 'thing that they may excogitate to their profits and pro-
'motions, or any of their friends. So that by this mean,
'and with ſuch good pollicitations, grounded upon a law-
'ful, honourable, and juſt cauſe (and not upon any corrupt
'or indue intent, to conduce things to ſiniſter purpoſe)
'the Kings ſaid Orators by their good policies ſhall attain
'the perfect and ſure good will of a great many of them,
'and by that way ſhall with good dexterity combine and
'knit thoſe, which will adhere hereunto, in a perfect faſt-
'neſs, and in an indiſſoluble knot, firmly to ſtick and hold
'together, without variation or declining from their pur-
'poſe, for any perſwaſion, practice or mean, that can be 'made to the contrary. Which thing ſurely to be provi'ded, and ſuch a knot of twenty, eighteen, or at the leaſt
'(if it may be) of ſixteen Cardinals to be had, is in any
'wiſe expedient. For they perſiſting in their determinati-
'on, ſhall not fail to impeach, that no adverſe part can 'have a full number to make a due and lawful Election.
'And yet they being found in a conſtantneſs to this good
'purpoſe, ſhall by little and little allure and bring other
'unto them, ſo as the reſidue perceiving ſo great a
'towardneſs, and fearing a ſufficient number to accede
'without them, and thereby the Election to paſs againſt
'their wills, ſhall percaſe be the more prone and ready to 'come unto that party: whereunto nothing ſhould of
'reaſon ſooner move them, than the very reſpect to the 'infinite goodneſs, that thereby to themſelves in particular,
'and the univerſal Church and Religion in general, is ap-
'parent to enſue.

'Nevertheleſs, if leaving the direct way they will be
'abuſed with any other incantations, or for private ambi-
'tion perſiſt in contending for themſelves, then is it evi'dent, they ſearch nothing more than the ruin of the See
'Apoſtolick. In which caſe other ways be to be deviſed,
'and their * indue demeanor to be remedied and reſiſted.
'For this cauſe, and to be ſure in all events, the Kings
'ſaid Orators ſhall by their wiſdoms find the means to 'have ſome faſt and ſure perſons in the Conclave, ſuch as 'may not only practiſe and ſet forth things there to the 'purpoſe, but alſo give ſuch knowledg outward, as the 'Kings ſaid Orators may thereby the better know how to 'order their proceedings. And amongſt other it is thought
'that Mounſieur de Vaulx, one of the French Embaſſadors
'(whom the French King hath commanded expreſly to 'further this matter by all the means to him poſſible)
'ſhould be one to enter the ſaid Conclave, not as an Em-
'baſſador, but as the Miniſter of ſome Cardinal, friend of 'the French King. And ſemblably Sir Gregory de Caſſalis,
'who for his wiſdom, conduct, language, acquaintance,
'and other good qualities, may do excellent good in that
'behalf.

'And in this matter it is to be conſidered, that ſince this 'Election, in the perſon of the ſaid Lord Legate of York,
'by one way or other ſuffereth nō negative, albeit the 'Kings Highneſs truſteth that the ſame ſhall have his
'courſe directly: yet if for lack of grace or intendment,
'there ſhould be any deſpair thereof, other ways be, to be 'provided. And for that cauſe to ſhew the ſaid Orators ſe-
'cretly, there is a proteſtation paſſed by the Cardinals be'ing in England and in France, according to a Copy
'which the ſaid Orators ſhall receive herewith, which is
'and ſhall be kept ſecret, unleſs then by the indue proceed-
'ing uſed in the Election, the ſame ſhall need to be pub-
'liſhed. So that the Kings ſaid Orators, now advertiſed
'thereof, ſhall note for a ſpecial ground, that if it ſhall ap'pear that the Election cannot be had in the perſon of the
'ſaid Lord Legate of York; the band and number unite
'and knit together to the Kings devotion, in finding none
'other remedy, muſt be inſtructed beforehand in that caſe
'to perſiſt in their determination, and when time ſhall
'be, by reaſon of ſuch deſpair, to proteſt, grounding the
'ſame their proteſtation upon ſuch reſpects, as cannot
'lack to be introduced for the avoiding of the extreme
'danger by the pertinacity and wilfulneſs of the adverſe
'Cardinals, eminent to the ruin of the Church, and of all
'Chriſtendom. Which proteſtation may before hand be
'couched and deviſed by the ſaid Maſter Stephen Gardener,
'and by the policy of the ſaid Mounſieur de Vaulx, and
'Sir Gregory, be ſet forth in time convenient: and
'thereupon the Cardinals of the Kings, and the French
'Kings adherents to depart the Conclave; whereby re'pairing to ſome other ſure place, they with the reſidue of 'the Cardinals abſent, may proceed to ſuch an Election as 'may be to Gods pleaſure, the weal of his Church and

{KING Hen.8.}

'but also in the more devotion of these two Princes: 'which shall much confer to the Kings purpose, and em-'bolden the Cardinals favouring the desire of these two 'Princes, both to persist in their deliberation, and also in 'time of extreme despair to protest and depart, as is afore-'said.

'And because nothing should withdraw the minds of 'the Cardinals from this purpose, who percase might think 'that the said Lord Legate of York being elected, would 'not repair to the Court of Rome, but demore in Avini-'on, or some other place out of Italy, the Kings said Am-'bassadors shall remove all such suspitions, by two evi-'dent arguments and reasons. One is, That the said 'Cardinal of York, advanced to that dignity, must there-'by leave all other his promotions, and consequently 'should be dispurveyed of any habitation, place, or conveni-'ent living, if remaining in another strange Countrey, he 'should defer to come unto Rome, where should be the 'place of his See and entire living. Wherefore if it were 'far from reason to think, that he, which hitherto for 'his estate had lived in such abundance, should be so pusil-'lanim for his promotion, to bring himself into condign 'penury and poverty, or to live in place private, to the 'hindrance of his honour, profit, or reputation. Se-'condly, the thing principally moving him to be con-'tented, at these Princes requests, to change his state pre-'sent, is the fervent zeal he hath to expone his Study, Tra-'vel, Labour, Substance, Wit, Body, Blood, and Life, in 'the quarrel of Gods Church, Faith, and of Christendom, 'which is too high an exception, and a ground to be taken 'to remain and lye in a corner or private place; but that 'rather than he would suffer so high an exception to be 'found in him, he would expone all that he might do: 'who having the assistance of these two Princes, should 'not fail (God willing) to pass directly to his See, with 'honour and comfort unto all Italy, and the discouragement 'of the party that would be adverse thereunto. And there-'fore the Cardinals should not need to fear any such thing, 'but might be well assured to have his presence there to 'their comfort, in all celerity and diligence possible.

Demorari that is to say tarry. The first reason.

Pusillanime. i. Pusillo animo: that is, weak hearted. The second reason.

The Cardinal dreameth that he is Pope already.

'Furthermore, to the intent the Kings said Ambassa-'dors may have all the friends that may be to this purpose, 'expedient it shall be, that they, with the Venetians, 'the Florentines, the Duke of Ferrare, and other whom 'they shall think good to win unto their party, use the 'ways that may best conduce thereunto. And amongst 'other, forasmuch as they which depended upon the Car-'dinal de Medices shall doubt in this case to be reject, 'the Kings said Orators shall inculke unto them the singular 'devotion and special favour that the said Lord Legat of 'York hath always born unto their family; assuring them 'that he will take them in no futher distance of entire 'love, than they were with Pope Leo, Clement, or any 'other. And semblably, they shall put the Florentines in 'comfort of the exclusion of the governance of the said 'Family de Medices in Florence, and of their enjoying of 'their liberty. Likewise putting the Cardinals in perfect 'hope of recovery of the Patrimonies of the Church; 'to contain the Venetians in good trust of a reasonable 'way to be taken for Servia and Ravenna, to their con-'tentment; and also to shew the Duke of Ferrare, how 'the said Lord Legat was the mean of the conjunction 'of him in league with the French King, with assured 'promise of his continuance in as much love and favour 'as he may bear unto him, in all his causes and affairs. 'And thus, having those folks to their friends, whose O-'ratours shall have the uttermost custody of the Conclave, 'and the Kings Ambassadors and the French Ambassadors 'being in the interior parts thereof, they, being so amply 'instructed and furnished, shall not fail (God willing) 'by one or other of the said two ways, and specially by 'the direct election at Rome, if it be possible, or at the 'least, by the way of the said protestation and departure 'of the Cardinals, to conduce the Kings purpose in the 'said election to the desired end. In the doing whereof, 'albeit there is no doubt but that the French Orators will 'joyn with them sincerely, to the perfection of the pre-'misses in omne eventum, it shall be well done, that the 'Kings said Orators have a substantial and politick regard 'to the proceedings of the same French Orators, lest that 'if percase they should find any despair in the election to 'pass in the person of the said Lord Legat of York, they 'making some other Cardinals to their side for the ad-'vancement of any of them to the said dignity, should 'be the more strange, alien, or peradventure refuse to 'come unto the said protestation and departure out of the 'Conclave: Which is the only remedy and refuge (the 'Cardinals persisting in their wilfulness) to interrupt, dis-'appoint, infringe, and make void their election.

The Cardinal casteth all his nets to catch the triple Crown.

Two faces in one Cardinals hat.

How politick the children of this world be in their generation.

'One other thing there is to be well noted by the said 'Ambassadors, and by them to be inculcate in the minds 'of the Cardinals; that if any manner of difficulty shall 'be made by the Imperials to condescend unto this electi-'on upon the said Lord Legate of York; and that they of 'the Emperors part would refuse all ways of good order 'and reason, proceeding to any election without the con-'sent of the residue that would protest, they may be sure 'that unto their Sinister and undue way they should have 'no Prince or Potentate adherent, but only the Emperor 'and his Brother, and that the other part should have the 'rest of all Christendom, that is to say, the Kings High-'ness, the French King, the King of Hungary, Polony, 'Scotland, and Denmark, with the Venetian, the Dukes 'of Ferrare, Millan, the Florentines, and the rest of all 'Italy; besides the Merchants of the Almain or Hans, and 'other leagues being in the dominion of the said King of 'Polony: and over that, the King of Portugal, who is 'loth and sorry to see the Emperor to come to so great a 'height as he aspireth unto. So that, having these migh-'ty and noble puissances to their assistances and the corro-'boration of their act, it is facil to think the other could 'be of no validity, nor have or take any manner of place: 'which is no small grounds whereupon the said Cardinals 'may be the better animate to the Kings, and the French 'Kings devotion, and therefore it is better to be imprinted 'in their minds accordingly.

It is not here an holy election, meet for such an holy seat?

Sides against the Emperor.

'Finally, If the Kings said Orators, endeavouring them-'selves to the conducing of the said election in the person 'of the said Lord Legat of York, should at the last find, 'that there were none other difficulty, but only that the 'election in his person being totally desperate, the same 'were conducible to the Cardinal Campeius: then, rather 'than all should fail, if the other could by no means be 'brought to pass, the Kings pleasure is, that being assured 'it may, the other lacking, be conduced to the same Car-'dinal Campeius, they take such way as in that case the 'protestation be forborn: and for the last refuge, if the 'other may not be, the election at the least to pass in the 'person of the said Cardinal Campeius: whereof there is 'no apperance, considering that the respects, for the which 'the said Lord Legat of York should by the Kings, and 'the French Kings means be brought hereunto, do for the 'greatest part fail and cease by the election of any o-'ther than himself, which is in this case to be remembred 'accordingly.

By this, one election note the common Order of Rome in canvasing for the Popedom.

'Thus be the Kings said Orators instructed, as far as 'mens reason can here devise, what is to be done for con-'ducing the Kings purpose to effect, knowing well of what 'importance the thing is, and what consequences depend 'upon it, namely, for the perfection of the Kings high 'and wighty matter, which, otherwise than by election 'of the said Lord Legate of York, hath no manner of 'way to be conduced by authority of the See Apostolick: 'there resteth no more but that they, who well know the 'same great matter, do [illegible] no way nor repulse, but by the 'election of the person of the said Lord Legat, do imploy the 'uttermost that in their hearts, powers, wits, bodies, and 'minds may be, to the perfection thereof, whereby they 'shall do the greatest service that can be for this time ex-'cogitate to do, unto their Prince, deserve immortal laud, 'thanks, and praise, and be sure to consecute thereby such 'reward, as shall be to their comforts, rejoyce, and honour, 'besides manifold other notable goodnesses, whereof they 'shall be the procurers and solicitors, to their merit per-'petual. All which they may be sure shall be considered 'accordingly.

Epilogus

In these so great labours, pursuits, and travels of the King and of the Cardinal, as in these their instructions a-bove inserted may appear, thou hast for thine instruction

Man purpoſeth and God diſpoſeth.

(loving Reader) to note and learn, how man purpoſeth one thing and how God diſpoſeth another. For the Kings purpoſe was to have the Cardinal and Legat of York placed in the See Papal, thinking by that means, if this Cardinal had been Pope, the cauſe of his divorce more eaſily might be compaſſed, which otherwiſe he thought unpoſſible to contrive. But God Omnipotent, which only is directer of all affairs, brought it otherwiſe to paſs, not as the King deviſed, but after his own wiſdom; ſo that both the Divorcement was concluded, and yet neither Cardinal Wolſey made Pope, nor yet Pope Clement was dead. Yea, ſo he ruled the matter, that notwithſtanding Pope Clement was alive, yet both the Divorce proceeded, and alſo the Popes authority was thereby utterly extinct and aboliſhed out of this Realm of England, to the ſingular admiration of Gods wondrous works, and perpetual praiſe to his merciful goodneſs. Of which Divorcement, and ſuppreſſing of the Popes authority, we have likewiſe to make declaration. But firſt, as we have begun with the Cardinal of York, ſo we will make an end of him. That done, we will (God willing) addreſs our ſelves to other matters of more importance.

As the Ambaſſadors were thus traveling in Rome to promote the Cardinal to be Pope, although the Pope was not yet dead, in the mean time the Cardinal played the popiſh perſecutor here at home. For firſt, he ſitting in his Pontificalibus in the Cathedral Church of Pauls, under his Cloth of eſtate of rich cloth of Gold, cauſed Frier Barnes, an Auguſtin Frier, to bear a Fagot, for certain points which he called Hereſie. Alſo he cauſed the ſame time two Merchants of the Stilyard likewiſe to bear Fagots for eating fleſh on a Friday. At the which time, the Biſhop of Rocheſter made a Sermon in reproof of Martin Luther, who had before written againſt the power of the Biſhop of Rome. This Biſhop in his Sermon ſpake ſo much of the honour of the Pope and his Cardinals, and of their dignity and preheminency, that he forgot to ſpake of the Goſpel which he took in hand to declare; which was about the year of our Lord 1526.

Frier Barnes with two Merchants of the Stilyard, cauſed by the Cardinal to bear Fagots.

After this, the ſaid Cardinal likewiſe, Anno 1528, and in the month of November, ſitting at Weſtminſter as Legat, called before him the whole Clergy, and there promiſed that all abuſions of the Church ſhould be amended: but there nothing elſe was done, ſave only he cauſed to be abjured, Arthur Bilny, Geffery Lome, and Garret, for ſpeaking againſt the Popes authority, and his pompous pride. Of whom more ſhall be ſaid (the Lord aſſiſting us) hereafter. And this was Anno 1528.

The year next following, which was Anno 1529, began the queſtion of the Kings Marriage to be revived. Whereupon Cardinal Campeius was ſent again into England from Rome, for the hearing and debating of the matter. Who then with Cardinal Wolſey, conſulting with the King, although at firſt he ſeemed with his fellow Cardinal to incline unto the Kings diſpoſition, yet afterward perceiving the ſequel of the Caſe, whether it tended, ſo far, as peradventure might be the occaſion of a blot to the Court of Rome, and might ſhake perhaps the Chair of the Popes omnipotent authority, as well in other Caſes like, if this Caſe were throughly decided by learning and truth of Gods word: He therefore ſlipping his neck out of the Collar, craftily ſhifted himſelf out of the Realm, before the day came appointed for determination, leaving his ſubtil fellow behind him, to weigh with the King the mean time, while the matter might be brought up to the Court of Rome. The King thus ſeeing himſelf diſappointed, foded with falſe promiſes, and craftily doubled withall by the Cardinals, and at laſt, after ſo many delays and long expectation, nothing to be concluded, was ſore agrieved in his mind with them, but eſpecially with Cardinal Wolſey, whom he had before ſo highly exalted, and promoted to ſo many great dignities, as to the Archbiſhoprick of York, the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter, of Dureſme, the Abby of S. Albans, beſides the Chancellorſhip of England, and many other high rooms and preferments in the Realm; which cauſed him clearly to caſt him out of his favour, ſo that after that time he never came more to the Kings preſence. Ex Hallo.

The occaſion of the Cardinals fall.

The cauſe of the Kings Marriage with his Brothers Wife, was dangerous to the Pope for this: if it were unlawful, then the diſpenſation of Pope Julius was void: if it were lawful, then the judgments of of ſo many Univerſities were falſe. The King deluded by the two Cardinals.

Then followed firſt a Council of the Nobles, called the firſt of October. During the which Council all the Lords and other the Kings Counſel, agreeing together, reſorted to Windſor to the King, and there informed the King, that all things which he had done almoſt, by his power Legatine, were in the Caſe of Præmunire, and proviſion: and that the Cardinal had forfeited all his Lands, Tenements, Goods and Chattels to the King: wherefore the King willing to order him, according to the order of his Laws, cauſed his Attorney, Chriſtopher Hales, to ſue out a writ of Præmunire againſt him, in the which he licenſed him to make an Attorney.

{KING Hen. 8.} A Council of the Nobles called.

The Cardinal caſt in the Præmunire.

And further the ſeventeenth day of November, he ſent the two Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk to his Palace of Weſtminſter, to fetch away the Great Seal of England; which he was loth to deliver, if there had been any remedy; but in concluſion, he deliverd it to the two Dukes, which delivered the ſame to Doctor Tailor, Maſter of the Rolls, to carry it to the King; which he ſo did the next day.

The Cardinal deprived of the Chancellorſhip.

Beſides this, the King ſent Sir William Fitzwillams, Knight of the Garter, and Treaſurer of his Houſe, and Doctor Stephen Gardener, newly made Secretary, to ſee that no Goods ſhould be embezelled out of his houſe: and further ordained, that the Cardinal ſhould remove to Aſher beſide Kingſtone, there to tarry the Kings pleaſure, and to have all things delivered unto him, which were neceſſary for him, but not after his old pompous and ſuperfluous faſhion; for all his goods were ſeized to the Kings uſe. When the Seal was thus taken from the Cardinal, the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, with many Earls, Biſhops, and Barons, came unto the Starr-Chamber the nineteenth day of October: where the Duke of Norfolk declared, that the Kings Highneſs for diverſe and ſundry offences had taken from him his Great Seal and depoſed him of all Offices: and leſt men might complain for lack of juſtice, he had appointed him and the Duke of Suffolk, with the aſſent of the other Lords, to ſit in the Starr-Chamber, to hear and determin cauſes indifferently; and that of all things the Kings pleaſure and commandment was, that they ſhould keep their hands cloſe from any rewards taking, or maintenance: and ſo that week they ſate in the Starr-Chamber, and determined cauſes.

Stephen Gardener the Kings Secretary.

The Cardinals goods ſeized to the King.

A few days after, in the ſame month, the Cardinal removed out of his Houſe called York place, with one Croſs, ſaying, That he would he had never born more, meaning that by his Croſs which he bear as Legat, which degree taking was his confuſion, as you ſee openly: and ſo he took his Barge, and went to Putney by Water, and there took his Horſe and rode to Aſher, where he remained till Lent after.

The Cardinals removing from York place.

During which time, he being called on for an anſwer in the Kings Bench to the Præmunire, for giving Benefices by prevention, in diſturbance of mens inheritance, and divers other open cauſes in the Præmunire, according to the Kings Licence, conſtituted John Scute and Edmond Jenney, Apprentiſes of the Law, his Attorneys, which by his own Warrant ſigned with his own hand, confeſſed all things concerning the ſaid ſute, for they were too open to be cloked or hidden; and ſo judgment was given, that he ſhould forfeit all his Lands, Tenements, Goods, and Chattles and ſhould be out of the Kings protection; but for all that, the King ſent him a ſufficient protection, and of his gentleneſs left to him the Biſhopricks of York and Wincheſter, and gave to him plate and ſtuff convenient for his degree; and the Biſhoprick of Dureſme he gave to Doctor Tonſtall Biſhop of London, and the Abby of S. Albans he gave to the Prior of Norwich: and to London he promoted D. John Stokeſley, the Embaſſador to the Univerſities, for the Marriage, as you heard before. For all this kindneſs ſhewed to the Cardinal, yet ſtill he maligned againſt the King, as you ſhall hereafter perceive. But firſt we will proceed in the courſe of theſe matters, as they paſſed in order.

Doctor Tonſtal Biſhop of Dureſme. John Stokeſley made Biſhop of London.

The next year following, which was Anno 1530, the month of November was ſummoned a general Parliament, to be holden at Weſtminſter. In the which year, about the three and twentieth day of October, the King came to his Manor of Greenwich, and there much conſulted with his Counſel, for a meet man

A Parliament called.

{KING Hen. 8.} man to be his Chancellor, ſo that in no wiſe he were a man of the ſpiritualty: and ſo after long debate, the King reſolved himſelf upon Sir Thomas More Knight, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaſter, a man well learned in the Tongues, and alſo in the Common Law; whoſe wit was fine, and full of imaginations; by reaſon whereof he was a little too much given to mocking, more than became the perſon of Maſter More. And then on the Sunday, the four and twentieth day of the ſame month, the King made him his Chancellor, and delivered him the great Seal: which Lord Chancellor the next morrow after was led into the Chancery by the two Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, and there ſworn, and then the Mace was fore him.

Sir Thomas More made Lord Chancellor of England.

Of this fall of the Cardinal, and of the placing of Sir Thomas More in the Chancellorſhip, Eraſmus in an Epiſtle to John Vergera thus writeth: The Cardinal of York hath ſo offended the Kings mind, that he being turned out of his goods and all his dignities, is committed not to Priſon, but to a certain Lordſhip of his, with 30 ſervants or keepers to give attendance upon him. Many and ſundry complaints are commenced againſt him, ſo that he is not like to eſcape with his life. Such is the dalliance of fortune, of a Schoolmaſter to be made a King. For ſo he Reigned more like a King than the King himſelf. He was dreaded of all men, he was loved but of a few, almoſt of none. A little before he was apprehended, he cauſed Richard Pacie to be caſt into the Tower. Alſo he threatened my Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury; Salomon ſaith, That before the fall of man his ſpirit ſhall be elevated. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury was called or reſtored to be choſen Lord Chancellor, which is the chiefeſt office in all that Realm; but he excuſed himſelf by his age, as being not able to weeld ſuch a function. Wherefore the ſaid Office was beſtowed upon Thomas More, no leſs to the rejoycing of many, than that the other was diſplaced from it. Theſe news my Servant brought me out of England, &c. Ex Epiſt. Erſam. & Joan. Vergeram.

Ex Eraſ.

By the Archbiſhop he meaneth William Warham.

You heard before, how a Council of the Nobles was appointed by the King in the month of October, to aſſemble in the Star-Chamber about the Cardinals matter: and alſo how a Parliament was ſummoned to begin in the month of November, in the year following, Anno 1530. At the beginning of which Parliament, after that M. More the new Chancellor had finiſhed his Oration, the Commons were commanded to chuſe them a Speaker, who was Thomas Audley Eſquire, and Attorney to the Duchy of Lancaſter. Thus the Parliament being begun the ſixth day of the foreſaid month of November, at Weſtminſter, where the King with all the Lords were ſet in the Parliament Chamber, the Commons, after they had preſented their Speaker, aſſembled in the nether Houſe, began to C mmune of their griefs, wherewith the Spiritualty had before time grievouſly oppreſſed them, contrary both to all right, and to the Law of the Realm, and ſpecially were fore moved with theſe ſix great cauſes.

A Parliament ſummoned in November, An. 1530.

Tho. Audley Speaker of of the Parliament.

Six grievances of the Commons againſt the Clergy.

Grievances againſt the Clergy of England.

Exceſſive fines for Probates of Teſtaments.

1. THe firſt, For the exceſſive fines which the Ordinaries took for Probates of Teſtaments, inſomuch that Sir Henry Guilford, Kinght of the Garter, and Controller of the Kings Houſe, declared in the open Parliament, of his fidelity, that he and other being Executors to Sir William Compton, Knight, paid for the Probate of his Will, to the Cardinal and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, a thouſand Marks ſterling. After this declaration were ſhewed ſo many extortions done by Ordinaries for Probates of Wills, that it were too much to rehearſe.

A thouſand Marks for the Probate of one Teſtament

The unreaſonable exaction of the Clergy for Mortuaries.

2. The ſecond cauſe was, the great polling and extream exaction which the ſpiritual men uſed, in taking of Corps, Preſents, or Mortuaries: for the Children of the dead ſhould all dye for hunger and go a begging, rather than they would of charity give to them the ſilly Cow which the dead man ought, if he had but only one, ſuch was the charity of them.

Farms and Granges Prieſts lea ls.

3. The third cauſe was, that Prieſts being Surveiers, Stewards, and Officers to Biſhops, Abbots, and other ſpiritual Heads, had and occupied Farms, Granges, and Grazing in every Country, ſo that the poor Husbandmen could have nothing but of them, and yet for that they ſhould pay dearly.

Monks and Prieſts Merchants.

4. The fourth cauſe was, that Abbots, Priors, and ſpiritual men kept Tan-houſes, and bought and ſold Wooll, Cloth, and all manner of Merchandiſe, as other temporal Merchants did.

Beneficed men take of their flock but give nothing.

5. The fifth cauſe was, becauſe the ſpiritual perſons promoted to great benefices, and having their livings of their flock, were lying in the Court in Lords houſes, and took all of their Pariſhioners, and nothing ſpent on them at all: ſo that for lack of reſidence both the poor of the pariſh lacked refreſhing, and univerſally all the Pariſhioners lacked preaching and true inſtructions of Gods Word, to the great peril of their ſouls.

Pluralities of Benefices.

6. The ſixth cauſe was, becauſe one Prieſt, being little learned, had ten or twelve Benefices, and was reſident on none, and many well learned Scholars in the Univerſity, which were able to preach and teach, had neither Benefice nor exhibition.

Theſe things before this time might in no wiſe be touched, nor yet talked of by any man, except he would be made an Heretick, or loſe all that he had: for the Biſhops were Chancellors, and had all the rule about the King, ſo that no man durſt once preſume to attempt any thing contrary to their profit or commodity.

Three Bills drawn out againſt the miſorder of the Clergy.

But now when God had illuminated the eyes of the King, and the time ſo ſerved, that men more boldly durſt expreſs with voice ſuch grudges as they had long conceived in their heart againſt the Clergy; the Burgeſſes of the Parliament appointed certain of the Common houſe, men learned in the Law, to draw one Bill of the Probates of Teſtaments, another for Mortuaries, and the third for Non-reſidence, Pluralities, and taking Farms by ſpiritual men.

The firſt Bill for Mortuaries.

And firſt to the Bill of Mortuaries being drawn, and being alſo paſſed the Common houſe, and ſent up to the Higher, the Spiritual Lords ſhewed a fair face, ſaying, that aſſuredly Prieſts and Curates took more than they ſhould, and therefore it were well done to take ſome reaſonable order. Thus they ſpake, becauſe it touched them but little.

The ſecond Bill for Probates of Teſtaments.

After this, within two days, was ſent up the ſecond Bill, concerning Probates of Teſtaments: which Bill, becauſe it touched their profit ſomewhat near, both the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and all other Biſhops in general began to frown and grunt: inſomuch as Doctor John Fiſher, Biſhop of Rocheſter, ſtanding up in the Parliament Chamber, openly proteſted, that ſuch Bills were ſent up from the Common houſe, tending to no other thing, but to the deſtruction of the Church: which Church being down, the glory then of the whole Kingdom (ſaid he) muſt needs fall; deſiring therefore the Lords, for Gods ſake, to take example by the Kingdom of Bohemia. For as it was then with the people there, ſo now what ſay the Commons here, but Down with the Church? And all this (ſaid he) ſeemeth to be only for lack of Faith. When theſe word were reported to the Commons of the lower Houſe, what the Biſhops ſaid, in noting all their doings to be for lack of Faith, they took the matter grievouſly, ſo to be eſteemed of the Biſhop for no better than Hereticks; underſtanding moreover, how that he by thoſe ſlanderous words went about to perſwade the Lords Temporal againſt them, and ſo to overthrow the two Bills by them paſſed before, as ye have heard.

D. Fiſher chargeth the Commons with lack of Faith.

The grudge of the Commons, in the lower houſe, againſt Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter.

Whereupon, after long debate, it was at length agreed by the ſaid Commons; that Thomas Audley their Speaker, with thirty of the chief of that Houſe, ſhould be ſent to the King; being then in his Palace at Weſtminſter, before called York Place: where they eloquently declared, what a diſhonour to the King and the Realm it was, to ſay that they which were elected for the wiſeſt Men of all the Shires, Cities, and Boroughs within the Realm of England, ſhould be declared in ſo noble and open preſence, to lack Faith, which was equivalent to ſay that they were Infidels, and no Chriſtians, as ill as Turks or Saracens: ſo that what pain or ſtudy ſoever they took for the Commonwealth, or what acts or laws ſoever they made or ſtabliſhed, ſhould be taken as laws made by Painims and Heathen people, and not worthy to be kept by Chriſtian men: wherefore they moſt humbly beſought the Kings Highneſs to call the ſaid Biſhop before him, and to cauſe him to ſpeak more diſcreetly of ſuch a number as was in the the Common houſe.

The K. not contented with the Biſhop of Rocheſter.

The King not being well contented with the ſaying of the Biſhop, yet gently anſwered the Speaker, and ſent them away. Who immediately ſent for the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and ſix other Biſhops, and Rocheſter alſo, ſignifying unto them the grudge of the Commons. The Biſhop of Rocheſter, excuſing himſelf, anſwered, that he, in ſo ſaying, meant only the doings of the Bohemians to be for lack of Faith, and not the doing of them that were in the Common houſe. Which ſaying was confirmed by the Biſhops there preſent, which had him in great reputation. And ſo by that only ſaying the King accepted his excuſe, and therefore ſent word to the Commons by Sir William Fitzwilliams Knight, Treaſurer of his houſhould. Which blind excuſe pleaſed the Commons nothing at all.

The Biſhops excuſe.

Difference between the Laity and Spiritualty about certain conſtitutions.

After this, divers Aſſemblies were kept between certain of the Lords, and certain of the Commons, for the Bills of the Probates of Teſtaments, and Mortuaries. The Temporalty laid to the Spiritualty their own Laws and Conſtitutions: And the Spiritualty ſore defended them by preſcription and uſage. To whom it was thus anſwered by a Gentleman of Grays Inn; The uſage hath ever been of Thieves, to rob on Shooters-hill: Ergo, is it lawful? With this anſwer the ſpiritual men were ſo offended, becauſe their doings were called Roberies: but the Temporal men ſtood ſtill by their ſayings, inſomuch that the ſaid Gentleman ſaid to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; that both the exaction of Probates of Teſtaments, and the taking of Mortuaries, as they were uſed, were open Robery and Theft. After long diſputation, the Temporal Lords began to lean to the Commons: but for all that the Bills remained unconcluded for a time.

Long uſe maketh not evil things lawful.

Mortuaries, as they were uſed, differed but little from theft.

It followeth ſhortly after in the Parliament, that a Bill was aſſented to by the Lords of the Higher houſe, and ſent down to the Commons in the Lower houſe, and by them alſo with much labour agreed unto, of whom the moſt part were the Kings Servants. In the which Bill it was required and concluded, that the King ſhould be releaſed of all ſuch Loan of money which he had borrowed of his Subjects in the Fifteenth year of his Reign. The peſſiang of which Bill went ſore againſt the ſtomach of the poor Commons: For many reſted upon it, counting and paſſing it over, one to another for good debt, as if it had been ready money in their purſes. Wherefore the King, to gratifie them again, granted to them a general pardon of all offences, only certain great offences and debts excepted. Alſo he aided them for the redreſs of their griefs againſt the ſpiritualty, and cauſed two new Bills to be made indifferently, both for the Probates of the Teſtaments, and Mortuaries: which Bills were ſo reaſonable, that the Spiritual Lords aſſented to them all, though they were ſore againſt their minds, and in eſpecial the Probate of Teſtaments ſore diſpleaſed the Biſhops, and the Mortuaries ſore diſpleaſed the Parſons and Vicars.

Redreſs of the griefs of the Commons.

After theſe Acts thus agreed, the Commons make another Act for pluralities of Benefices, nonreſidence, buying and ſelling, and taking of Farms by Spiritual perſons. Which Act ſo diſpleaſed the Spiritualty, that the Prieſts raild on the Commons of the Lower houſe, and called them Hereticks and Schiſmaticks: for the which divers Prieſts were puniſhed.

The third Bill of the Commons for pluralities, &c.

This Act was ſore debated above in the Parliament Chamber, and the Lords Spiritual would in no wiſe conſent. Wherefore the King perceiving the grudge of the Commons, cauſed eight Lord and eight of his Commons to meet in the Star-Chamber at an afternoon, and there was ſore debating of the Cauſe, in ſo much that the Temporal Lords of the upper Houſe which were there took part with the Commons againſt the Spiritual Lords, and by force of reaſon cauſed them to aſſent to the Bill, with a little qualifing: Which Bill the next day was wholly agreed to in the Lords houſe, to the great rejoycing of the Lay people, and to great diſpleaſure of the Spiritual perſons.

And thus much concerning theſe Bills againſt the Clergy by the way: Now to return to the Cardinal again. During the time of the ſaid Parliament, there was brought down to the Commons the Book of Articles which the Lords had put up to the King againſt the Cardinal. The chief Articles were theſe.

¶ Articles objected againſt Cardinal Wolſey.

Articles againſt the Cardinal.

1. FIrſt, That he without the Kings aſſent had procured himſelf to be a Legat, by reaſon whereof he took away the right of all Biſhops and ſpiritual perſons.

2. In all writings that he wrote to Rome, or to another Prince, he wrote Ego & Rex meus, I and my King, as who would ſay, that the King were his ſervant.

3. That he ſlandered the Church of England to the Court of Rome: For his ſuggeſtion to be Legat, was to reform the Church of England, which (as he worte) was Facta in reprobum ſenſum.

4. He without the Kings aſſent carried the Kings great Seal with him into Flanders, when he was ſent Ambaſſador to the Emperor.

5. Without the Kings conſent he ſent Commiſſion to Sir Gregory de Caſtalis, Knight, to conclude a league between the King and the Duke of Ferrary.

6. That he, having the Fench Pox, preſumed to come and breath on the King.

7. That he cauſed the Cardinals Hat to be put on the Kings Coyn.

8. That he had ſent innumerable ſubſtance to Rome, for the obtaining of his Dignities, to the great impoveriſhment of the Realm. With many other things which are touched more at large in Chronicles.

Theſe Articles, with many more, being read in the Common houſe, were confeſſed by the Cardinal, and ſigned with his hand. Alſo there was ſhewed another writing ſealed with his Seal, by the which he gave to the King all his moveables and unmoveables.

You have heard hitherto declared, how the Cardinal was attainted in the Præmunire, and how he was put out of the Office of the Chancellor, and lay at Aſher: which was in the year of our Lord, 1530. The next year after in the Lent ſeaſon, the King, by the advice of his Council, licenced him to go into his Dioceſs of York, and gave him commandment to keep him within his Dioceſs, and not to return Southward, without the Kings ſpecial Licence in writing.

So he made great proviſion to go Northward, and apparelled his Servants newly, and bought many coſtly things for his houſhold. But divers of his Servants at this time departed from him to the Kings ſervice, and eſpecially Thomas Cromwel, one of his chief Council, and chief doer for him in the ſuppreſſion of Abbeys. After that all things neceſſary for his journey were prepared, he took his journey Northward, till he came to Southwell, which was in his Dioceſs, and there he continued that year, ever grudging at his fall, as you ſhall hear hereafter: but the Lands which he had given to his College in Oxford and Ipſwich were now come to the Kings hands, by his attainder in the Præmunire: and yet the King of his gentleneſs, and for favour that he bear to good learning, erected again the College in Oxford, and where it was named the Cardinals College, he called it the Kings College, and indued it with fair poſſeſſions, and ordained new Statutes and Ordinances; and becauſe the College of Ipſwich was thought to be nothing profitable, therefore he left that diſſolved.

The Cardinals College now called Chriſts College in Oxford.

Notwithſtanding that the Cardinal of York was thus attianted in the Præmunire, (as is above mentioned) yet the King being good unto him, had granted him the Biſhopricks of York and Wincheſter, with great plenty of ſubſtance, and had Licenſed him to lie in his Dioceſs of York, where he ſo continued the ſpace of a year. But after, in the year following, which was 1531, he being in his Dioceſs, wrote to the Court of Rome, and to divers other Princes, Letters in reproach of the King, and,

The Cardinal complaineth to the Pope, of the King.

as much as in him lay, he ſtirred them to revenge his cauſe againſt the King and his Realm: inſomuch that divers opprobious words againſt the King were ſpoken to Doctor Edward Kearne, the Kings Orator at Rome. And it was ſaid to him, That for the Cardinals ſake the King ſhould have the worſe ſpeed in the ſute of his Matrimony. The Cardinal alſo would ſpeak fair to the people, to win their hearts, and declared ever that he was unjuſtly and untruely ordered. Which fair ſpeaking made many men believe that he ſaid true. And to Gentlemen he gave great gifts to allure them unto him; and to be had in more reputation among the people, he determined to be enſtalled or enthroniſed at York with all the pompe that might be, and cauſed a Throne to be erected in the Cathedral Church, in ſuch a height and faſhion, as was never ſeen, and ſent to all the Lords, Abbots, Priors, Knights, Eſquires, and Gentlemen of his Dioceſs, to be at his Manner of Cawood the ſixth day of November, and ſo to bring him to York with all manner of pompe and ſolemnity.

The Cardinals proud journey toward York.

The King, which knew his doings and privy conveyance, all this year diſſembled the matter, to ſee what he would do at length, till that he ſeeing his proud heart ſo highly exalted, that he would be ſo triumphantly inſtalled, without making the King privy, yea, and in a manner in diſdain of the King, thought it not meet nor convenient to ſuffer him any longer to continue in his malicous and proud purpoſes and attempts. Wherefore he directed his Letters to the Earl of Northumberland, willing him with all diligence to Arreſt the Cardinal, and to deliver him to the Earl of Shrewsbury, great Steward of the Kings houſhold. When the Earl had ſeen the Letters, he with a convenient number came to the Mannor of Cawood the fourth day of November; and when he was brought to the Cardinal in his Chamber, he ſaid to him, My Lord, I pray you take patience, for here I Arreſt you. Arreſt me, ſaid the Cardinal? Yea, ſaid the Earl, I have a commandment ſo to do. You have no ſuch power, ſaid the Cardinal, for I am both a Cardinal, and a Legat De Latere, and a Peer of the College of Rome, and ought not to be Arreſted by any temporal power; for I am not ſubject to that power: wherefore if you Arreſt me I will withſtand it. Well, ſaid the Earl, here is the Kings Commiſſion (which he ſhewed him) and therefore I charge you to obey. The Cardinal ſomewhat remembred himſelf, and ſaid: Well My Lord, I am conſtent to obey: but although that I by negligence fell into the puniſhment of the Præmunire, and loſt by the Law all my Lands and goods, yet my Perſon was in the Kings protection, and I was pardoned that offence; wherefore I marvel why I now ſhould be Arreſted, and ſpecially condering that I am a member of the See Apoſtolick, on whom no temporal man ought to lay violent hands. Well, I ſee the King lacketh good Counſel. Well, ſaid the Earl, when I was ſworn Warden of the Marches, you your ſelf told me, I might with my Staff Arreſt all men under the degree of a King; and now I am ſtronger, for I have a Commiſſion ſo to do, which you have ſeen. The Cardinal at length obeyed, and was kept in a privy Chamber, and his goods ſeized, and his Officers diſcharged: And his Phyſitian called Doctor Auguſtin was likewiſe Arreſted, and brought to the Tower by Sir Walter Welch, one of the Kings Chamber. The ſixth day of November he was conveyed from Cawood to Sheffield Caſtle, and there delivered to the Earl of Shrewsburys keeping till the Kings pleaſure were known. Of this Attachement was much communing among the Common people; wherefore many were glad; for he was not in the favour of the Commonalty.

The Cardinal Arreſted.

The Cardinal brought up toward London.

When the Cardinal was thus Arreſted, the King ſent Sir William Kingſton Knight, Captain of the Guard, and Conſtable of the Tower of London, with certain Yeomen of the Guard to Sheffield, to fetch the Cardinal to the Tower. When the Cardinal ſaw the Captain of the Guard he was ſore aſtoniſhed, and ſhortly became ſick; for then he perceived ſome great trouble toward him, and for that cauſe men ſaid, that he willingly took ſo much quantity of a ſtrong purgation, that his nature was not able to bear it. Alſo the matter that came from him was ſo black, that the ſtaining thereof could not be gotten out of his Blankets by any means. But Sir William Kingſton comforted him, and by eaſie journeys he brought him to the Abbey of Leyceſter the ſeven and twentieth day of November; where for very feebleneſs of nature, cauſed by purgations and vomits, he died the ſecond night following, and in the ſame Abbey lieth buried.

The Cardinal poyſoneth himſelf.

It is teſtified by one, yet being alive, in whoſe arms the ſaid Cardinal died, that his body being dead was black as pitch, alſo was ſo heavy, that ſix could ſcarce bear it. Furthermore, it did ſo ſtink above the ground, that they were conſtrained to haſten the Burial thereof in the night ſeaſon, before it was day. At the which Burial, ſuch a tempeſt with ſuch a ſtinch there aroſe, that all the Torches went out, and ſo he was thrown into the Tomb, and there was laied.

The pride of the Cardinal.

By the ambitious pride and exceſſive worldly wealth of this one Cardinal, all men may eaſily underſtand and judge what the ſtate and condition of all the reſt of the ſame Order (whom we call ſpiritual men) was in thoſe days, as well in all other places of Chriſtendom, as eſpecially here in England, where the princely poſſeſſions and great pride of the Clergy did not only far paſs and exceed the common meaſure and order of Subjects, but alſo ſurmounted over Kings and Princes, and all other eſtates, as may well appear by his doings and order of his ſtory, above deſcribed.

Amongſt other acts of the foreſaid Cardinal, this is not to be forgotten, that he founded a new College in Oxford, for the furniture whereof he had gathered together all the beſt learned he could hereof, amongſt which number were theſe; Clark, Tindal, Sommer, Frith, and Taverner, with other more: Which holding in aſſembly together in the College, were accounted to be Hereticks (as they called them) and thereupon, were caſt into a Priſon of the College, where Saltfiſh lay, through the ſtink whereof the moſt part of them were infected, and the ſaid Clark being a tender young man, and the moſt ſingular in learning amongſt them all, died in the ſame Priſon, and other in other places in the Town alſo, of the ſame infection, deceaſed.

Clark died in the Cardinals College in Priſon.

And thus having detained the Reader enough, or rather too much, with this vain-glorious Cardinal, now we will reduce our ſtory again to other more fruitful matter, and, as the order of time requireth, we will firſt begin with Maſter Humphry Mummuth, a vertuous and a good Alderman of London, who in the time of the ſaid Cardinal was troubled, as in the ſtory here followeth.

The trouble of Humphry Mummuth Alderman of London.

The ſtory of Humphry Mummuth.

MAſter Humphry Mummuth, was a right godly and ſincere Alderman of London, who in the days of Cardinal Wolſey was troubled and put in the Tower, for the Goſpel of Chriſt, and for maintaining them that favoured the ſame.

Articles miniſtred againſt Humphry Mummuth by Biſhop Stockeſley.

Stokeſley, then Biſhop of London, miniſtred Articles unto him, to the number of four and twenty: as for adhereing to Luther and his opinions; for having and reading heretical Books and Treatiſes; for giving exhibition to William Tindall, Roy, and ſuch other; for helping them over the Sea to Luther; for miniſtring privy help to tranſlate, as well the Teſtament, as other Books into Engliſh; for eating fleſh in Lent; for affirming Faith only to juſtifie; for derogating from mens conſtitutions; for not praying to Saints, not allowing Pilgrimage, Auricular confeſſion, the Popes Pardons; briefly, for being an advancer of all Martin Luthers opinions, &c.

He being of theſe Articles examined and caſt into the Tower, at laſt was compelled to make his ſuit or purgation, writing to the foreſaid Cardinal, then Lord Chancelor, and the whole Council, out of the Tower. In the contents whereof he anſwered to the criminious accuſation of them which charged him with certain Books received from beyond the Sea; alſo for his acquaintance with Maſter Tindal. Whereupon he ſaid, that he denyed not, but that four years then paſt he had heard the ſaid Tindal preach two or three Sermons at Saint Dunſtans in the Weſt, and afterward meeting with the ſaid Tindal, had certain communication with him concerning his living? who then told him that he had none at all, but truſted to be in the Biſhop of London his ſervice; for then he laboured to be his Chaplain. But being refuſed of the Biſhop, he came again to the ſaid Mummuth this examinate, and beſought him to help him. Who the ſame time took him into his houſe for half a year: where the ſaid Tindal lived (as he ſaid) like a good Prieſt, ſtudying both night and day. He would eat but ſodden meat by his good will, nor drink but ſmall ſingle bear. He was never ſeen in that houſe to wear Linnen about him, all the ſpace of his being there. Whereupon the ſaid Mummuth had the better liking of him, ſo that he promiſed him ten pound (as he then ſaid) for his Fathers and Mothers Souls, and all Chriſtian Souls; which money afterward he ſent him over to Hamborow according to his promiſe. And yet not to him alone he gave this exhibition, but to divers other moe likewiſe which were no Hereticks: as to Doctor Royſton, the Biſhop of Londons Chaplain, he exhibited forty or fifty pounds: to Doctor Wodiall, Provincial of the Frier Auguſtins, as much or more, to Doctor Watſon the Kings Chaplain, alſo to other Scholars, and divers Prieſts; beſides other charges beſtowed upon religious Houſes, as upon the Nunnery of Denney, above fifty pounds Sterling beſtowed, &c.

Tindal refuſed of Biſhop Stokeſly to be his Chaplain.

The temperate converſation of William Tindal.

And as touching his Books, as Enchiridion, the Pater noſter, De libertate Chriſtiana, an Engliſh Teſtament, of which, ſome William Tindal left with him, ſome he ſent unto him, ſome were brought into his houſe, by whom he could not tell; theſe Books, he ſaid, did lye open in his houſe, the ſpace of two years together, he ſuſpecting no harm to be in them. And moreover the ſame Books being deſired of ſundry perſons, as of the Abbeſs of Denney, a Frier of Greenwich, the Father Confeſſor of Sion, he let them have them, and yet never heard Frier, Prieſt, or Lay-man find any fault with the ſaid Books. Likewiſe to Doctor Watſon, to Doctor Stockhouſe, Maſter Martin, Parſon of Totingbecke, he committed the peruſing of the Books of Pater noſter, and De libertate Chriſtiana, which found no great fault in them, but only in the Book De libertat. Chriſtiana, they ſaid there were things ſomewhat hard, except the Reader were wiſe.

Thus he excuſing himſelf and moreover complaining of the loſs of his credit by his impriſonment in the Tower, and of the detriments of his occupying, who was wont yearly to ſhip over five hundred Cloths to ſtrangers, and ſet many Clothiers awork in Suffolk, and in other places, of whom he bought all their Cloths, which were now almoſt all undone; by this reaſon at length he was ſet at liberty being forced to abjure, and after was made Knight by the King, and Sheriff of London.

A notable example of Chriſtian patience in an Alderman

Mr. George Stafford, Reader in Cambridge.

Of this Humphry Mummuth we read of a notable example of Chriſtian patience, in the Sermons of M. Latimer, which the ſaid Latimer heard in Cambridge of Maſter George Stafford, Reader of the Divine Lecture in that Univerſity. Who expounding the place of Saint Paul to the Romans, that we ſhall overcome our enemy with well doing and ſo heap hot Coles upon his head, &c. brought in an example, ſaying, that he knew in London a great rich Merchant (meaning this Humphry Mummuth) which had a very poor neighbour: yet for all his poverty he loved him very well, and lent him money at his need, and let him come to his Table whenſoever he would: It was even at that time when Doctor Collet was in trouble, and ſhould have been burnt, if God had not turned the Kings heart to the contrary. Now the rich man began to be a Scripture man, he began to ſmell the Goſpel. The poor man was a Papiſt ſtill. {KING H 7}

It chanced on a time, when the rich man talked of the Goſpel, ſitting at his Table, where he reproved Popery and ſuch kind of things; the poor man being there preſent, took a great diſpleaſure againſt the rich man, inſomuch that he would come no more to his houſe; he would borrow no more money of him as he was wont to do before times, yea, and conceived ſuch hatred and malice againſt him, that he went and accuſed him before the Biſhops. Now the rich man, not knowing of any ſuch diſpleaſure, offered many times to talk with him, and to ſet him at quiet. It would not be. The poor man had ſuch a ſtomach, that he would not vouchſafe to ſpeak with him. If he met the rich man in the Street, he would go out of his way. One time it happened that he met him ſo in a narrow ſtreet, that he could not avoyd but come near him: yet for all this, the poor man (I ſay) had ſuch a ſtomach againſt the rich man, that he was minded to go forward and not to ſpeak with him. The rich man perceiving that, caught him by the hand, and asked him, ſaying; Neighbour, what is come into your heart to take ſuch diſpleaſure with me? What have I done againſt you? Tell me, and I will be ready at all times to make you amends.

Erasmus Concions Doct. Hugo. Latimeri.

Agree with thine enemy while thou art in the way with him. Matth. 5.

Finally, he ſpake ſo gently, ſo charitably, ſo lovingly, and friendly, that it wrought ſo in the poor mans heart, that by and by he fell down upon his knees, and asked him forgiveneſs. The rich man forgave him, and ſo took him again to his favour, and they loved as well as ever they did afore.

TOuching the memorial of Thomas Hitten remaineth nothing in writing, but only his name, ſave that William Tindal in his Apology againſt More, and alſo in another Book intituled, The practiſe of Prelates, doth once or twice make mention of him by way of digreſſion. Nix, Biſhop of Norwich.	IN the Story above paſſed of Cardinal Wolſey, mention was made of certain whom the ſaid Cardinal cauſed to Abjure; as Bilney, Jeffry Lome, Garret, Barns, and ſuch other, of whom we have now (the Lord directing us) ſpecially to entreat. This Thomas Bilney was brought up in the Univerſity of Cambridge, even from a Child, profiting in all kind of Liberal Sciences, even unto the profeſſion of both Laws. But at the laſt having gotten a better School-Maſter, even the Holy Spirit of Chriſt, who endued his heart by privy inſpiration with the knowledge of better and and more wholſom things, he came at the laſt unto this point, That, forſaking the knowledge of Mans Laws, he converted his Study to thoſe things which tended more unto godlineſs than gainfulneſs.

Neither were his labours vain; for he converted many of his followers to the knowledge of the Goſpel, amongſt which number was Thomas Arthur, and Maſter Hugh Latimer; which Latimer at that time was Croſs-keeper at Cambridge, bringing it forth upon Proceſſion-days. The Authority of Thomas Wolſey Cardinal of York, of whom ye have heard before, at that time was great in England, but his Pomp and Pride much greater, which did evidently declare unto all wiſe Men the manifeſt vanity, not only of his life, but alſo of all the Biſhops and Clergy. Whereupon Bilney, with other good Men, marvelling at the incredible inſolence of the Clergy, which they could now no longer ſuffer or abide, began to ſhake and reprove this exceſſive Pomp of the Clergy, and alſo to pluck at the Authority of the Biſhop of Rome.

Bilney againſt the Pride of the Pope, and of his Cardinals.

Then it was time for the Cardinal to awake, and ſpeedily to look about his buſineſs. Neither lacked he in this point any craft or ſubtilty of a Serpent; for he underſtood well enough upon how ſlender a foundation their ambitious Dignity was grounded, neither was he ignorant that their Luciferous and proud Kingdom could not long continue againſt the manifeſt Word of God; eſpecially if the Light of the Goſpel ſhould once open the eyes of Men. For otherwiſe he did not greatly fear the power and diſpleaſure of Kings and Princes. Only this he feared, the Voice of Chriſt in his Goſpel, leſt it ſhould diſcloſe and detect their hypocriſie and deceits, and force them to come into an order of godly diſcipline: wherefore he thought good ſpeedily in time to withſtand theſe beginnings. Whereupon he cauſed the ſaid Bilney and Arthur to be apprehended and caſt into Priſon, as before you have heard.

Cardinal Wolſey with his complices, againſt Bilney and Arthur.

After this, the ſeven and twentieth day of November, in the year of our Lord 1527, the ſaid Cardinal accompanied with a great number of Biſhops, as the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Cuthbert of London, John of Rocheſter, Nicholas of Ely, John of Exceter, John of Lincoln, John of Bath and Wells, Henry of St. Aſſe, with many other both Divines and Lawyers, came into the Chapter-Houſe of Weſtminſter, where the ſaid Maſter Thomas Bilney, and Thomas Arthur were brought before them, and the ſaid Cardinal there inquired of Maſter Bil-ney.

ney, whether he had, privately or publickly, preached or taught to the people the Opinions of Luther or any other condemned by the Church, contrary to the determination of the Church. Whereunto Bilney anſwered, That wittingly he had not preached or taught any of Luther's Opinions, or any other, contrary to the Catholick Church. Then the Cardinal asked him, whether he had not once made an Oath before, That he ſhould not preach, rehearſe, or defend any of Luther's Opinions, but ſhould impugn the ſame every where? He anſwered, That he had made ſuch an Oath, but not Lawfully. Which Interrogatories ſo miniſtred, and anſwers made, the Cardinal cauſed him to Swear, to anſwer plainly to the Articles and Errors preached and ſet forth by him; as well in the City and Dioceſs of London, as in the Dioceſs of Norwich and other places, and that he ſhould do it without any craft, qualifying or leaving out any part of the truth.

Thomas Artbur examined.

After he was thus Sworn and Examined, the ſaid Cardinal proceeded to the Examination of Maſter Thomas Arthur there preſent, cauſing him to take the like Oath, that Maſter Bilney did. Which done, he asked of him whether he had not once told Sir Thomas Moor, Kt. That in the Sacrament of the Altar was not the very Body of Chriſt? Which Interrogatory he denied. Then the Cardinal gave him time to deliberate till noon, and to bring in his anſwer in writing. After noon, the ſame day, what time the Examination of the foreſaid Thomas Arthur was ended, the Cardinal and Biſhops by their Authority, Ex Officio, did call in for Witneſſes, before Maſter Bilney, certain Men, namely, John Huggen, chief Provincial of the Friers preachers throughout all England, Jeffry Julles, and Richard Jugworth, profeſſors of Divinity of the ſame Order. Alſo William Jecket, Gentleman, William Nelſon, and Thomas Williams, which were Sworn, that all favour, hate, love, or reward ſet apart, they ſhould without concealing any falſhood, or omitting any truth, ſpeak their minds, upon the Articles laid againſt him, or preached by him, as well within the Dioceſs of London, as the Dioceſs of Norwich: and becauſe he was otherwiſe occupied about the Affairs of the Realm, he committed the hearing of the matter to the Biſhop of London, and two other Biſhops there preſent, or to three of them, to proceed againſt all Men, as well Spiritual as Temporal, as alſo againſt Schedules, Writings, and Books, ſet forth and Tranſlated by Martin Luther, lately condemned by Pope Leo the Tenth, and by all manner of probable means to enquire, and root out their Errors and Opinions, and all ſuch as were found culpable, to compel them to Abjuration according to the Law, or if the matter ſo required, to deliver them unto the Secular Power, and to give them full Power and Authority to determin upon them.

Bilney and Arthur brought before Tonſtal Biſhop of London.

The Seven and twentieth of November, in the year aforeſaid, the Biſhop of London, with the Biſhops of Ely and Rocheſter, came unto the Biſhop of Norwich's Houſe, whereas likewiſe, Ex Officio, they did Swear certain witneſſes againſt Maſter Thomas Arthur, in like ſort as they had done before againſt Maſter Thomas Bilney, and ſo proceeded to the Examination of Maſter Arthur, which being ended upon certain Interrogatories; the Biſhop of London warned him by virtue of his Oath, That he ſhould not reveal his Examinations, nor his Anſwers, nor any part or parcel thereof.

Work they never ſo ſecretly, yet God bringeth their practiſes to light at length.

The ſecond day of December, the Biſhops Aſſembled again in the ſame place, and Sware more Witneſſes againſt Maſter Bilney. That done they called for Maſter Arthur; unto whoſe charge they laid theſe Articles following.

1. IN*primis*, That he exhorted the people in his prayers, to pray ſpecially for thoſe that now be in Priſon. Which Article he denied.

2. That he ſaid, Though Men be reſtrained to preach now adays (which is againſt Gods Laws) yet I may preach: Firſt, By the Authority of my Lord Cardinal; for I have his License. Secondly, By the Authority of the Univerſity. Thirdly, By the Pope. Fourthly, By the Authority of God, where he ſaith, Euntes in mundum prædicate Evangelium omni creaturæ. By which Authority every Man may preach, and there is neither Biſhop nor Ordinary, nor yet the Pope, that may make any Law to let any Man to preach the Goſpel. This Article he confeſſed that he ſpake.

3. When he ſpake of Laws, he brought a ſimilitude of Croſſes, ſet up againſt the Walls of London, that Men ſhould not piſs there. When there was but one Croſs, or a few more, Men did reverence them, and piſſed not there; but when there was in every corner a Croſs ſet, then Men of neceſſity were compelled to piſs upon the Croſſes. So in like manner, when there was but a few Holy and Devout Laws in the Church, then Men were afraid to offend them. Afterward they made many Laws for their advantage; and ſuch as were pecuniary thoſe they do obſerve; and ſuch as are not pecuniary, thoſe they call Palea, and regard them not: and ſo now adays there are ſo many Laws, that whether a Man do ill or well, he ſhall be taken in the Law. He confeſſed that he ſpake the very ſame, or the like words.

The multitude of Laws make Laws to be contemned.

Palea in the Popes Decrees.

4. He ſaid, Good people, if I ſhould ſuffer Perſecution for the preaching of the Goſpel of God, yet there are Seven thouſand more that would preach the Goſpel of God as I do now. Therefore good people, good people, (which words he often rehearſed as it were lamenting) think not that if theſe Tyrants and Perſecutors put a Man to death, the preaching of the Goſpel therefore is to be forſaken. This Article he confeſſed, that he ſpake in like words and ſenſe, ſaving that he made no mention of Tyrants.

The preaching of the Goſpel is to be left for no Perſecution.

5. That every Man, yea every Lay-man is a Prieſt. He confeſſed that he ſpake ſuch words, declaring in his Sermon, that every Chriſtian-man is a Prieſt, offering up the Sacrifice of Prayer. And if they did murmur againſt the Order of Prieſthood, they did murmur againſt themſelves.

6. That Men ſhould pray to no Saints in Heaven, but only to God; and they ſhould uſe no other Mediator for them, but Chriſt Jeſus our Redeemer only. This Article he denied.

7. He preached that they ſhould worſhip no Images of Saints, which were nothing but Stocks and Stones. This he alſo denied.

Againſt Images.

8. He did preach upon Whit-ſunday laſt, within the Univerſity of Cambridge, ſuch, or like words and ſentences: That a Bachelor of Divinity admitted of the Univerſity, or any other perſon having or knowing the Goſpel of God, ſhould go forth and preach in every place, and let for no Man, of what Eſtate or Degree ſoever he were: and if any Biſhop did Accurſe them for ſo doing, their Curſes ſhould turn to the harm of themſelves. He confeſſed this.

Which anſwers thus made and acknowledged, the ſaid Maſter Arthur did revoke and condemn the ſaid Articles againſt him miniſtred, and ſubmitted himſelf to the puniſhment and judgment of the Church.

Arthur ſubmitteth himſelf.

The third day of December, the Biſhop of London with the other Biſhops aſſembling in the place aforeſaid, after that Bilney had denied utterly to return to the Church of Rome, the Biſhop of London in diſcharge of his Conſcience (as he ſaid) leſt he ſhould hide any thing that had come to his hands, did really exhibit unto the Notaries, in the preſence of the ſaid Maſter Bilney, certain Letters, to wit, five Letters or Epiſtles, with one Schedule in one of the Epiſtles, containing his Articles and Anſwers folded therein, and another Epiſtle folded in manner of a Book, with ſix Leaves; which all and every one he commanded to be written out and Regiſtred, and the Originals to be delivered to him again.

Five Letter of Bilney to the Biſhop of London.

Ex Regiſt. Londinenſi.

This was done in the preſence of M. Bilney, deſiring a Copy of them, and he bound the Notaries with an Oath, for the ſafe keeping of the Copies, and true Regiſtring of the ſame. Which Articles and Anſwers, with three of the ſame Epiſtles, with certain Depoſitions depoſed by the foreſaid Wineſſes, here follow truly drawn; partly out of his own hand-writting, and partly out of the Regiſter.

Relicks.

34. Whether that thou Thomas Bilney, being cited upon Hereſie to appear before my Lord Cardinal, and before the day of thy appearance, not having made thy purgation upon thoſe points that thou waſt cited, haſt preached openly in divers Churches of the City and Dioceſs of London, without ſufficient Licenſe from the Biſhop, or any other.

¶ Concerning the Anſwers unto theſe Articles (gentle Reader) forſomuch as in the moſt part of them, Bilney with Arthur ſeemed to conſent and agree (although not fully and directly, but by way and manner of qualifying) yet becauſe he did not expreſly deny them, it ſhall not be needful here to recite them all, ſave only ſuch wherein he ſeemed to diſſent from them.

¶ To the firſt and ſecond Articles he anſwered affirmatively.

Anſwers to the Interrogatories aforeſaid.

To the third he ſaid, I belive that many of the Popes Laws are profitable and neceſſary, and do prevail unto godlineſs, neither in any point are repugnant unto the Scriptures, nor by any means are to abrogate, but of all Men to be obſerved and reverenced. But touching all thoſe Laws I cannot determin: for, as for ſuch as I have not read, I truſt notwithſtanding they are good alſo; and as for thoſe that I have read, I did never read them to the end and purpoſe to reprove them, but, according to my power, to learn and underſtand them. And as touching the multitude of Laws, St. Auguſtine in his time did much complain, and Gerſon alſo, who marvelled, that he could by any means live in ſafety amongſt ſo many ſnares of Conſtitutions, when as our fore-Fathers, being pure before their fall, could not obſerve one only precept.

Againſt the multitude of Lavvs.

The True Church cannot err in Faith.

To the fourth Article he ſaid, That the Catholick Church can by no means err in Faith, for it is the whole Congregation of the Elect, and ſo known only unto God, which knoweth who are his: otherwiſe no Man ſhould be aſcertained of another Mans Salvation, or of his own, but only through Faith and Hope. For it is written,

No

Eccleſ. 5. No man knoweth whether he be worthy of hatred or love. It is alſo ſenſible, and may be demonſtrate ſo far forth as it is ſufficient to eſtabliſh us in all things, that are to be believed and done: for I may truly ſay of the General Council being congregate in the Holy Ghoſt: Behold here the Catholick Church, denominating the whole by the moſt worthy part.

To the fifth Article he anſwered affirmatively in theſe words: Cum ſint libri Laicorum, adorare oportet, at non Imaginem. See Prototypon.

To the ſixth Article he anſwered, That he did not believe that they are in Heaven, being ſo taught by the Scriptures, and Holy Fathers of the Church.

To the ſeventh Article he ſaid, That it is not to be thought contrary.

To the eighth Article, Whether a Man may not obſerve the Feaſts and Faſts of the Church preſcribed; He thought that there is no Man but he ought to obſerve them.

To the ninth Article he ſaid, That we are likewiſe bound as unto Parents.

To the fourteenth Article he anſwered thus: The fourteenth Chapter of St. Paul in his firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians moveth me to believe, that it is beſt that the people ſhould have the Lords Prayer, and the Apoſtles Creed in Engliſh, ſo that their Devotion might the more be furthered by the underſtanding thereof, and alſo that thereby they might be the more prompt and expert in the Articles of their Faith: of the which, it is to be feared, a great number are ignorant. Surely I have heard many ſay, That they never heard ſpeak of the Reſurrection of the Body, and being certified thereof, but they became much more apt and ready unto goodneſs, and more fearful to do evil.

To the fifteenth Article he ſaid, he would wiſh that the Goſpels and Epiſtles ſhould be read in Engliſh, For I would (ſaith Paul) rather have five words, &c. That the Church might be edified, &c. And Chryſoſtom exhorteth his hearers to look upon Books, that they might the better commit unto memory thoſe things which they had heard. And St. Bede did tranſlate St. John's Goſpel into Engliſh.

Scripture to be in Engliſh. 1 Cor. 14

St John's Goſpel tranſlated into Engliſh by Bede.

Touching the eighteenth Article, for the tranſlation of the Scripture into Engliſh, concerning the whole, he did partly doubt. Notwithſtanding he wiſhed that the Goſpels and Epiſtles of the day might be read in Engliſh, that the people might be made the more apt to hear Sermons. But here ſome will ſay, there might alſo be danger for error. Whereunto he anſwered, But good and vigilant Paſtors might eaſily help that matter, by adding the plain interpretation of the Fathers in the Margents in Engliſh, upon the dark and obſcure places, which would put away all doubts. O how great profit of Souls ſhould the vigilant Paſtors get thereby, which contrariwiſe through their ſlothfulneſs bring great ruin and decay.

The Popes Pardons injurious to Chriſts Paſſion.

To the five and twentieth Article, as touching Pardons, he ſaid, That as they be uſed, and have too long been, it were better that they ſhould be reſtrained, than that they ſhould be any longer uſed as they have been, to the injury of Chriſts Paſſion.

Touching the ſix and twentieth Article, he ſaid, That it is not againſt the Doctrine of Chriſt and his Apoſtles to contend in the Law, ſo it be done with Charity, if St. Auguſtine, and the reverend Father Marcus Marulus did not err, which granted that liberty to the weak Chriſtians: albeit the true Chriſtians ought to give ear unto St. Paul's ſaying, Why do ye not rather ſuffer injury? And to Chriſt himſelf, which ſaith, He that would contend with thee in the Law, and take away thy coat, give him thy cloke alſo.

How Chriſtians may go to the Law. 1 Cor. 6.

Touching the eight and twentieth, he anſwered, That God is the Author of the puniſhment only, but not of the offence, as Baſilius Magnus teacheth in his Sermon upon theſe words of the Prophet; Non eſt malum in civitate quod non fecit dominus. And St. Auguſtine in another place (as I remember) prayeth, That he be not led into that temptation, that he ſhould believe God to be the Author of ſin and wickedneſs. Amos 3.

Here enſueth a brief Summary or Collection of certain Depoſitions, depoſed by the ſeveral Witneſſes afore-named, upon certain Interrogatories, Miniſtred unto them, for the enquiry of Maſter Bilney's Doctrine and Preaching.

Depoſitions againſt Maſter Bilney.

FIrſt it was Depoſed, That in his Sermon in Chriſts Church in Ipſwich, he ſhould preach and ſay, Our Saviour Chriſt is our Mediator between us and the Father: What ſhould we need then to ſeek to any Saint for remedy? Wherefore, it is great injury to the blood of Chriſt, to make ſuch Petitions, and blaſphemeth our Saviour.

That Man is ſo unperfect of himſelf, that he can in no wiſe merit by his own deeds.

Hereſie in the Popes Church to confeſs Chriſt only to be our Mediator.

Alſo, that the coming of Chriſt was long propheſied before, and deſired by the Prophets: But John Baptiſt, being more than a Prophet, did not only propheſie, but with his Finger ſhewed him, ſaying, Ecce agnus Dei qui tollit peccata mundi. Then if this were the very Lamb, which John did demonſtrate, that taketh away the ſins of the World, what injury is it to our Saviour Chriſt; that to be buried in St. Francis Cowle ſhould remit four parts of Penance; what is then left to our Saviour Chriſt, which taketh away the ſins of the World? This I will juſtifie to be a great Blaſphemy to the Blood of Chriſt. John 9.

St. Francis Cowle remitteth four parts of Penance: What remaineth then for Chriſt to remit?

Againſt Pilgrimage.

Alſo, that it was a great folly to go on Pilgrimage, and that preachers in times paſt have been Antichriſts; and now it hath pleaſed God ſomewhat to ſhew forth their falſhood and errors.

Againſt blind miracles.

Alſo, that the miracles done at Walſingham, at Canterbury, and there in Ipſwich, were done by the Devil, through the ſufferance of God, to blind the poor people: and that the Pope hath not the Keys that Peter had, except he follow Peter in his living.

Moreover, it was Depoſed againſt him, That he was notoriouſly ſuſpected as an Heretick, and twice pulled out of the Pulpit in the Dioceſs of Norwich.

Alſo it was Depoſed againſt him, That he ſhould in the Pariſh-Church of Willeſdon exhort the people to put away their gods of Silver and Gold, and leave their Offerings unto them; for that ſuch things as they offered have been known oftentime afterward to have been given to Whores of the Stews. Alſo that Jews and Saracens would have become Chriſtian-men long ago, had it not been for the Idolatry of Chriſtian-men, in offering of Candles, Wax, and Mony to Stocks and Stones.

The Idolatry of the Papiſts is a let to the Jews and Turks, why they are not converted.

Over and beſides theſe cavilling matters, articulated, and depoſed againſt him, here follow certain other Articles whereupon he was detected, gathered out of his Sermon which he preached in the Pariſh-Church of St. Magnes, in Whitſon week, in the year of our Lord, 1527.

Certain other Articles produced againſt Maſter Thomas Bilney.

Articles.

FIrſt he ſaid, Pray you only to God, and not to Saints, rehearſing the Letany; and when he came to Sancta Maria, ora pro nobis, he ſaid, Stay there.

He ſaid, that Chriſtian-men ought to worſhip God only, and not Saints.

He ſaid, that Chriſtian people ſhould ſet up no Lights before the Images of Saints: for Saints in Heaven need no Light, and the Images have no eyes to ſee.

He ſaid, as Ezekias deſtroyed the Brazen Serpent that Moſes made by the commandment of God; even ſo ſhould Kings and Princes now adays deſtroy and burn the Images of Saints ſet up in Churches.

But fifty good Popes ſince Chriſt.

Theſe five hundred years there hath been no good Pope, nor in all the times paſt we can find but fifty; for they have neither preached, nor lived well, or conformably to their Dignity. Wherefore till now they have born the Keys of Symony. Againſt whom, good people, we muſt preach and teach unto you. For we cannot come to them; it

KING Hen. 8. it is great pitty: they have ſore ſlandered the Blood of Chriſt.

The people have uſed fooliſhly of late Pilgrimages, which for them had been better they had been at home.

Many have made certain Vows, which be not poſſible for them to fulfil, and thoſe nothing meritorious.

The Preachers before this have been Antichriſts, and now it hath pleaſed our Saviour Chriſt to ſhew their falſe Errors, and to teach another way and manner of the Holy Goſpel of Chriſt, to the comfort of your Souls.

The Prophecie of Bilney. I truſt that there ſhall and will come other beſides me, which ſhall ſhew and preach to you, the ſame Faith and manner of living that I do ſhew and preach to you, which is the very True Goſpel of our Saviour Chriſt, and the mind of the Holy Fathers, whereby you ſhall be brought from their Errors, wherein you have been long ſeduced: for before this there have been many that have ſlandered you, and the Goſpel of our Saviour Chriſt, of whom ſpake our Saviour, Matth. 18. Qui ſcandalizaverit unum de puſillis iſtis qui in me credit, &c.

Theſe and many other ſuch like Depoſitions were Depoſed againſt him by the Deponents and Witneſſes before Sworn, which wholly to recite would be too long and tedious: wherefore theſe ſhall ſuffice at this time, being the principal matters, and in manner the effect of all the reſt. But now, before we will return again to the order of his Examination, we think it good here to infer a certain Dialogue containing a communication between

A Dialogue a Frier named John Bruſierd, and Maſter Thomas Bilney, which we have thought meet for this place, becauſe it was done in Ipſwich, and alſo about the time of theſe Examinations: the Copy whereof we have written with the Friers own hand in Latin, the Copy whereof in Engliſh here inſueth.

¶ A Dialogue between Frier John Bruſierd and Maſter Thomas Bilney, in Ipſwich, concerning worſhipping of Images.

Bruſierd.

A Dialogue between Bilney and Frier Bruſierd. ALthough you have blaſphemed moſt perniciouſly the immaculate Flock of Chriſt with certain blaſphemies of yours, yet being moved partly with our gentle Petitions, partly pitying your caſe and towardly diſpoſition, I am come hither to talk with you ſecretly, before the rumour be diſcloſed, upon the conſideration of the threefold Errors which I ſee in you.

First, For that when you began to ſhoot the Dart of your peſtiferous Error, more vehemently than you ought, againſt the Breaſt of the ignorant multitude, you ſeem to pour upon the Ground the precious Blood of Chriſt, as with a certain vehement violence out of the miſerable veſſel of your heart. Whereas you ſaid that none of the Saints do make interceſſion for us, nor obtain for us any thing, you have perilouſly blaſphemed the efficacy of the whole Church, conſecrated with the precious Blood of Chriſt. Which thing you are not able to deny, eſpecially ſeeing the ſame ſo inceſſantly doth knock at the Gates of Heaven, through the continual interceſſion of the Saints, according as in the ſevenfold Letany manifeſtly appeareth to be ſeen.

A great blaſphemy among the Friers to ſet up Chriſt only to be our Mediator.

One Mediator and no more.

Bilney. I marvel at you, and doubtleſs cannot marvel enough, but that the ſtrong and vain cuſtom of ſuperſtitious Men, thinking themſelves not to be heard but in much babling, doth put an end to my admiration. For our Heavenly Father knoweth what we have need of before we ask. Alſo it is written, There is one Mediator of God and Men, the Man Chriſt Jeſus. If then there be but one Mediator of God and Men, the Man Chriſt Jeſus, where is our bleſſed Lady? Where is then St. Peter and other Saints?

Bruſierd. I ſuppoſe that no Man is ignorant, but that the Divines of the Primitive Church have all affirmed to be one Mediator between God and Men. Neither could any at any time praiſe or pray to the Saints, when as yet they living in the calamities of this body, and wreſtling with the contrary winds of this World, were not yet come to the Port of reſt whereunto they were travelling. Paul (I grant) did rightly affirm to be but one Mediator of God and Men, what time as yet there was no Saint Canonized or put into the Kalender. But now ſeeing the Church doth know, and doth certainly believe, through the undoubted revelations of God, that the bleſſed Virgin and other Saints are placed in the boſom of Abraham, ſhe therefore like a good Mother hath taught, and that moſt diligently, us her Children, to praiſe the Omnipotent Jeſus in his Saints; and alſo to offer up by the ſame Saints our Petitions unto God. Thereof it is that the Pſalmiſt ſaith; Praiſe ye the Lord in his Saints. Rightly alſo do we ſay and affirm, That Saints may pray for us. One Man may pray for another; Ergo, much more may Saints that do enjoy the fruition of his High Majeſty. For ſo it is written, God is my witneſs, whom I ſerve in my ſpirit, in the Goſpel of his Son, that without ceaſing I remember you in my prayer always for you, &c.

The Popes Kalender maketh no Mediators now than were in the Primitive Church.

Note this Argument. We muſt praiſe God in his Saints. Rom. i.

Bilney. I marvel doubtleſs, that you a Man learned are not yet delivered out of the confuſe Dungeon of Hereſie through the help of the Holy Goſpel: eſpecially ſeeing that in the ſame Goſpel it is written, Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, whatſoever you ask the Father in my Name, he will give it unto you. John 16.

He ſaith not, whatſoever ye ask the Father in the name of St. Peter, St. Paul, or other Saints, but in my Name. Let us ask therefore help in the Name of him, which is able to obtain for us of his Father whatſoever we ask, leſt peradventure hereafter in the end of the World, at the ſtrait judgment, we ſhall hear, Hitherto in my Name ye have asked nothing. In nomine meo.

Bruſierd. Where ye marvel (with what mind, I cannot tell) that I being a learned Man (as you ſay) am not delivered yet from the confuſe dungeon of Hereſie through the help of the Goſpel: much more do you, that are far better learned than I, cauſe me to marvel at your fooliſh admiration. Neither can I chuſe but laugh at you, as one being rapt to the third Heaven of ſuch high myſteries, and yet ſee not thoſe things which be done here in the lower parts of terrene Philoſophy: for what a ridiculous thing is it for a Man to look ſo long upon the Sun, that he can ſee nothing elſe but the Sun, nor cannot tell whether to turn him? Moreover, what Student is there in all Cambridge, be he never ſo young, that knoweth not, that the argument of Authority, brought out negatively, hath no force? Argumentum ab auctoritate deſtructive.

Bilney. So as the Phariſees took Chriſt, you take my words, much otherwiſe than I meant.

Bruſierd. Your words, which wander far from the ſcope of Scripture, I do not like. What is in your meaning, and lieth inwardly in your mind, I cannot tell.

Bilney. Such as invocate the help either of Chriſt, or of any other Saint, for any corporal infirmity, to be delivered from the ſame, may be well reſembled to delicate Patients, who being under the hand of Phyſitians, and having Medicines miniſtred againſt their Diſeaſes, not abiding the pain thereof, rap all aſunder: wherefore I ſay, no Man ought to implore the help of God, or of any Saint * for corporal infirmity. Praying for taking away Temporal infirmities.

* He meaneth abſolutely without condition.

Bruſierd. O moſt pernicious and perillous Hereſie of all that ever I have heard! Thus you flying the ſmoke, fall into the Fire, and, avoiding the danger of Scilla, you run upon Charibdis. O heart of Man wrapped in palpable darkneſs. I wiſh, Maſter Bilney, that you would but once ſearch and fet out the firſt Origin of theſe Rogation days: For ſo we read in the Church-Story, that they were firſt Ordained by Pope Gregory, with Faſting, Prayers, and Holy Proceſſions, againſt the Peſtilence, by the infection of the air then reigning among the people. At what time the people then going in the Proceſſion, a certain Image like to our Bleſſed Lady, painted with the hands of St. Luke the Evangeliſt, did go before them, about the which Image, in the honour of the Virgin, Angels did ſing this Anthem: Regina Cæli lætare, &c. O Queen of Heaven be glad. To the which Anthem, the Pope alſo adjoyned this, Ora pro nobis Dominum, &c. Pray to the Lord for us. Wherefore, ſeeing the Angels did worſhip the Image of the glorious Virgin Mary; in the honour of her; and ſeeing moreover the Holy Father Pope Gregory, with all the Clergy, did pray for corporal infirmity, it appeareth manifeſtly that we ought to worſhip the Saints, and alſo to give honour Scylla and Charibdis be two dangerous Rocks in the Sea. By this Church-Story he meaneth belike, Legenda aurea, otherwiſe called, The Legend of lies.

The Popes Letany at Rome.

honour in a manner to their Images: further alſo, to pray to Almighty God and all Saints for corporal infirmity, that we may be delivered from the ſame, ſo that they may ſay the like for us, which is ſaid in the Goſpel, Send them away, becauſe they cry after us. And although there be infinite places inexpugnable to be alledged out of the Holy Scripture, wherewith we might eaſily reſiſt this your Error: yet ſtanding herewith content, as ſufficient at this preſent, we will proceed now to your ſecond peſtiferous Error, wherein you, like an ingrate Child, go about to tear out the Bowels of your Mother. For in that you ſay and affirm blaſphemouſly, The Biſhop of Rome to be the very Antichriſt, and that his priviledges have no force againſt the Gates of Hell: in ſo ſaying, what do you but like a moſt unkind and unnatural Child, ſpoil your loving Mother of all her Treaſures, and wound her being ſpoiled, and being wounded pluck out her Bowels moſt miſerably upon the Earth? But forſomuch as there is nothing ſo abſurd, or ſo Heretical, but ſhall be received of ſome itching Ears: I would therefore now hear you declare, how he ſitteth in the Temple of God, as God, being exalted and worſhipped above all that is named God, or how he ſheweth himſelf as Lord in power and ſigns, and wonders deceitful.

Scripture well applied.

Whether the Pope be Antichriſt.

Bilney. Although incredulity doth not ſuffer you, notwithſtanding your learning, to underſtand theſe things, yet I will go about ſomething to help your incredulity herein, through the help of the Lord; beſeeching you, that ſetting all ſuperſtition apart, you will underſtand thoſe things that are above. Do ye know the Table of the Ten Commandments?

Bruſierd. According as the Catholick Doctors do expound them, I know them meanly: But how you do expound them, I cannot tell.

Bilney. And do you know alſo the Conſtitutions of Men, which are deviſed only by the Dreams of Men: whereunto Men are ſo ſtraitly bound, that under pain of death they are compelled to obſerve them?

Bruſierd. I know certain Sanctions of the holy Fathers, but ſuch as you ſpeak of to be deviſed by Mens dreams, I know none.

2 Theſ. 2. 1 Cor. 3. The place of St. Paul expounded concerning Antichriſt ſitting in the Temple of God, &c. Signs and Miracles wrought by illuſions. Apoc. 20

Bilney. Now then let us ſet and compare theſe two together, and ſo ſhall you eaſily underſtand the Biſhop of Rome, whom they call the Pope, to ſit in the Temple of God, as God, and to be extolled above all that is Named God. It is written, The Temple of the Lord is holy, which is you. Therefore the Conſcience of Man is the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt: in which Temple, I will prove the Pope to ſit as God, and to be exalted above all that is called God. For whoſo condemneth the Decalogue, or the Table of the Commandements of God, there is but a ſmall puniſhment for him, neither is that puniſhment to death, but contrariwiſe, he that ſhall contemn or violate the Conſtitutions, which you call the Sanctions of Men, is counted by all Mens judgment guilty of death. What is this, but the high Biſhop of Rome to ſit and reign in the Temple of God; that is, in Mans Conſcience, as God?

* We read of a like ſaying of another Frier Auguſtin of Antwerp, reſtified by Eraſmus in his Epiſtles, who, openly in the Pulpit at Antwerp preaching to the people, wviſhed that Luther vvere there, that he might bite out his Throat vvith his Teeth. So doing he vvould nothing doubt vvith the ſame bloody Teeth to reſort to the Altar, and receive the Body of Chriſt. Eraſm. epiſt. lib. 16. Ad obtrectatorem.

Bruſierd. Although this expoſition ſeemeth unworthy for Chriſtian Ears, yet I would hear you further how he ſheweth himſelf in ſigns and wonders deceitful.

Bilney. Theſe wonders (which they call Miracles) be wrought daily in the Church, not by the Power of God, as many think, but by the illuſion of Sathan rather, who (as the Scripture witneſſeth) hath been looſe now abroad Five hundred years, according as it is written in the Book of the Apocalypſe, After a thouſand years Sathan ſhall be ſet looſe, &c. Neither are they to be called Miracles of true Chriſtian-men, but illuſions rather, whereby to delude Mens minds, to make them put their Faith in our Lady, and in other Saints, and not in God alone, to whom be honour and glory for ever.

Bruſierd. *But that I believe and know that God and all his Saints will take everlaſting revengement upon thee, I would ſurely with theſe Nails of mine be thy death, for this horrible and enorm injury againſt the precious Blood of Chriſt. God ſaith, I will not the death of a ſinner, but rather that he convert and live. And thou blaſphemeſt him, as though he ſhould lay privy ſnares of death for us ſecretly, that we ſhould not eſpy them. Which if it were true, we might well ſay with Hugh de Saint Victore in this manner: If it be an Error, it is of thee (O God) that we are deceived; for theſe be confirmed with ſuch ſigns and wonders, which cannot be done but by thee. But I am aſſured it is untrue and heretical: and therefore I will leave this matter, and will talk with you concerning the merits of Saints. For once I remember, in a certain Sermon of yours you ſaid, That no Saint, though his ſuffering were never ſo great, and his life moſt pure, deſerved any thing for us with God, either by his death or life. Which is contrary to St. Auguſtine.

* That God hath not ſuffered his Scriptures to lead us into Truth.

Bilney. Chriſt ſaith one thing, St. Auſtine another; Whether of theſe two ſhall we believe? For Chriſt willing to deliver us out of this dark Dungeon of ignorance, gave forth a certain parable of Ten Virgins, of which five were Fools, and five were Wiſe. By the five fooliſh Virgins, wanting the Oil of good works, he meant us all ſinners. By the wiſe Virgins he meant the company of all Holy Saints. Now let us hear what the five wiſe Virgins anſwered to the five fooliſh, craving Oil of them; No (ſay they) leſt peradventure we have not ſufficient for us, and for you. Get you rather to them that ſell, and buy of them to ſerve your turn.

Mat. 25. Saints have not merits ſufficient for themſelves, much leſs to ſpare to others.

Wherefore if they had not Oil ſufficient for themſelves and alſo for the other, where then be the merits of Saints wherewith they can deſerve both for themſelves and for us? certes I cannot ſee.

Bruſierd. You wreſt the Scriptures from the right underſtanding to a reprobate ſenſe, that I am ſcarce able to hold mine Eyes from tears, hearing with mine Ears theſe words of you. Fare ye well.

¶ The ſubmiſſion of Maſter Thomas Bilney.

Bilney convented again before the Biſhop of London.

THE fourth day of December, the Biſhop of London, with the other Biſhops his aſſiſtants, aſſembled again in the Chapter-houſe of Weſtminſter; whither alſo Maſter Bilney was brought, and was exhorted and admoniſhed to abjure and recant. Who anſwered, That he would ſtand to his Conſcience. Then the Biſhop of London, with the other Biſhops, Ex Officio, did publiſh the Depoſitions of the Witneſſes, with his Articles and Anſwers, commanding that they ſhould be read. That done, the Biſhop exhorted him again to deliberate with himſelf, whether he would return to the Church, and renounce his Opinions, or no, and bade him to depart into a void place, and there to deliberate with himſelf. Which done, the Biſhop asked him again if he would return? Who Anſwered, Fiat juſtitia & judicium in nomine Domini. And being divers times admoniſhed to abjure, he would make no other Anſwer, but, Fiat juſtitia, &c. And, Hæc eſt dies quam fecit Dominus, exultemus & lætemur in ea. Then the Biſhop after deliberation, putting off his Cap, ſaid, In nomine Patris & Filii & Spiritus Sancti, Amen. Exurgat Deus & diſſipentur inimici ejus: and making a Croſs on his Forehead and his Breaſt, by the counſel of the other Biſhops, he gave ſentence againſt M. Bilney, being there preſent, in this manner:

Bilney denieth to recant. Pſalm 118. In nomine Domini incipit omne malum.

I, by the conſent and counſel of my Brethren here preſent, do pronounce thee Thomas Bilney, who haſt been accuſed of divers Articles, to be convict of Hereſie; and for the reſt of the ſentence we take deliberation till to morrow.

The fifth day of December the Biſhops aſſembled there again; before whom Bilney was brought: whom the Biſhop asked if he would yet return to the Unity of the Church, and revoke his Hereſies which he had preached. Whereupon Bilney anſwered, That he would not be a ſlander to the Goſpel, truſting that he was not ſeparate from the Church; and that, if the multitude of Witneſſes might be credited, he might have thirty Men of honeſt life on his part, againſt one to the contrary brought in againſt him: which Witneſſes the Biſhop ſaid came too late; for after publication they could not be received by the Law. Then Bilney alledging the Story of Suſan and Daniel, the Biſhop of London ſtill exhorted him to return to the Unity of the Church, and to abjure his Hereſies, and permitted him to go into ſome ſecret place, there to conſult with his Friends, till one of the Clock at the afternoon of the ſame day.

Bilney convented again before the Biſhop. Bilney refuſeth again to recant.

Like Biſhops like Laws.

At

KING Hen. 8.

Bilney convented the the third time.

At Afternoon the Biſhop of London again asked him whether he would return to the Church, and acknowledge his Hereſies. Bilney anſwered, That he truſted he was not ſeparate from the Church, and required time and place to bring in witneſſes. Which was refuſed. Then the Biſhop once again required of him, whether he would return to the Catholick Church. Whereunto he anſwered, That if they could teach and prove ſufficiently, that he was convict, he would yield and ſubmit himſelf, and deſired again to have time and ſpace to bring in again his refuſed witneſſes, and other anſwer he would give none.

Bilneys witneſſes refuſed.

Then the Biſhop put Maſter Bilney aſide, and took Counſel with his Fellows; and afterward called in Maſter Bilney, and asked him again whether he would abjure. But he would make no other anſwer than before. Then the Biſhop, with the conſent of the reſt, did decree and determine, that it was not lawful to hear a petition which was againſt the Law: and inquiring again whether he would abjure, he anſwered plainly, No; and deſired to have time to conſult with his Friends, in whom his truſt was. And being once again asked whether he would return, and inſtantly deſired thereunto, or elſe the Sentence muſt be read, he required the Biſhop to give him licence to deliberate with himſelf until the next morrow, whether he might abjure the Hereſies wherewith he was defamed, or no. The Biſhop granted him that he ſhould have a little time to delibrate with Maſter Dancaſter. But Bilney required ſpace till the next morrow, to conſult with Maſter Farmer and Maſter Dancaſter. But the Biſhop would not grant him his requeſt, for fear leſt he ſhould appeal. But at the laſt the Biſhop inclining unto him, granted him two nights reſpite to deliberate: that is to ſay, till Saturday at Nine of the clock aforenoon, and then to give a plain determinate anſwer, what he would do in the premiſſes.

Bilney denieth the third time to recant.

Danceſter conferreth with Bilney.

The Seventh day of December, in the year and place aforeſaid, the Biſhop of London with the other Biſhops being aſſembled, Bilney alſo perſonally appeared. Whom the Biſhop of London asked, whether he would now return to the Unity of the Church, and revoke the Errors and Hereſies whereof he ſtood accuſed, detected, and convicted. Who anſwered, that now he was perſwaded by Maſter Dancaſter and other his Friends, he would ſubmit himſelf, truſting that they would deal gently with him, both in his abjuration and penance. Then he deſired that he might read his abjuration; which the Biſhop granted. When he had read the ſame ſecretly by himſelf, and was returned, being demanded what he would do in theſe premiſſes, he anſwered, That he would abjure and ſubmit himſelf, and there openly read his abjuration, and ſubſcribed, and delivered it to the Biſhop: which then did abſolve him, and for his penance enjoyned him, That he ſhould abide in priſon appointed by the Cardinal, till he were by him releaſed; and moreover, the next day he ſhould go before the proceſſion, in the Cathedral Church of Saint Paul, bareheaded, with a Fagot on his ſhoulder, and ſhould ſtand before the Preacher at Pauls Croſs all the Sermon time. Ex Regiſt. London.

Bilney through infirmity, rather then by conviction, recanteth.

M. Bilney injoyned penance.

Ex Regiſt. Lond.

Here forſomuch as mention is made before of five Letters or Epiſtles, which this good Man wrote to Cuthbert Tonſtal Biſhop of London, and the ſaid Biſhop delivered unto the Regiſters, we thought good to inſert certain thereof, ſuch as could come to our hands. The Copy of which Letters, as they were written by him in Latin, becauſe they are in the former Edition to be ſeen, and read in the ſame Latin, wherein he wrote them, it ſhall ſuffice in this Book to expreſs the ſame only in Engliſh. Concerning the firſt Epiſtle, which containeth the whole Story of his Converſion, and ſeemeth more effectual in the Latin, than in the Engliſh, we have exhibited it in the ſecond Edition, and therefore here have only made mention of the ſame briefly. The Copy whereof beginneth thus.

Reverendo in Chriſto Patri D. Cuth. Tonſtallo, Londini Epiſcopo, T. Bilnæus Salutem in Chriſto, cum omni ſubjectione tanto Præſuli debitam.

Hoc nomine, Pater in Chriſto obſervande, longe beatiorem me puto, quod ad tuæ Paternitatis examinationem vocari me contigit. Ea enim eruditione es, Luke 1. ea vitæ integritate (quod omnes fatentur) ut ipſemet non poſſis (alioqui divinarum in te dotium æſtimator non admodum magnificus) quoties tibi ſuccurrit, quanta tibi gratis fecerit Deus in illius laudes non erumpere, ac tecum in corde tacitus exclamare, fecit mihi magna qui potens eſt, & ſanctum nomen ejus. In talem nunc me judicem incidiſſe gratulor, ac Deo, qui moderatur omnia, gratiam pro virili habeo. Et quanquam (teſtis eſt mihi Deus) nullius in omnibus meis concionibus erroris mihi conſcius ſum, nedum hæreſeos aut factionis (quod calumniantur quidam, quæſtus ſui, quam animarum lucri avidiores) tamen ſupra modum lætor, divina (haud dubie) benignitate proviſum eſſe, ut ob veritatis teſtimonium ad Tonſtalli tribunal ſiſterer: qui, ſi quis alius, optime novit, nunquam defuturos Jannes ac Jambres, qui veritati reſiſtant: nunquam defuturos Elimates, qui conentur ſubvertere vias domini rectas; denique nunquam defuturos Demetrios, * Pythoniſſas, Balaamos, * Nicolaitas, * Cainos, Iſmaeles; * Elymas, magus. Nam ſi populus ſemel in Chriſtum pro ſe paſſum ſolide ac pure conſidere occœperit, ruent mox in vere fidelium pectoribus, quæcunque hactenus pro Chriſto amplexi ſunt. Tunc intelligent non hic aut illic Chriſtum eſſe, ſed regnum Dei in ſemetipſis eſſe. Erraverunt greges mei in cunctis montibus, & in univerſo colle excelſo, & ſuper omnem faciem terræ diſperſi ſunt greges mei, & non erat qui requireret: non erat, inquam, qui requireret. Imo,* Pſeudo paſtores veri Demetrii. *ſi quis requirere velit, ac in caulas Chriſti, unitatem dico fidei, errabundos reducere, mox inſurgunt nomine Paſtores, ſed reveral upi, qui non aliud de grege, quam lac, lanam, pellem, quærunt; animas cum ſuas, tum gregis permittentes diabolo. Hi ſunt, hi (pater colende) ſunt, qui, ſub prætextu perſequendi hæreticos, ventris ſui negotium agunt, inimici crucis Chriſti. Qui quidvis potius ferre poſſunt, quam puram Chriſti pro peccatis noſtris crucifixi annuncitationem. Hi ſunt, quibus Chriſtus æternam minatur damnationem, cum ait, Væ vobis Scribæ & Mat. 23. Phariſæi, Hypocritæ, qui clauditis regnum cœlorum ante homines: vos enim non intratis, nec introeuntes ſinitis intrare. Hi ſunt, qui, cum ipſi aliunde aſcenderunt, alios intrare non ſinunt. Quod patet, quia ſi quis per me, Joh. 10. inquit Chriſtus, introierit, ſalvabitur, & ingredietur, & egredietur, & paſcua inveniet: & hi non inveniunt paſcua (nunquam enim docent) & alios poſt ſe trahunt, ut non per Chriſtum, qui ſolus eſt oſtium per quod ad patrem pervenitur, ſed aliunde per opuſcula, quæ ovibus, tacito nonnunquam Chriſto, ſuadent, proponunt & injungunt, ad ſuum potius quæſtum, quam animarum ſalutem ſpectantes; hoc deteriores, quam illi qui 1 Cor. 3. ſuper Chriſtum fundamentum ædificant lignum, fœnum, ſtipulam. Denique hi ſunt medici illi, in quos mulier illa, annis duodecim ſanguinis profluvio vexata, omnia ſua conſumpſerat, nec adjumenti quicquam ſenſerat, ſed deterius ſe habebat, donec vix tandem ad Chriſtum venerat: quæ ſimulatque fimbriam veſtimenti ejus in fide tetigerat, ſic ſanabatur, ut ſtatim in corpore id ipſum ſentiret. O mutationem dexteræ excelſi? quam & ego miſer peccator non ſemel ſenſi: qui tamen antea quam ad Chriſtum venire potui, ſic omnia mea inſumpſeram in ignaros medicos, indoctos confeſſionum auditores, ut parum mihi virium (alioqui natura imbecilli) reliquum fuerit, parum pecuniæ, ingenii item parum. Indicebant enim mihi jejunia, vigilias, indulgentiarum ac miſſarum emptiones, in quibus omnibus (ut nunc intelligo) ſua potius quærebant, quam ſalutem animæ meæ languentis.

Sed tandem de Jeſu audiebam, nimirum tum, cum novum Teſtamentum primum ab Eraſmo ederetur. Quod cum ab eo Latinius redditum accepi, Latinitate potius quam verbo Dei (quod tunc quidnam eſſet prorſus neſciebam) alectus, emebam, providentia (ſine dubio) Divina, ut nunc interpretor. Incidi prima (ut memini) lectione in hanc (o mihi ſuaviſſimam Pauli ſententiam) 1 ad Timo. 1. Certus ſermo, & dignus, quem modis omnibus amplectamur, quod Chriſtus Jeſus venit in mundum ut peccatores ſalvos faceret, quorum primus ſum ego. Hæc una ſententia, Deo intus in corde meo (quod tunc fieri ignorabam) docente, ſic exhilaravit pectus meum, prius peccatorum conſcientia ſaucium ac pene deſperabundum, ut mox viſus ſim mihi, neſcio quantam intus tranquilitatem ſentire, adeo quod exultaverunt oſſa humiliata. Poſtea Scriptura cœpit mihi dulcior eſſe melle ac favo: in qua paulatim didici omnes meos conatus, omnia jejunia, omnes vigilias, omnes miſſarum indulgentiarum redemptiones quæ ſine fiducia in Jeſum (qui ſolus ſalvum facit populum ſuum a peccatis ſuis) fierent; didici, inquam, hæc omnia nihil aliud fuiſſe, quam (quod ait Auguſtinus) celerem curſum extra viam; quam perizomata illa ficulnea, quibus Adam & Eva verenda olim ſua fruſtra tegere conati ſunt: Nunquam prius tranquilitati quam promiſſioni Dei de Serpentis capite, per mulieris ſemen Chriſtum, conterendo credidiſſent: Nec ego prius a peccatorum aculeis ac morſibus ſanari potui, quam a Deo doctus eſſem illam lectionem, de qua loquitur Chriſtus, Johan. 3. Sicut Moſes exaltavit ſerpentem in deſerto, ita exaltari oportet filium hominis, ut omnis qui credit in illum non pereat, ſed habeat vitam æternam.

Hanc tandem ſublimem lectionem, quam nullus docere poteſt niſi Deus qui hanc Petro revelavit, ubi pro modulo gratiæ Dei mihi datæ guſtare cœpi, rogavi Dominum ut augeret mihi fidem, ac tandem nihil magis optavi, quam ut, ſic reddita mihi lætitia ſalutaris ſui, ſpiritu me ſuo utcunque confirmaret, ut virtute nonnulla donatus ex alto, docerem iniquos vias ejus, quæ ſunt miſericordia & veritas, ut impii ad ipſam, per me olim impium, converterentur. Quod dum pro virili conor apud R. D. Cardinalem, ac tuam Paternitatem, blaſphematur in me (hæc eſt unica mihi in his tribulationibus fiducia) Chriſtus, quam pro virili doceo, factum nobis a Deo Patre ſapientiam, juſtitiam, ſanctificationem, redemptionem denique & ſatisfactionem. Qui factus eſt pro nobis peccatum, id eſt, hoſtia pro peccato, ut nos efficeremur juſtitia Dei per illum. 2 Cor. 5. *Qui factus eſt pro nobis maledictum, ut nos a maledicto legis redimeret. Sed quoniam hanc eſuriem ac ſitim extinguere ſolet humanæ juſtitia ſaturitas, quam parat potiſſimum opuſculorum noſtrorum electitiorum fiducia, qualia ſunt peregrinationes, veniarum redemptiones, cereorum oblationes, electa, a nobis jejunia, & interdum ſuperſtitioſa, denique qualeſcunque (ut vocant) voluntariæ devotiones, contra quæ loquitur Scriptura Dei, Deut. 4. 12. Non facies quod tibi rectum videtur, ſed quod ego præcipio tibi, hoc tantum facito, nec addens nec minuens: ideo inquam hujuſmodi opuſculorum mentionem nonnunquam facio; non ea (Deum teſtor) unquam damnans, ſed eorum abuſum reprehendens, legitimumque uſum parvulis manifeſtum faciens, hortans, ne ſic his adhæreant, ut his ſaturati (quod plerique faciunt) Chriſtum faſtidiant. In quo fœliciter valeat Paternitas tua. Et hæc omnium ſumma. Si indixeris mihi ut ſingula dilatem, non recuſabo, modo tempus mihi conceſſeris. Nam ſtatim hoc facere non eſt harum, quoad corpus, virium; paratus ſemper, ſic ubi lapſus fuero, meliora doceri.

T. Bilnæus.

The ſame in Engliſh.

¶ To the Reverend Father in Chriſt, Cuthbert Biſhop of London, Thomas Bilney wiſheth health in Chriſt, with all ſubmiſſion due unto ſuch a Prelate.

IN this behalf (Moſt reverend Father in Chriſt) I think my ſelf moſt happy, that it is my chance to be called to examination before your Reverence, for that you are of ſuch wiſdom and learning, of ſuch integrity of life (which all men do confeſs to be in you) that even your ſelf cannot chuſe (if you do not too lightly eſteem Gods gifts in you) as often as you ſhall remember the great things which God hath done unto you, but ſtraightways ſecretly in your heart, to his high praiſe ſay, He that is mighty hath done great things unto me, and holy is his name. I rejoyce, that I have now happened upon ſuch a Judge, and with all my heart give thanks unto God, which ruleth all things.

And albeit (God is my witneſs) I know not my ſelf guilty of any error in my Sermons, neither of any Hereſie or Sedition, which divers do ſlander me of, ſeeking rather their own lucre and advantage, than the health of ſouls: Notwithſtanding I do exceedingly rejoyce, that it is foreſeen by Gods divine Providence, That I ſhould be brought before the Tribunal Seat of Tonſtall, who knoweth as well as any other, that there will never be wanting Jannes and Jambres, which will reſiſt the truth; that there ſhall never be lacking ſome * Elymas, which will go about to ſubvert the ſtraight ways of the Lord; and finally, that ſome Demetrius, * Pithoniſs, Balaams, * Nicolaites, Cains, and Iſmaels, will be always at hand, which will greedily hunt and ſeek after that which pertaineth unto themſelves, and not that which pertaineth to Jeſus Chriſt. How can it then be, that they can ſuffer Chriſt to be truly and ſincerely preached? For if the people begin once wholly in every place to put their confidence in Chriſt, which was for them Crucified, then ſtraightways that which they have hitherto embraced in ſtead of Chriſt, ſhall utterly decay in the hearts of the faithful. Then they ſhall underſtand that Chriſt is not in this place, or in that place, but the Kingdom of God to be in themſelves. Then ſhall they plainly ſee, That the Father is not to be worſhipped, neither in the Mount of Samaria, neither at Hieruſalem, but in all places, in ſpirit and truth. Which thing if it come once to paſs, the beaſts of the field will think all their gain and lucre loſt. In whom the ſaying of Ezechiel is fulfilled; My Sheep are diſperſed becauſe they had no Sheepherd, and are devoured of the beaſt of the field, and ſtrayed abroad: my flock hath erred and wandred in every mountain, and upon every high hill, and is diſperſed thorowout all the earth, and there is no man which hath ſought to gather them together: no, there was no man which once ſought after them: But if any Man would ſeek to reduce thoſe which were gone aſtray into the Fold of Chriſt, that is, the unity of Faith, by and by there riſe up certain againſt him, which are named Paſtors, but indeed are Wolves, which ſeek no other thing of their Flock, but the Milk, Wooll, and Fell, leaving both their own ſouls, and the ſouls of their Flock, unto the Divel.

Jannes and Jambres were two of Pharaos Prieſts which reſiſted Moſes, but their names be not expreſſed in the ſeventh Chapter of Exodus, but only in 2 Timoiby. God never builded a Church, but the Divel hath his Chappel by.

Demetrius the silver-Smith cryed out against Paul, Acts 9.

Pretensed Priests and Prelates, under colour of persecuting Hereticks, crucified Christ, and tread down his truth.

These Men, I say, rise up like unto Demetrius, crying out, This Heretick disswadeth and seduceth much people every where, saying; That they are not Gods which are made with hands. These are they, these I say (Most reverend Father) are they, which under the pretence of persecuting Hereticks, follow their own licentious life; enemies unto the Cross of Christ; which can suffer and bear any thing rather than the sincere Preaching of Christ Crucified for our sins. These are they unto whom Christ threatneth eternal Damnation, where he saith, Wo be unto you Scribes, Pharisees, and Hypocrites, which shut up the Kingdom of Heaven before Men, and you your selves enter not in, neither suffer those which would enter, to come in. These are they which have come in another way to the charge of souls, as it appeareth; For if any Man (saith Christ) come in by me, he shall be saved, and shall come in, and go out, and find Pasture. These Men do not find Pasture, for they never teach, and draw others after them, that they should not enter by Christ, which alone is the door whereby we must come unto the Father; but set before the people an other way, perswading them to come unto God through good works, oftentimes speaking nothing at all of Christ, thereby seeking rather their own gain and lucre, than the salvation of souls. In this point being worse than they which upon Christ (being the foundation) do build Wood, Hay and Straw. These Men confess that they know Christ, but by their deeds they deny him.

John 10.

A wrong way to come to God by good works.

False Priests and Prelates compared to the Physitians upon whom the woman with the bloody flix spent all her goods, and was not helped.

Bilney here speaketh by his own experience.

These are those Physicians upon whom that Woman which was Twelve years vexed with the bloody flix, had consumed all that she had, and felt no help, but was still worse and worse, until such time as at the last she came unto Christ; and after she had once touched the hem of his Vesture, through Faith, she was so healed, that by and by she felt the same in her body. O mighty Power of the most Highest; which I also miserable sinner have often tasted and felt. Which before that I could come unto Christ, had even likewise spent all that I had upon those ignorant Physicians, that is to say, unlearned hearers of confession, so that there was but small force of strength left in me, (which of nature was but weak) small store of Money, and very little wit or understanding: for they appointed me fastings, watching, buying of Pardons, and Masses; in all which things (as I now understand) they sought rather their own gain, than the salvation of my sick and languishing soul.

The end and effect of the Popes Divinity.

The first conversion of M. Bilney by reading the New Testament set out by Erasmus.

But at the last I heard speak of Jesus, even then when the New Testament was first set forth by Erasmus. Which when I understood to be eloquently done by him, being allured rather for the Latin than for the Word of God, (for at that time I knew not what it meant) I bought it even by the Providence of God, as I do now well understand and perceive: And at the first reading (as I well remember) I chanced upon this sentence of Saint Paul (O most sweet and comfortable sentence to my soul!) in his first Epistle to Timothy, and first Chapter; It is a true saying, and worthy of all men to be embraced, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am the chief and principal. This one sentence, through Gods instruction and inward working, which I did not then perceive, did so exhilarate my heart, being before wounded with the guilt of my sins, and being almost in despair, that immediately I felt a marvelous comfort and quietness, insomuch that my bruised Bones leapt for joy.

Psal. 50.

All the travels of men without Christ, are but an hasty running out of the right way.

M. Bilney looking up to the brazen Serpent.

After this, the Scripture began to be more pleasant unto me than the honey or the honey Comb. Wherein I learned, that all my travel, all my fasting and watching, all the redemption of Masses and Pardons, being done without truth in Christ, which only saveth his people from their sins; these, I say, I learned to be nothing else but even (as Saint Augustine saith) a hasty and swift running out of the right way, or else much like to the Vesture made of Fig-leaves, wherewithal Adam and Eve went about in vain to cover their privities; and could never before obtain quietness and rest, until they believed in the promise of God, that Christ, the Seed of the Woman, should tread upon the Serpents head. Neither could I be releived or eased of the sharp stings and bitings of my sins, before I was taught of God that Lesson which Christ speaketh of in the third Chapter of John: Even as Moses exalted the Serpent in the Desert, so shall the Son of Man be exalted, that all which believe on him, should not perish, but have life everlasting.

The ways of the Lord be mercy and truth.

As soon as (according to the measure of grace given unto me of God) I began to taste and savor of this heavenly Lesson, which no Man can teach but only God, which revealed the same unto Peter; I desired the Lord to increase my Faith: and at last I desired nothing more, than that I, being so comforted by him, might be strengthened by his holy Spirit and grace from above, that I might teach the wicked his ways, which are mercy and truth, and that the wicked might be converted unto him by me, which sometime was also wicked. Which thing, whilest that with all my Power I did endeavour before my Lord Cardinal and your Fatherhood, Christ was blasphemed in me (and this is my only comfort in these my afflictions) whom with my whole power I do teach and set forth, being made for us by God his Father, our wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, and finally our satisfaction. Who was made sin for us (that is to say, a sacrifice for sin) that we through him should be made the righteousness of God. Who became accursed for us, to redeem us from the Curse of the Law. Who also came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. The righteous (I say) which falsly judge and think themselves so to be, (for all Men have sinned, and lack the glory of God, whereby he freely forgiveth sins unto all believers, through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus) because that all mankind was grievously wounded in him which fell amongst Thieves between Hierusalem and Jericho.

Rom. 3.

The sum of M. Bilneys teaching.

And therefore with all my whole power I teach, that all Men should first acknowledge their sins, and condemn them, afterward hunger and thirst for that righteousness whereof Saint Paul speaketh, The righteousness of God, by faith in Jesus Christ, is upon all them which believe in him; for there is no difference, all have sinned, and lack the glory of God, and are justified freely through his grace, by the redemption which is in Jesus Christ. The which whosoever doth hunger or thirst for, without doubt they shall at the length so be satisfied, that they shall not hunger and thurst for ever.

Rom. 3.

A difference betweeen Mans righteousness, and the righteousness of God.

Voluntary devotions spoken against.

But forsomuch as this hunger and thirst was wont to be quenched with the fulness of mans righteousness, which is wrought through the Faith of our own elect and chosen Works, as Pilgrimages, buying of Pardons, offering of Candles, elect and chosen Fasts, and oftentimes superstitious, and finally all kind of voluntary devotions (as they call them) against the which Gods Word speaketh plainly in the fourth of Deuteronomie, and in the twelfth, saying, Thou shalt not do that which seemeth good unto thy self, but that which I command thee for to do, that do thou, neither adding to, neither diminishing any thing from it. Therefore (I say) oftentimes have I spoken of those Works; not condemning them (as God I take to my witness) but reproving their abuse, making the lawful use of them manifest even unto Children, exhorting all Men not so to cleave unto them, that they being satisfied therewith, should loath or wax weary of Christ, as many do. In whom I bid your Fatherhood most prosperously well to fare.

Deut. 4. 12.

And this is the whole sum. If you will appoint me to dilate more at large the things here touched, I will not refuse to do it, so that you will grant me time. For to do it out of hand I am not able for the weakness of my body; being ready always, if I have erred in any thing, to be better instructed.

¶ Another Letter or Epistle of Master Bilney, to Cuthbert Tonstal, Bishop of London.

Another Letter of M. Bilney.

ALbeit I do not remember, Reverend Father in Christ, whether I have either spoken or written, That the Gospel hath not been sincerely Preached now of long time, which your Lordship seemeth to have gathered either by some Momes and finister hearers of my Sermons, who (like Malchus having their right ear cut off) only bring their left ear to Sermons; or else by some Words or Writings of mine, which have rashly passed me, rather than upon any intent: yet forsomuch as in this Malchus hearing of Sermons.

behalf your reverence doth command me, and that of a good mind I truſt (for how can I think in Tonſtal any craft or doubleneſs to dwell) I will briefly declare unto you what I have learned of God, through Chriſt, in the Scriptures, and how that the Doctors, even of great name and renown, have not taught the ſame of late in their Sermons; referring, or rather ſubmitting all things unto your fatherly judgment, which is more quick and ſharp than that it can by any means be blinded, and ſo ſincere, that it will not in any point ſeek ſlander or diſcord; therefore I do confeſs that I have often been afraid, that Chriſt hath not bee purely preached now a long time. For who hath been now a long ſeaſon offended through him? Who hath now theſe many years ſuffered any perſecution for the Goſpels ſake: Where is the Sword which he came to ſend upon the Earth? And finally, where are the reſt of the ſincere and uncorrupt Fruits of the Goſpel? Which, becauſe we have not a long time ſeen, is it not to be feared, that the Tree which bringeth forth thoſe fruits hath now a long time been wanting in our Region or Country? Much leſs is it to be believed, that it hath been nouriſhed amongſt us. Have we not ſeen all things quiet and peaceable a long time? But what ſaith the Church? My grief moſt bitter is turned to peace, &c. But the malignant Church ſaith, Peace peace and there is no peace, but only that whereof it is written, When the mighty armed man keepeth his gates, he poſſeſſeth all things in quiet. But when he ſeeth that he ſhall be vanquiſhed of a ſtronger than he himſelf is, he ſpoileth and deſtroyeth all things. What now a days beginneth again to be attempted, I dare not ſay. God grant us grace that we do not refuſe and reject (if it be Chriſt) him that cometh unto us, leſt that we do feel that terrible judgment againſt us: becauſe (ſaith he) they have not received the love of truth, that they might be ſaved: therefore God will ſend upon them the blindneſs of error, that they ſhall give credit unto lies. O terrible ſentence (which God knoweth whether a great number have not already incurred) that all they might be judged which have not given credit unto the truth, but conſented unto iniquity. The time ſhall come (ſaith he) when that they will not ſuffer the true doctrine to be preached. And what ſhall we then ſay of that learning, which hath now ſo long time reigned and triumphed, ſo that no man hath once opened his mouth againſt it? Shall we think it ſound Doctrine? Truly Iniquity did never more abound, nor Charity was never ſo could. And what ſhould we ſay to be the cauſe thereof? hath the cauſe been for lack of preaching againſt the vices of Men, and exhorting to charity? That cannot be, for many learned and great Clerks ſufficiently can witneſs to the contrary. And yet all theſe notwithſtanding, we ſee the life and manners of Men do greatly degenerate from true Chriſtianity, and ſeem to cry out indeed, that it is fulfilled in us, which God in times paſt threatned by his Prophet Amos, ſaying, Behold the day ſhall come (ſaith the Lord) that I will ſend hunger upon the earth, not hunger of bread, neither thirſt of water, but of hearing the word of God, and the people ſhall be moved from ſea to ſea, and from the Weſt unto the Eaſt, and ſhall run about ſeeking for the Word of God, but ſhall not find it. In thoſe days the fair Virgins and young Men ſhall periſh for thirſt, &c. But now to paſs over many things, whereby I am moved to fear the Word of God hath not been purely preached; this is not the leaſt argument, that they which come, and are ſent, and endeavour themſelves to preach Chriſt truly, are evil ſpoken of for his name, which is the rock of offence, and ſtumbling block unto them which ſtumble upon his word, and do not believe on him, on whom, they are builded.

But you will aſk, who are thoſe Men, and what is their Doctrine? Truly I ſay, whoſoever entreth in by the door Chriſt into the Sheepfold, which thing all ſuch ſhall do as ſeek nothing elſe but the glory of God, and ſalvation of ſouls; Of all ſuch it may be truly ſaid, that whom the Lord ſendeth, he ſpeaketh the Word of God. And why ſo? Becauſe he repreſenteth the Angel of the Church of Philadelphia; unto whom Saint John writeth ſaying, This, ſaith he, which is holy and true, which hath the keys of David, which openeth and no man ſhutteth, ſhutteth and no man openeth. Behold, ſaith he, ſpeaking in the name of Chriſt, (which is the Door and Doorkeeper) I have ſet before thee an open Door, that is to ſay, of the Scriptures opening thy ſenſes, that thou ſhouldſt underſtand the Scriptures, and that becauſe thou haſt entred in by me which am the Door: For whoſoever entreth in by me, which am the door ſhall be ſaved, he ſhall go in and come out and find paſture, for the Door-keeper openeth the door unto him, and the ſheep hear his voice: But contrariwiſe, they which have not entred in by the Door, but have climbed in ſome other way, by ambition, avarice, or deſire of rule, they ſhall even in a moment go down into Hell, except they repent. And of them is the ſaying of Jeremy verified, All beauty is gone away from the Daughter of Sion, becauſe her Princes are become like Rams, not finding paſture. And why ſo? Becauſe like Thieves and Robbers they have climbed up another way, not being called nor ſent.

And what marvel is it, if they do not preach, when as they are not ſent, but run for lucre, ſeeking their own glory, and not the glory of God, and ſalvation of ſouls? And this is the root of all miſchief in the Church, that they are not ſent inwardly of God. For without this inward calling it helpeth nothing before God, to be a hundred times elect and conſecrate by a thouſand Bulls, either by Pope, King, or Emperor. God beholdeth the heart, whoſe judgments are according to truth, howſoever we deceive the judgment of Men for a time: which alſo at the laſt ſhall ſee their abomination. This, I ſay, is the original of all miſchief in the Church, that we thruſt in our ſelves into the charge of ſouls, whoſe ſalvation and the glory of God (which is to enter in by the Door) we do not thirſt nor ſeek for, but altogether our own lucre and profit.

Hereupon it cometh, that we know not how to preach Chriſt purely: For how ſhould they preach Chriſt (ſaith the Apoſtle) except they be ſent? for otherwiſe many Thieves and Robbers do preach him, but with their Lips only, for their heart is far from him. Neither yet do we ſuffer thoſe which do know how to preach, but perſecute them, and go about to oppreſs the Scriptures now ſpringing, under the pretence of godlineſs, fearing, as I ſuppoſe, leſt the Romans ſhould come and take our place. Ah! thou wicked enemy Herod, why art thou afraid that Chriſt ſhould come: He taketh not away mortal and earthly Kingdoms, which giveth heavenly Kingdoms O blindneſs! O our great blindneſs! ye, more than that of Egypt. Of the which if there be any that would admoniſh the people, by and by ſaith Pharaoh, Moſes and Aaron, why do ye cauſe the people to ceaſe from their labours? And truly called their labours. Get you to your burthens. Lay more work upon them, and cauſe them to do it, that they hearken not unto lies. Thus the people was diſperſed throughout all the Land of Egypt, to gather up Chaff, I ſay to gather up Chaff. Who ſhall grant unto us, that God ſhall ſay, I have looked down and beholden the affliction of my people which is in Egypt, and have heard their ſighs, and am come down to deliver them? But whether hath this zeal carried me? whither after knowledge or not, I dare not ſay: it appertaineth to you, reverend Father, to judge thereupon.

Now you do look that I ſhould ſhew unto you at large (as you write) how that they ought ſincerely to preach, to the better edifying hereafter of your flock. Here I confeſs, I was afraid that you had ſpoken in ſome deriſion, until that I well perceived that you had written it with your own hand. Then again I began to doubt, for what intent Tonſtall ſhould require that of Bilney; an old Souldier, of a young beginner; the chief Paſtor of London, of a poor ſilly Sheep. But for what intent ſoever you did it, I truſt it was of a good mind. And albeit that I am weak of body, yet through the grace of Chriſt given unto me, I will attempt this matter, although it do far paſs my power. Under the which burthen if I be oppreſſed, yet I will not deceive you, for that I have promiſed nothing but a prompt and ready will to do that which you have commanded.

As touching that pertaineth to the preaching of the Goſpel, I would to God you would give me leave privately to talk with you, that I might ſpeak freely that which I have learned in the holy Scriptures for the conſolation of Another Letter of M. Bilney, o to Tonſtal Biſhop of London.

MOſt reverend Father, ſalutations in Chriſt. You have required me to write to you at large, wherein Men have not preached as they ought, and how they ſhould have preached better. This is a burthen too heavy for my ſtrength, under the which if I faint, it belongeth to you, which have laid this burthen upon my ſhoulders, to eaſe me thereof. As touching the firſt part, they have not preached as they ought, which, leaving the Word of God, have taught their own Traditions; of the which ſort there are not a few, as it is very evident, in that they do report thoſe, which preach the Word of God ſincerely, to teach now Doctrine. This is alſo no ſmall Teſtimony thereof, that in all England you ſhall ſcarce find one or two that are mighty in the Scriptures; and what marvel is it if all godly things do ſeem new unto them unto whom the Goſpel is new and ſtrange, being nuſled in Mens traditions now a long time? Would to God theſe things were not true which I utter unto you; but alas they are too true.

Preachers of the Popes Church leaving the word of God, preach their own Traditions. Prieſts of the Popes Church few learned in the Scriptures.

They have alſo preached evil, which either have wreſted the Scriptures themſelves, or have raſhly gathered them out of old rotten Papers, being wreſted by others: and how ſhould it be but that they ſhould wreſt them, or elſe how ſhould they judge them, being falſly interpreted by others when as they have not once read over the Bible orderly? Of this ſort there is truly a very great number, from which number many great Rabbins or Maſters ſhall hardly excuſe themſelves; whom the people have hitherto reverenced in ſtead of Gods. And theſe are they which now ſerve their bellies, ſeeking their own glory, and not the true glory of God, which might be ſet forth even by Balaams Aſs: much leſs then ought we to contemn ſuch abjects which preach the Word of God. We have (ſaith Saint Paul) this treaſure in brittle Veſſels, that the glory of the power might be of God, and not of us. God hath choſen the fooliſh things of the world, to confound the wiſe; and the weak things God hath choſen to confound the mighty; and vile things of the world, and deſpiſed hath he choſen, and things that are not, to bring to nought things that are, that no fleſh ſhould glory in his ſight. But now all men in a manner will be wiſe, and therefore they are aſhamed of the ſimple Goſpel, they are aſhamed truly to ſay with Paul, and to perform it indeed; I Brethren, when I came unto you did not come with excellency of words, or of wiſdom, preaching the Teſtimony of Chriſt; for I eſteemed not my ſelf to know any thing amongſt you, but only Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucified. O the voice of a true Evangeliſt! But now we are aſhamed of this fooliſh preaching, by the which it hath pleaſed God to ſave all thoſe which believe in him: and being puffed up with our own fleſhly mind, we chuſe rather proudly to walk in thoſe things which we have not ſeen, preaching Fables and Lies, and not the Law of God, which is undefiled converting ſouls.

Preachers in the Popiſh time have wreſted the Scriptures.

Balaams Aſs is not to be deſpiſed ſetting forth Gods word, Ergo, much leſs other abjects.

Ignorance of the Law of God in Prelates noted.

But how ſhould they teach the Law of God, which they have not once read in the Book, much leſs learned at the mouth of God? But in a Paſtor and a Biſhop this is required, Thou ſon of man (ſaith God) lay up in thy heart all my words which I do ſpeak unto thee. And ſhortly after he ſaith; Thou ſon of man, I have ordained and given thee a watch-man unto the houſe of Iſrael: I have given thee, ſaith he, not coming in by ambition, nor thruſting in thy ſelf, nor climbing in another way, but I gave thee when thou lookedſt not for it, that thou ſhouldſt attend thereupon, and give warning from the top of the Watch-tower; if any enemies ſhould approach. I have given thee unto the houſe of Iſrael, and not the houſe of Iſrael unto thee, that thou ſhouldſt acknowledge thy ſelf to be the ſervant of the Sheep, and not their Lord; for I have not given the Sheep for the Sheperd, but the Sheperd for the Sheep. He that ſitteth down is greater than he that doth miniſter and ſerve unto him. Which thing was well known of him which truly ſaid, We are your ſervants for Chriſts cauſe.

God giveth paſtors to his flock, and not his flock to paſtors. The congregation ſitteth down. The paſtors be but ſervitors. Paſtors ſervants to the Congregation for Chriſts cauſe, and not maſters.

But for what purpoſe have I given thee unto the houſe of Iſrael? That thou ſhouldſt only miniſter the Sacraments, conſecrate Wood, Stones, and Church-yards? (This, I take God to witneſs, with great ſighs and groans I write unto you, pouring out before you the grief of my heart.) No truly. What then? Firſt followeth the Office of the Biſhop, Thou ſhalt hear the word out of my mouth. This is but a ſhort Leſſon, but ſuch as all the World cannot comprehend, without they be inwardly taught of God.

And what elſe meaneth this, Out of my mouth thou ſhalt hear the word, but that thou ſhalt be taught of God. Therefore as many as are not taught of God, although they be never ſo well exerciſed in the Scriptures by Mans help, yet are they not Watch-men given by God, and much leſs they which do not underſtand and know the Scriptures. And therefore ſuch as theſe be, leſt they ſhould keep ſilence, and ſay nothing, are always harping upon the traditions and doctrines of Men, that is, lies: for he that ſpeaketh of himſelf ſpeaketh lies. Of theſe it is writen, They would be Doctors of the Law, not underſtanding what they ſpeak, neither of whom they ſpeak. Such of neceſſity they muſt all be, who ſpeak that with their mouth, which they do not believe, becauſe they are not inwardly taught of God, neither are perſwaded in their hearts that it is true: and therefore they are not to be accounted as Sheep, although they boaſt themſelves to be Shepherds. But contrariwiſe, touching the true and learned Paſtors, given by God, it may be truly ſaid, We ſpeak that which we know, and that which we have ſeen (even with the infallible eies of our faith) we do witneſs: and theſe are neither deceived, neither do deceive. Moreover, the deceivers proceed to worſe and worſe, erring themſelves, and bringing others alſo to error, and becauſe they are of the world, the world doth willingly hear him. They are of the world (ſaith Saint John) and therefore they ſpeak thoſe things which are of the world, and the world giveth ear unto them.

Behold Reverend Father, this is the Touchſtone of our daily preaching. Hath not the world given ear unto them now a long time with great pleaſure and delight? But the fleſh could never ſuffer the preaching of the Croſs, nor yet the wiſdom of the fleſh, which is enemy unto God, neither is ſubject unto his Law nor cannot be. And why then are they accuſed to be Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, which will not ſeek to pleaſe Men, but only to their edifying? being mindful of that place of Scripture, God hath diſperſed the bones of them which pleaſe men, ſaying unto them, Speak unto us pleaſant things. But now letting theſe matters paſs, we will come unto the ſecond point, wherein you ask how a man ſhould preach better? Forſooth, if we had heard him of whom the Father ſpake, ſaying, This is my dearly beloved Son in whom I am well pleaſed, hear him. Who alſo, ſpeaking of himſelf, ſaid it was meet that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer and riſe again the third day from death, and that in his name repentance and remiſſion of ſins ſhould be preached unto all people. What other thing is that, than the ſame which the other Evangeliſts do write? Go ye in the whole world and preach the Goſpel unto ever creature: he that believeth and is baptized ſhall be ſaved, what can be more pleaſant, ſweet, or acceptable unto afflicted conſciences being almoſt in deſpair, than theſe moſt joyful tidings?

Eſay 30.

An information to preachers to preach rightly.

Mat. 28.

But here, whether Christ have been a long time heard, I know not, for that I have not heard all the Preachers of England, and if I had heard them, yet till it was within this year or two, I could not sufficiently judge of them. But this I dare be bold to affirm, that as many as I have heard of late Preach (I speak even of the most famous) they have preached such Repentance, that if I had heard such Preachers of Repentance in times past, I should utterly have been in despair. And to speak of one of those famous men (not uttering his Name) after he had sharply inveighed against Vice (wherein he pleased every godly man, forsomuch as it could not be sufficiently cried out upon) he concluded, Behold, said he, thou hast lien rotten in thine own lusts, by the space of these sixty years, even as a Beast in his own dung, and wilt thou presume in one year to go forward toward Heaven, and that in thine age, as much as thou wentest backward from Heaven toward Hell in sixty years? Is not this think you a goodly argument? Is this the preaching of Repentance in the Name of Jesus? or rather to tread down Christ with Antichrists Doctrine? For what other thing did he speak in effect, than that Christ died in vain for thee? He will not be thy Jesus or Saviour, thou must make satisfaction for thy self, or else thou shalt perish eternally. Then doth Saint John lye, which saith, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the World. And in another place, His blood hath cleansed us from all our sins. And again, He is the propitiation for the sins of the whole World. Besides an infinite number of other places. What other thing is this, than that which was spoken by the Holy Ghost, by the mouth of Peter, saying, There shall be false Teachers that shall deny the Lord Jesus, which hath redeemed them? And what followeth upon such Doctrine of Devils speaking lyes through Hypocrisie? A Conscience despairing and without all hope, and so given over unto all wicked lusts, according to the saying of Saint Paul, After that they be come to this point, that they sorrow no more, they give themselves over unto wantonness, to commit all kind of filthiness, even with greedy desire. For seeing that it is impossible for them to make satisfaction to God, either they murmur against God, or else they do not believe him to be so cruel as they do preach and declare him to be. The want of Paper will not suffer me to write any more, and I had rather to speak it in private talk unto your self. Whereunto if you would admit me, I trust you shall not repent you thereof: and unto me (Christ I take to my witness) it would be a great comfort, in whom I wish you, with all your Flock, heartily well to fare.

Your Prisoner and humble Beadman, unto God for you, Tho. Bilney.

Bilney cast down with Repentance.

THus have you the Letters, the Abjuration, and Articles of Thomas Bilney. After which Abjuration made, about the year of our Lord, 1529. the said Bilney took such repentance and sorrow, that he was near the point of utter despair; as by the words of Master Latimer is credibly testified; whose words, for my better discharge, I thought here to annex, written in his seventh Sermon preached before King Edward, which be these, I knew a man my self, Bilney, little Bilney, that blessed Martyr of God, who what time he had born his fagot, and was come again to Cambridge, had such conflicts within himself (beholding this Image of death) that his Friends were afraid to let him be alone. They were fain to be with him day and night, and comfort him as they could, but no Comforts would serve. And as for the comfortable places of Scripture, to bring them unto him, it was as though a man should run him through the heart with a Sword. Yet for all this he was revived, and took his death patiently, and died well against the tyrannical See of Rome. Hæc Latim. Sermon 7.

Ex Latim. Ser. 7.

Again, the said Master Latimer, speaking of Bilney in another of his Sermons preached in Lincolnshire, hath these words following, That same Master Bilney, which was burnt here in England for Gods Word sake, was induced and perswaded by his Friends to bear a fagot at the time when the Cardinal was aloft, and bear the swinge. Now when the same Bilney came to Cambridge agrin, a whole year after, he was in such an anguish and agony, that nothing did him good, neither eating nor drinking, nor any other Communication of Gods Word, for he thought that all the whole Scriptures were against him, and sounded to his Condemnation. So that I many a time communed with him, (for I was familiarly acquainted with him) but all things whatsoever any man could alledge to his comfort seemed to him to make against him. Yet for all that afterward he came again; God indued him with such strength and perfectness of Faith, that he not only confessed his Faith in the Gospel of our Saviour Jesus Christ, but also suffered his Body to be burned for that same Gospels sake which we now preach in England, &c. Hæc ille Ser. 8. fol. 132.

Futhermore, in the first Sermon of the said Mr. Latimer before the Dutchess of Suffolk, fol. 5. he yet speaking more of Bilney, inferreth as followeth, Here I have (said he) occasion to tell you a story which happened at Cambridge. Master Bilney, or rather Saint Bilney, that suffered death for Gods Words sake, the same Bilney was the Instrument whereby God called me to knowledge. For I may thank him, next to God, for that knowledge that I have in the Word of God: For I was as obstinate a Papist as any was in England; insomuch that when I should be made Bachelor of Divinity, my whole Oration went against Philip Melancthon, and against his Opinions. Bilney heard me at that time, and perceived that I was zealous without knowledge, and came to me afterward in my study, and desired me for Gods sake to hear his Confession. I did so: and (to say the truth) by his Confession I learned more than afore in many years. So from that time forward I began to smell the Word of God, and forsake the School-Doctors and such fooleries, &c. And much more he hath of the same matter, which ye may see hereafter in the life of Master Latimer.

Latimer called and converted by Bilney.

By this it appeareth how vehemently this good man was pierced with sorrow and remorse for his Abjuration, the space almost of two years; that is, from the year 1529, to the year 1531. It followed then that he, by Gods Grace and good Counsel, came at length to some quiet conscience, being fully resolved to give over his life for the confession of that Truth which before he had renounced. And thus being fully determined in his mind, and setting his time, he took his leave in Trinity-Hall, at Ten of the Clock at night, of certain of his Friends, and said, That he would go to Hierusalem, alluding belike to the words and example of Christ in the Gospel, going up to Hierusalem, what time he was appointed to suffer his Passion. And so Bilney, meaning to give over his life for the Testimony of Christs Gospel, told his Friends that he would go up to Hierusalem, and so would see them no more: and immediately departed to Norfolk, and there preached first privily in Housholds, to confirm the Brethren and Sisters, and also to confirm the Anchress whom he had converted to Christ. Then preached he openly in the Fields, confessing his Fact, and preaching publickly the Doctrine which he before had abjured, to be the very truth, and willed all men to beware by him, and never to trust to their fleshly Friends in causes of Religion. And so, setting forward in his Journey toward the Celestial Hierusalem, he departed from thence to the Anchress in Norwich, and there gave her a new Testament of Tindals Translation, and the obedience of a Christian man; whereupon he was apprehended and carried to Prison, there to remain till the blind Bishop Nix sent up for a Writ to burn him.

Bilney returneth again from his abjuration.

Nam faciet ejus erat [illegible] Historyman. Bilney goeth up to Jerusalem.

In the mean season, the Friers and religious men, with the residue of their Doctors Civil and Canon resorted to him, busily labouring to perswade him, not to die in those Opinions, saying, He should be damned Body and Soul if he so continued. Among whom, first were sent to him of the Bishop, Doctor Call, Minister (as they call him) or Provincial of the Gray-Friers: and Doctor Stokes an Augustine-Frier, who lay with him in prison in Disputation, till the Writ came that he should be burned. Doctor Call by the Word of God, through the means of Bilneys Doctrine and good Life, whereof he had good experience, was somewhat reclaimed to the Gospels side. Doctor Stokes remained obdurate, and doth yet to this day; whose heart also the Lord (if it be his will) reform, and and open the eyes of his old age, that he may forſake the former blindneſs of his youth. Another great Doer againſt him was one Frier Bird with one eye, Provincial of the White-Friers. This Bird was a Suffragan in Coventry, and after Biſhop of Cheſter, and was he that brought Apples to Bonner mentioned in the ſtory of Haukes. Another was a Black-Frier, called Hodgekins, who after being under the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, married, and afterward in Queen Maries time put away his Wife. Theſe four Orders of Friers were ſent (as is ſaid) to bait Bilney: who notwithſtanding, as he had planted himſelf upon the firm Rock of Gods Word, was at a point, and ſo continued unto the end.

But here now cometh in Sir Thomas More trumping in our way, with his painted Card, and would needs take up this Thomas Bilney from us, and make him a Convert after his Sect. Thus theſe coated-Cards, though they could not by plain Scriptures convince him being alive: yet now after his death, by falſe play they will make him theirs whether he will or no. This Sir Thomas More, in his railing Preface before his Book againſt Tindal, doth challenge Bilney to his Catholick Church, and ſaith, That not only at the fire, but many days before, both in words and writing, he revoked, abhorred, and deteſted his Hereſies before holden. And how is this proved? By three or four mighty arguments, as big as Mill-poſts, fet out of Eutopia, from whence, thou muſt know Reader, can come no Fictions, but all fine Poetry.

Reaſons of Sir Thomas More. Utopia, one of Mores Fantaſies.

First he ſaith, That certain Norwich-men writing to London, and denying that Bilney did recant; afterward being thereupon examined, were compelled to grant, that he at his Examination read a Bill, but what it was they could not tell; for they ſtood not ſo near to hear him. And albeit they ſtood not ſo near, yet ſome of them perceived certain things there ſpoken, whereby they thought that he did revoke. Some again added to thoſe things ſpoken, certain additions of their own, to excuſe him from recantation.

First, To anſwer hereunto, and to try out this matter ſomewhat roundly with Maſter More, let us ſee with what conveyance he proceedeth in his Narration. At his firſt Examination (ſaith he) he waxed ſtiff in his Opinions, but yet God was ſo good a Lord unto him, that he was fully converted to the true Catholick Faith, &c. And when might this goodly Converſion begin? Many days (quoth he) before his burning. Here is no certain day aſſigned, but many days left at large, that he might have the larger room to walk inviſible. Well then, but how many days theſe could be I would fain learn of Maſter More, when he was not many days in their hands, no longer than they could ſend up to London for a Writ to burn him. Belike then ſhortly after his apprehenſion, at the firſt coming of the Friers unto him by and by he revolted. A ſtrange matter, that he which two years before had lain in ſuch a burning hell of deſpair for his firſt Abjuration, and could find no other comfort but only in returning to the ſame Doctrine again which before he had denied, utterly reſigning himſelf over to death, and taking his leave of his Friends, and ſetting his face with Chriſt purpoſely to go to Hieruſalem, voluntarily there to fall into the hands of the Scribes and Phariſees for that Doctrine ſake, ſhould now ſo ſoon, even at the firſt brunt, give over to the contrary Doctrine again. It is not like. God was ſo good a Lord unto him, ſaith Maſter More. That God was a good Lord unto him, very true it is. But that God did ſo turn him indeed, to be a Member of that Romiſh-Church, that hath not Maſter More yet ſufficiently proved. To affirm without proof or demonſtration in matters of ſtory, it is not ſufficient. But what hath been done indeed, that muſt be proved by good evidence and ſpecial demonſtration of Witneſſes, that we may certainly know it ſo to be.

Anſwer to Sir Thomas More.

A likely Tale of Mr. More.

It followeth moreover in Maſter More. And there lacked not ſome (ſaith he) that were ſorry for it. No doubt, but if our Bilney had ſo relented, ſome would have been ſorry therefore. But what one man in all this ſum, in all Norwich, was ſorry; that Maſter More muſt ſpecifie unto us before we believe him: ſo well are we acquainted with his Poetical Fictions. But how elſe ſhould this Narration of Maſter More ſeem to run with probability, if it were not watered with ſuch additions? He addeth moreover, and ſaith, And ſome wrote out of Norwich to London, that he had not revoked his Hereſies at all, but ſtill did abide in them. This ſoundeth rather to come more near to a truth. And here is a knack of Simons Art, to enterlard a Tale of untruth with ſome parcel of truth now and then among, that ſome things being found true may win credit to the reſt which is utterly falſe. And why then be not the Letters of theſe Norwich-men believed, for the not recanting of Bilney? Becauſe, ſaith he, afterward they being called to examination, it was there proved plainly to their faces, that Bilney revoked. By whom was it proved? By thoſe, ſaith he, which at his execution ſtood by, and heard him read his Revocation himſelf, &c. What men were theſe? or what were their name? or what was any one mans name in all the City of Norwich, that heard Bilney recant? There Maſter More will give us leave to ſeek them out if we can, for he can name us none. Well, and why could not the other part hear Bilney read his Revocation as well as theſe? Becauſe, ſaith More, he read ſo ſoftly, that they could not hear him.

Read of Simon in the ſecond Book of Virgil: who craftily mixeth true things with falſe, to betray the City of Troy.

Tho. More here paint-eth Antickes.

Well all this admitted, that Bilney read his Revocation ſo ſoftly, that ſome could hear, ſome could not hear him, then this would be known, what was the cauſe why Bilney read his Revocation ſo ſoftly? which much needs be either for lack of good will to read, or good voice to utter. If good will were abſent in reading that Revocation, then it appeareth that he recanted againſt his own mind and conſcience. If it were by imbecillity of voice and utterance, then how followeth it Maſter More, in this your Narration, where you ſay, That the ſaid perſons, which could not hear him read the Bill, yet notwithſtanding could hear him rehearſe certain other things ſpoken by him the ſame time at the fire, whereby they could not but perceive well, that he revoked his Errors, &c. Ah Maſter More, for all your powder of experience, do ye think to caſt ſuch a miſt before mens eyes, that we cannot ſee how you juggle with truth, and take you tardy in your own Narration? unleſs peradventure you will excuſe your ſelf, per licentiam Poeticam, after the Priviledge of Poets and Painters: for you know the old liberty of theſe two,

Pictoribus atque Poetis,
Quælibet audendi ſemper fuit æqua poteſtas.

Now if this vein of yours, which ſo extreamly raileth and fareth againſt the poor Martyrs and Servants of Chriſt, be ſo copious, that you dare take in hand any falſe matter to prove, and to make men believe that Bilney died a Papiſt, yet the manner of handling hereof would have required ſome more artificial Conveyance: Mendacem enim (ut ſcis) memorem eſſe oportet: that men, although they ſee the matter to be falſe, yet might commend the workmanſhip of the handler, which (to ſay the truth) neither hangeth with it ſelf, nor beareth any ſemblance of any truth. But becauſe Maſter More is gone and dead, I will ceaſe any further to inſult upon him, leſt I may ſeem to incur the ſame vice of his in mordendo mortuos. Yet forſomuch as his Books be not yet dead, but remain alive to the hurt of many, having therefore to do, not with him, but with his Book-Diſciples, this would I know, how hangeth this gear together: Bilney was heard, and yet not heard, he ſpake ſoftly, and yet not ſoftly? Some ſaid he did recant, ſome ſaid he did not recant? Over and beſides, how will this be anſwered, that forſomuch as the ſaid Bilney (as he ſaith) revoked many days before his burning, and the ſame was known to him at London, then how chanced the ſame could not be as well known to them of Norwich? who (as his own ſtory affirmeth) knew nothing thereof before the day of his execution, then ſeeing a certain Bill in his hand, which ſome ſaid was a Bill of his Revocation, ſome other heard it not. All this would be made plain, eſpecially in ſuch a matter as this is, which he knew himſelf peradventure to be falſe at leaſt, he knew would be doubted, ſuſpected and contraried of a great multitude.

Mark how theſe things hang together.

The firſt Reaſon of Mr. More.

I paſs

The ſecond reaſon of Mr. More.

I paſs now to his ſecond reaſon, where he reporteth, That the ſaid Bilney, forthwith upon his judgment and degradation, kneeled down in the preſence of all the people, and asked of the Chancellor abſolution from the ſentence of Excommunication, holding him well content with his death, which he confeſſed himſelf to have deſerved, &c.

Anſwer.

As touching the Patient receiving of his death, I do well aſſent, although I do not think, that he had deſerved any ſuch for his Doctrine. And as for his kneeling down in the preſence of the people, upon his judgment and degradation, as I do not deny that he might ſo do, ſo I ſuppoſe again the cauſe of his kneeling not to be unto the Chancellor to ask abſolution from his Excommunication. And if he were aſſoiled from his Excommunication, yet doth it not thereupon follow that he recanted, no more than before, when he came to Maſter Latimer in his ſtudy, humbly to be confeſſed and aſſoiled from his ſins, as the blindneſs of that time then led him. But whether he kneeled down and was aſſoiled or no, neither was I there to ſee him, nor yet Maſter More himſelf: and therefore with the like authority as he affirmeth, I may deny the ſame, unleſs he brought better demonſtration for his aſſertion than he doth, having no more for himſelf, but only his own, * αὐτὸς ἔφη. And yet nevertheleſs, admit he did ſo, being a man of a timorous Conſcience, of an humble Spirit, and not fully reſolved touching that matter of the Church, yet it followeth not thereby (as is ſaid) that he revoked his other Articles and Doctrine by him before profeſſed.

* That Bilney ſo ſaith.

The third reaſon of Mr. More.

The like anſwer may alſo be ſhaped to his third reaſon, where he ſaith, That certain days after his Judgment, he made great labour that he might receive the bleſſed Body of Chriſt in form of Bread, which the Chancellor, after a great ſticking a while, at length did grant, perceiving his devotion thereto, &c. Whereunto I anſwer as before, that it is not unpoſſible, but that Bilney might both hear Maſs, and deſire to receive the Sacrament. For in that matter it may be that he was not reſolved otherwiſe, than common cuſtom then led both him any many other. Neither do I find in all the Articles objected againſt Bilney, that ever he was charged with any ſuch opinion, concerning either the Maſs or the Sacrament: which maketh me think, that he was yet ignorant, and alſo devout as other then were.

Anſwer.

The fourth reaſon of Mr. More.

And fourthly, be it admitted, as Maſter More ſaith, That in receiving of the Sacrament, he holding up his hands ſhould ſay the Collect, Domine Jeſu Chriſte: and coming to theſe words, Eccleſiæ tuæ pacem & concordiam, he knocked upon his breaſt, divers times repeating the ſame words, &c. all this being granted to Maſter More, yet it argueth no neceſſary alteration of his former Doctrine, which he preached and taught before. And yet if I lifted here to ſtand dallying with Maſter More in the ſtate inficial, and deny that he affirmeth, how will he make good that which he ſaith? He ſaith, That Bilney, kneeling before the Chancellor, deſired abſolution: Then, coming to Maſs full devoutly, required to receive the Body of Chriſt in form of Bread, repeating divers times the words of the Collect, Domine Jeſu Chriſte, &c. By what argument proveth he all this to be ſo? Maſter More in his Preface before the Book againſt Tindal ſo ſaith: Ergo it is certain. If Maſter More had neven made Fictions in his Writings beſide, or had never broken the head of verity in ſo many places of his Books as I could ſhew him, then might this argument go for ſomewhat. But here I ask, Was this Maſter More preſent at the Judgment of Bilney? No. Or elſe, what Regiſters had he for his direction? None. Or elſe, By what Witneſſes will he avouch this to be certain? Go and ſeek theſe Witneſſes (good Reader) where thou canſt find them; for Maſter More nameth none. Only becauſe Maſter More ſo ſaith, That is ſufficient. Well, give this to Maſter More (although he hath crackt his credit ſo often, and may almoſt be bankrupt) yet let his word go for payment at this time, and let us imagine all to be Oracles that he ſaith; Yet nevertheleſs here muſt needs remain a ſcruple: for what will Maſter More, or (becauſe he is gone) what will his Diſciples ſay to this, that if Bilney was before aſſoiled upon his Judgment (as they pretend) how was he then afterward degraded? What aſſoiling is this, to be firſt forgiven, and then to be puniſhed after? Again, if he were (as they ſurmiſe) converted ſo fully to the Catholique Faith, and alſo aſſoiled, why then did the Chancellor ſtick ſo greatly for a while, to houſel him with the Body of Chriſt in form of Bread? I am ſure that if Chriſt had been here Himſelf in form of his own Fleſh, he would nothing have ſtuck to receive him, being ſo converted at the firſt.

State inficialis in Rhetorick is when one ſtandeth to the denial of the Fact.

An argument of Mores authority.

Mr. Mores Credit crackt.

To be ſhort, if Bilney was ſo graciouſly reduced to the holy Mother the Catholick-Church, repenting his Errors, and deteſting his Hereſies, and now being in no Purgatory, but being a very Saint in Heaven, as ye ſay he is: why then did you burn him whom ye knew your ſelves ſhould be a Saint? Thus if ye burn both Gods Enemies, and Gods Saints too, what cruel men are you? But here you will alledge perhaps your Law of Relapſe, by the which the firſt fall is pardonable, but the ſecond fall into Hereſie is in no caſe pardonable; for ſo ſtandeth your Law, I grant. But how this Law ſtandeth with the true Church of Chriſt, and with his Word, now let us reaſon. For this being a Law not of politique or civil Government (where ſuch Laws be expedient for publique neceſſity) but only being a Law meer Eccleſiaſtical, what a cruel Mother-Church is this, which will not and cannot forgive her Children, riſing and repenting the ſecond fault or error committed, but needs muſt burn their Bodies, that their Souls may be ſaved from the painful paſſion of Purgatory, whom nevertheleſs they know forthwith ſhall be bleſſed in Heaven? If God do ſave them, why do ye burn them? If God do pardon them, why do you condemn them? And if this be the Law of your Church, according to your Doctrine, to burn them at the ſecond time, though they be amended; how then doth this Church agree with the Word of Chriſt, and nature of his true Spouſe, which only ſeeketh repentance and amendment of Sinners? which once being had, ſhe gladly openeth her boſom, and motherly receiveth them whenſoever they return.

The Lavv of Relapſe. Extravag. de hæret. ſuper ea.

More vvords in his Preface.

The Popes Lavv diſagreeing from the condition of the true Church of Chriſt.

Wherefore, if Bilney did return to your Church (as ye ſay he did) then was your Church a cruel Mother, and unnatural, which would not open her boſom unto him, but thruſt him into the fire when he had repented. Furthermore, how will you defend this Law by the Word of God, who in expreſs words teaching all Biſhops and Paſtors, by the example of Chriſt the great Biſhop of our Souls (being compaſſed about with temptations, that he might have the more compaſſion of them which be infirm) exhorted all other Spiritual Perſons by the like example, ſaying, (Hebrews the fifth) For every Biſhop which is taken from among men is ordained for men, in things pertaining to God, to offer Gifts and Sacrifice for Sins, that He may be merciful to the Ignorant, and to ſuch as err, forſomuch as he himſelf is compaſſed about with infirmity, &c. Beſides which Scripture, and alſo, that ſome Doctors of the Common Law, if they be well ſcanned, will not deny, but that they which be fallen in relapſe, whether it be vere, or ficte, yet if they earneſtly return from their errors before the Sentence be given, they may be ſent to perpetual priſon to ſome Monaſtery, &c. Wherefore, if Bilney did ſo earneſtly retract and deteſt his former Opinions, ſo many days (as More) ſaith) before his ſuffering, then needed not he to ſuffer that death as he did, but might have been ſent to perpetual priſon.

Heb. 5.

Bilney needed not to be burned by the ſentence of the Canon-Lavv Ex tractatu cujuſdam Doct. Canoniſtæ.

Thus, although I need not to ſtand longer upon this matter, being ſo plain, and having ſaid enough; yet (briefly to repeat that which before hath been ſaid) this I ſay again: firſt if Thomas Bilney was aſſoiled from Excommunication, and after that heard his Maſs ſo devoutly, and at the end of the Maſs was confeſſed, and conſequently after Confeſſion was houſſeled, and laſtly asked mercy for contemning of the Church, as Maſter More doth bear us in hand (to ſee now how this Tale hangeth together) why then did the Chancellor ſtick ſo greatly to give him the Sacrament of the Altar, whom he himſelf had aſſoiled, and received to the Sacrament of Penance before; which is plain againſt the Canon-Law? Again, the ſaid Thomas Bilney, if he were now received to the Mother-Church by the Sacraments of Penance and of the Altar; why then was he afterward degraded, and cut from the Church, ſith the Canon permit-

Mr. Mores Tale full of abſurdities.

{KING Hen. 8.} permitteth no degradation, but to them only which be incorrigible? Furthermore the ſaid Bilney, if he being converted ſo many days before (as More pr[illegible]deth) to the Catholique Faith, was now no Heretick, how then did the Sentence pronounce him for an Heretick? Or finally, how could they, or why would they burn him being a Catholique, eſpecially ſith the Canon-Law would bear with him, to be judged rather to perpetual priſon in ſome Monaſtery as is afore touched, if they had pleaſed?

A ſummary anſwer to Mr. More, or in his abſence, to Alane Cope.

Wherefore in three words to anſwer to Mr. More: Firſt, all this Tale of his may be doubted, becauſe of the matter not hanging together. Secondly, it may alſo well be denied, for the inſufficiency of probation and teſtimony.

Thirdly, If all this were granted, yet neither hath Mr. More any great advantage againſt Mr. Bilney, to prove him to have recanted: nor yet Mr. Cope againſt me, which by the authority of Mr. More ſeeketh to bear me down, and diſprove my former ſtory.

Mores conſequence denied.

For be it granted that Bilney at his death did hold with the Maſs, with Confeſſion, and with the authority of the Romiſh-Church, being an humble ſpirited man, and yet no further brought; yet all this notwithſtanding proveth not that he recanted. Forſomuch as he never held nor taught any thing before againſt the premiſſes, therefore he could not recant that which he never did hold. For the better demonſtration whereof I will recite out of the Regiſters ſome part of his teaching and preaching, as was objected againſt him by one Rich. Nele Prieſt: who, amongſt other Witneſſes, depoſed againſt him for preaching in the Town of Wilſedon, theſe words following:

Ex Regiſtro London. fol. 82.

Bilney againſt offerings to Images.

Put away your golden gods, your ſilver gods, your ſtony gods, and leave your Offerings, and lift up your Hearts to the Sacrament of the Altar. Alſo the ſaid Mr. Bilney ſaid in his Sermon, I know certain things have been offered in ſuch places, which have been afterward given to Whores of the Stews; and I call them Whores of the Stews that be naught of their living, &c. Ex Regiſt.

Item, By another Witneſs named William Cade it was depoſed againſt him, that he thus preached, That Jews and Saracens would have become Chriſtian men long ago, had not Idolatry of Chriſtian men been, by offering of Candles, Wax, or Money to the Stocks and Stones of Images, ſet and ſtanding in the Churches, &c.

Bilney againſt Pilgrimage.

Item, By the ſaid Deponent againſt Bilney, That the Prieſts take away the Offerings, and hang them about their Whores Necks: and after that, they take them again from the Whores if they pleaſe them not, and hang them upon the Images; And is not this a great Relique, when it is hanged there again?

Item, By the ſaid Deponent it was teſtified againſt Bilney, That going on Pilgrimage is naught, and that no man ſhould uſe it, for it were better not, and rather to tarry at home, and give ſomewhat in Alms, and offer your Hearts, Wills, and Minds, to the Sacrament, and leave your Idolatry to Saints.

Item, By William Nelmis of Wilſedon, that Bilney ſhould preach, That they gild their gods, and bear them about, and men ſay they do ſpeak, and if they do ſpeak, it is the Devil that ſpeaketh in them, and not God, &c.

Item, By Thomas Daly of Wilſedon, that Bilney thus preached, You come hither on Pilgrimage to Stocks and Stones. You do naught, keep you at home, and Worſhip the Sacrament at home, &c.

Item, By Frier Jo. Hogekin, that Bilney thus preached at Ipſwich, The coming of our Saviour Chriſt was long deſired, and by divers and many Prophets propheſied, That he ſhould come. But John the Baptiſt, more then a Prophet, did not only Propheſie, but with his finger ſhewed, Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the ſins of the World. Then if this were the very Lamb, which John did demonſtrate and ſhew, which taketh away the ſins of the World, what injury is this Bull of the Biſhop of Rome to our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; That to be buried in the Cowle of Saint Francis ſhould or may remit four parts of the Penance? What is left to our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, which taketh away the ſins of the World: This will I juſtifie to be a great blaſphemy againſt the blood of Chriſt, &c.

Bilney againſt falſe Merits.

Item, By another Frier Julles, that Bilney thus preached, I truſt there ſhall and will come other beſide me, the which ſhall ſhew and preach to you the ſame Faith and manner of living that I do, which is the very true Goſpel of our Saviour, whereby you ſhall be brought from your Errors, wherein you have been ſo long ſeduced: for before this, there have been many that have ſlandered you and the Goſpel of our Saviour Chriſt. Of whom ſpeaketh our Saviour Chriſt, Mat. 18. Qui ſcandalizaverint unum de puſillis iſtis qui crediderint, &c.

Bilney againſt Mediator.

Add moreover to theſe the teſtimony of Richard Seyman, that Bilney in Ipſwich ſhould preach theſe words, Our Saviour Chriſt is our Mediator between us and the Father: what then ſhould we need to ſeek for remedy to any Saint inferior to Chriſt? Wherefore to make ſuch petition to any, but to our Saviour Chriſt, truſting thereby to have remedy, doth great injury to the Blood of Chriſt, and deformeth our Saviour; like as if a man ſhould take and ſtrike off the head, and ſet it under the foot, and to ſet the foot above.

Thus much, being partly touched before, I thought here to inſinuate again out of the Regiſters, touching the Opinions of Thomas Bilney. Whereby may appear the whole ſum of his Preaching and Doctrine to proceed chiefly againſt Idolatry, Invocation of Saints, vain worſhip of Images, falſe truſt to mens merits, and ſuch other groſs Points of Religion, as ſeemed prejudicial and derogatory to the blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. As touching the Maſs, and Sacrament of the Altar, as he never varied neither more nor leſs from himſelf, ſo likewiſe he never differed therein from the moſt groſs Catholicks. And as concerning his opinion of the Church of Rome, how blind it was at that time, may ſufficiently appear by his own hand in Latin, which I have to ſhew, as followeth: Credo pleraſque leges Pontificias utiles eſſe, neceſſarias, & ad pietatem quoque plurimum promoventes, nec ſacris Scripturis repugnantes, imo ab omnibus plurimum obſervandas, &c. De omnibus non poſſum pronunciare, utpote quas non legi, & quas legi, nunquam in hoc legi, ut reprehenderem, ſed ut diſcerem intelligere, ac pro virili facere, & docere. De multiplicitate legum queſtus eſt ſuo tempore S. Auguſtinus, & item Garſonus, qui miratur quomodo non poſt lapſum inter tot laqueos Conſtitutionum tuti eſſe poſſimus, quum primi Parentes adhuc puri, & ante lapſum, unicum præceptum non obſervarint, &c.

Note here how groſs Bilney was yet in the Sacrament.

Moreover, concerning the authority of the Keys thus he writeth, anſwering to his twelfth Article, Soli Sacerdotes, ordinati rite per Pontifices, habent claves, quarum virtute ligant & ſolvunt ( clave non errante) quod & facere eos non dubito, quamlibet ſint peccatores. Nam Sacramentorum efficatiam non minuit, nedum tollit miniſtrorum indignitas, quamdiu ab Eccleſia tolerantur, &c.*

Ex Regiſt. London. fol. 37. * At hæc clavis erret perpetuo.

By theſe words of Bilney written by him in Latin, although it may be thought how ignorant and groſs he was after the rudeneſs of thoſe days, yet by the ſame notwithſtanding it may appear how falſely he is noted and ſlandered by Maſter More, and Cope my Friend, to have recanted the Articles, which he did never hold or maintain otherwiſe in all his life. And therefore (as I ſaid) though it be granted to Maſter More, or in his abſence to my Friend Cope, that Bilney was aſſoiled, was confeſſed, and houſeled before his burning, yet all this argueth not, that he recanted.

Contrary reaſons to prove that Bilney did not again recant.

Now that I have ſufficiently (I truſt) put off the reaſons of Maſter More and of others, whereby they pretend falſely to face us out, that Bilney the ſecond time again recanted at his death: it remaineth on the other part, that I likewiſe do infer my Probations, whereby I have to argue and convince, that Bilney did not the ſecond time recant, as he is untruly ſlandered. And firſt I will begin even with the words and teſtimonies of Maſter Mores own mouth, who being Lord Chancellor, when Meſſage was ſent to him for a Writ of Diſcharge to burn Bilney, ſpake in this wiſe to the Meſſengers that came, Go your ways, ſaith he, and burn him firſt, and then afterward come to me for a Bill of my hand. Which words may give us evidence enough, that Bilney was not thought then to have recanted, for then the Lord Chancellor would not have been ſo greedy and haſty, Mores own words againſt himſelf.

haſty, no doubt, to have him diſpatched. And how ſtandeth this with Maſter Mores words now, which beareth us in hand that he recanted many days before his burning?

Proved by Biſhop Nixes words that Bilney did not recant at his burning.

The like evidence we may alſo take by the Verdict of the Biſhop himſelf that burned him, whoſe words were theſe. After he had burned him, and then heard tell of Doctor Shaxton; Chriſts Mother, ſaid he, (that was his Oath) I fear I have burnt Abel, and let Cain go, &c. As who would ſay, I had thought before that I had puniſhed Cain, and let Abel go: but now I fear I have burnt Abel, and let Cain eſcape. Whereby it is plain to underſtand what was the Biſhops judgment of Bilney, before his burning; that is, that he was a Cain, and the other an Abel. But after the burning of Bilney, the Biſhop hearing now of Shaxton, turneth his judgment, and correcteth himſelf, ſwearing now the contrary; that is, leſt he had burned Abel, and let Cain go.

Furthermore, where the Biſhop feared, in burning Bilney, that he had burned Abel; what doth this fear of the Biſhop import, but a doubting of his mind uncertain? For who feareth that whereof he is ſure? Wherefore the the caſe is plain, that Bilney at his burning did not recant, as More reporteth. For then the Biſhop knowing Bilney to die a Catholick Convert, and a true Member of the Church, would not have feared, nor doubted, but would have conſtantly affirmed Bilney to have died a true Abel indeed. And to conclude this matter, if Bilney died an Abel, then the Biſhop by his own confeſſion muſt needs prove himſelf to be a Cain, which ſlew him. What more clearer probation could we bring, if there were a thouſand? Or what need we any other, having this alone?

Cain burneth Abel.

Teſtimonies proving that Maſter Bilney did not recant at his death.

Now for teſtimony and witneſs of this matter to be produced, for ſo much as Maſter More alledgeth none to prove that Bilney at his death did recant; I will aſſay what teſtimonies I have on the contrary ſide, to avouch and prove that Bilney did not recant.

Witneſs for Bilney.

And forſomuch as Bilney was a Cambridge man, and the firſt Framer of that Univerſity in the knowledge of Chriſt, and was burned at Norwich, being not very far diſtant from Cambridge; there is no doubt, but amongſt ſo many Friends as he had in that Univerſity, ſome went thither to hear and ſee him. Of whom one was Thomas Allen, Fellow of Pembroke-Hall, who, returning the ſame time from Bilneys burning, declared to Doctor Turner Dean of Wells, being yet alive, (a man whoſe authority neither is to be neglected, nor credit to be diſtruſted) that the ſaid Bilney took his death moſt patiently, and ſuffered moſt conſtantly, without any recantation for the Doctrine which he before had profeſſed.

Doct. Turner Dean of Wells.

Another witneſs for Bilney.

In the City of Norwich, Necton and many other be now departed, which were then preſent at the burning of Bilney: nevertheleſs ſome be yet alive, whoſe witneſſes if need were I could fetch with a little labour, and will (God willing) as time ſhall require: in the mean time, at the writing hereof here was one Thomas Ruſſel, a right honeſt Occupier, and a Citizen of Norwich, who likewiſe being there preſent on horſeback at the execution of this godly man, beholding all things that were done, did neither hear him recant any word, nor yet heard of his Recantation.

Another witneſs for Bilney.

I could alſo add hereunto the teſtimony of another, being Brother to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, named Maſter Baker, a man yet alive, who being the ſame time preſent at the Examination of Bilney, both heard him and ſaw him, when as a certain Frier called him Heretick. Whereunto Bilney replying again, made anſwer, If I be an Heretick (ſaid he) then are you an Antichriſt, who of late have buried a certain Gentlewoman with you, in Saint Francis Cowle, aſſuring her to have Salvation thereby. Which fact, although the Frier the ſame time did deny, yet this cannot be denied but Bilney ſpake theſe words: whereby he may eaſily be judged to be far from the mind of any Recantation; according as by the ſaid Gentleman it is alſo teſtified, that after that he never heard of any Recantation that Bilney either meant or made.

One Martyr witneſs for another Martyr.

If I ſhould recite all that here might be brought, I might ſooner lack room in my Book to contain them, than names enough to fill up a grand Jury. But what need I to ſpend time about Witneſs, when one Maſter Latimer may ſtand for a thouſand, one Martyr to bear witneſs to another? And though my friend Cope, preſſing me with the authority of Maſter More, ſaith, That he will belie him before: yet I truſt he will not refuſe to credit this ſo ancient a Seignior, Father Latimer, being both in Bilneys time, and alſo by Bilney converted, and familiarly with him acquainted; who being the ſame time at Cambridge, I ſuppoſe would inquire as much, and could know more of this matter than Maſter More.

Touching the teſtimonial of which Latimer I have noted before, how he in three ſundry places of his Sermons hath teſtified of good Bilney, of that bleſſed Bilney, of Saint Bilney, how he died patiently, againſt the tyrannical See of Rome, &c. And in another Sermon alſo, how the ſaid Bilney ſuffered his body to be burned for the Goſpel ſake, &c. Item, in another place, How the ſaid Bilney ſuffered death for Gods Word ſake. Vide ſupra.

The teſtimony of Mr. Latimer concerning Mr. Bilney.

Vide ſupra.

I may be thought perhaps of ſome to have ſtayed too long about the diſcourſe of this matter. But the cauſe that moved, and half conſtrained me thereunto, was Sir Thomas More, ſometimes Lord Chancellor of England, and now a great Archpillar of all our Engliſh Papiſts, a man otherwiſe of a pregnant wit, full of pleaſant conceits; alſo for his learning above the common ſort of his eſtate, eſteemed no leſs induſtrious in his Studies, than well exerciſed in his Pen. Who if he had kept himſelf in his own ſhop, and applied the faculty, being a Lay-man, whereunto he was called, and had not overreached himſelf to prove Maſteries in ſuch matters wherein he had little skill, leſs experience, and which pertained not to his Profeſſion, he had deſerved not only much more commendation, but alſo longer life.

But forſomuch as he, not contented with his own Vocation, hath with Oza reached out his unmeet hand to meddle with Gods Ark-matters, wherein he had little cunning, and, while he thinketh to help Religion, deſtroyeth Religion, and is an utter Enemy to Chriſt, and to his Spiritual Doctrine, and his poor afflicted Church: To the intent therefore that he, being taken for a ſpecial Ring-leader and a chief ſtay in the Popes Church, might the better be known what he is, and that the ignorant and ſimple may ſee what little credit is to be given unto him, as well in his other falſe facing out of matters, as namely in this preſent Hiſtory of Bilneys Recantation: I have diligently ſearched out and procured the true Certificate of M. Bilneys burning, with all the circumſtances and points thereto belonging, teſtified not by ſome-ſays and hear-ſays (as Maſter More uſeth) but truly witneſſed, and faithfully recorded by one, who as in a place and degree he ſurmounteth the eſtate of Maſter More (though he were Lord Chancellor) ſo being alſo both a ſpiritual perſon, and there preſent the ſame time, coming for the ſame purpoſe the day before to ſee his burning, was a preſent beholder of things there done, αὐτόπτης καὶ μάρτυς of his Martyrdom, whoſe credit I am ſure will counterpoiſe with the credit of Maſter More. The Order of which Martyrdom was this as followeth.

Doct. Parker Archbiſhop of Canterbury, a preſent witneſs at the burning of Bilney.

Thomas Bilney, after his Examination and Condemnation before Doctor Pelles, Doctor of Law, and Chancellor, firſt was degraded by Suffragan Underwood, according to the cuſtom of their Popiſh manner, by the aſſiſtance of all the Friers and Doctors of the ſame Suit. Which done, he was immediately committed to the Laypower, and to the two Sheriffs of the City, of whom Thomas Necton was one. This Thomas Necton was Bilneys ſpecial good Friend, and ſorry to accept him to ſuch execution as followed. But ſuch was the tyranny of that time, and dread of the Chancellor and Friers, that he could no otherwiſe do, but needs muſt receive him. Who notwithſtanding, as he could not bear in his Conſcience himſelf to be preſent at his death; ſo, for the time that he was in his cuſtody, he cauſed him to be more friendly looked unto, and more wholſomely kept concerning his diet, than he was before.

Thomas Necton Sheriff of Norwich.

ASIATIC

KING Hen. 8.

M.r Thomas Bilney, proving the fire with his finger. The Burning of the Godly and constant Martyr M.r Thomas Bilney.

Anno 1531. The good courage of Bilney before his death.

After this, the Friday following at night, which was before the day of his execution, being Saint Magnus-day, and Saturday, the ſaid Bilney had divers of his Friends reſorting unto him in the Guildhall, where he was kept. Amongſt whom, one of the ſaid Friends finding him eating of an Ale-brew with ſuch a chearful heart and quiet mind as he did, ſaid, That he was glad to ſee him at that time, ſo ſhortly before his heavy and painful departure, ſo heartily to refreſh himſelf. Whereunto he anſwered, O, ſaid he, I follow the example of the Huſbandmen of the Country, who having a ruinous houſe to dwell in, yet beſtow coſt as long as they may, to hold it up. And ſo do I now with this ruinous houſe of my body, and with Gods Creatures, in thanks to him, refreſh the ſame as ye ſee. Then ſitting with his ſaid Friends in godly talk to their Edification, ſome put him in mind, that though the fire, which he ſhould ſuffer the next day, ſhould be of great heat unto his body, yet the comfort of Gods Spirit ſhould cool it to his everlaſting refreſhing. At this word the ſaid Thomas Bilney putting his hand toward the flame of the Candle burning before them (as alſo he did divers times beſides) and feeling the heat thereof, O (ſaid he) I feel by experience, and have known it long by Philoſophy, that fire by Gods Ordinance is naturally hot, but yet I am perſwaded by Gods holy Word, and by the experience of ſome ſpoken of in the ſame, that in the flame they felt no heat, and in the fire they felt no conſumption: and I conſtantly believe, howſoevor that the ſtubble of this my Body ſhall be waſted by it, yet my Soul and Spirit ſhall be purged thereby; a pain for the time, whereon notwithſtanding followeth joy unſpeakable. And here he much entreated of this place of Scripture, Noli timere, quia redemi te, & vocavi te nomine tuo, meus es tu. Cum tranſieris per aquas, tecum ero, & flumina non operient te. Cum ambulaveris in igne, non combureris, & flamma non ardebit te, quia ego Dominus Deus tuus ſanctus Iſrael, ſalvator tuus. That is, Fear not, For I have redeemed thee, and called thee by thy Name, thou art mine own. When thou goeſt thorow the water I will be with thee, and the ſtrong floods ſhall not overflow thee. When thou walkeſt in the fire, it ſhall not burn thee, and the flame ſhall not kindle upon thee, for I am the Lord thy God, the holy One of Iſrael. Which he did moſt comfortably entreat of, as well in reſpect of himſelf, as applying it to the particular uſe of his Friends there preſent. Of whom ſome took ſuch ſweet fruit therein, that they cauſed the whole ſaid Sentence to be fair written in Tables, and ſome in their Books. The comfort whereof (in divers of them) was never taken from them to their dying-day.

Bilney taſted the fire with his finger.

The Saturday next following, when the Officers of execution (as the manner is) with their Gleves and Halberds were ready to receive him, and to lead him to the place of execution without the City Gate, called Biſhops Gate, in a low Valley, commonly called The Lollards pit, under Saint Leonards hill, environed about with great hills, (which place was choſen for the peoples quiet, ſitting to ſee the execution) at the coming forth of the ſaid Thomas Bilney out of the priſon-door one of his Friends came to him, and with few words, as he durſt, ſpake to him, and prayed him in Gods behalf to be conſtant, and to take his death as a patiently as he could. Whereunto the ſaid Bilney anſwered, with a quiet and mild countenance, Ye ſee when the Mariner is entred his Ship to ſail on the troublous Sea, how he for a while is toſſed in the billows of the ſame, but yet in hope, that he ſhall once come to the quiet haven, he beareth in better comfort the perils which he feeleth: So am I now toward this ſailing, and whatſoever ſtorms I ſhall feel, yet ſhortly after ſhall my ſhip be in the haven, as I doubt not thereof by the Grace of God, deſiring you to help me with your prayers to the ſame effect.

Conſtant Bilney exhorted to conſtancy.

And ſo he going forth in the ſtreets, giving much Alms by the way by the hands of one of his Friends, and accompanied with one Doctor Warner, Doctor of Divinity, and Parſon of Winterton, whom he did chooſe as his old Acquaintance, to be with him for his ghoſtly comfort; he came at the laſt to the place of execution, and deſcended down from the hill to the ſame, apparelled in a lay-mans Gown with his ſleeves hanging down; and his arms out, his hair being piteouſly mangled at his degradation (a little ſingle body in perſon, but always of a good upright countenance) and drew near to the Stake prepared, and ſomewhat tarrying the preparation of the fire, he deſired that he might ſpeak ſome words to the people, and there ſtanding, thus he ſaid:

Thomas Bilney going to his death.

Good people, I am come hither to die, and born I was to live under that condition, naturally to die again, and that ye might teſtifie that I depart out of this preſent life, as a true Chriſtian man, in a right belief towards Almighty God, I will rehearſe unto you in a faſt Faith the Articles of my Creed: and then began to rehearſe them in order, as they be in the commond Creed, with oft elevating his eyes and hands to Almighty God, and at the Article

The words of Thomas Bilney at the Stake.

Article of Christs Incarnation, having a little meditation in himself, and coming to the word Crucified, he humbly bowed himself and made great reverence, and then proceeding in the Articles, and coming to these words, I believe the Catholick Church, there he paused, and spake these words, Good people I must here confess to have offended the Church, in preaching once against the prohibition of the same, at a poor Cure belonging to Trinity-Hall in Cambridge, where I was Fellow, earnestly intreated thereunto by the Curate and other good people of the Parish, shewing, that they had no Sermon there of long time before: and so in my Conscience moved, I did make a poor Collation unto them, and thereby ran into the disobedience of certain authority in the Church, by whom I was prohibited; howbeit I trust at the general day, Charity that moved me to this act shall bear me out at the Judgment-Seat of God; and so he proceeded on, without any manner of words of recantation, or charging any man for procuring him to his death.

Thomas Bilney put to death for preaching, being thereunto desired

Master More proved a lyar by witness present at Bilneys death.

This once done, he put off his Gown, and went to the Stake, and kneeling upon a little ledge coming out of the Stake, whereon he should afterward stand to be better seen, he made his private prayer with such earnest elevation of his eyes and hands to Heaven, and in so good quiet behaviour, that he seemed not much to consider the terrour of his death, and ended at the last his private prayers with the 143 Psalm, beginning, Domine, exaudi orationem meam, auribus percipe obsecrationem meam, &c. That is, Hear my prayer, O Lord, consider my desire: and the next verse, he repeated in deep meditation thrice, Et ne intres in judicium cum servo tuo Domine: That is, And enter not into judgment with thy Servant, for in thy sight shall no man living be justified: And so finishing that Psalm he ended his private prayers.

Thomas Bilney praying at the stake.

Psalm 143.

After that, he turned himself to the Officers, asking them if they were ready, and they answered, Yea. Whereupon he put off his jacket and doublet, and stood in his hose and shirt, and went unto the Stake, standing upon that ledge, and the chain was cast about him; and standing thereon, the said Doctor Warner came to him to bid him farewell, who spake but few words for weeping.

Doctor Warner taking his farewel of Thomas Bilney.

Upon whom the said Thomas Bilney did most gently smile, and enclined his body to speak to him a few words of thanks, and the last were these, O Master Doctor, Pasce gregem tuum, Pasce gregem tuum, ut cum venerit Dominus, inveniat te sic facientem. That is, Feed your Flock, feed your Flock, that when the Lord cometh, he may find you so doing: and farewel good Master Doctor, and pray for me; and so he departed without any answer, sobbing and weeping.

The words of Thomas Bilney to Doctor Warner.

The Friers desire Bilney to speak for them.

And while he thus stood upon the ledge at the Stake, certain Friers, Doctors, and Priors of their Houses being there present (as they were uncharitably and maliciously present at his Examination and Degradation, &c.) came to him and said, O Master Bilney, the people be perswaded that we be the Causers of your death, and that we have procured the same, and thereupon it is like that they will withdraw their charitable Alms from us all, except you declare your Charity towards us, and discharge us of the matter. Whereupon the said Thomas Bilney spake with a loud voice to the people and said, I pray you good people be never the worse to these men for my sake, as though they should be the Authors of my death; it was not they: and so he ended.

The patient death and martyrdom of M. Bilney.

Then the Officers put reed and fagots about his body, and set fire on the reed, which made a very great flame, which sparkled and deformed the visour of his face, he holding up his hands, and knocking upon his breast, crying sometimes Jesus, sometimes Credo. Which flame was blown away from him by the violence of the Wind, which was that day and two or three days before notable great, in which it was said, That the fields were marvelously plagued by the loss of Corn: and so for a little pause he stood without flame, the flame departing and recoursing thrice ere the wood took strength to be the sharper to consume, and then he gave up the ghost, and his body being withered bowed downward upon the chain. Then one of the Officers with his Halbert smote out the staple in the Stake behind him, and suffered his body to fall into the bottom of the fire, laying wood on it, and so he was consumed.

Thus have ye (good Readers) the true History, and Martyrdom of this good man; that is, of blessed Saint Bilney (as Master Latimer doth call him) without any recantation, testified and ratified by the authority aforesaid, by the which authority and party being there present and yet alive, it is furthermore constantly affirmed, that Bilney not only did never recant, but also that he never had any such Bill, or Script, or Scrol in his hand to read, either softly or apertly, as Master More, Per licentiam Poeticam, would bear us down. Wherefore even as you see Master More deal in this, so you may trust him in the residue of his other Tales, if ye will.

KING Hen. 8 St Bilney.

M. More false report refuted.

Master Stafford of Cambridge.

AS the death of this godly Bilney did much good in Norfolk where he was burned; so his diligent travel, in teaching and exhorting other, and example of life correspondent to his Doctrine, let no small fruit behind him in Cambridge, being a great means of framing that University, and drawing divers unto Christ. By reason of whom, and partly also of another called Master Stafford, the Word of God began there most luckily to spread, and many toward wits to flourish. In the company of whom was Master Latimer, Doctor Barnes, Doctor Thistell of Pembroke-Hall, Master Fooke of Benet-College, and Master Soude of the same College, Doctor Warner above-mentioned, with divers other more.

M. Bilney the chief Converter or Apostle of Cambridge.

This Master Stafford was then the publick Reader of the Divinity Lecture in that University. Who, as he was an earnest Professor of Christs Gospel, so was he as diligent a Follower of that which he professed, as by this example here following may appear.

For as the Plague was then sore in Cambridge, and amongst other a certain Priest called Sir Henry Conjurer lay sore sick of the said Plague, Master Stafford hearing thereof, and seeing the horrible danger that his Soul was in, was so moved in Conscience to help the dangerous case of the Priest, that he neglecting his own bodily death, to recover the other from eternal damnation, came unto him, exhorted, and so laboured him, that he would not leave him before he had converted him, and saw his conjuring Books burned before his face. Which being done, Mr. Stafford went home, and immediately sickned, and shortly after most Christianly deceased. Ex fideli testimonio D. Ridlei, & Edmund. Episc. Lond.

The notable zeal of Master Stafford in saving a damnable Priest.

Concerning which Master Stafford this moreover is to be noted, how that Master Latimer, being yet a fervent and a zealous Papist, standing in the Schools when Master Stafford read, had the Scholars not to hear him: and also preaching against him, exhorted the people not to believe him; and yet the said Latimer confessed himself, that he gave thanks to God, that he asked him forgiveness before he departed.

Mr. Latimer asketh Mr. Stafford forgiveness.

And thus much by the way of good Master Stafford, who, for his constant and godly adventure in such a cause, may seem not unworthy to go with blessed Bilney in the Fellowship of holy and blessed Martyrs.

The story of Mr. Simon Fish.

BEfore the time of Master Bilney, and fall of the Cardinal, I should have placed the story of Simon Fish, with the Book called The Supplication of Beggars, declaring how and by what means it came to the Kings hand, and what effect thereof followed after, in the reformation of many things, especially of the Clergy. But the missing of a few years in this matter breaketh no great square in our story, though it be now entred here, which should have come in six years before. The manner and circumstance of the matter is this:

Mr. Simon Fish, Author of the Book called The Supplication of Beggars.

After that the light of the Gospel, working mightily in Germany, began to spread his beams here also in England, great stir and alteration followed in the hearts of many: so that coloured Hypocrisie, and false Doctrine, and painted Holiness began to be espied more and more by the reading of Gods Word. The Authority of the Bishop of Rome, and the glory of his Cardinals was not so high, but such as had fresh wits, sparkled with Gods Grace, began to espy Christ from Antichrist; that is, true Sincerity from counterfeit Religion. In the number of

KING Hen. 8.

of whom was the said Mr. Simon Fish, a Gentleman of Grays Inn. It happened the first year that this Gentleman came to London to dwell, which was about the year of our Lord 1525, that there was a certain Play or Interlude made by one Mr. Roo of the same Inn, Gentleman, in which Play partly was matter against the Cardinal Wolsey. And where none durst take upon them to play that part which touched the said Cardinal, this foresaid Mr. Fish took upon him to do it. Whereupon great displeasure ensued against him upon the Cardinals part, insomuch as he being pursued by the said Cardinal, the same night that this Tragedy was played, was compelled of force to void his own house, and so fled over the Sea to Tindal. Upon occasion whereof, the next year following this Book was made (being about the year 1527) and so not long after, in the year (as I suppose) 1528, was sent over to the Lady Ann Bullen, who then lay at a place not far from the Court. Which Book her Brother seeing in her hand, took it and read it, and gave it to her again, willing her earnestly to give it to the King, which thing she so did.

Ex certa relatione, vivoque testimonio propriæ ipsius conjugis.

The Book of the supplication of Beggars, given to the King.

This was (as I gather) about the year of our Lord 1528. The King after he had received the Book, demanded of her who made it. Whereunto she answered and said, A certain Subject of his, one Fish, who was fled out of the Realm for fear of the Cardinal. After the King had kept the Book in his bosom three or four days, as is credibly reported, such knowledge was given by the Kings servants to the Wife of the said Simon Fish, that she might boldly send for her Husband without all peril or danger. Whereupon she, thereby being encouraged, came first and made suit to the King for the safe return of her Husband. Who, understanding whose Wife she was, shewed a marvellous gentle and chearful countenance towards her, asking where her Husband was. She answered, If it like your Grace not far off. Then, saith he, Fetch him, and he shall come and go safe without peril, and no man shall do him harm. Saying moreover, that he had much wrong that he was from her so long; who had been absent now the space of two years and a half. In the which mean time the Cardinal was deposed, as is aforeshewed, and Mr. More set in his place of the Chancellorship.

Mr. Fish brought and gently entertained of the King.

Thus Fish's Wife, being imboldened by the Kings words, went immediately to her Husband, being lately come over, and lying privily within a Mile of the Court, and brought him to the King; which appeareth to be about the year of our Lord 1530. When the King saw him, and understood he was the Author of the Book, he came and embraced him with loving countenance. Who after long talk for the space of three or four hours, as they were riding together on hunting, at length dimitted him, and bad him take home his Wife, for she had taken great pains for him. Who answered the King again and said, he durst not so do, for fear of Sir Thomas More then Chancellor, and Stokesley then Bishop of London. This seemeth to be about the year of our Lord 1530.

Mr. Fish rescued by the King.

The King, taking the Signet off his Finger, willed him to have him recommended to the Lord Chancellor, charging him not to be so hardy to work him any harm. Master Fish, receiving the Kings Signet, went and declared his Message to the Lord Chancellor, who took it as sufficient for his own discharge, but he asked him if he had any thing for the discharge of his Wife; for she a little before had by chance displeased the Friers, for not suffering them to say their Gospels in Latine in her house, as they did in others, unless they would say it in English. Whereupon the Lord Chancellor, though he had discharged the Man, yet not leaving his grudge towards the Wife, the next morning sent his man for her to appear before him; who, had it not been for her young Daughter, which then lay sick of the Plague, had been like to come to much trouble. Of the which Plague her Husband, the said Master Fish, deceasing within half a year, she afterward married to one Master James Bainham, Sir Alexander Bainham's Son, a worshipful Knight of Glocestershire, The which foresaid Mr. James Bainham, not long after was burned, as incontinently after in the process of this story shall appear.

Sir Th. More persecuteth Mr. Fish's Wife.

Mr. Fish dieth of the Plague.

And thus much concerning Simon Fish the Author of the Book of Beggers, who also translated a Book, called The summ of the Scripture, out of the Dutch.

The Summ of the Scripture translated by Mr. Fish.

Now cometh another note of one Edmund Moddis the Kings Footman, touching the same matter.

Mr. Moddis the Kings Footman.

This Master Moddis being with the King in talk of Religion, and of the new books that were come from beyond the Seas, said, If it might please his Grace to pardon him, and such as he would bring to his Grace, he should see such a Book, as was marvel to hear of. The King demanded what they were. He said, two of your Merchants, George Elyot, and George Robinson. The King pointed a time to speak with them. When they came before his presence in a privy Closet, he demanded what they had to say, or to shew him. One of them said, That there was a Book come to their hands, which they had there to shew his Grace. When he saw it, he demanded if any of them could read it. Yea, said George Elyot, if it please your Grace to hear it. I thought so, said the King, for, if need were, thou canst say it without book.

The book of Beggers brought to the King by George Elyot and George Robinson.

The whole Book being read out, the King made a long pause, and then said, If a man should pull down an old stone Wall, and begin at the lower part, the upper part thereof might chance to fall upon his head. And then he took the Book and put it into his Desk, and commanded them upon their Allegiance, that they should not tell to any man that he had seen the Book, &c. The Copy of the foresaid Book, intituled of the Beggers here ensueth.

The Kings answer upon the book of Beggers.

A certain Libel, or Book, intituled, The Supplication of Beggers, thrown and scattered at the Procession in Westminster, on Candlemas day, before King Henry the Eighth, for him to read and peruse, made and compiled by Master Fish.

To the King our Sovereign Lord,

A Libel called The Supplication of Beggers.

MOst lamentably complaineth their woful misery, unto your Highness, your poor daily Beadmen, the wretched hideous Monsters, on whom scarcely for horrour any eye dare look, the foul unhappy sort of Lepers, and other sore people, needy, impotent, blind, lame and sick, that live only by Alms, how that their number is daily so sore encreased, that all the Alms of all the well disposed people of this your Realm is not half enough for to sustain them, but that for very constraint they die for hunger. And this most pestilent mischief is come upon your said poor Beadmen, by the reason that there is, in the times of your Noble Predecessors passed, craftily crept into this your Realm, another sort, not of impotent, but of strong puissant and counterfeit holy and idle Beggers and Vagabonds, which since the time of their first entry, by all the craft and wilines of Satan, are now increased under your sight, not only into a great number, but also into a Kingdom.

Strong, valiant sturdy and idle Beggers.

These are not the Herds, but the ravenous Wolves going in Herds clothing, devouring the Flock, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Deacons, Archdeacons, Suffragans, Priests, Monks, Canons, Friers, Pardoners and Sumners. And who is able to number this idle ravenous sort, which (setting all labour aside) have begged so importunately, that they have gotten into their hands, more than the third part of all your Realm? The goodliest Lordships, Manors, Lands and Territories are theirs, besides this, they have the tenth part of all the Corn, Medow, Pasture, Grass, Wood, Colts, Calves, Lambs, Pigs, Geese and Chickens. Over and besides, the tenth part of every servants Wages, the tenth part of Wooll, Milk, Hony, Wax, Cheese and Butter; yea, and they look so narrowly upon their profits, that the poor Wives must be countable to them for every tenth Egg, or else she getteth not her right at Easter, and shall be taken as an Heretick. Hereto have they their four offering days. What mony pull they in by Probates of Testaments, privy Tithes, and by mens offerings to their Pilgrimages, and at their first Masses? every Man and Child that is buried must pay somewhat for Masses and Diriges, to be sung for him, or else they will accuse their friends and Executors of Heresie. What mony get they by Mortuaries, by hearing of Confessions (and yet they keep thereof no counsel) by hallowing of More than the third part of the Realm in the spiritual mens hands.

Churches, Altars, Superaltars, Chappels and Bells, by curſing of men, and abſolving them again for mony? What a multitude of mony gather the Pardoners in a year? How much mony get the Sumners by extortion in a year, by aſciting the people to the Commiſſaries Court, and afterward releaſing the apparents for mony? Finally, the infinite number of begging Friers, what get they in a year?

(a) Here if it pleaſe your Grace to mark, you ſhall ſee a thing far out of joynt. There are within your Realm of England 52000 Pariſh Churches. And this ſtanding, that there be but 10 houſholds in every Pariſh, yet are there 520000 houſholds. And of every of theſe houſholds hath every of the five Orders of Friers, a peny a Quarter for every Order; that is, for all the five Orders, five pence a Quarter for every houſe; that is, for all the five Orders, 20 pence a year of every houſe. Summa, five hundred and twenty thouſand quarters of Angels, that is, 260000 half Angels. Summa 130000 Angels. (b) Summa totalis 430333 pounds, ſix ſhillings, eight pence Sterling. Whereof not 400 years paſſed, they had not one peny.

(a) Peradventure the common count of the Pariſhes of England, among men, and in Maps of the old time ſo went. And albeit the ſaid Pariſhes do not amount now to the ſame rate of 52000, yet nevertheleſs the number (no doubt) is great, and therefore the Quarrage of the Friers cannot be little, but riſeth to a great peny through the Realm. Whereupon the ſcope of this mans reaſon ſoundeth to good purpoſe. For although he hit not perfectly on the juſt ſumms, yet it cannot be denied, but the Friers had very much, and much more than they deſerved. Again, neither can it be denied, but the more they had, the leſs redounded to the impotent needy beggers indeed. And what reaſon is it, that ſuch valiant beggers, which may work, and yet will needs be idle, ſhould reap any piece of the Crop, which bare no burthen of the harveſt, but wilfully do ſit idle, and ſerve to no uſe neceſſary in the Commonwealth?

(b) Admit the Summa totalis came not to ſo much, yet it came to more than the Friers deſerved, which could well work, and would not, and would needs beg, and needed not; whereof read before the ſtory of Armachanus.

Oh grievous and painful exaction, thus yearly to be paid; from the which, the people of your noble predeceſſors, the Kings of the ancient Britans, ever ſtood free. And this will they have, or elſe they will procure him that will not give it to them to be taken as an Heretick. What Tyrant ever oppreſſed the people, like this cruel and vengeable generation? What Subjects ſhall be able to help their Prince, that be after this faſhion yearly polled? What good Chriſtian people can be able to ſuccour us poor Lepers, blind, ſore and lame, that be thus yearly oppreſſed? Is it any marvel that your people ſo complain of poverty? Is it any marvel that the Taxes, Fifteens and Subſidies that your Grace moſt tenderly, of great compaſſion hath taken among your people to defend them from the threatned ruine of their Commonwealth, have been ſo ſlothfully, yea painfully levied, ſeeing almoſt the uttermoſt peny, that might have been levied, hath been gathered before yearly by this ravenous inſatiable generation? Neither the Danes nor the Saxons, in the time of the ancient Britains, ſhould ever have been able to have brought their Armies from ſo far hither into your Land to have conquered it, if they had at that time ſuch a ſort of idle Gluttons to find at home. The Noble King Arthur had never been able to have carried his Army to the foot of the Mountains, to reſiſt the coming down of Lucius the Emperor, if ſuch yearly Exactions had been taken of his people. The Greeks had never been able to have ſo long continued at the Siege of Troy, if they had had at home ſuch an idle ſort of Cormorants to find. The ancient Romans had never been able to have put all the whole World under their obeiſance, if their people had been thus yearly oppreſſed. The Turk now in your time ſhould never have been able to get ſo much ground of Chriſtendom, if he had in his Empire ſuch a ſort of Locuſts to devour his ſubſtance. Lay then theſe ſumms to the foreſaid third part of the poſſeſſions of the Realm, that ye may ſee whether it draw nigh unto the half of the whole ſubſtance of the Realm or not; ſo ſhall ye find that it draweth far above.

Oh grievous &c. Theſe words, ſaith Mr. More, the ſouls themſelves did hear even into Purgatory. Belike Mr. More himſelf ſtood behind Purgatory door the ſame time, or elſe how could he tell that the ſouls did hear him?

He meaneth all this only of idle Friers.

An unequal diviſion that the Friers ſhould have half with the multitude, they being not the four hundredth perſon of the number.

Now let us then compare the number of this unkind idle ſort, unto the number of the Lay-people, and we ſhall ſee whether it be indifferently ſhifted, or not, that they ſhould have half. Compare them to the number of men, ſo are they not the hundredth perſon. Compare them to Men, Women and Children, ſo are they not the four hundredth perſon in number. One part therefore, into four hundred parts divided, were too much for them, except they did labour. What an unequal burthen is it, that they have half with the multitude, and are not the four hundredth perſon of their number? What Tongue is able to tell, that ever there was any Commonwealth ſo ſore oppreſſed ſince the World firſt began?

KING Head

And what doth all this greedy ſort of ſturdy, idle, holy Thieves, with theſe yearly Exactions that they take of the people? Truly nothing, but exempt themſelves from the obedience of your Grace. Nothing but tranſlate all Rule, Power, Lordſhip, Authority, Obedience and Dignity, from your Grace unto them. Nothing but that all your Subjects ſhould fall into diſobedience and rebellion againſt your Grace, and be under them, as they did unto your Noble predeceſſor King John; which becauſe that he would have puniſhed certain Traitors that had conſpired, with the French King, to have depoſed him from his Crown and Dignity (among the which a Clerk called Stephen, whom afterward againſt the Kings will, the Pope made Biſhop of Canterbury, was one) interdicted his Land. For the which matter your moſt Noble Realm wrongfully (alas for ſhame) hath ſtood Tributary not unto any kind of temporal Prince, but unto a cruel deviliſh bloud-ſucker, drunken in the bloud of the Saints and Martyrs of Chriſt ever ſince.

The rule of Kings impaired by the Popes Clergy.

Here were an holy ſort of Prelates, that thus cruelly could puniſh ſuch a righteous King, all his Realm and Succeſſion, for doing right. Here were a charitable ſort of holy men, that could thus interdict a whole Realm, and pluck away the obedience of the people from their natural Liege Lord and King, for none other cauſe, but for his righteouſneſs. Here were a bleſſed ſort, not of meek herds, but of bloud-ſuckers, that could ſet the French King upon ſuch a righteous Prince, to cauſe him to loſe his Crown and Dignity, to make effuſion of the bloud of his people, unleſs this good and bleſſed King of great compaſſion, more fearing and lamenting the ſhedding of the bloud of his people, than the loſs of his Crown and Dignity, againſt all right and conſcience, ſubmitted himſelf unto them.

K. John ſubmitted himſelf unto the Pope, read before.

O caſe moſt horrible, that ever ſo Noble a King, Realm and Succeſſion, ſhould thus be made to ſtoop to ſuch a ſort of bloud-ſuckers. Where was his Sword, Power, Crown and Dignity become, whereby he might have done juſtice in this matter? Where was their obedience become that ſhould have been ſubject under his high power in this matter? yea, where was the obedience of all his ſubjects become, that for maintenance of the Commonwealth ſhould have holpen him manfully to have reſiſted theſe bloud-ſuckers, to the ſhedding of their bloud? Was it not altogether by their policy tranſlated from this good King unto them?

Yea, and what do they more? Truly nothing but apply themſelves, by all the ſleights they may, to have to do with every mans Wife, every mans Daughter, and every mans Maid, that Cuckoldry and Bawdry ſhould reign over all, among your Subjects, that no man ſhould know his own Child, that their Baſtards might inherit the poſſeſſions of every man, to put the right begotten Children clean beſides their inheritance, in ſubverſion of all eſtates and godly order. Theſe be they, that by their abſtaining from Marriage do let the generation of the people, whereby all the Realm at length, if it ſhould be continued, ſhall be made deſert and inhabitable.

If this be not true in the whole, I would the greateſt part were not ſuch.

Theſe be they that have made an hundred thouſand idle Whores in your Realm, which would have gotten their living honeſtly, in the ſweat of their faces, had not their ſuperfluous riches illected them to unclean luſt and idleneſs. Theſe be they that corrupt the whole Generation of Mankind in your Realm, that catch the Pox of one Woman, and bear them unto another, that be burnt with one Woman, and bear it to another, that catch the Lepry of one Woman, and bear it unto another. Yea ſome one of them ſhall boaſt among his fellows, that he hath medled with an hundred Women. Theſe be they, that when they have once drawn mens Wives to ſuch incontinency, ſpend away their Husbands Goods, make the Women to run away from their Husbands, yea, run away themſelves both with Wife and Goods, bringing both Man, Wife and Children, to Idleneſs, Theft and Beggery. Yea, who is able 100000 idle Whores made in England by the Popes Clergy.

KING H.8. able to number the great and broad bottomleſs Ocean Sea, full of evils, that this miſchievous and ſinful Generation may lawfully bring upon us unpuniſhed?

Where is your Sword, Power, Crown and Dignity become, that ſhould puniſh by puniſhment of death, even as other men are puniſhed, the Felonies, Rapes, Murthers and Treaſons committed by this ſinful Generation? Where is their obedience become, that ſhould be under your high power in this matter? Is it not altogether tranſlated and exempt from your Grace unto them? Yes truly, (a) what an infinite number of people might have been encreaſed to have peopled the Realm, if this ſort of folk had bin married like other men? What breach of Matrimony is there brought in by them? ſuch truly as was never ſince the World began, among the whole multitude of the Heathen. Who is ſhe that will ſet her hands to work, to get three pence a day, and may have at leaſt twenty pence a day to ſleep an hour with a Frier, a Monk or a Prieſt? What is he that would labour for a groat a day, and may have at leaſt twelve-pence a day to be Bawd to a Prieſt, a Monk, or a Frier? What a ſort are there of them that marry Prieſts ſovereign Ladies, but to cloak the Prieſts incontinency, and that they may have a Living of the Prieſts themſelves for their labour? How many thouſand doth ſuch lubricity bring to beggery, theft and idleneſs, which ſhould have kept their good name, and have ſet themſelves to work, had not been this exceſſive treaſure of the Spiritualty? What honeſt man dare take any man or woman into his ſervice, that hath been at ſuch a School with a ſpiritual man?

(a) The Realm of England is diminiſhed and decayed by the number of 200000 perſons at leaſt, or elſe repleniſhed with ſo many whores and whoremaſters, by reſtraining of Marriage from Prieſts, Monks, Friers, Nuns, Colleges, Hoſpitals, Beadmen, and ſuch like Orders, within the Realm of England. The increaſe of which number might be recovered, and the Realm more peopled, and alſo Gods Commandments better kept, if theſe Vows of Bondage were broken, and Matrimony permitted free to all men.

Prieſts and Doves make foul houſes.

The Popes Clergy a ſhipwrack to all Commonwealths

O the grievous Shipwrack of the Commonwealth, which in ancient time, before the coming of theſe ravenous Wolves, were ſo proſperous, that then there were but few Thieves; yea Theft at that time was ſo rare, that Ceſar was not compelled to make penalty of death upon Felony, as your Grace may well perceive in his Inſtitutes. There was alſo at that time but few poor people, and yet they did not beg, but there was given them enough unasked; for there was at that time none of theſe ravenous Wolves to ask it from them; as it appeareth in the Acts of the Apoſtles. Is it any marvel though there be now ſo many Beggers, Thieves and idle people? Nay truly. What remedy? Make Laws againſt them? I am in doubt whether ye be able. Are they not ſtronger in your own Parliament-houſe than your ſelf? What a number of Biſhops, Abbots and Priors are Lords of your Parliament? Are not all the Learned Men of your Realm in fee with them, to ſpeak in your Parliament-houſe for them, againſt your Crown, Dignity and Commonwealth of your Realm, a few of your own learned Council only excepted? What Law can be made againſt them that may be available? Who is he (though he be grieved very ſore) that for the Murther of his Anceſtor, Raviſhment of his Wife, of his Daughter, Robbery, Treſpaſs, Maim, Debt, or any other offence, dare lay it to their charge by any way of action? And if he do, then is he by and by, by their wilineſs, accuſed of Hereſie; yea, they will ſo handle him ere he paſs, that except he will bear a Fagot for their pleaſure, he ſhall be excommunicate, and then be all his actions daſhed.

The cauſe of ſo many beggers, thieves and idle people in England.

The Popes Clergy ſtronger in Parliament than Princes, as hath appeared by their cruel laws againſt the poor Goſpellers.

No Law nor remedy againſt the Clergy.

So captive are your Laws unto them, that no man whom they liſt to excommunicate, may be admitted to ſue any Action in any of your Courts. If any man in your Seſſions dare be ſo hardy to indict a Prieſt of any ſuch crime, he hath ere the year go out, ſuch a yoke of Hereſie laid in his Neck, that it maketh him wiſh he had not done it. Your Grace may ſee what a work there is in London; how the Biſhop rageth for indicting of certain Curates of Extortion and Incontinency, the laſt year in the Wardmote Queſt. Had not Richard Hun commenced an Action of Præmunire againſt a Prieſt, he had been yet alive, and no Heretick at all, but an honeſt man. Did not divers of your Noble Progenitors, ſeeing their Crown and Dignity run into ruine, and to be thus craftily tranſlated into the hands of this miſchievous Generation, make divers Statutes for the Reformation thereof, among which the Statute of Mortmain was one, to the intent that after that time they ſhould have no more given unto them? But what availed it? Have they not gotten into their hands more Lands ſince, than any Duke in England hath, the Statute notwithſtanding? Yea, have they not for all that tranſlated into their hands, from your Grace, half your Kingdom throughly, the only name remaining to you for your Anceſtors ſake? So you have the name, and they the profit. Yea, I fear, if I ſhould weigh all things to the utmoſt, they would alſo take the name to them, and of one Kingdom make twain; the Spiritual Kingdom, as they call it, (for they will be named firſt) and your Temporal Kingdom. And which of theſe two Kingdoms, ſuppoſe you, is like to overgrow the other, yea, to put the other clean out of memory? Truly the Kingdom of the Bloud-ſuckers for to them is given daily out of your Kingdom; and that that is once given them, never cometh from them again. Such Laws have they, that none of them may either give or ſell any thing. What Law can be made ſo ſtrong againſt them, that they either with mony, or elſe with other policy, will not break or ſet at nought? What Kingdom can endure, that ever giveth thus from him, and receiveth nothing again? O how all the ſubſtance of your Realm, your Sword, Power, Crown, Dignity and obedience of your people, runneth headlong into the unſatiable Whirlpool of theſe greedy Gulfs, to be ſwallowed and devoured!

The Statute of Mortmain.

Half the profit of the Realm in the Clergys hands.

Neither have they any other colour to gather theſe yearly Exactions into their hands, but that they ſay they pray for us to God, to deliver our ſouls out of the pains of Purgatory; without whoſe prayers, they ſay, or at leaſt without the Popes pardon, we could never be delivered thence. Which if it be true, then it is good reaſon that we give them all theſe things, although it were an hundred times as much. But there be many men of great literature and judgment, that for the love they have unto the truth and unto the Commonwealth, have not feared to put themſelves into the greateſt infamy that may be, in abjection of all the world, yea in peril of death, to declare their opinion in this matter; which is, that there is no Purgatory, but that it is a thing invented by the covetouſneſs of the Spiritualty, only to tranſlate all Kingdoms from other Princes unto them, and that there is not one word ſpoken of it in all holy Scripture. They ſay alſo, that if there were a Purgatory, and alſo if that the Pope with his pardons may for mony deliver one ſoul thence, he may deliver him as well without mony; if he may deliver one, he may deliver a thouſand; if he may deliver a thouſand, he may deliver them all, and ſo deſtroy Purgatory, and then he is a cruel Tyrant, without all charity, if he keep them there in Priſon and in pain till men will give him (b) mony.

The moſt good the Popes Clergy doth in England, is to pray mens ſouls out of Purgatory.

Purgatory denied.

(b) If the Pope may deliver ſouls out of Purgatory for mony, he may then as well deliver them without mony, if it pleaſed him.

Again, If he deliver one, he can deliver a thouſand, if he can deliver a thouſand, he can deliver all, and ſo make a Gaol-delivery, and a clean diſpatch of all Purgatory, if he would; and if he will not when he may, then is there no charity in him.

Likewiſe ſay they of all the whole ſort of the Spiritualty, That if they will pray for no man but for them that give them mony, they are Tyrants, and lack charity, and ſuffer thoſe ſouls to be puniſhed and pained uncharitably for lack of their prayers. This ſort of folks they call Hereticks, theſe they burn, theſe they rage againſt, put to open ſhame, and make them bear Fagots; but whether they be Hereticks or no, well I wot, that this Purgatory, and the Popes Pardons are all the cauſe of the tranſlation of your Kingdom ſo faſt into their hands. Wherefore it is manifeſt it cannot be of Chriſt; for he gave more to the temporal Kingdom, he himſelf paid tribute to Ceſar; he took nothing from him, but taught that the high Powers ſhould be always obeyed; yea himſelf (although he were moſt free Lord of all, and innocent) was obedient unto the high powers unto death. This is the great ſkab why they will not let the New Teſtament go abroad in your Mother Tongue, leſt men ſhould eſpy that they by their cloaked hypocriſie do tranſlate thus faſt your Kingdom into their hands; that they are not obedient unto your high power; that they are cruel, unclean, unmerciful and hypocrites; that they ſeek not the honour of Chriſt, but their own; that remiſſion of ſins is not given by the Popes pardon, but by Chriſt, for the ſure faith and truſt that we have in him.

Chriſt ſubmitted himſelf under temporal government

The cauſe touched why the Popes Clergy will not let the new Teſtament go abroad in the Mother tongue

Of Richard Hun, read before.

Here may your Grace well perceive, that except you ſuffer their hypocriſie to be diſcloſed, all is like to run into their hands; and as long as it is covered, ſo long ſhall it ſeem to every man to be a great impiety, not to give them. For this I am ſure, your Grace thinketh (as the truth is) I am as good a man as my Father; why may I not as well give them as much as my Father did? And of this mind, I am ſure are all the Lords, Knights, Squires, Gentlemen, and Yeomen in England; yea, and until it be diſcloſed, all your people will think that your Statute of Mortmain was never made with any good conſcience, ſeeing that it taketh away the liberty of your people, in that they may not as lawfully buy their ſouls out of Purgatory by giving to the Spiritualty, as their Predeceſſors did in times paſt.

Mr. More here played the caviller, noting the Author of this Supplication to deſire leave to rail on the whole Clergy, as though the hypocriſie of the Friers could not otherwiſe be diſcloſed without railing on the whole Clergy.

Wherefore if ye will eſchew the ruine of your Crown and Dignity, let their hypocriſie be uttered, and that ſhall be more ſpeedful in this matter, than all the laws that may be made, be they never ſo ſtrong; for to mak a Law to puniſh any offender, except it were more to give other men an example to beware how they commit ſuch like offence, what ſhould it avail? Did not Doctor Alen moſt preſumptuouſly now in your time, againſt his Allegiance, all that ever he could, to pull from you the knowledge of ſuch Pleas as belong unto your High Courts, unto another Court, in derogation of your Crown and Dignity? Did not alſo Doctor Horſey and his Complices, moſt heinouſly (as all the World knoweth) murder in Priſon that honeſt Merchant Richard Hun, for that he ſued your Writ of Præmunire againſt a Prieſt that wrongfully held him in Plea in a Spiritual Court, for a matter whereof the knowledge belongeth unto your high Courts? And what puniſhment was there done that any man may take example of, to beware of like offence? Truly none, but that the one paid five hundred Pounds (as it is ſaid) to the building of your Chamber; and when that payment was once paſſed, the Captains of his Kingdom, becauſe he fought ſo manfully againſt your Crown and Dignity, have heaped to him Benefice upon Benefice, ſo that he is rewarded * Ten times as much. The other (as it is ſaid) paid ſix hundred pound for him and his Complices; which, becauſe that he had likewiſe fought ſo manfully againſt your Crown and Dignity, was immediately, as he had obtained your moſt gracious Pardon, promoted by the Captains of the Kingdom, with Benefice upon Benefice, to the value of 4 times as much. Who can take example of puniſhment to beware of ſuch like offence? Who is he of their Kingdom that will not rather take courage to commit like offence, ſeeing the promotions that fell to theſe men for their ſo offending? ſo weak and blunt is your ſword to ſtrike at one of the offenders of this crooked and perverſe generation.

Of Dr. Alen the Cardinals Chancellor, read before.

Of this Dr. Horſey, the Biſhop of London's Chancellor, read before.

* Ten times, that is, ten times as much as he had in Benefices before, and not as he paid to the King. And although theſe Murtherers of Hun were not recompenſed with ten times, or with four times as much, (which More denieth) yet can he never be able to deny the ſubſtance of the ſtory, that is, that Hun by theſe was brought to his death; and that they, being put to their Fines, were afterward ſufficiently recompenſed with Benefices upon Benefices.

Inconvenient for a ſpiritual man to be Lord Chancellor.

And this is by reaſon that the chief inſtrument of your Law, yea the chief of your Council, and he which hath your Sword in his hand, to whom alſo all the other inſtruments are obedient, is always a ſpiritual man, which hath ever ſuch an inordinate love unto his own Kingdom, that he will maintain that, though all the temporal Kingdoms and Commonwealths of the World ſhould therefore utterly be undone. Here leave we out the greateſt matter of all, leſt that we declaring ſuch an horrible carrion of evil againſt the Miniſters of Iniquity, ſhould ſeem to declare the one only fault, or rather the ignorance of our beſt beloved Miniſter of righteouſneſs, which is to be hid, till he may be learned by theſe ſmall enormities that we have ſpoken of, to know it plainly himſelf.

More expoundeth this to mean the abuſe of the Sacrament of the Altar.

Prieſts turn the Hoſpitals to their own profit.

But what remedy to relieve us your poor, ſick, lame, and ſore Beadmen? To make many Hoſpitals for the relief of the poor people? Nay truly. The more the worſe: for ever the fat of the whole foundation hangeth on the Prieſts Beards. Divers of your noble Predeceſſors, Kings of this Realm, have given Lands to Monaſteries, to give a certain ſumm of mony yearly to the poor people, whereof for the ancienty of the time they give never one peny. They have likewiſe given to them, to have a certain of Maſſes ſaid daily for them, whereof they ſay never one. If the Abbot of Weſtminſter ſhould ſing every day as many Maſſes for his Founders, as he is bound to do by his foundation, a thouſand Monks were too few. Wherefore if your Grace will build a ſure Hoſpital that never ſhall fail, to relieve us all your poor Beadmen, then take from them all theſe things. Set theſe ſturdy Loobies abroad in the World to get them Wives of their own, to get their living with their labour in the ſweat of their faces, according to the Commandment of God, Geneſis the firſt, to give other idle people, by their example occaſion to go to labour.

{KING Hen. 8.

Ty theſe holy idle Thieves to the Carts, to be whipped naked about every Market Town, till they fall to labour, that they by their importunate begging, take not away the Alms that the good Chriſtian people would give unto us, ſore, impotent, miſerable people, your Bead-men. Then ſhall as well the number of our foreſaid monſtrous ſort, as of the Bawds, Whores, Thieves, and idle people decreaſe. Then ſhall theſe great yearly Exactions ceaſe. Then ſhall not your Sword, Power, Crown, Dignity, and Obedience of your People be tranſlated from you. Then ſhall you have full obedience of your people. Then ſhall the idle people be ſet to work. Then ſhall Matrimony be much better kept. Then ſhall the Generation of your people be increaſed. Then ſhall your Commons increaſe in riches. Then ſhall the Goſpel be preached. Then ſhall none beg our Alms from us. Then ſhall we have enough, and more than ſhall ſuffice us; which ſhall be the beſt Hoſpital that ever was founded for us. Then ſhall we daily pray to God for your moſt noble eſtate long to endure.

What wealth and goodneſs cometh to the Realm by putting out Monks, Friers and Chantries.

Againſt this Book of the Beggers, above prefixed, being written in the time of the Cardinal, another contrary Book or Supplication was deviſed and written ſhortly upon the ſame, by one Sir Thomas More Knight, Chancellor of the Dutchy of Lancaſter, under the Name and Title of, The poor ſilly ſouls pewling out of Purgatory. In the which Book, after that the ſaid Maſter More, Writer thereof, had firſt divided the whole World into four parts, that is, into Heaven, Hell, Middle-Earth, and Purgatory; then he maketh the dead mens ſouls, by a Rhetorical Proſopopœia, to ſpeak out of Purgatory pin-fold, ſometimes lamentably complaining, ſometimes pleaſantly dallying and ſcoffing at the Author of the Beggers Book; ſometimes ſcolding and railing at him, calling him Fool, Witleſs, Frantick, an Aſs, a Gooſe, a mad Dog, an Heretick, and all that naught is. And no marvel, if theſe ſilly ſouls of Purgatory ſeem ſo fumiſh and teſty; for heat (ye know) is teſty, and ſoon inflameth choler. But yet theſe Purgatory ſouls muſt take good heed how they call a man Fool and Heretick ſo often; for if the ſentence of the Goſpel do pronounce them guilty of Hell Fire, which ſay, Fatue, Fool, it may be doubted, leſt thoſe poor ſilly melancholy ſouls of Purgatory, calling this man Fool ſo oft as they have done, do bring themſelves thereby out of Purgatory fire to the fire of Hell, by that juſt ſentence of the Goſpel, ſo that neither the five wounds of Saint Francis, nor all the merits of Saint Dominick, nor yet of all the Friers, can releaſe them poor wretches. But yet forſomuch as I do not, nor cannot think that thoſe departed ſouls either would ſo far overſhoot themſelves if they were in Purgatory, or elſe that there is any ſuch fourth place of Purgatory at all (unleſs it be in Maſter More's Utopia) as Maſter More's Poetical Vein doth imagine, I ceaſe therefore to burden the ſouls departed, and lay all the wit on Maſter More, the Author and Contriver of this Poetical Book, for not keeping Decorum perſonæ, as a perfect Poet ſhould have done. They that give precepts of Art do note this in all Poetical Fictions, as a ſpecial obſervation, to foreſee and expreſs what is convenient for every perſon, according to his degree and condition to ſpeak and utter. Wherefore if it be true that Maſter More ſaith in the ſequel of his Book, that grace and charity increaſeth in them that lie in the pains of Purgatory, then is it not agreeable, that ſuch ſouls lying ſo long in Purgatory, ſhould ſo ſoon forget their charity, and fall a railing in their Supplication ſo fumiſhly, both againſt this man with The ſupplication of Purgatory, made by Sir Tho. More, againſt the Book of Beggers.

Matth. 5.

Utopia, that is to ſay, Nuſquam, no place.

A Poet, ſaith Horace, Reddere perſonæ, ſcit convenientia cuique.

{KING Hen. 8.} with ſuch opprobrious and unfitting terms, and alſo againſt John Badby, Richard Howndon, John Gooſe, Lord Cobham, and other Martys of the Lord burned for his Word; alſo againſt Luther, William Tindal, Richard Hun, and other more, falſly belying the Doctrine by them taught and defended; which is not like that ſuch charitable ſouls of Purgatory would ever do, neither were it convenient for them in that caſe; which indeed, though their Doctrine were falſe, ſhould redound to the more increaſe of their pain. Again, where the Biſhop of Rocheſter defineth the Angels to be Miniſters to Purgatory ſouls, ſome will think peradventure Maſter More to have miſſed ſome part of his Decorum, in making the evil Spirit of the Author, and the Devil to be meſſenger, between middle-Earth and Purgatory, in bringing tidings to the priſoned ſouls, both of the Book, and of the name of the maker.

Mr. More's Antics. Now, as touching the manner how this Devil came into Purgatory, laughing, grinning, and gnaſhing his teeth, in ſooth it makes me to laugh, to ſee the merry Antics of Maſter More. Belike then this was ſome merry Devil, or elſe had eaten with his teeth ſome Naſturcium before; which coming into Purgatory, to ſhew the name of this man, could not tell his tale without laughing. But this was (ſaith he) an enmious and an envious laughing, joyned with grinning and gnaſhing of teeth. And immediately upon the ſame, was contrived this ſcoffing and railing Supplication of the pewling ſouls of Purgatory, as he himſelf doth term them. So then, here was enmying, envying, laughing, grinning, gnaſhing of teeth, pewling, ſcoffing, railing and begging, and all together to make a very black Sanctus in Purgatory. Indeed we read in Scripture, that there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth in Hell, where the ſouls and bodies of men ſhall be tormented. But who would ever have thought before, that the evil Angel of this man that made the Book of Beggers, being a ſpiritual and no corporal ſubſtance, had teeth to gnaſh, and a mouth to grin? But where then ſtood Maſter More, I marvel all this mean while, to ſee the Devil laugh with his mouth ſo wide, that the ſouls of Purgatory might ſee all his teeth? Belike, this was in Utopia, where Maſter More's Purgatory is founded; but becauſe Mr. More is hence departed, I leave him with his merry Antics.

Satan Naſturciatur.

A black Sanctus in Purgatory.

The anſwer of J. Frith againſt Mr. More's Purgatory. And as touching his Books of Purgatory, which he hath left behind, becauſe John Frith hath learnedly and effectuouſly overthrown the ſame, I will therefore refer the Reader to him, while I repair again (the Lord willing) to the Hiſtory.

After that the Clergy of England, and eſpecially the Cardinal, underſtood theſe Books of the Beggers Supplication aforeſaid, to be ſtrawn abroad in the Streets of London, and alſo before the King, the ſaid Cardinal cauſed not only his ſervants diligently to attend to gather them up, that they ſhould not come into the Kings hands, but alſo when he underſtood, that the King had received one or two of them, he came unto the Kings Majeſty, ſaying, If it ſhall pleaſe your Grace, here are divers ſeditious perſons which have ſcattered abroad Books containing manifeſt Errors and Hereſies; deſiring his Grace to beware of them. Whereupon the King, putting his hand in his boſom, took out one of the Books, and delivered it unto the Cardinal. Then the Cardinal, together with his Biſhops, conſulted how they might provide a ſpeedy remedy for this miſchief, and thereupon determined to give out a Commiſſion to forbid the reading of all Engliſh Books, and namely, this Book of Beggers, and the New Teſtament of Tindal's Tranſlation, which was done out of hand by Cuthbert Tonſtal Biſhop of London, who ſent out his Prohibition unto his Archdeacons with all ſpeed, for the forbidding of that Book and divers other more; the tenor of which Prohibition here followeth.

Provision by the Biſhops againſt Engliſh books.

¶ A Prohibition ſent out by Cuthbert Tonſtal, Biſhop of London, to the Archdeacons of his Dioceſs, for the calling in of the New Teſtaments tranſlated into Engliſh, with divers other Books; the Catalogue whereof hereafter inſueth.

A Prohibition againſt Engliſh Books.

'CUTHBERT by the permiſſion of God, Biſhop 'of London, unto our wellbeloved in Chriſt, the 'Archdeacon of London, or to his Official, Health, Grace 'and Benediction. By the duty of our Paſtoral office, 'we are bound diligently with all our power to foreſee, 'provide for, root out, and put away all thoſe things, 'which ſeem to tend to the peril and danger of our 'Subjects, and ſpecially the deſtruction of their ſouls. 'Wherefore we having underſtanding, by the report of 'divers credible perſons, and alſo by the evident appea-'rance of the matter, that many children of iniquity, 'maintainers of Luther's Sect, blinded through extream 'wickedneſs, wandring from the way of truth, and the 'Catholick Faith, craftily have tranſlated the New Te-'ſtament into our Engliſh Tongue, intermedling there-'with many Heretical Articles, and erroneous Opinions, 'pernicious and offenſive, ſeducing the ſimple people, 'attempting by their wicked and perverſe interpretations, 'to prophanate the Majeſty of the Scripture, which hi-'therto hath remained undefiled, and craftily to abuſe 'the moſt holy Word of God, and the true ſenſe of the 'ſame, of the which Tranſlation there are many Books 'imprinted, ſome with gloſſes, and ſome without, con-'taining in the Engliſh Tongue that peſtiferous and 'moſt pernicious poyſon diſperſed throughout all our 'Dioceſs of London in great number; which truly, with-'out it be foreſeen, without doubt will contaminate and 'infect the flock committed unto us, with moſt dead-'ly poiſon and Hereſie, to the grievous peril and danger 'of the ſouls committed to our charge, and the offence 'of Gods Divine Majeſty: Wherefore, we Cuthbert, 'the Biſhop aforeſaid, grievouſly ſorrowing for the pre-'miſes, willing to withſtand the craft and ſubtilty of the 'ancient enemy and his miniſters, which ſeek the de-'ſtruction of my flock, and with a diligent care to take 'heed unto the flock committed to my charge, deſiring 'to provide ſpeedy remedies for the premiſſes, do charge 'you joyntly and ſeverally, and by vertue of your obe-'dience ſtraitly injoyn and command you, that by our 'authority you warn, or cauſe to be warned all and ſin-'gular, as well exempt as not exempt, dwelling with-'in your Archdeaconries, that within thirty days ſpace, 'whereof ten days ſhall be for the firſt, ten for the ſe-'cond, and ten for the third and peremptory term, un-'der pain of Excommunication, and incurring the ſuſ-'picion of Hereſie, they do bring in, and really deliver 'unto our Vicar general, all and ſingular ſuch Books 'as contain the Tranſlation of the New Teſtament in 'the Engliſh Tongue; and that you do certifie us, or 'our ſaid Commiſſary, within two Months after the 'day of the date of theſe Preſents, duly, perſonally, or by 'your Letters, together with theſe preſents, under your 'ſeals, what you have done in the premiſſes, under pain 'of contempt.

'Given under our Seal, the three 'and twentieth of October, in 'the fifth year of our Conſecra-'tion, Anno 1526.

The like Commiſſion in like manner and form was ſent to the other three Archdeacons of Middleſex, Eſſex and Colcheſter, for the execution of the ſame matter, under the Biſhops Seal.

The New Teſtament, in the Catalogue above recited, began firſt to be tranſlated by William Tindal; and ſo came forth in Print, about the year of our Lord 1529, wherewith Cuthbert Tonſtal Biſhop of London, with Sir Thomas More, being ſore aggrieved, deviſed how to deſtroy that falſe erroneous Tranſlation, as he called it. It happened that one Auguſtine Packington a Mercer, was then at Antwerp, where the Biſhop was. This man favoured Tindal, but ſhewed the contrary unto the Biſhop. The Biſhop, being deſirous to bring his purpoſe to paſs, communed how that he would gladly buy the New Teſtaments. Packington hearing him ſay ſo, ſaid, My Lord, I can do more in this matter, than moſt Merchants that be here, if it be your pleaſure; for I know the Dutchmen and ſtrangers that have bought them of Tindal, and have them here to ſell; ſo that if it be your Lordſhips pleaſure, I muſt diſburſe mony to pay for them, or elſe I cannot have them; and ſo I will aſſure you to have every Book of them that is printed and unſold. The Biſhop thinking he had God by the Toe, ſaid, Do your diligence, gentle Maſter Packington, get them for me, and I will pay whatſoever they coſt; for I intend to burn and deſtroy them all at Pauls Croſs. This Auguſtine Packington went unto William Tindal, and declared the whole matter, and ſo, upon compact made between them, the Biſhop of London had the Books, Packington had the thanks, and Tindal had the mony. After this Tindal corrected the ſame New Teſtaments again, and cauſed them to be newly imprinted, ſo that they came thick and threefold over into England. When the Biſhop perceived that, he ſent for Packington, and ſaid to him, How cometh this that there are ſo many New Teſtaments abroad? you promiſed me that you would buy them all. Then anſwered Packington, Surely, I bought all that were to be had. But I perceive they have printed more ſince. I ſee it will never be better ſo long as they have Letters and Stamps: Wherefore you were beſt to buy the Stamps too, and ſo you ſhall be ſure. At which anſwer the Biſhop ſmiled, and ſo the matter ended.

Auguſtine Packington the Biſhop of London's Merchant.

In ſhort ſpace after, it fortuned that George Conſtantine was apprehended by Sir Thomas More, which was then Chancellor of England, ſuſpected of certain Hereſies during the time that he was in the cuſtody of Maſter More. After divers communications, amongſt other things, Maſter More asked of him, ſaying, Conſtantine, I would have thee be plain with me in one thing that I will ask, and I promiſe thee, I will ſhew thee favour in all other things whereof thou art accuſed. There is beyond the Sea, Tindal, Joy, and a great many of you, I know they cannot live without help. There are ſome that help and ſuccour them with mony, and thou being one of them haddſt thy part thereof, and therefore knoweſt from whence it came. I pray thee tell me, who be they that help them thus? My Lord, quoth Conſtantine, I will tell you truly; It is the Biſhop of London that hath holpen us, for he hath beſtowed among us a great deal of mony upon New Teſtaments to burn them, and that hath been, and yet is our only ſuccour and comfort. Now by my truth, quoth More, I think even the ſame; for ſo much I told the Biſhop before he went about it.

George Conſtantine.

Of this George Conſtantine, moreover it is reported by Sir Thomas More, that he being taken and in hold, ſeemed well contented to renounce his former Doctrine, and not only to diſcloſe certain other of his fellows, but alſo ſtudied and deviſed, how theſe Books, which he himſelf, and other of his fellows had brought and ſhipped,

Out of More's Preface againſt Tindal.

Shipped, might come to the Biſhops hands to be burned, and ſhewed to the aforeſaid Sir Thomas More, Chancellor, the Ship-mans name that had them, and the marks of the Fardels, by the which, the Books afterward were taken and burned. Beſides this, he is reported alſo to have diſcloſed divers of his Companions, of whom ſome were abjured after, ſome had abjured before, as Richard Necton, who was committed to Newgate upon the ſame, and is thought there to have died in priſon, or elſe had not eſcaped their hands, but ſhould have ſuffered burning, if the report of Maſter More be to be credited. More in his Preface againſt Tindal.

George Conſtantine a diſcloſer of his fellows.

George Conſtantine a troubler of Ferrar Biſhop of St. Davids.

Notwithſtanding the ſame Conſtantine afterward, by the help of ſome of his friends, eſcaped out of priſon over the Seas, and after that, in the time of King Edward, was one of them that troubled the good Biſhop of St. Davids, which after in Queen Maries time was burned. But of Conſtantine enough.

Mention was made in the leaf before, how the Biſhops had procured of the King a Proclamation to be ſet forth in the year of our Lord 1529, for the aboliſhing of divers Books aforenamed, and alſo for the withſtanding of all ſuch as taught or preached any thing againſt the dignity and ordinances of the Church of Rome. Upon this Proclamation inſued great perſecution and trouble againſt the poor innocent flock of Chriſt, as here following you may ſee, with the ſaid Proclamation alſo prefixed before the ſame, the tenour whereof is this.

A Proclamation for reſiſting and withſtanding of moſt damnable Hereſies, ſown within this Realm by the Diſciples of Luther, and other Hereticks, perverters of Chriſts Religion.

This Proclamation was made throughout all England the year of our Lord, 1519, and the 21 year of K. Henry the Eighth.

THE King our Soveraign Lord, of his moſt vertuous and gracious diſpoſition, conſidering that this noble Realm of England hath of long time continued in the true Catholick Faith of Chriſts Religion, and that his noble Progenitors, Kings of this his ſaid Realm, have before this time made and Enacted many devout Laws, Statutes and Ordinances, for the maintenance and defence of the ſaid Faith againſt the malicious and wicked Sects of Hereticks and Lollards, who by perverſion of Holy Scripture do induce Erroneous opinions, ſow ſedition amongſt Chriſtian people, and finally diſturb the peace and tranquility of Chriſtian Realms, as lately happened in ſome parts of Germany, where by the procurement and ſedition of Martin Luther, and other Hereticks, were ſlain an infinite number of Chriſtian people; conſidering alſo, that as well by the corruption and malice of indiſcreet Preachers, fautors of the ſaid Erroneous Sects, as by certain Heretical and blaſphemous Books lately made, and privily ſent into this Realm, by the Diſciples, fautors and adherents of the ſaid Martin Luther, and other Hereticks the Kings ſubjects, are like to be corrupted, unleſs his Highneſs (as the Defender of the Faith) do put to his moſt gracious help and Authority Royal, to the due and ſpeedy reformation thereof: his Highneſs therefore like a moſt gracious Prince, of his bleſſed and vertuous diſpoſition, for the incomparable zeal which he hath to Chriſts Religion and Faith, and for the ſingular love and affection that he beareth to all his good ſubjects of this his Realm, and ſpecially to the ſalvation of their ſouls, according to his office and duty in that behalf, willeth and intendeth to provide with all convenient expedition, that this his noble Realm may be preſerved from the ſaid peſtiferous, curſed, and ſeditious errors. And foraſmuch as his Highneſs is credibly informed, that ſome of the ſaid Errors be already ſown and ſpread within this his Realm, partly by the corruption of indiſcreet Preachers, partly by Erroneous Books, compiled, printed and written, as well in the Engliſh Tongue, as in Latin and other Languages, repleat with moſt venemous Hereſies, blaſphemies, and ſlanders, intolerable to the clean ears of any good Chriſtian man: his Highneſs therefore like a moſt Gracious and Chriſtian Prince, only intending the ſafeguard of this his Realm, the preſervation of his ſubjects, and ſalvation of their ſouls, willeth now to put in execution, with all diligence poſſible, all good Laws, Statutes and Ordinances, concerning the premiſſes before this time provided, made, and ordained by his moſt noble Progenitors, Kings of England for that purpoſe and intent. Which Laws and Statutes by our Soveraign Lord, and his moſt Honourable Council, by long and deliberate advice for the extirpation, ſuppreſſing and withſtanding of the ſaid Hereſies, have been ſeen, examined, and by them in every part thought good and neceſſary to be put in execution. {KING Hen.}

Wherefore his Highneſs chargeth and ſtraitly commandeth all and every his Lords Spiritual and Temporal, Judges, Juſtices of Peace, Sheriffs, Mayors, Bayliffs, Conſtables; and all other his Officers, Miniſters, and all his true and loving ſubjects, that all favour, affection, and partiality laid apart, they effectually, with all diligence and ſtudy endeavour themſelves ſubſtantially for the executing of all and every of the Articles hereafter enſuing, without diſſimulation, intermiſſion, or excuſe, as they will avoid his high indignation and diſpleaſure.

Firſt, That no man within the Kings Realm, or other his Dominions ſubject to his Highneſs, hereafter preſume to preach, teach, or inform any thing openly or privily, or compile and write any Book, or hold, exerciſe, or keep any Aſſemblies or Schools, in any manner of wiſe, contrary to the Catholick Faith, or determination of Holy Church; nor that any perſon within this his ſaid Realm and Dominions do preſume to preach openly or ſecretly, without they have firſt obtained licenſe of the Biſhop of the Dioceſs where they intend to preach; Curates in their Pariſhes, perſons priviledged, and other by the Law of the Church only except.

Alſo that no man wittingly hereafter, favour, ſupport, or maintain any perſon, which preacheth in form aforeſaid, or maketh any ſuch or like Conventicles and Aſſemblies, holdeth or exerciſeth any Schools, maketh, writeth, or publiſheth any ſuch Book, teacheth, informeth, or ſtirreth the people, or any of them, in any manner of form to the ſaid errors. Moreover, that all and every perſon and perſons, having any Books or writings of any ſuch errors, erroneous Doctrine, and opinion, do deliver or cauſe to be delivered, effectually and actually, all and every ſuch Books and writings, to the Biſhop of the Dioceſs, or to the Ordinary of the place, within fifteen days after this Proclamation pronounced. And in caſe any perſon or perſons, of what eſtate, condition, or degree ſoever they be, do or attempt any thing contrary to this Act and Proclamation, or do not deliver or cauſe to be delivered ſuch Books, within the time aforeſaid, that every Biſhop in his Dioceſs, or Ordinary, ſhall cauſe that perſon or perſons, and every of them in that behalf defamed or evidently ſuſpected, to be arreſted, and detain and keep them under ſafe cuſtody in their Priſons, until ſuch time that the ſaid perſons, and every of them, either have purged themſelves of the ſaid errors, or elſe do abjure the ſaid Erroneous Sects, Preachings, Doctrines, or opinions, as the Law of Holy-Church doth require.

Furthermore, if any perſon by the Law of Holy-Church be convicted before the Biſhop of the Dioceſs, or his Commiſſary, in any caſe above expreſſed, that the ſaid Biſhop may keep in priſon the ſaid perſon or perſons ſo convicted, as it ſhall ſeem beſt to his diſcretion, after the grievouſneſs or quality of the crime. And further, may ſet a fine to be paid to the behoof of the King, by the perſon or perſons convicted, as it ſhall be thought convenient to the ſaid Biſhop, having reſpect to the grievouſneſs of the offence of the ſaid perſon or perſons: the ſaid fine to be certified by the Biſhop into the Kings Exchequer, there to be levied to the Kings uſe, except in ſuch caſes in which by the Laws of Holy Church, the ſaid perſons convict of Hereſies ought totally to be left to the Secular juriſdiction.

Alſo if any perſon within this his Realm of England, or other his Dominions, be by ſentence judicial convicted of the ſaid Preachings and Doctrines prohibited, Erroneous opinions, Schools, and informations, or any of them, and and before the Biſhop or his Commiſſary do abjure, according to the form of the Laws of Holy Church, the foreſaid erroneous Sects, Doctrines, Schools, or informations, or elſe be pronounced by the Biſhops or their Commiſſaries after their Abjuration by them before made, to be relapſed, ſo that after the Laws of Holy Church, they ought to be relinquiſhed to the juriſdiction ſecular, (wherein faith is to be given to the Biſhop or his Commiſſaries in that behalf) then the Sheriff of the County, Mayor, Sheriffs, or Mayor and Bailiffs of the ſame City, Town, or Burrough, next unto the ſaid Biſhop or Commiſſaries, ſhall be perſonally preſent at the ſentence given, by the ſaid Biſhop or Commiſſaries thereunto required, and after the ſaid ſentence given, ſhall receive the ſaid perſons, and every of them, and put them to further execution, according to the Laws of this Realm.

Sheriffs to be preſent at the ſentence.

Alſo the Chancellor, Treaſurer of England, the Juſtice of the one Bench and the other, Juſtices of Peace, Sheriffs, Mayors, and Bailiffs of Cities and Towns, and other Officers having governance of the people which now be, or for the time hereafter ſhall be, ſhall make Oath in taking their charge and miniſtration, to give their whole power and diligence, to put away, and to make utterly to ceaſe, and deſtroy all manner of Hereſies and errors, commonly called Lollardies, within the precincts of their offices and adminiſtrations, from time to time with all their power.

Alſo they ſhall aſſiſt the Biſhops and their Commiſſaries, and them ſhall favour and maintain as oftentimes as that to do they or any of them ſhall be required by the ſaid Biſhops or their Commiſſaries; ſo that the Biſhops or their Commiſſaries ſhall bear and pay the reaſonable coſts of the ſaid Officers and Miniſters, when, and as often as they ſhall travel or ride to arreſt Hereticks and Lollards, or to aſſiſt the ſaid Biſhops or Commiſſaries, by vertue of the Kings Laws and Statutes.

Inquiſition at Seſſions.

Moreover, The Juſtices of the Kings-Bench, Juſtices of Peace, and Juſtices of Aſſiſe, ſhall enquire at their Seſſions and ſittings, of all thoſe that hold any Errors or Hereſies, and who be their maintainers, recepters, favourers, and ſupporters, common writers of Books, as alſo of their Sermons, Schools, Conventicles, Congregations, and Confederacies.

Furthermore, if any perſon be Indicted of any of the points aboveſaid, the Juſtices of the Peace have power to award againſt them a Capias, and the Sheriffs be bound to arreſt ſuch perſons ſo Indicted, ſo ſoon as they may be found by themſelves, or by their Officers. And foraſmuch as cogniſance of Hereſies, Errors and Lollardies, appertaineth to the Judg of Holy Church, and not to the Judg ſecular, the perſons ſo Indicted to be delivered to the Biſhops of the places, or their Commiſſaries, by Indenture between them to be made within ten days after their arreſt, or ſooner, if it can be done, thereof to be acquit or convict by the Laws of Holy Church, in caſe that thoſe perſons be not indicted of other things, whereof the knowledg appertains to the Judges and Officers ſecular. In which caſe, after they be acquit and delivered afore the Juſtice ſecular, of thoſe things pertaining to the Judg ſecular, that they be conveyed in ſafe guard to Ordinaries or their Commiſſaries, and to them to be delivered by Indentures (as is above ſaid) there to be acquit or convicted of the ſaid Hereſies, Errors, and Lollardies (as is above ſaid) after the Laws of Holy Church; provided that the Indictments be not taken in evidence, but for an information afore the Judges Spiritual, againſt ſuch Indict, but that the Ordinaries commence their proceſs againſt thoſe Indicts, in the ſame manner as no Indictment had been, having no regard to ſuch Indictments.

Moreover, That no manner of perſon or perſons, of what eſtate, degree, or condition he or they be, do from henceforth preſume to bring into this Realm, or do ſell, receive, take, or detain any Book or Work, printed or written, which is made, or hereafter ſhall be made againſt the Faith Catholick, or againſt the holy Decrees, Laws, and Ordinances of Holy Church, or in reproach, rebuke, or ſlander of the King, his honourable Council, or his Lords Spiritual or Temporal. And in caſe they have any ſuch Book or Work, they ſhall incontinent, upon the having of them, bring the ſaid Book or Work to the Biſhop of the Dioceſs, without concealment or fraud; or if they know any perſon having any of the ſaid Books, they ſhall detect them to the ſaid Biſhop, all favour or affection laid apart, and that they fail not thus to do, as they will avoid the Kings high indignation and diſpleaſure.

The Books which in this Proclamation generally are reſtrained and forbidden, be afterward in the Regiſter more eſpecially named by the Biſhops. Whereof the moſt part were in Latin, as are above recited, and ſome were in Engliſh, as theſe and other, partly alſo above expreſſed.

The Examination of William Thorpe, &c.

Although theſe Books with all other of their like ſort by the vertue of this Proclamation were inhibited to all Engliſhmen to uſe or to read; yet Licenſe was granted before to Sir Thomas More, by Tonſtal Biſhop of London, Anno 1527, that he notwithſtanding might have and peruſe them, with a Letter alſo ſent to him from the ſaid Biſhop, or rather by the advice of other Biſhops, deſiring him, that he would ſhew his cunning, and play the pretty man, like a Demoſthenes, in expugning the Doctrine of theſe Books and opinions: who albeit he was no great Divine, yet becauſe he ſaw ſome towardneſs in him by his Book of Utopia, and other fine Poetry of his, therefore he thought him a meet man for their purpoſe, to withſtand the proceedings of the Goſpel, either in making ſome apparance of reaſon againſt it, or at leaſt to out-face it, and daſh it out of countenance. Wherein there lacked on his part neither good will nor labour to ſerve the Biſhops turn, ſo far forth as all his Rhetorick could reach: filling up with fineneſs of wit, and ſcoffing terms, where true knowledg and judgment of Scripture did fail; as by his works and writings againſt Bilney, Tyndal, Frith, Fiſh, Barns, Luther, &c. may ſoon be diſcerned, if the reaſons, and manner of his handling be well weighed, and rightly examined with the touchſtone of the Scriptures. But now to fall into our ſtory again.

Maſter More the Biſhops agent in confuting the Lutherans.

Upon this fierce and terrible Proclamation aforeſaid, thus deviſed and ſet out in the Kings name, Anno 1525, the Biſhops which were the procurers hereof, had that now which they would have: neither did there lack on their part any ſtudy unapplied, any ſtone unremoved, any corner unſearched for the diligent execution of the ſame. Whereupon enſued a grievous perſecution, and ſlaughter of the faithful. Of whom the firſt that went to wrack was Thomas Bilney, of whom ſufficiently afore hath been ſaid; and the next was Richard Bayfield, as in the ſtory here followeth.

Richard Bayfield, Martyr.

Richard Bayfield, Martyr.

FOllowing the order of years and of times, as the courſe of our Hiſtory requireth, next after the conſummation of Thomas Bilney, we have to intreat of the Martyrdom of Richard Bayfield, which in the month of November, the ſame year, which was the year of our Lord, 1532, was burned in Smithfield.

This

Maxwell and Stacy, Londoners.

This Richard Bayfield, ſometime a Monk of Bery, was converted by Doctor Barns, and two godly men of London, Brickmakers, Maſter Maxwell, and Maſter Stacy, Wardens of their Company. Who were grafted in the Doctrine of Jeſus Chriſt, and through their godly converſation of life, converted many men and women, both in London and inthe Country: and once a year of their own coſt, went about to viſit the Brethren and Siſters ſcattered abroad. Doctor Barns at that time, much reſorted to the Abbey of Bery, where Bayfield was, to one Doctor Ruffam, who had been at Lovane together Students. At that time it happened that this Bayfield the Monk was Chamberlain of the houſe to provide lodging for the ſtrangers, and to ſee them well entertained: who delighted much in Doctor Barns talk, and in the other lay-mens talk, afore rehearſed; and at the laſt, Doctor Barns gave him a New Teſtament in Latin, and the other two gave him Tyndals Teſtament in Engliſh, with a Book called, The wicked Mammon, and the obedience of a Chriſtian man: wherein he proſpered ſo mightily in two years ſpace, that he was caſt into the priſon of his houſe, there ſore whipped, with a Gag in his mouth, and then ſtocked, and ſo continued in the ſame torment three quarters of a year before Doctor Barns could get him out; which he brought to paſs, by the means of Doctor Ruffam aforeſaid, and ſo he was committed to Doctor Barns to go to Cambridge with him. By that time he had been there a good while, he taſted ſo well of good Letters, that he never returned home again to his Abbey, but went to London to Maxwell and Stacy, and they kept him ſecretly a while, and ſo conveyed him beyond the Sea; Doctor Barns being then in the Fleet for Gods Word. This Bayfield mightily proſpered in the knowledg of God, and was beneficial to Maſter Tyndal, and Maſter Frith; for he brought ſubſtance with him, and was their own hand, and ſold all their works, and the Germans works, both in Fraance and in England; and at the laſt coming to London, to Mr. Smiths houſe in Bucklers-Bury, there was he bewrayed, and dogged from that houſe to his Book-binders in Mark-Lane, and there taken, and carried to Lollards Tower, and from thence to the Coalhouſe, by reaſon that one Parſon Patmore, Parſon of Muchhaddam in Eſſex, then lying in Lollards Tower, was in the Doctrine and in the Kingdom of Chriſt there confirmed by him. This Parſon Patmore, after long trouble was abjured and condemned by the Biſhops to perpetual priſon, and delivered afterward by the Kings pardon, as more appeareth in the ſequel of his ſtory among abjurers, &c. He was taken, becauſe he married his Prieſts in thoſe days. He had always Corn plenty, and when the Markets were very dear, he would ſend plenty of his Corn thither to pluck down the prices thereof.

R. Bayfield whipped and priſoned amongſt the Friers.

R. Bayfield a maintainer of Tyndal and Frith.

Parſon Patmore died in Lollards Tower.

The cruel handling of R. Bayfield in the Colehouſe.

This Richard Bayfield being in the Colehouſe, was worſe handled than he was before in the Lollards Tower; for there he was tyed both by the neck, middle, and legs, ſtanding upright by the walls, divers times manicled, to accuſe other that had bought his Books; but he accuſed none, but ſtood to his Religion and Confeſſion of his Faith, even unto the very end, and was in the Conſiſtory of Pauls thrice put to his trial, whether he would abjure or no? He ſaid he would diſpute for his Faith, and ſo did to their great ſhame; Stokeſley then being his Judg, with the aſſiſtance of Wincheſter, and other Biſhops, whereof here followeth now the circumſtance in order to be ſeen.

The Articles laid to Richard Bayfield, by the foreſaid Biſhops, were theſe, Anno 1531. November 10.

11. That he was appointed by the ſaid Biſhop of London to appear before the ſaid Biſhop, the five and twentieth day of April next after his Abjuration, to receive the reſidue of his penance, and after his Abjuration, he fled beyond the Sea, and appeared not.

12. That the twentieth day of June next following his Abjuration, he did appear before the ſaid Biſhop Tonſtall, in the Chappel of the Biſhop of Norwiches place, and there it was newly enjoyned him in part of penance, that he ſhould provide him an habit convenient for his Order and profeſſion, within eight days then next following; which he had not done.

13. That it was there again enjoyned him, that he ſhould depart from the City, Dioceſs, and Juriſdiction of London, and no more to come within it, without the ſpecial licenſe of the Biſhop of London, or his ſucceſſor for the time being: which he had not fulfilled.

The Anſwer of Richard Bayfield to the Articles prefixed.

The anſwer of Ric. Bayfield to the Articles.

TO the firſt Article he confeſſed, that he was profeſſed a Monk in the Monaſtery aforeſaid, in the year 1514.

To the ſecond Article he anſwered, That he was a Prieſt and took Orders, Anno 1518.

To the third Article he confeſſed the Bill and Schedule to be written with his hand, which is annexed thereunto, and that he brought over the ſaid Books and Works a year and a half paſt, and a great number of every ſort. Being further demanded for what intent he brought them into the Realm; he anſwered, To the intent that the Goſpel of Chriſt might be ſet forward, and God the more glorified in this Realm amongſt Chriſtian people; and that he had ſold and diſperſed many of thoſe Books before named, to ſundry perſons within this Realm, and to divers of the Dioceſs of London. Being further demanded, whether Martin Luther was condemned as an Heretick by the Pope? he anſwered, That he heard ſay, that Martin with all his Sect and adherents, were, and are condemned as Hereticks by the Pope. And being demanded, whether Zuinglius was of Luthers Sect; he anſwered, that he never ſpake with him. Being asked whether Zuinglius was a Catholick; he anſwered, that he could not tell. Being inquired inquired whether the Books contained in the Schedules did contain any errors in them; he ſaid, he could not tell, neither could he judg. Alſo he confeſſed, That the common fame hath been within theſe two or three years, that Oecolampadius and Zuinglius be Hereticks; alſo that ſuch as lean to Martin Luther be Hereticks. Alſo he confeſſed, That being beyond the Sea, he heard ſay before he brought into this Realm the Books contained in the ſaid Bills, that the King had by Proclamation prohibited, That no man ſhould bring into this Realm any of Martin Luthers Books, or of his Sect.

KING Hen. 8.

Which Confeſſion thus ended, the Biſhop appointed him to appear the next day.

Saturday being the eleventh of November, Richard Bayfield appeared, and acknowledged the anſwers that he had made in the Seſſion the day before. Which thing done, the Official objected the fourth Article unto him. VVhereunto he anſwered, that he could not tell whether there be any Hereſies in them; for he had read no Hereſies in them. And being demanded whether he had read any of thoſe Books; he anſwered, that he had read the greater part of them here and there, but not throughout.

He was demanded, whether he believed the fornamed Books to be good, and of the true Faith. He anſwered, that he judged they were good, and of the true Faith. Being inquired what Books he read in the Realm; he ſaid, that he had read the New Teſtament in Latin, and other Books mentioned in the Bills, but he ſaid, that he read none tranſlated: notwithſtanding he confeſſed that he had read a Book called Thorp, in the preſence and audience of others, and alſo a Book of John Friths Purgatory, which he had read to himſelf alone, as he ſaid; and alſo had read to himſelf a Book called, The practiſe of Prelates; and alſo ſaid, that he had read a Book called, The Parable of the wicked Mammon, but in the preſence and hearing of others which he knew not.

The Book of Thorps Examination. The Book of John Frith againſt Purgatory. The Practice of Prelates, and wicked Mammon. The Book of Obedience. The ſum of Holy Scripture. A Dialogue betweeen the Plowman and the Gentleman.

Alſo he confeſſed that he had read the Obedience of a Chriſtian man, and the Sum of Scripture among company, and alſo the Dialogue betwixt the Plowman and the Gentleman, among company as he thought: alſo he had read a piece of the anſwer of Tindal made to Sir Thomas More; likewiſe he had read the Dialogue of Frith to himſelf: he had read alſo the Prologues of the five Books of Moſes, contained in the long Schedule, and in company as he thought.

All which Books he had read under manner aforeſaid within theſe two years laſt paſt. And as for the New Teſtament in Engliſh, he read it before he had read theſe Books ſpecified in the Schedule before rehearſed.

To the third Article as touching Zuinglius and others, he ſuppoſed that they held the ſame Doctrine that Luther did; but that he thought them to vary in ſome points.

The ſixteenth day of November, Richard Bayfield appeared again before the Biſhop, who inquired of him of what ſect Zuinglius was. He ſaid, he thought that he held with Luther in ſome points, &c.

Alſo he confeſſed, that firſt he brought Books of the ſorts above named into this Realm, about Midſummer was twelve month, and landed them at Colcheſter, and afterward brought part of them to this City, and ſome he diſperſed and ſold in this City. The ſecond time that he brought Books was about All-Hallontide was twelve month, and landed them at St. Catharines; the which Books the Lord Chancellor took from him. Alſo that at Eaſter laſt was the third time that he brought over the Books now ſhewed unto him, and contained in theſe two Bills, and landed with them in Northfolk, and from thence brought them to the City of London in a Male.

To the fifth, ſixth, and ſeventh Articles, he anſwered and confeſſed them to be true.

To the eighth he anſwered, that it was enjoyed him as is contained in the Article; the which injunction he fulfilled.

To the ninth he anſwered, that he did not remember it.

To the tenth he anſwered, that it was enjoyned him that he ſhould go to the Abbey of Bury, and there continue: the which he ſaid he did three times; but he did not wear his Monks Cowl, as he was enjoyned.

The eleventh Article he confeſſed.

For the twelfth article, that he did not wear his Monks habit according to the Abjuration, he referred himſelf to the Acts whether he were ſo enjoyned or no.

To the thirteenth Article he ſaid, that he did not remember the contents thereof, but referred himſelf to the Acts. Notwithſtanding he confeſſed that he had no licenſe of the Biſhop of London to come to the City or Dioceſs of London, nor to make any abode there.

The Sentence given againſt him in a caſe of Relapſe.

The ſentence given againſt Richard Bayfield.

IN the Name of God, Amen. VVe John by the ſufferance of God, Biſhop of London, in a caſe of Inquiſition of Hereſie, and relapſe of the ſame, firſt begun before Mr. Rich. Foxfard, Doctor of both Laws, our Official, now depending before us undecided, againſt thee Richard Bayfield Prieſt and Monk, profeſſed to the order and rule of Saint Benedict, in the Monaſtery of Saint Edmundsbury, in the Dioceſs of Norwich, and by means of the cauſes within written under our juriſdiction, and with all favour rightly and lawfully proceeding, with all favour poſſible, the merits and circumſtances of the cauſes of this Inquiſition heard, weighed, underſtood, and fully diſcuſſed by us the ſaid Biſhop, reſerving unto our ſelves that which by Law ought to be reſerved; have thought good to proceed in this manner to the pronouncing of our definitive ſentence.

Forſomuch as by the Acts inacted, inquired, propounded, and alledged, and by thee judicially confeſſed, we do find that thou haſt abjured certain Errors and Hereſies, and damnable opinions by thee confeſſed, as well particularly as generally, before our reverend Fellow and Brother, then thy Ordinary, according to the form and order of the Church: and that one Martin Luther, together with his adherents and complices, receivers and favourers, whatſoever they be, was condemned as an Heretick by the authority of Pope Leo the Tenth, of moſt happy memory, and by the authority of the Apoſtolick See, and the Books and all writings, Schednles and Sermons of the ſaid Martin Luther, his adherents and complices, whether they be found in Latin, or in any other languages imprinted or tranſlated, for the manifold Hereſies and Errors, and damnable opinions that are in them, are condemned, reproved, and utterly rejected, and inhibition made by the authority of the ſaid See, to all faithful Chriſtians, under the pain of Excommunication, and other puniſhments in that behalf to be incurred by the Law, that no man by any means preſume to read, teach, hear, imprint, or publiſh, or by any do means defend, directly or indirectly, ſecretly or openly, in their houſes, or in any other publick or private places, any ſuch manner of Writings, Books, Errors, or Articles, as are contained more at large in the Apoſtolick Letters, drawn out in form of a publick Inſtrument; whereunto and to the contents thereof we refer our ſelves as far as is expedient, and no otherwiſe. And forſomuch as we do perceive that thou diddeſt underſtand the premiſſes, and yet theſe things notwithſtanding after thy Abjuration made (as is aforeſaid) thou haſt brought in divers and ſundry times many Books of the ſaid Martin Luther, and his adherents and complices; and of other Hereticks, the names, Titles and Authors of which Books here follow, and are theſe, Martin Luther, Of the abrogating of the private Maſs. The Declarations of Martin Luther upon the Epiſtles of St. Peter. Luther upon the Epiſtles of Saint Paul and Jude. Luther upon Monaſtical Vowers. Luthers Commentary upon the Epiſtle of Saint Paul to the Galatians. Johannes Oecomlampadius, upon the Expoſition of theſe words, Hoc eſt corpus meum. The Annotations of Oecomlampadius upon the Epiſtles of Saint Paul unto the Romans. Oecolampadius his Commentary upon the three laſt Prophets, Aggeus, Zachary, and Malachy. Of all which kind of Books, both in Latin and Engliſh, tranſlated, ſet forth, and imprinted, containing not only Lutherian Hereſies, but alſo the damnable Hereſies of other Hereticks condemned; foraſmuch as thou haſt brought over from the parties beyond the Sea, a great number into this Realm of England, and ſpecially to our City and Dioceſs of London, and haſt procured them to be brought and conveyed over, alſo haſt kept by thee, and ſtudied thoſe Books, and haſt publiſhed and read them unto divers Chriſtian men, and many of thoſe Books alſo haſt diſperſed and given unto divers perſons dwelling within our City and Dioceſs of London, and haſt confeſſed and affirmed before our Official, That thoſe Books of Martin Luther and other Hereticks his complices and adherents, and all the contents in them are good and agreeable to the true Faith: ſaying thus, That they are good, and of the true Faith: And by this means and pretence haſt commended and praiſed Martin Luther, his adherents and complices, and haſt favoured and believed their Errors, Hereſies, and opinions. Therefore we John the Biſhop aforeſaid, firſt calling upon the Name of Chriſt, and ſetting God only before our eyes; by the counſel and conſent of the Divines and Lawyers, with whom in this behalf we have conferred, do declare and decree thee the aforeſaid Richard Bayfield, otherwiſe called Somerſam, for the contempt of thy Abjuration, as a favourer of the aforeſaid Martin Luther, his adherents, complices, favourers, and other condemned Hereticks, and for commending and ſtudying, reading, having, retaining, publiſhing, ſelling, giving and diſperſing the Books and Writings, as well of the ſaid Martin Luther, his adherents, and diſciples, as of other Hereticks before named, and alſo for crediting and maintaining the Errors, Hereſies, and damnable opinions contained in the ſaid Books and Writings, worthily to be and have been an Heretick; and that thou by the pretence of the premiſſes art fallen again moſt damnably into Hereſie; and we pronounce that thou art and haſt been a relapſed Heretick, and haſt incurred and oughteſt to incur the pain and puniſhment of a relapſe: and we ſo decree and declare, and alſo condemn thee thereunto, and that by the pretence of the premiſſes, thou haſt even by the Law incurred the ſentence of the greater Excommunication; and thereby we pronounce and declare thee to have been and to be Excommunicate, and clearly diſcharge, exonerate, and degrade thee from all priviledg and prerogative of the Eccleſiaſtical Order, and alſo deprive thee of all Eccleſiaſtical Office and Benefice; alſo we pronounce and declare thee, by this our ſentence or decree, the which we here promulgate and declare in theſe writings, that thou art actually to be degraded, depoſed, and deprived, as followeth.

If Chriſt were before your eyes, ye would not condemn this good man for theſe good Books.

The Sentence of Degradation againſt bleſſed Bayfield.

IN the Name of God, Amen. We John by the permiſſion of God Biſhop of London, rightfully and lawfully proceeding in this behalf, do diſmiſs thee Richard Bayfield, alias Somerſam, being pronounced by us a relapſed Heretick, and degraded by us from all Eccleſiaſtical priviledg out of the Eccleſiaſtical Court, pronouncing that the ſecular power here preſent ſhould receive thee under their juriſdiction; earneſtly requiring and deſiring in the bowels of Jeſus Chriſt, that the execution of this worthy puniſhment to be done upon thee, and againſt thee in this behalf, may be ſo moderated, that there be neither overmuch cruelty, neither too much favourable gentleneſs, but that it may be to the health and ſalvation of thy ſoul, and to the extirpation, fear, terror, and converſion of all other Hereticks unto the unity of the Catholick Faith. This our final decree by this our ſentence definitive we have cauſed to be publiſhed in form aforeſaid.

And they ſhall caſt you out of their Synagogue for my names ſake.

Monday the twentieth of November 1531, in the Quire of the Cathedral Church of Saint Paul, before the ſaid John Biſhop of London judicially ſitting, being aſſiſted with John Abbot of Weſtminſter, and Robert Abbot of Waltham, Nicholas Prior of Chriſts-Church in London, theſe Honourable Lords being alſo preſent, Henry Earl of Eſſex, Richard Gray, Brother to the Marqueſs of Sommerſet, John Lambert Mayor of London, Richard Greſham, and Edward Altam Sheriffs, (the which Mayor and Sheriffs were required to be there preſent by the Biſhop of Londons Letters hereafter written, and by virtue of a Statute of King Henry the Fourth, King of England) alſo in the preſence of divers Canons, the Chancellor, Official, and the Archdeacon of London, with the Biſhops Chaplains, and a great number both of the Clergy and Laity; Matthew Greſton the Regiſter, being alſo there preſent: Maſter Richard Bayfield, alias Somerſam, was brought forth by Thomas Turner the Apparator his Keeper, in whoſe preſence the tranſumpt of the Apoſtolick Bull of Pope Leo the Tenth, upon the condemnation of Martin Luther and his adherents, was brought forth and ſhewed, ſealed with the ſeal of Thomas Wolſey late Legate de Latere, and ſubſcribed with the ſign and name of Maſter Robert Tunnes, publick Notary, and alſo the Decree upon the condemnation of certain Books brought in by him, ſealed with the Seals of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and ſubſcribed by three Notaries.

Anno 1531

Of this Statute read before.

Mr. Bayfield again brought before the Biſhop

Then the Biſhop of London repeated in effect before him his Abjuration which he had before made, and other his demerits committed and done beſide his Abjuration: And the ſaid Bayfield ſaid, That he was not culpable in the Articles that were objected againſt him, and deſired that the Hereſies contained in the Books which he brought over might be declared in open audience. Then the Biſhop after certain talk had with the ſaid Bayfield as touching the deſert of his cauſe, asked him, VVhether he could ſhew any cauſe why he ſhould not be delivered over unto the ſecular power, and be pronounced as a relapſe, and ſuffer puniſhment as a relapſe. The ſaid Bayfield declared or propounded no cauſe, but ſaid that he brought over thoſe Books for lack of money, and not to ſow any Hereſies. And incontinent the ſaid Bayfield with a vehement ſpirit (as it appeared) ſaid unto the Biſhop of London, The life of you of the Spiritualty is ſo evil, that ye be Hereticks, and ye do not only live evil, but do maintain evil living, and alſo do let, that what true living is may not be known; and ſaid, that their living is againſt Chriſts Goſpel, and that their belief was never taken of Chriſts Church. Then the ſaid Biſhop, after long deliberation had, for ſo much as the ſaid

The ſaying of Richard Bayfield to the Biſhop of London.

KING Hen. 8. said Richard Bayfield, he said, could ſhew no cauſe why he ſhould not be declared as a relaps, read the Decree and ſentence againſt him: by the which amongſt other things he condemned him as an Heretick, and pronounced him to be puniſhed with the puniſhment due unto ſuch as fall again into Hereſie, and by his words did degrade him, and alſo declared that he ſhould be actually degraded, as is more at large contained in the long ſentence.

Sentence againſt Richard Bayfield.

The foreſaid ſentence being ſo read by the Biſhop of London, he proceeded immediately to the actual and ſolemn degrading of the ſaid Rich. Bayfield, alias Somerſam, and there ſolemnly and actually degraded him before the people; the which thing being done, he diſmiſſed him by the ſentence aforeſaid from the Eccleſiaſtical Court. Whereupon the ſecular power, being there preſent, received him into their juriſdiction, without any Writ in that behalf obtained, but only by vertue of the Biſhops Letters by the Statute of King Henry the Fourth, in that behalf provided and directed unto them under the Biſhops Seal. The tenor of which Letters hereafter follow.

The Letters of requiry directed to the Mayor and Sheriffs of the City of London, that they ſhould be preſent that day, when the ſentence ſhould be given, to receive the Heretick (as they called him) that was condemned.

The Letters of requiry to the Mayor and Sheriffs of London.

JOhn by the permiſſion of God Biſhop of London, unto our dearly beloved in Chriſt, the right honourable Lord Mayor of the City of London, and the Sheriffs of the ſame, Health, Grace, and Benediction. Whereas we have already by our Vicar general, proceeded in a certain cauſe of Hereſie, and relaps into the ſame againſt one Richard Bayfield alias Somerſam, and intend upon Monday next being the twentieth day of this preſent month of November, to give a ſentence definitive againſt the ſaid Richard Bayfield alias Somerſam, and to leave and deliver him over unto the ſecular power: We require you the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs aforeſaid, the Kings Majeſties Vicegerents, even in the bowels of Jeſus Chriſt, that according to the form and effect of the Statute of our moſt Noble and famous Prince in Chriſt our Lord, the Lord Henry the Fourth, by the Grace of God late King of England, you will be perſonally preſent in the Quire of the Cathedral Church of Saint Paul, with your favourable aid and aſſiſtance in this behalf, the day that the ſentence ſhall be given, and to receive the ſaid Richard Bayfield, alias Somerſam, after his ſentence ſo given, to diſcharge us and our Officers, and to do further according to the tenor and effect of the ſaid Statute; as far as ſhall be required of you according to the Canonical ſanctions, and the laudable cuſtom of the famous Kingdom of England, in this behalf accuſtomed. In witneſs whereof we have ſet our Seal unto this preſent. Dated the nineteenth day of November, Anno 1531, and in the firſt year of our conſecration.

On Monday the 20 day of November in the year aforeſaid in the Quire of the Cathedral Church of Saint Paul, the Biſhop of London calling unto him John Abbat of Weſtminſter, Robert Abbat of Waltham, Nicholas Prior of Chriſts Church of the City of London, Maſter J. Cox Auditor and Vicar General to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Peter Ligham, Official of the Court of Canterbury, Thomas Bagh, Chancellor of the Church of Saint Pauls, William Cliefe, Archdeacon of London, John Incent Canon Reſidentiary of the ſame, William Briton, Robert Birch, and Hugh A-price, Doctors of both Laws, in the preſence of us Matthew Grifton Regiſter, Anthony Huſſie, Richard Martine, and Thomas Shadwall publick Notaries and Scribes appointed in this behalf, briefly rehearſed the anſwers of the ſame Bayfield in effect, and his abjuration, and other his demerits by him done beſide his abjuration. The which religious perſons, and other Eccleſiaſtical men aboveſaid; thought it good and agreed that the ſaid Biſhop ſhould proceed againſt him in this caſe of relaps, and ſhould pronounce, and give forth the ſentence againſt him in caſe aforeſaid; and ſo he was delivered to the Sheriffs to carry to Newgate, being commanded to bring him again upon Monday following into Pauls upper Quire, there to give attendance upon the Biſhop of London with the reſidue till they had done with him; and by and by the Sheriffs were commanded to have him into the Veſtry, and then to bring him forth again in Antichriſts apparel to be degraded before them. When he had degraded him kneeling upon the higheſt ſtep of the Altar, he took his Croſier ſtaff, and ſmote him on the breaſt, that he threw him down backwards, and brake his head, that he ſounded, and when he came to himſelf again, he thanked God that he was delivered from the malignant Church of Antichriſt, and that he was come into the true ſincere Church of Jeſus Chriſt militant here in Earth; and I truſt anon, ſaid he, to be in Heaven with Jeſus Chriſt, and the Church Triumphant for ever: and ſo was he led forth through the Quire to Newgate, and there reſted about an hour in prayer, and ſo went to the Fire in his apparel manfully and joyfully, and there, for lack of a ſpeedy Fire, was half an hour alive. And when the left Arm was on Fire and burned, he rubbed it with his right hand, and it fell from his body, and he continued in prayer to the end without moving.

The Martyrdome of Richard Bayfield

Sir Thomas More, after he had brought this good man to his end, ceaſed not to after his death rake in his Aſhes, to pry and ſpy out what ſparks he could find of reproach and contumely, whereby to race out all good memory of his name and fame. In ſearching whereof he hath found out two things to lay againſt him. The one is, that he ſaith, he went about to aſſure himſelf of two Wives at once, one in Brabant, another in England. The ſecond, that after his taking, all the while that he was not in utter deſpair of his Pardon, he was content to forſwear his Doctrine, and letted not to diſcloſe his brethren. For the anſwer whereof although there were no more to be ſaid, yet this were enough to ſay, that Maſter More thus ſaid of him, a man ſo blinded in the zeal of popery, ſo deadly ſet againſt the one ſide, and ſo partially affectionate unto the other, that in them whom he favoureth he can ſee nothing but all fair Roſes and ſweet Vertue; in the other which he hateth, there is never a thing can pleaſe his phanſie, but all as black as pitch, vice, abomination, Hereſie and folly, whatſoever they do, or intend to do. But as touching the defence of this Bayfield, as alſo of other more, I will defer the defence of them to a ſeveral Apology by it ſelf, hereafter God willing, to be adjoyned.

Mr. More a partial judge in matters of Hereſie.

John Tewkesbury Leatherſeller of London, Martyr.

Joh. Tewkesbury Leatherſeller of London, Martyr.

John Tewkesbury was converted by the reading of Tindals Teſtament, and the wicked Mammon. He had the Bible written. In all points of Religion he openly did diſpute in the Biſhops Chapel in his Palace. Who in the Doctrine of Juſtification and all other Articles of his Faith was very expert, and prompt in his anſwers, in ſuch ſort as Tonſtal and all his learned men were aſhamed, that a Leatherſeller ſhould ſo diſpute with them, with ſuch power of the Scriptures and heavenly wiſdom, that they were not able to reſiſt him. This diſputation continued a ſevennight. The proceſs of whoſe Examinations, Articles, and anſwers, here follow, as they are out of the Biſhops Regiſter extracted.

Ex Regiſt. Lon.

On Wedneſday the one and twentieth day of April, in the year of our Lord 1529. John Tewkesbury was brought into the Conſiſtory at London, before Cuthbert Biſhop of London, and his aſſiſtants, Henry Biſhop of Saint Aſſe, and John Abbat of Weſtminſter. Unto whom the Biſhop of London declared that he had at divers times exhorted him to recant the errors and Hereſies which he held and defended, even as he did then again exhort him, not to truſt too much to his own wit and learning, but unto the doctrine of the holy Mother the Church. Who made anſwer, that in his judgment he did not err from the Doctrine of the holy Mother the Church.

The examination of Joh. Tewkesbury before Tonſtal Biſhop of London.

And at the laſt, being examined upon errors, which, they ſaid, were in the ſaid Book called the wicked Mammon, he anſwered thus; Take ye the Book and read it over, and I think in my Conſcience, ye ſhall find no fault in it. And being asked by the ſaid Biſhop, whether he did rather give credit to his Book or to the Goſpel, he anſwered that the Goſpel is and ever hath been true. And moreover, being particularly examined what he thought of this Article, That the Jews of good intent and zeal ſlew Chriſt; He anſwered, Look ye the Book through, before and after as it lieth, and ye ſhall find a better tale in it, than ye make of it; and further thought, that whoſoever tranſlated the New Teſtament, and made the Book, meaning the wicked Mammon, he did it of good zeal, and by the Spirit of God.

Alſo being further asked, by the ſaid Biſhop of London, whether he would ſtand to the contents of his Book, he anſwered, Look ye the Book before and after, and I will be content to ſtand unto it. Then being examined, whether that all good works muſt be done without reſpect of any thing; He anſwered, that a man ſhould do good works for the love of God only, and for no hope of any reward higher nor lower in Heaven; for if He ſhould, it were preſumption. Alſo being demanded, whether that Chriſt with all his works did not deſerve Heaven, He anſwered and ſaid, that it was plain enough. Which things being done, the Biſhop ſaid further to John Tewkesbury thus; I tell thee before God and thoſe which are here preſent, in examination of my Conſcience, that the Articles above named, and many other more contained in the ſame Book are falſe, heretical, and condemned by the holy Church: how thinkeſt thou? And futher, the ſaid Biſhop of London ſaid unto him again, I tell thee before God and thoſe which are here preſent, &c. and ſo asked him again, what he thought of thoſe Articles. And after many exhortations, he commanded him to anſwer determinately under pain of the Law, ſaying further unto him, that if he refuſed to anſwer, he muſt declare him an open and obſtinate Heretick according to the order of the Law. Which things ſo done, the Biſhop asked John Tewkesbury again, whether the ſaid Book, called the wicked Mammon, were good?

The Biſhops judgment of the Book of the wicked Mammon.

To which Interrogatory he anſwereth, That he thinketh in his Conſcience there is nothing in the Book but that which is true. And to this Article objected, that is, that Faith only juſtifieth without works, he anſwereth, that it is well ſaid. Whereunto the Biſhop inferreth again, that the Articles before objected, with divers other contained in the Book called the wicked Mammon, were falſe, erroneous, damnable, and heretical, and reproved and condemned by the Church; and before God, and all thoſe that were preſent, for the diſcharge of his Conſcience, he had often and very gently exhorted the ſaid John Tewkesbury, that he would revoke and renounce his errors: otherwiſe if he did intend to perſevere in them, he muſt declare him an Heretcik, which he would be very ſorry to do. Theſe things thus done, the Biſhop oftentimes offered him, that he ſhould chuſe what Spiritual or Temporal man he would to be his Counſellor, and gave him time as before to deliberate with himſelf until the next ſitting.

The judgment of Joh. Tewkesbury of the Book of the wicked Mammon.

Another examination of John Tewkesbury.

Alſo in the ſame month of April, in the year of our Lord aforeſaid, the Biſhop of London Cuthbert Tonſtal ſitting in the Conſiſtory, with Nicholas of Ely, John of Lincoln, and John Bath and Wells, &c. This John Tewkesbury was brought before them. After certain Articles being repeated unto him, the Biſhop of London brought before him a certain Book, called the wicked Mammon, asking him whether the Book was of the ſame Impreſſion and making, as was his Books that he had ſold to others? Who anſwered and ſaid, it was the ſame. Whereupon the Biſhop of London asking him again, Whether the Book contained the ſame error or no? Who anſwered again, ſaying, I pray God, that the condemnation of the Goſpel, and tranſlation of the Teſtament be not to your ſhame, and that you be not in peril for it: for the condemnation of it and of the other is all one. Further he ſaid, that he had ſtudied the holy Scripture by the ſpace of theſe ſeventeen years, and as he may ſee the ſpots of his face through the glaſs, ſo in reading the New Teſtament, he knoweth the faults of his ſoul. Furthermore, he was examined upon certain Points and Articles, extracted out of the ſaid Book of the wicked Mammon; as followeth.

Articles extracted out of the Book of the wicked Mammon.

FIrſt, That Antichriſt is not an outward thing, that is to ſay, a man that ſhould ſuddenly appear with wonders, as your Forefathers talked of him, but Antichriſt is a ſpiritual thing. Whereunto he anſwered and ſaid, That he findeth no fault in it. Again, it was demanded of him touching the Articles, whether Faith only juſtifieth a man. To this he ſaid, that if he ſhould look to deſerve Heaven by works, he ſhould do wickedly, for works follow Faith, and Chriſt redeemed us all with the merits of his paſſion.

His opinion of Antichriſt. Antichriſt no outward thing, but a ſpiritual thing.

That the Devil holdeth our hearts ſo hard, that it is impoſſible for us to conſent unto Gods Law. To that he anſwered, that he findeth no fault in it.

That the Law of God ſuffereth no merits, neither any man to be juſtified in the ſight of God. To that he anſwered, that it is plain enough, conſidering what the Law is; and he ſaith, that he findeth no ill in it.

No man juſtified by merits.

That

KING Hen. 8. The law requireth things unpoſſible.

That the Law of God requireth of us things impoſſible. To that he anſwered, that the Law of God doth command, that thou ſhalt love God above all things, and thy Neigbour as thy ſelf, which never man could do; and in that he doth find no fault in his Conſcience.

No law to the juſt man.

That as the good tree bringeth forth fruit, ſo there is no Law put to him that believeth and is juſtified through Faith. To that he anſwered and ſaid, he findeth no ill in it.

All good works muſt be done without reſpect of any thing, or any profit to be had thereof. To that he anſwered, it is truth.

Chriſt with all his works did not deſerve Heaven. To that he anſwered, that the Text is true as it lieth, and he findeth no fault in it.

The Saints be friends how and to whom.

Peter and Paul, and Saints that be dead are not our friends, but their friends whom they did help when they were alive. To that he ſaid, he findeth no ill in it.

Alms deſerve no reward of God. To that he anſwered, that the Text of the Book is true.

The Devil not caſt out by mans merits. The law worketh not in us the love of God.

The Devil is not caſt out by merits of Faſting or Prayer. To that he anſwered, thinking it good enough.

We cannot love except we ſee ſome benefit and kindneſs. As long as we live under the Law of God only, where we ſee but ſin and damnation, and the wrath of GOD upon us, yea where we were damned afore we were born, we cannot love God, nor cannot but hate him as a Tyrant, unrighteous and unjuſt, and flee from him, as did Cain. To that he anſwered, and thinketh it good and plain enough.

Man by nature is condemned.

We are Damned by nature; as a Tode is a Tode by nature, and a Serpent is a Serpent by nature. To that he anſwered, it is to be true as it is in the Book.

He meaneth by communication, not by vindication: and yet this point ſeemeth to be falſly gathered.

Item, As concerning the Article of faſting. To that he anſwered and ſaid, the Book declareth it ſelf.

Every one man is a Lord of whatſoever another man hath. To that he anſwered; what Law can be better than that? For it is plainly meant there.

Love in Chriſt putteth no difference betwixt one and another. To that he anſwered and ſaid, it is plain enough of it ſelf.

As concerning the preaching of the word of God and waſhing of Diſhes, there is no difference as concerning Salvation, and as touching the pleaſing of God. To that he anſwered, ſaying, it is a plain Text, and as for pleaſing God it is all one.

For if they had known the Lord of glory, they would not have crucified him.

That the Jews of good intent and zeal put Chriſt to death. To that he anſwered, that it is true, and the Text is plain enough.

Lo here is no Scripture brought to refel theſe opinions, but only authority to oppreſs them.

The Sects of Saint Francis, and Saint Dominick, and others be damnable. To that he anſwered and ſaid Saint Paul repugneth againſt them. Which Articles being ſo objected, and anſwer made unto them by John Tewkesbury, the ſaid Biſhop of London asked him whether he would continue in his Hereſies and errors above rehearſed, or renounce and forſake them. Who anſwered thus, I pray you reform your ſelf, and if there be any error in the Book, let it be reformed, I think the Book is good enough.
